San Jose sportsmen were surprised at the number of ducks which they found on the marshes they visited. Home-bred ducks, mallard and teal are the more plentiful, but sprig and widgeon are also to be found. These are claimed to be northern birds and it is very seldom that they are to be found in that section of the country at the opening of the season. Those who went to the marshes were fairly successful.

Another Landmark Gone.

A large buck who had roamed the ranges east of the Santa Clara valley for many years past was brought down by a hunter's rifle shortly before the close season commenced. Just a few days more and the gallant old hero of many a long chase, during which he distanced the hunters and fought off their dogs, would have had a well earned immunity until next season opened. "Old Whiskers," as he was known to sportsmen, fell before the unerring aim of Zach Shelton. He will fill the hearts of no more hunters with grief by escaping almost miraculously from their bullets or by wounding their dogs in the chase.

A little over a week ago, before the season closed, Zach Shelton, Joe Tully, Dennis Kelliher and Dan Thornton hearing that "Old Whiskers" had been seen in the vicinity of the Hyde ranch, near Lyons Springs, gathered together an outfit and started out with the intention of making another attempt to secure the big buck. They arrived in San Jose on September 30th, and sure enough they brought "Old Whiskers" with them. That he was a veritable giant of the forest is plainly seen by looking at the eleven-pronged antlers. The deer weighed about 180 pounds and is one of the largest specimens which has ever been killed in Santa Clara county. Besides "Old Whiskers" Joe Tully killed a four-pronged buck and Kelliher bagged a two-point buck.

During the early part of their stay in the mountains a report was brought to San Jose to the effect that Shelton had mistaken a certain member of the party for a deer and had fired at him. Shelton denies this story and says that he did not fire the shot. He is an old, experienced hunter and he says he knows a deer when he sees it.

"Old Whiskers" had roamed the eastern range for years and many hunters have attempted to kill him. Several times he miraculously escaped from what seemed almost certain death from both bullets and packs of hounds. When pressed too hard he would go far back into the mountains and maybe he would not be seen for a year or more, when he would again make his appearance on the lower ranges. One hunter has stated that hundreds of shots have been fired at the deer during the past seven or eight years. Shelton is much elated to think that he was the one to capture the big buck.

AT THE TRAPS.

"Jack" Fanning is due here very soon. It is now about three years since Fanning's smiling face has been seen along Sportsmen's Row.

The beautiful colored copy, elegantly framed in oak, of the painting of a bull and cow moose, by C. Runge, the scene depicting the two stately animals, in the foreground, wading into the shallow, lily-pod covered waters of a typical picturesque lake in the Aroostock region, is a picture to win the admiration of sportsmen.

This handsome work of art has been much sought after by sportsmen. A few copies of the painting are still on hand at the U. M. C. headquarters, 86 First street. Mr. Drake will dispose of them to those making application, as far as the limited number of pictures will go round. In this distribution the trade is preferred, of course, but make your application early, the picture is worth having. A half tone of the same was published in our last week's issue.

"Cock Feathers" Ed Vaughan of Santa Ana has accepted all of "Pump" McDonald's challenges, which has been flying thick and fast lately.

A letter received in Los Angeles from the Santa Ana shooter states that he will shoot McDonald 100 birds for $100 a side at Santa Ana to-morrow (October 6th), and Vaughan is willing to accept the 100 birds for ten days proposition immediately he returns from a northern trip, which is already arranged for. McDonald will have to take in the future tournament in Arizona, but will make any date to suit Vaughan, provided it does not conflict. McDonald telephoned his acceptance of the proposition for Monday, and the two shooters it was agreed would also shoot for the Tufts Lyon medal the same day or Tuesday.

Gas Knight has been notified of the acceptance of his proposition to shoot some live birds and as told, it looks as if the trap shooting game was likely to get quite a boost in the coming month down Los Angeles way.

A number of the Peerless Gun Club members, of Davisville, Yolo county, together with a number of visiting Sacramento sportsmen braved the heavy wind Sunday and faced the blue rock traps. Percy Hoag won the club medal with 23 breaks out of 25. Pool shooting followed. Percy Hoag, Del Greive, F. P. Smith, Trumpler and Newbert pulling out the stakes. The following is medal score 25 blue rocks:

Davisville Team—Percy Hoag 23, D. Greives 21, W. Greives 11, J. Montgomery 19, G. Hoag 19, W. Stone 6, E. Fissell 9, E. M. Montgomery 14, D. Dunn 18, E. Tawzer 8, P. Smith 21.

Sacramento Team—Vetta 18, Gusto 15, Gallop, Sr. 14, Trumpler 21, Newbert 21, Gallop, Jr., 14, Woodland 11, Norton 11.

Percy Hoag wins medal and first money, D. Greives, F. Smith, Trumpler and Newbert tie for second money; J. Montgomery and Geo. Hoag tied for third money. The wind blew very hard and was the cause of some poor scores.

A Gamey Fish.

The black bass, as a candidate for popular favor with the angling fraternity, has assuredly and deservedly the first call. The rapidity of its growth, its pugnacious nature, endurance as a fighter and gameness when hooked, all tend to contribute to the appreciation and esteem in which it is held. There are only two distinct species of black bass, namely, the small-mouthed, or genuine black bass with the red eye, and large-mouthed, commonly called in the East the green or Oswego bass. However, there are numberless variations in these standard types (the differences probably arising in diversity of condition and feeding grounds), and bass taken from various localities, upon careful scrutiny, will show trivial differences which may give to those who may wish it, a chance to criticize.

The differences of the two standard types are, however, so decidedly appreciable that even the veriest critic, on seeing them placed side by side, must admit their distinction. In attempting to define the differences nothing is accomplished toward identification or separation, only increasing the confusion in the attempt, for the fact remains that, owing to local conditions, and probably to these only, quite apparent variations obtain in size, superficial markings, action, color and periods of spawning.

About a month previous to the spawning season they pair, and, leaving the deep water where they have spent the winter, seek a retired spot with water from two to four feet in depth, and near deep waters, to which they can swim if alarmed. There the nest is built by scouring from the pebbles on the bottom all the slime and mud, it being circular in shape and almost twice the length of the fish in diameter. There the female lays her eggs, where they at once become glued to the pebbles, remain for about ten days, and then hatch, the female keeping a close watch, and remaining on or near the nest at all times to ward off possible intruders. Several days after the hatching, the young fry scatter into deeper water, and at the end of six months have grown to about two inches in length. At the expiration of the first season, if food is plenty, they will have attained a growth of four inches, and at the end of two years will average one pound each. After that time they broaden and thicken, and will gain a pound a year thereafter.

The differences in coloring and markings are noted by a writer in the Field, who had opportunity of observing the fish in a locality where bass were plentiful; he states:

"During a tour this past summer of the Northern Wisconsin lakes, I had ample opportunity for noting the differences existing, yet inexplicable, in the markings of the bass taken from the same waters. They were all, with few exceptions, of the genuine black bass variety (with small mouth and red eye), but some were spotted, others barred and some without any lateral markings. Colors were as much diversified, bluish, deep green, black, grass green and deep olive. They also varied much in their proportions. Some had heavy shoulders, others slender. This would seem to be almost an impossibility, such differences existing in the same family of fish and living in the same waters; but such was the case."

The black bass is the chief object of a great number of the anglers' pursuit, inasmuch as he can fight harder, dive quicker and break water higher than any other fish of the same size and formation. His capture is our dearest triumph and proudest trophy. He can safely be looked upon as the most pugnacious and cleverest of game fishes. His capture is a less easy task, involves more science and is a true proof of the merits of the angler than that of any other tenant of our crystal waters. Continuing the writer says:

"I have been often asked in what water and with what bait I attained the best results in fishing for bass. In answer to this I can say that I have used the following baits to good advantage: Frogs, chub, minnows, shiners, gulleets, salt pork rind, and the No. 4 size Skinner spoon. The water to be fished depends largely upon the season. Early in the spring hug the shore and cast among the reeds almost entirely, for 'tis there the bass are on the lookout for the elusive frog, just awakening from his winter slumbers. Then, again, the water along the shore has a much more inviting temperature to his fishship. Being shallow, the sun's rays quickly warm it and thus induce him to seek the spot where he can thaw out after having been in freezing water all winter. During June, by following the edge of the deep weeds, one should be favored with luck; and, as the summer advances and the shore water gets too warm, deeper water and holes, where the temperature of the water is lower, must be sought. It is safe to say that more real artistic angling is necessary to capture the black bass than in taking the beautiful brook trout or any other fresh water fish, though in unfished lakes and streams in Northern Wisconsin it does not require so much science as the expert angler could wish. Fierce and bold as a lion, with almost human instinct, and numerous expedients for casting a hook from his jaws, combined with fighting qualities possessed by no other species of the finny tribe, this embodiment of determination, strategy, courage and strength deserves the royal name."

In our own waters, the small green frog, pork rind, minnows and the Wilson spoon seem to be the most successful lures.

Experience is the only teacher in bait or fly casting for bass, and as each angler has had only his own experience, and has his own methods of doing almost anything, it is beyond the province of anyone to offer suggestions on this point, for success can only be acquired after long hours of practice; and even then the outlay of time and money is sufficient to deter many from the pursuit. The bait and fly fisherman is an accurate observer, and a close student of nature, as well as a lover of fish. Every movement of the fish is understood by him. He is always positive; he has no theories; he does not go fishing—he is an "angler" and an artist.

Fish Lines.

Striped bass fishing has had a "happy go lucky" coloring recently. Of the anglers who have tried the sport in the bay and its tributary waters, a few only have had anything like satisfactory results. The experience of J. A. Pariser and C. Johnson last Sunday, however, is liable to develop a somewhat new phase in the pursuit of the fish by the trolling boats. The two anglers, in search of new fishing ground and partly by way of experiment, rowed out into the shallow, sand-bottomed waters of the bay, about one-quarter of a mile from the Alameda shore and to a spot midway between the "borax" wharf and the Terrace baths. Weather, tide and water conditions were favorable to bass fishing; notwithstanding the anglers' every effort over quite a stretch of water, the results were nil. It is not known that fishing so far out in that portion of the bay had ever been tried before. The anglers believed that fish were around or would soon be coming along and continued at the sport.

This latter surmise proved correct, for suddenly Johnson, with a delighted exclamation, called his companion's attention to a commotion in the water some distance away. A quick observation convinced the two that a school of bass were swimming along with the tide. What was most peculiar, were the actions of the fish, which were jumping up from the water and "rolling" at a livelier rate than either of the fishermen had ever before noticed. In short order the school of fish were caught up with, and with rapid strokes of the oars the boat was propelled back and forth across the patch of water evidently full of bass. The first leg across a double strike was made, one fish for each rod. The same tactics were kept up for over an hour. Whenever the fish were seen "breaking," the boat was headed for the spot and put through and across, always with the result that the bass struck the spoons. Several times fish were on both rods simultaneously. In a little over an hour seven large fish in splendid condition were taken. These fish all fought like demons and gave the anglers an exciting time while it lasted.

This experience is now being discussed pro and con by the striped bass fishermen and it is certain that another style of fishing for striped bass will be tried, and if found to work satisfactorily, and there is no reason why it should not when the fish are located, another pleasant chapter will be added to the history of an entrancing sport in our bay waters. Locating fish and then trolling, or otherwise getting them, is practiced in the Eastern waters, but is, for anglers at least, an innovation yet to be tried here.

The two Indians arrested recently on a charge of dynamiting fish in the Russian river had their preliminary examination before Judge Critchfield the fore part of the week in Ukiah and were held to answer in bonds of $200 each.

Eel river has not shown any inducements so far this season to attract anglers to its waters. The steelhead fishing, up to this date, has been very unsatisfactory.

The Garcia river has given better results so far this season than any of the nearby coast streams. A good rain will be followed by a run of fish, and then the fall sport will begin.

Night Shooting.

Despite the law against shooting wild game at night the practice is indulged in continuously. This unsportsmanlike proceeding is not by any means confined to the "pot hunters." Some of the members of gun clubs, particularly a certain club—whose preserve is not located on either the Alameda, Suisun or Sonoma marshes, are credited with the stigma of night shooting. This particular club has in past seasons always made strenuous efforts to have suppressed and kept secret the work of the guns on its ponds. If we are not decidedly misinformed, there is apparently very good reason for keeping things quiet. If the practice is not discontinued we will go to the extent of publishing a few names.

Kennel Suggestions.

In the well regulated kennel disinfecting powder and fluid should always be at hand, the former is best distributed by means of a tin with a perforated lid, to be half filled as required; the latter by a contrivance or cork, like that used by the barbers, or can be made "by hand" by driving a nail through the cork to make a small hole. If a profuse shower, as for floors, is required, a watering can is the best weapon.

Every kennel should have its own complement of cleaning paraphernalia. These implements, which should be kept only for this purpose, consist of a rake, shovels, whitewash and scrubbing brushes, also a big, coarse sponge.

Grooming and washing paraphernalia will much depend on the breed of dog kept; for instance, a rough haired terrier wants a metal comb, a work of art in itself, to get the hair out. For a Collie or similar dog just the reverse is required.

Every kennel should be complete in these departments, nothing being more annoying either to the kennelman or the indoor servants than that articles in constant use should be perpetually borrowed. Leathers, sponges, spoons, medicine measure, enema syringe, scissors, needles and thread should have a place, and will be wanted sooner or later.

A more than useful tool, too, is a large pair of wire nippers with blades meeting in front like pincers—these for shortening the nails and operations of a similar nature. There should also be a biscuit crusher of the Spratts pattern. This enables you to buy your biscuits in bulk and crush them as you want them, by which means they keep better and cost less money. By an ingenious yet simple arrangement you can crush them any size you will, even into powder.

Chains should have no place in a kennel except for exhibition purposes, and must possess two spring hooks, three swivels, one in the center, and two rings. Show collars are to be used exclusively in that capacity, leads and collars for exercise, or other wants to be hung up in a convenient spot. The most useful kennel lead is strong, fairly long, with hook, swivel and ring at each end; also at each end it may be split for a short distance so as to form a loop which, in emergency, can be converted into a temporary collar.

In washing dogs a couple of good sized wash tubs and a draining or rinsing table are very necessary for the smaller dogs. The larger dogs can be washed by the side of the tub. There are all sorts of dog soaps and most of them are good, though old kennel men swear by the English Crown, a soft soap. Spratt's dog soap is in much demand on the Coast.

The head and ears should be begun and entirely completed to start with. By so doing the dog gets as little soap in his eyes as may be, and less than he would if you left it on while attending to other parts of his body; whereas, if you take the head last, as some consider right, he is shivering all the time with cold, which would not be the case by the other method. First of all thoroughly saturate, next rub the soap well about the head, underneath the throat, and inside the ears, then by the aid of a handful of water cleverly applied, proceed to work the whole into a lather, rubbing well into the skin. When this is sufficiently accomplished, rinse repeatedly with clean water until by kneading you ascertain no soap is left, particularly in the ears. You will, of course, take care to sponge his eyes at the earliest possible moment.

The rest of his body can then be soaked, soaped, and lathered in the same way, beginning with his neck shoulders and forelegs, and working backward, the lather remaining until the time comes for rinsing the body entirely. The actual cleansing consists in the rubbing necessary to obtain a good lather, consequently there should be no lack of elbow grease, and every part of him down to his pads should be carefully visited. If this has been properly done, two rinsings will be required to get all the soap out, which is rendered easier by continual rubbing the while. Finally and invariably he should have a cold douche, which goes far to prevent him from taking cold. In the case of a delicate Toy this may be omitted, though I have never done so myself. By dipping a small bag of washing blue in the last water the color of the animal is brought out better. The water should be wrung off with the hands as much as possible, followed by a free use of the sponge.

He can now be carried to the grooming bench, thoroughly dried and finished off with a good hand rubbing. A spoonful of raw whiskey administered before the towels are used is a good thing, inducing with them a healthy glow, and he is made more comfortable by applying some precipitated Fuller's earth with a powder puff underneath elbows, inside stifles, eyes, ears—in fact, all tender parts. If intended for a show—indeed, under any circumstances—he should have a clean bed to go into, and if it can be conveniently managed, a sharp walk for half an hour on a lead, otherwise he will roll to a certainty.

According to "Peter Return's" advice in washing a Yorkshire or a Maltese, the method is slightly different, since their coats cannot be rubbed if they are to remain as we are now accustomed to see them in the show pen. Two small baths are required, one containing soapsuds, the other for rinsing. They are washed, rinsed and dried precisely as they are groomed—with an ordinary hair brush, working from the center of the back and head each side to the end of the coat. The drying, which takes an hour or more, wants three or four brushes placed in front of a fire, each being discarded as it becomes wet. This, by the way, in a less laborious form, and, seconded by a comb, constitutes the best plan for drying a dog like a Pomeranian or heavily feathered Collie after the top wet has been got rid of. Needless to say, the brushes employed must be scrupulously clean. If washed methodically, in the manner described, a good man ought to be able to get a dog thoroughly clean with his eyes shut, doing the whole thing by routine.—The Kennelman in Am. Stock-Keeper.

DOINGS IN DOGDOM.

A notable addition to the Fox Terrier talent of the Coast was the advent last Monday, at Wandee Kennels, from England, of the bitch Mayse. This handsome one was purchased by Mr. Harley from Mr. Geo. Raper. From the reports in the English papers and in view of her performances across the pond, she should be a very high class bitch, second to none on the Coast. She is black headed and white bodied, was whelped April 15, 1901. She is by Champion Rowton Knight out of Champion Rant, a breeding that speaks for itself. She was sent here in whelp to Ridgeway Result, who is considered by the talent to be about the best one among the Englishmen to-day.

Mr. Raper originally purchased Mayse for Mrs. Raper, who wanted a good one to "wipe up" a show in which the ladies were much interested. This happy combination came off in good style, following which Mr. Harley purchased her. At the Fylde show she was reserve to Mr. Redmond's crack champion Donna Fortuna, in the race for the $250 challenge cup—Mr. R., by the way, refused $2000 for Donna. Mayse beat amongst others Battle's Mystery, a winner at Crufts and of two firsts and a championship at Manchester.

At the time of the Royal Cornwall show, where she won, she was described as "very pretty and stylish, rather full and soft in her coat, would do with more substance, but she has a nice body and plenty of length of head." She subsequently beat Glory Quale at the Blackpool show. Since which she has improved much, it looks as if she should go ahead of anything here at present.

Mr. Raper bought the bitch after the Fylde show. This win was the occasion of the following pleasing comment in an English journal:

"Mrs. Burns received many congratulations from her many Irish friends on her arrival home, anent the phenomenal success of her beautiful smooth Fox Terrier bitch Mayse at the Fylde show, where by her win of the reserve for 50 guineas challenge cup, she was adjudged the second best Fox Terrier in the show. Bejabers it spakes well for the bog upon which this charming bitch was reared, bordering the southern shores of Loch Neagh. Bedad, Paddy may be rale proud of the evint, for shure it's a long time since an Oirish bred Fox Terrier did so well at an English show."

The Pacific Fox Terrier Club will give cash prizes of $5 for the best dog puppy, best bitch puppy, best aged dog and best aged bitch benched in the Los Angeles dog show. The competition will be for members only.

John Lucas left on September 30th, with a string of dogs, for Whidby Island. He will put in time until the 28th inst. working his dogs on "bob whites" and getting ready for the Northwest Trials. W. B. Coutts went north this week.

Charles F. Charles bought on Tuesday a rattling good Irish Terrier dog, now about two years old. This youngster is one of the progeny of the stock bred by George H. Thomas; the dog was originally disposed of to L. G. Rowell by L. A. Klein, who had a string of Thomas' dogs on commission.

Wandee Kennels have entered a Fox Terrier kennel, for the Los Angeles show, that will be hard to beat. The dogs benched will be Wandee Blizzard (formerly Lithian Blizzard), Wandee Revelry (formerly Saltscar Revelry), Wandee Jester and the bitch Wandee Mayse.

J. L. Cunningham will enter Carlotta and Ruy Blas among the Great Danes, for exhibition only.

Charles F. Frank reports that he has bred his new Cocker Nairod Imposter (Ch. Viscount-Chloe) to Nairod Kennels' Plumeria Beau II. (Hampton Goldie-Plumeria Surprise).

O. Bergsten, in declining to enter his Great Dane Maud S. for the Los Angeles show, gives the very good reason, that one day this week she whelped a litter of twelve puppies to Bluebeard. The puppies are a fine looking lot and are all doing nicely.

Wins at the late Montreal and Victoria, B. C., shows held under A. K. C. rules, will be recognized by the C. K. C., according to a vote at the regular meeting. But after June 2, 1902, no shows held under A. K. C. rules on Canadian soil are to be recognized. The C. K. C. in this has shown a weakness we did not expect. It was unnecessary considering the stand the C. K. C. took about the Montreal show, says the Stock-Keeper. Does this ruling also apply to P. K. L. shows?

The stomach of a dog is a peculiar thing to see on the desk of an official of the United States Treasury, but that was the object which E. E. Schreiner recently spread out before him. Mr. Schreiner is chief of the division of redemption of the Treasury and has become accustomed to receiving money under peculiar conditions. Even he, however, admitted the originality of the case in question.

"Dear sir," ran the letter which accompanied the stomach, "I send under separate cover, stomach of my dog Fritz. I was playing with him to-day, holding a twenty dollar bill up for him to jump at, when he suddenly leaped higher than I anticipated, grabbed the bill between his teeth and ran under the house, where he chewed the money up and swallowed it. I thought more of the $20 than I did of Fritz—he was always chasing chickens—so I shot him and cut out his stomach. Please see if you can't paste the bill together and redeem it."

"The unique feature of this case," said Mr. Schreiner, "is that we found the bill, slightly chewed up, but sufficiently whole to identify and redeem. The man has received a check for $20 by this time."—Baltimore Sun.

THE FARM.

The Beef Breeds.

Now that the Cuban market is open and a better class of beef animals is desired there, and there is likely to be ere long one or more regular lines of cattle steamers sailing direct to Europe from our Southern ports, a Mississippi subscriber has requested me to give him an outline of the qualities, good and bad, of the various beef breeds of cattle.

First of all the Shorthorns are the most popular beef breed in the United States and are found in every state in the Union; and as, broad and enduring popularity is usually the result of merit, it is found in the favor shown to Shorthorns a proof of their great utility. They possess much power of adaptation to the varying conditions of life, as changes of soil and food products and climatic conditions; but they flourish best in mild temperate climates and where the soil is fertile and not too hilly. In weight they surpass any other breed. Their feeding qualities are excellent. They are contented under confinement, will feed well in the stall for a long period and endure much forcing. They are excellent for crossing upon grades, usually stamping their progeny with many of their own characteristics. They are red or roan and white, but red is most in favor, while roan is admired by many. The milking qualities of the Shorthorns are far superior to those of any of the other beef breeds; that is, the milking strains of them. But there are strains in which most attention has been paid to the cultivation of beef qualities, and these are the true beef Shorthorns, the others being dual purpose animals.

The Herefords are descended from one or more of the aboriginal breeds of Great Britain, and their original color was probably red. At an early period the white cattle of Wales were crossed upon them, giving the progeny a mixed or grey color. Later, the present type of white faces and other white marking were brought about by the importation from Flanders and crossing upon them white-faced Flemish cattle with other white markings. Such markings are now generally recognized as indicating purity of breeding. The Herefords have been noted for their good beef making properties for over two hundred years. All this time their improvement was progressing carefully by the best breeders in England. The first importation of the breed into the United States was made by the famous Henry Clay, in 1817, and at the present day they are to be found, probably, in every State and Territory of the Union and Province of Canada. Formerly they were equally popular with the Shorthorns; but latterly they have lost some degree of favor with farmers, except only on nearly level, rich soil located in the mildest portion of our climate, like the soil and climate of Texas. Their grazing and feeding qualities are similar to those of the Shorthorns, but they will not endure so much forcing. The quality of their meat is excellent. The cows are very low in the scale of milk production. Occasionally there is one so low in milk producing that she does not produce enough to rear her own calf well, when the services of a nurse cow are desirable. The weakest points of them are, scant milk, ungainly horns, great size of dewlap and sometimes lightness of the thighs.

The Aberdeen Angus cattle are a polled or hornless breed. It is probable that they originated in Aberdeenshire, Scotland. They first reached the United States in 1873, and Canada three years later. They are disseminated in only a few of the States, Iowa containing by far the largest number. Their adaptability to soil and climate is about like the Herefords. The absence of horns is favorable to feeding in sheds and yards and transportation by rail. In size they are somewhat inferior to Shorthorns and Herefords, but their meat weighs remarkably well in proportion to their size. Like the other large beef breeds they do no graze well on hilly or rough land. Their feeding qualities are the best. Their milking qualities are poor as to quantity but the milk is rich in quality. They are black in color. In crossing upon grade cows, the progeny are largely hornless and black or grey in color. In most qualities they are about like the Shorthorns; but in size and milking qualities they are a little behind that breed.

The Galloway cattle are so named from the province of Galloway. They are one of the purest, as well as one of the oldest, of the improved breeds. Several writers of the 16th century speak in high terms of the excellence of the flesh of the cattle of the Galloway district. The treatment to which they have been subjected, and the cold, damp climate in which they were originally reared, have contributed much to their proverbial ruggedness. They have frequently been reared so far above the sea level that grain will not ripen on account of the cold temperature. The long, wavy, black-brown coat which protects them is owing to the bleak, damp climate of their native home. They were first imported into this country in 1870, and into Canada about a score of years earlier. They are better adapted to grazing in rough, frigid sections of country than any other of the beef breeds named. Their general manner of rearing for so long a time gives them great vigor of constitution. They feed well, however, and when given a forcing ration are capable of maturing at an early age. It is expected by some that the hides of Galloways will eventually be much used for robes, owing to the length and beauty of the outer coat of hair, and thus replace, in a measure, the now vanished buffalo robes. The Galloways are ahead of the Shorthorns in hardihood, grazing in cold and exposed places, in prepotency, in breeding qualities and in the value of their hides; but they are not equal to them in size, in feeding qualities and milk production.—Practical Farmer.

Dairy Course Opens.

The short course in dairying and agriculture at the University of California at Berkeley opened last Wednesday morning with an enrollment of thirty-nine students, exclusive of the regular members of the College of Agriculture. These represent every portion of the State. They are divided almost equally between the two branches, twenty-two being enrolled in the course on dairying and seventeen in the general agricultural work. At the introductory exercises that morning in the Agricultural building addresses were made by President Wheeler, Professor E. W. Hilgard, Professor E. J. Wickson and E. J. Major. The course continues for ten week, closing with the regular college term.

Virginia horse breeders have formed an association, the object of which is to encourage and promote the breeding of fine horses in that state. A meeting was recently held at the country residence of Dr. James Kerr near Warrenton and was attended by a number of representative breeders. Among those in attendance were Senator Henry Fairfax, Dr. Kerr, Gen. B. V. Spilman, Col Robert Neville, Edward Spilman, James Hall, James K. Maddux E. Astley Cooper, Henry Harrison, H. Rozie Dulany and others. A committee was appointed to draw up constitution and by-laws and another to look for a parcel of ground suitable for the holding of annual horse show and racing meetings, polo and other sports into which high-class horses enter more or less.

Current Sheep Topics.

When sheep are pastured in summer and roughed in stalk fields in winter it is surprising how little is required to keep them, says Wool Market and Sheep. In fact, the average ranchman could not, to save his life, tell whether his sheep cost him five or ten cents a head a year for their maintenance. About the only item of cost is the interest money on the land they occupy. This is such a small figure, however, that it hardly deserves recognition. In return for this insignificant outlay of money necessary to keep the sheep alive they yield each year an average of seven or eight pounds of wool to the head. In times of industrial depression the wool market eases off and as a result the sheep do not bring so much money. In years of prosperity, however, they are a veritable bonanza. Taking the years through, a fair average price of native wool is 12½ cents a pound. The wool that each sheep turns off during the year gives a profit of nearly a dollar.

At this time of year quite a number of lambs on the range are troubled with sore eyes, which become inflamed and in two or three days they are covered with a white film that destroys sight. This ophthalmia is due to the pollen from grass and weeds, which irritates the eyes and produces the inflammation, or it may be caused by acrid dust blown upon the plains by whirling winds. The dry alkaline dust is carried in clouds through which the sun shines red and irritates the eyes, throat and lungs of every animal exposed. The eyes become red, weep and soon exude a purulent mucus which is in itself irritating. This is infectious, and if in handling the sheep the shepherd gets any of it in his eyes he, too, becomes diseased. The right thing to be done is to keep the flock within easy reach, drive them before the wind and dust and get them into shelter as soon as possible. Then wash the eyes with pure water and blow into them by means of a quill a small pinch of finely powdered alum. Give four ounces of Epsom salts and keep the sheep shut up a few days.

If flockmasters throughout the west have the idea that the public is trying should remember that more or less ground for complaint has existed all along. The great trouble in the past has been that herders were altogether too reckless. They have ignored the right of settlers and have gone out of their way to annoy them. Sheep have been chased in droves into front yards, through springs and over irrigating ditches. Bands have been driven over roads with no effort made to clear out the rocks that they rolled into the highway. Little patches of grass near a man's home have been eaten off when it would have been entirely feasible to keep the sheep farther away. The insolence of herders has led to most of the bitterness manifested. Many masters have directed their herders to be discreet and avoid giving unnecessary annoyance. This has pleased the people of those sections through which sheep are driven and they have shown a disposition to meet the sheepmen half way.

No more suspicious individual lives than the sheep breeder who does not keep posted on the prices of sheep and wool. The breeder thinks something is coming his way when a buyer appears and often refuses to sell. Presently he finds himself running after some one to take his surplus. He is much in the position of the Dutchman who had money in a bank that was supposed to be shaky. Stepping up to the teller he said: "I want my money." "All right," said the obliging man on the inside, "make out your check." He drew the check and the money was counted out to him. "Oh, you have it, have you?" "Yes." "Then if you have it I do not want it, but if you did not have it I want it quick." This is the way of the average range sheep breeder. If a buyer comes around he does not want to sell lest he gets beat a little, but let him get the idea that business is going to be bad and he will be eager to sell when there are no buyers. A friend of the writer started down into New Mexico recently to pick up some lambs and although he found plenty of them, he was not able to buy for anything like what he considered the goods worth and came back empty handed.—Field and Farm.

Dairy Notes.

The Oregon Experiment Station has been trying steam ensilage in the silo. Pipes were placed within two inches of the bottom of the silo, one of which discharged there, and another about half way up the silos, which are small ones only about five feet in diameter and twelve feet deep. The silos were filled with very green immature corn, cut three-fourths of an inch long, and packed very solidly. The steam was first let in at the lower pipe, and later at the upper one, with pressure first at twenty pounds and later at forty pounds. The steaming process lasted from seven o'clock one morning, until about nine-thirty the next morning. While the corn fodder was still very hot, the silos were covered with layers of heavy building paper, and then with several inches of sterilized cotton. When opened in December, the steamed silage was sweet and bright, and had undergone but little change from the condition of the corn fodder when put in. Whether in a silo twenty-five feet deep it would be necessary or desirable to have a pipe discharging at each six feet from the bottom or not, we do not know, and to the majority of farmers who have no means of generating steam, it will make but little odds. They may think themselves lucky if they have a silo and corn fodder to put into it, and ensilage without having been steamed is so much better than the dry fodder, that they may leave the steaming process for the next generation to develop.

The importance of having clean pails or troughs for feeding the calves is scarcely less than having the milk pails and cans clean. Cases of scours, indigestion and bowel troubles may often be traced to the dirty and sour pail in which the calf is fed. Another cause is giving so much grain that the calf cannot eat it all and what is left is wet and soon becomes sour and mouldy. The stalls should be kept clean and well bedded and well ventilated.

The champion butter cow of the world is a Holstein owned in the State of Minnesota, she having a verified record of 584 pounds of milk in seven days, which made twenty-nine pounds 4 7-10 ounces of butter.

A High Class Southdown.

When Mr. Geo. Bement of Melrose, Alameda county, was at the California State Fair this year he requested Prof. Carlyle of the Wisconsin Agricultural College, who judged the cattle and sheep exhibits, to look out for a high class Southdown ram for him. Prof. Carlyle also acted as judge of live stock at the Oregon Fair, and while there saw a ram that he considered a very fine animal. He made the purchase for Mr. Bement and the latter received the ram this week. He was bred by Mr. Chas. E. Ladd, and was a prize winner at the Oregon State Fair this year. Mr. Bement is highly pleased with Prof. Carlyle's selection.

Western markets have of late been flooded with calves, while the Chicago supply has been above the normal. Despite the very large supply choice "vealers" have staid high in price. The range owners in Texas and the rest of the southwest country have also marketed very large numbers of calves. The condition is an anomalous one, for heretofore when cattle have been high in price the farmers have always kept the calves.

Strike!—If they don't give you Jackson's Napa Soda.

Selling Mixed Lots.

The farmer who has a mixed lot of fowls for market should assort them, and send in two crates—the best in one crate, and the inferior lot in another. If he has a lot of fat, large chickens, and three or four smaller ones, rather than attempt to get a few inferior ones sold with and at the same price as the prime, they should be kept at home. When some buyers are purchasing they do not look in the crate for the best specimens, but for the worst, and purchase accordingly. When the desire is to sell an old rooster with a lot of good stuff the plan invariably fails, inasmuch as if disposed of with the others he will detract from the value of the lot. It will pay the owner best to retain for home use the old birds and market the young ones. When young table-fowls and old hens are to be disposed of they should be sent in separate crates. The same may be said of ducklings; only those of a like size should be consigned in one coop. Should a few of small size be with the large ones, they are invariably trampled to death on the journey. Old ducks should be sent in separate crates from the young, and in all cases it will pay better to destroy sick birds than to attempt to dispose of them with healthy stock. The larger proportion of poultry sent to market is very inferior. The crowded coops and fatigue of the journey cause a loss of weight. The roosters should never be shipped in the same coop with the hens, as they sell for much less than the hens, and lower the price of all the birds in the coop. Grade the fowls, having those that are in prime condition separate from the others. It may be added that it will pay to keep all inferior fowls at home for a week or two and make them fat. Turkeys will be in demand until spring, and they should be fed well so as to secure as much increase in weight as possible. Old geese are never in demand, and should be kept for breeding purposes, selling only the young birds. More fowls die on the journey to market for want of water than from any other cause, and something more than one drinking-cup should be placed in the coop. The fowls at one end of the coop have no way of knowing that a cup is at the other end, and as they have but one desire liberty—are not inclined to search for anything else. They lose flesh, arrive at the market out of condition, and do not bring the best price, simply because not enough water-cups are provided.

Feeding Potatoes to Swine.

The potato crop the present season is likely to be a very large one and possibly the price may be so low that it will not pay to sell the small tubers. This, therefore, brings up the question as to what disposal can be made of them that will be most economical and profitable. They can, of course, be fed to any kind of live stock in the raw form, but it would not be correct to say that they are equally adapted to all kinds of stock. No use can be made of them that will yield a larger return than when they are fed to swine. They can be fed to them in conjunction with other food in raw form, but only as a part of the ration. It is more than probable, however, that where the facilities are on hand it will be much better to cook or steam them before feeding, especially when they are to be fed in large quantities. Of the various modes of cooking them, steaming is no doubt, better and cheaper than boiling. But, where one has invested in a boiler it would be well to hesitate before making a change. While potatoes thus prepared are good for growing pigs, they are particularly good for swine that are being fattened, owing to the large amount of starch which they contain. They should be fed in conjunction with meal, as they are too bulky a product to feed to swine. Some persons have adopted the plan of steaming the meal along with the potatoes and feeding the two together. Ground barley would seem to have especial adaption for such feeding. Of course, ground corn will answer quite as well, but there is the difference that corn answers well when being fed unground, while the same is not true of barley. In any event, the potatoes should not be wasted, as from this one item alone, a large amount of revenue can be secured, providing the rejected potatoes are thus utilized.—Rural World.

The Kind of Cattle That Sell.

There is no disputing the fact that beauty, finish, symmetry and impressive presence are among the most attractive attributes of the improved breeds of live stock. Even in the pens at the stock yards style counts for something. True, it weighs nothing upon the scales, but it is not without a bearing in fixing the price. At the same time, practical feeders know that capacity to take flesh rapidly and at an early age that the foundation of all chance for profit in the meat making breeds, hence as between the low-headed, short-necked, burly-bodied, short-legged beast, devoid of any of the showier characteristics, and one that has more range and gayety than anything else, those who are catering to the feed-lot will make no mistake if they adhere to the compactly fashioned blocks.

It should be the aim, however, of all good breeders to unite, as far as possible, the ideal feeding form with beauty and grace in form and carriage. The establishment of fat-stock shows some twenty years ago brought block requirements prominently forward. Those who had for years posed as arbiters of form and fashion about the sale ring found themselves in large measure supplanted by the cold calculations of the feeder and butcher. It was a rude awakening for some of those who had exalted length of leg and neck over depth of flesh, but the knife that laid bare the loins and ribs in those competitive tests carved deep into the minds of western stock breeders the lesson that beauty alone is but skin deep.

The most profitable feeders and killers were often quite plebeian in appearance on the hoof as compared with their more distinguished looking relatives, but on the block the rich fleshed chunks had many days of triumph. In seeking animals of great digestive power to meet the exacting demand of modern feed-lot and show yards the tendency has been to overlook other important characteristics. There is a middle ground in this as in all things else upon which there is safety. The aim should be handsome, well carried heads and level quarters joined to real feeders and butchers' middles. The blending of beauty with utility should be the breeders' steadfast purpose and our western people must make up their minds to supply the needs of the trade with the pick of the Shorthorn, Hereford and Angus types.—Field and Farm.

Some feeders prefer muttons to lambs for the reason that they cannot succeed with the latter. A prominent man is a striking example of this. He has made a great deal of money feeding wethers from year to year, but every time he tackles a string of lambs he does not do well. He says he thinks the fault lies with him, but nevertheless he cannot eradicate it and on that account will stick to muttons in the future. Muttons are harder than lambs and will stand more rough weather. This oftentimes tends to offset the other advantages lamb feeding has. If a feeder is perplexed whether to handle lambs or aged sheep he should look around and buy whichever he can get the cheaper, for then he will not be likely to make a mistake. The sheep in quick responsiveness to feed is the yearling. It always commands a higher price than a wether and if choice in quality and well handled will sell almost as well as the lamb. Yearlings are harder than lambs and while they do not put on flesh quite so fast as the former they do better than the two-year old wether.

Ergotism.

[Press Bulletin.]

During the present season, owing to the heavy rainfall or other climatic conditions, there has been developed upon wild rye and other similar grasses a fungus known as ergot, commonly called "spurred rye." Within the past few weeks a number of complaints have been received at the Kansas Experiment Station from the eastern and central parts of the State indicating that injurious and fatal results have occurred among stock from eating this fungus.

Ergotism is a disease of animals caused by eating ergot, either on pasture grasses or hay. Ergot is a parasitic fungus (claviceps purpurea) that develops on the heads of wild rye, reedtop and similar grasses. This fungus replaces the ordinary seed or grain with a black or brown-black grain, much longer than the ordinary rye grain, cylindrical, pointed, or slightly curved. The number of grains of ergot in a single head of rye or grass, will vary from one to a dozen or more. The grains of ergot can be easily recognized by their shape and color. There is no dust or smut upon the heads of grain as there is with some fungi. Ergot does not attack corn or sorghum.

Outbreaks of ergotism occur nearly all over the world and often cause heavy losses among cattle and horses. Serious losses from ergot in this State have not occurred since 1884, but it is possible that, owing to the abundance of ergot upon grasses the present season, serious loss may follow, unless care is exercised to prevent feeding a large amount of ergot. Cold weather and a limited supply of drinking water seem to favor the development of ergotism.

The symptoms of ergotism may occur at once after eating the fungus, provided the animal gets a sufficient quantity; or they may occur only after the animal has eaten the fungus for some time. Ergot lessens the blood supply, especially in the extremities—feet, tail and ears—the affected parts swell, get cold, a well defined line usually forms about the part, below which the tissue dies and sloughs off. When the feet are attacked the animal becomes very lame.

Ergot causes abortion in pregnant animals, but this must not be confounded with contagious abortion among cattle. Ergot also effects the nervous system, causing trembling of the muscles, weakness, staggering gait and sometimes convulsions. The digestive system is often affected and there may be purging, indigestion and abdominal pain. Cattle are more seriously affected by ergot than horses.

To prevent the disease, do not feed animals hay or grass containing ergot, and when the disease occurs, these should be withheld at once. A purge of one pound of Epsom salts for adult cattle, or a quart of raw linseed oil for horses should be given. Give sloppy, nutritious foods, with plenty of drinking water. Bathe affected parts, feet, etc., with hot water, rubbing to stimulate circulation, and apply antiseptics, such as a five per cent solution of carbolic acid.

Suspected specimens of ergot may be sent to the Botanical or Veterinary Department, Agricultural College, Manhattan, Kansas, for identification. Hay that has been cut early is less apt to contain ergot than late-cut hay. N. S. MAYO, Manhattan, Kan., Sept. 18, 1902.

In bringing horses to a high standard of excellence it will often be noticed that they lay on more fat—too much sometimes—in one place than another. Many horses will grow in fat to such extent in the neighborhood of the neck or hind quarters that the artistic symmetry of the entire body is threatened or the withers will become round and thick. This condition of things cannot be overcome by any system of feeding but it may be materially modified by proper grooming.

A Comparison of Cows.

As soon as Dr. Babcock brought out his milk test I bought one, and it revealed to me some startling facts. Some cows, which I supposed were my best ones I was glad to dispose of, while some that I had barely tolerated on my farm were really the most profitable ones.

One instance I will relate: I had a large cow that was a hearty feeder, we called Whitie which my hired man milked, and another medium size called Beauty which I milked. The hired man used to say, when milking Whitie, when fresh and getting a large pail brimming full at a milking: "If you only had a whole herd of cows like Whitie, you would make lots of money." Then, as he looked at the scant half pailful that I got from my cow, he would say: "I don't see why you keep such a cow as Beauty is. It must be to look at; she don't give enough milk to pay."

But the Babcock test came, and I got some milk scales and went to work to weigh and test the milk for a year. Whitie started with 50 pounds a day, but it soon began to drop off and, after a while, she began to fatten up and finally went dry some three months; and notwithstanding her great pretensions to begin with, she gave but 6000 pounds during the year. Still, the amount of milk was very good, but the Babcock test revealed a very disappointing fact. The test averaged but 3 per cent which made 180 pounds of butter fat, which would make 210 pounds of butter.

Beauty never gave over 25 pounds a day, but kept up her flow so well that, at the end of the year, it footed up a little over 5000 pounds, with an average test of 6.5 per cent, which made 325 pounds of butter fat or 380 pounds of butter. She made 170 pounds more than Whitie on less feed.

Of course Whitie had to go when she came fresh again. The man who looked at nothing, when buying a cow, but a large frame and an immense udder, that denoted a large quantity of milk at the time of purchase, bought her. But Beauty stayed on my farm for ten years after that, giving me net profit, above the cost of feed, of from $35 to $50 a year, besides leaving with me many of her descendant, which were excellent cows.—C. P. Goodrich.

Short Hog Supply Predicted.

The future of the hog market is attracting much attention not only from speculators but from feeders who are up against high-priced hogs to follow their cattle, and prospects of lower prices when ready for market. The immediate future of the market is not now under consideration, but the winter packing season. And what of it? Evidently the number of hogs to be marketed will be short of last year. Dear grain sent too many brood sows to the shambles in the West to allow of a great crop of pigs. The Cincinnati Price Current estimates a shortage in numbers of 18 per cent as compared with last year. But this will be modified to some extent by the condition of the hogs, especially later in the season. The average weight will be better and the percentage of meats will be greater.

The demand for meats is the other great factor in the problem. It seems certain to be large; but other meats will be more plentiful and cheaper than last winter, which is in favor of cheaper pork. During the winter we must expect materially lower prices for hogs than are now ruling. How far the decline will go is, of course, uncertain. Wagers have been made that hogs would sell below $5 per hundred before January. If the price of hogs is in keeping with the price of corn this will occur. But hog and corn prices are not always in harmony, and this promises to be a year when hogs will be relatively higher than corn.

Strike!—if they don't give you Jackson's Napa Soda.

Testing Milk.

There is just one reason worth considering for testing milk, and that is to find out the amount of butter-fat it contains, says Farm and Fireside. The result is, or ought to be, the basis for determining the value of the milk produced by dairymen. And yet, strange as it may seem, with many who have in their hands the matter of testing milk for the public, say in creameries patronized by a number of dairymen, there seems to be an idea that the real purpose of testing milk is to see how far away from the truth they can get and not be caught at it.

Does this mean, then, that the Babcock test can be, and is, juggled with? It does mean just that. It ought to be an impossibility for such a thing to be done. It would be if every man were honest, for as a piece of mechanism, the testing machine is as nearly perfect as anything can be. But here comes in the trouble. For reasons of their own many creamerymen want to favor certain patrons. To do it they read the test higher than the facts warrant. To do this some one else must suffer. This may be kept up for a time, but in the end will be exposed.

I have in mind now a certain creamery which has systematically, so it is asserted and never satisfactorily disputed, given certain advantages in the way of testing milk to men who might be inclined to send their milk to another creamery. This inducement has had the effect of holding these men. Is this right? Every one knows it is not. It is just as much fraud as if the managers of those creameries were running a bucket-shop.

Sometimes the creameryman may be deceived himself. The acid may be too strong or too weak. In the one case it will burn the butter-fat out of the milk, and in the other it will leave some of it in the milk.

How is this to be avoided? How can we be sure we receive just that to which our milk entitles us? This is an important question. Many States have thrown all possible safeguards about the testing of milk. They have passed laws regulating the bottles used in testing. They have said that acid must be made so and so. And still the imposition goes on.

The best way of which I know to bring unscrupulous creamerymen to their senses is to have our milk tested at the nearest experiment station, and if any marked discrepancy is found we can take our milk away from the man who is deceiving us, and either make it up at home or send it to some creamery which does business honestly.

As is well known in every dairy section, wheat bran is an exceedingly efficient feed for the production of milk. It is easily digested and the returns are always satisfactory. However, it is very costly in this country and alfalfa is usually cheap. According to analysis alfalfa contains a little more crude protein than bran and considerable more ash. For ten days a ration containing a small amount of bran and all of the alfalfa hay that would be eaten was given to some cows. Then for ten days a heavy food of bran with native hay was given. The results showed that although the bran produced the highest yield of milk, the alfalfa ration was by far the most economical.

Its location is unsurpassed; only three blocks from Market street. This large brick fire-proof building fronts on Third street the busiest thoroughfare in San Francisco. The main building contains 75 large single stalls, besides 10 box stalls, 12x14 feet in size. Particular attention has been paid to the lighting, ventilation and sanitation of this, as well as the adjoining building, which is connected with it by a covered driveway. There are 20 box stalls 12x12 feet, facing the court, in which is an oblong show ring 40 feet in diameter and extending 150 feet into the sales pavilion. The seating capacity of the latter is 1200. The lots on which these buildings (the stable and pavilion) are built cover an area of 210x250 feet, affording ample room for vehicles and horse show purposes. The ring is covered with tanbark, and, when evening sales are held, the pavilion presents a dazzling effect, illuminated as it is by electric lights.

MY AUCTION SALES.

"SAVE-THE-HORSE"

TRADE MARK

SPAVIN CURE

NEVER IN THE HISTORY

of achievements in scientific and physiological chemistry has anything been discovered capable of producing such wonderful results as "Save-the-Horse" Spavin Cure.

In the face of deep seated prejudice and skepticism, at first considered an improbable and expensive experiment, no preparation ever made so marvelous a record in such short time.

The fire iron is uncertain at the best and invariably only aggravates the disease or injury; blistering is less effective than the fire iron and both necessitate laying up the horse from four weeks to two months; arsenic, mercurial and poisonous compounds produce irreparable injury.

"Save-the-Horse" eliminates all these factors. Horse can be worked continuously.

It can be applied at any time, anywhere, any place and in all conditions and extremes of weather—hot or cold. And no matter what the age, condition or development of the case or previous failures in treating, the concentrated penetrating, absorbing power of "Save-the-Horse" is unfailing and no case can withstand the force of its action, whether a Bone and Hog Spavin, Ringbone, Curb, Thoroughpin, Splint, Capped Hock, Shoe Boil, Wind Puff, Weak and Sprained Tendons and all Lameness caused by such injuries.

It cures without scar, blemish or loss of hair.

$5.00 PER BOTTLE.

Written guarantee with every bottle, constructed solely to convince, satisfy and protect you fully. We know positively "Save-the-Horse" will absolutely and permanently cure, and for that reason guarantee is made all your way.

Need of second bottle is almost impossible except in rarest cases. Guarantee covers effectiveness of one bottle.

IF YOU ARE IN DOUBT WRITE US.

As we do not put the preparation out on speculation, we will advise you frankly as to the possibility of the remedy effecting a cure. Give explicit particulars; do not go altogether by the veterinarian's diagnosis unless you know he is competent—inform us fully as to the age, development, location of swellings, lameness, action and previous treatment.

Copy of Guarantee sent upon application. $5 a bottle. At all druggists and dealers, or sent prepaid.

Veterinary Pixine

Apply it. Rub it in on bare spots, inflammatory swellings, old sores, scratches, grease heel or skin disease. It penetrates and soothes, and the horse grows well as he toils throughout the day.

SCRATCHES, GREASE HEEL,
MUD FEVER, HOOF ROT AND SPEED CRACKS.

Cases where ulcerations extend with transverse cracks which open at every step and often bleed, no matter how complex, aggravated, deep seated or chronic, if treated according to directions as given on circular with every box, positively cured with Veterinary Pixine.

After Blistering

Veterinary Pixine is the very best application that could be indicated. It absorbs all inflammatory exudate and hastens the reparatory process. Will heal the most severe cases without scar and prevents loss of hair.

As a Preventive.

If a light application of Veter' ary Pixine be used before speeding, driving in wet, muddy or slushy weather, your horse will never have speed cracks, scratches or grease heel.

For Hoofs.

It will keep the hoofs healthy, soft and in perfect form.

This penetrating, stimulating, soothing, absorbing, anti-septic, healing ointment heals from beneath the surface by disinfecting the parts, subduing inflammation, and stimulating healthy granulation, not by drying and scabbing.
2 oz., 25c; 8 oz., 50c; 5 lb. pkg., $4. At all druggists and dealers, or sent prepaid.

SUBSCRIPTION

NUSHAGAK 25939

(Sire of Aristo 2:17½, Winner of Occident Stake of 1902)

OWNED BY WALNUT GROVE STOCK FARM

JOTTINGS.

SIR ALBERT S. HAS MADE GOOD, and the son of Diablo 2:09½ is now the fastest member of the celebrated Steinway family, and one of the sensational pacers of the year. At Lexington, last Wednesday, in a race for pacers of the 2:08 class, for which a purse of $1500 was offered, he won in two straight heats in 2:03½ and 2:06½. It is one of the most remarkable performances of the year and puts another feather in the cap of that excellent reinsman and trainer, Millard Sanders of California. It is also a triumph for William G. Layng, former editor of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, who bred the horse and still owns a half interest in him, and who has never yet lost faith in his gelding, and I can faintly imagine the smile that spread over the countenance of William Murray, of Woodland, owner of the great young stallion Diablo 2:09½, when he read of the performance of "the son of his father."

While a mile in 2:03½ is a wonderful performance for any horse, the placing of such a low mark to his credit by Sir Albert S. has not surprised everybody and there are many here in California who believe and almost know that he can and will yet pace a mile in faster time.

Sir Albert S. was unbeaten last year in California and took a mark of 2:08½. When he went into the Santa Rosa Stock Farm string at Pleasanton last spring, Millard Sanders soon found that he had a veritable whirlwind, and stated one day, after he had let the gelding step a quarter over that track, that he had never in his life and during his long career as a race driver, ridden as fast as Sir Albert S. had carried him. Jack Groom, who gave the horse all his early training and drove him on his triumphal tour of California in 1901, was another who had faith in him, and has told me several times in the last three months that when Millard got Sir Albert S. right nothing less than a two-minute horse would beat him.

There were many stories about Sir Albert S. that floated over here from Cleveland after Sanders reached there with his horses, some of which said the Diablo gelding was sick, another that he had met with an accident, etc., etc., and when the forfeit was paid on him through the main portion of the circuit it was clear that the horse was not just right.

He began to round to just before the circuit horses reached Providence, and he was started there for the first time this year in the 2:08 class, meeting the best of this year's pacers in that division. There was a great deal of scoring the first heat and Sir Albert S. led the bunch every time, although they were going at two-minute speed. When they got the word he took the lead and was at the half in 1:02 and the three-quarters in 1:33½. He led into the stretch, but was not in condition for miles at such a clip and was beaten by Nathan Straus and others in 2:05½. The next heat was in 2:06½ and Sir Albert S. was behind the money.

Tuesday of last week he started again, this time in one of the crack races of the year—The Tennessee $3000 stake for 2:08 class pacers. The great mare Twinkle by Mercury won the first, fourth and fifth heats; time, 2:06½, 2:05½ and 2:08. Daphne Dallas won the second and third heats in 2:05 and 2:07½. Sir Albert S. was outside the money and with him were his old rival, Prince Direct 2:07, and many other high class pacers.

Wednesday of this week was the day of his triumph. The race was mile heats, best two in three. He won it right off the reel, stepping the miles in 2:03½ and 2:06½.

This is the fastest time made by any but the free-for-all pacers this year and stamps Sir Albert S. as one of the best pacers that ever left California. If right he will doubtless be able to hold his own with the free-for-all classes next year and lower his record materially.

The Lexington, a stake of $2000 for two year old trotters, was won by the veteran Charles Marvin's entry at the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders meeting yesterday in fast time. Hilgar is the name of the trotter, which is a gelding by Wiggins 2:19½, a stallion foaled in 1893, that got his first standard performer last year in Rena Wise, a three year old that took a mark of 2:21½. Wiggins is by Aberdeen 27, and one of the best of the get of that son of Hambletonian 10. Wiggins' dam is Albina de Mer by Stamboul 2:07½ out of Belle Blanche by The Moor, and was bred by the late L. J. Rose, of Los Angeles, but foaled the property of Wilbur Field Smith, of Sacramento. She afterwards became the property of James C. Clay, of Paris, Kentucky, who bred her to Aberdeen when that horse was twenty-six years of age.

Hilgar is inbred to Aberdeen, as his dam, Ellen Tucker, is by that horse. The race won by Hilgar is one of the fastest ever trotted for this stake, which was established in 1875. Tommy Britton won it in 1895, the fastest heat being 2:15½. Charles Marvin won it in 1899 with Endow, best time 2:14½, the record for the stake. Prelatress won it last year, the best heat 2:15½. Hilgar's time this year for the second and third heats was 2:16 and 2:15½.

The Pacolet, another colt that carries California blood in his veins, won the first heat in 2:18 and secured second money. He is by Pactolus out of a mare by Chimes.

Gail Hamilton is the greatest three year old of the year, her win of the Kentucky stake on Thursday, trotting the second and third heats in 2:12½ and 2:13½, after Bugle had taken the first in 2:14, stamps her as the fastest and gamest trotter of her age that has been out this year. She is another example of judicious inbreeding to a high-class stallion. Her sire is Oakland Baron 2:09½ son of Baron Wilkes, and her dam is Jennie Hulse by Baron Wilkes. Gail Hamilton therefore carries in her veins some of the same blood that helped Hilgar to be such a fast two year old, as the dam of Oakland Baron was the California mare Lady MacKay by Silverthreads, son of The Moor, and Lady Mackay's dam was Fleetwing, the dam of Stamboul. Jennie Hulse was out of Jean, who was by Kentucky Prince, sire of Dexter Prince. Gail Hamilton's time in this stake has been beaten but once and that was when Boreal won it in 1895. Fred Kohl took the first heat in 2:12½ that year, a quarter of a second faster than Gail Hamilton's time. It has been a very fast race—however many times and has been won by such trotters as Director, Hinda Rose, Chimes, Directum, Boreal, Bingen, Extasy and others. It was established in 1875, and was won that year by Girl E. Queen in 2:33½.

Here's another point in favor of California blood in the production of early and extreme speed. Bugle, the three year old filly that won the first heat of the Kentucky in the fast time of 2:14, is by Athel, a Palo Alto bred horse, own brother to the great Arion 2:07½, while her dam is a California bred mare by Stamboul.

It is an extraordinary fact, and one that breeders can study with profit, that The Moor blood has made such a showing in these two and three year old stakes, the winner of first and second money in the two-year-old race being out of mares by Stamboul, and the winner of the three-year-old race getting through her sire the blood of Stamboul's grand sire and dam. And it might be well to remember that Stamboul's greatest son, Stam B., is still on this coast.

Lexington Results.

LEXINGTON, Ky., October 10—It required seven heats to decide the first race, the feature of today's card. Despite the fact that four drivers, McMahon, McHenry, L. McDonald and Erwin, were fined on the charge of laying up heats every finish was hotly contested. The last three heats resulted in neck victories under the whip. Little Squaw was the favorite, but until the last two heats seemed to lack speed at the wire. In the seventh heat she overhauled and nosed out Prince Direct. Summary:

First race, 2:06 class, pacing, $1500—Little Squaw won the third, sixth and seventh heats in 2:06½, 2:09, 2:10½. Dariel won the first and second heats in 2:05½, 2:06½. Prince Direct won the first heat in 2:07. Riley won the fourth heat in 2:07½. Major Muscovite, Fannie Dillard, Earl Wilkes, Daphne Dallas, Defiley and Sis Alcantra also started.

Second race, the Johnson, 2:24 class, $2000—Chase won three straight heats in 2:12½, 2:10½, 2:09½. Patchen Maid, Maxine, Darwin, Yara and Brownie Wilton also started.

Third race, 2:15 class, pacing, two in three heats, $1000—Mustard won the second and third heats in 2:08½, 2:10½. Dora Delapha won the first heat in 2:09. Daisy Field, Kanawha Star, Volita, Ethel Mack, Garnett, Little Sphinx, Monte Joe and Margaret W. also started.

Fourth race to wagon, trotting, amateur drivers, cup—Nicol won the second and third heats in 2:10½, 2:10. Dr. Monical won the first heat in 2:10. Gold Brick, Frazier and Josh also started.

LEXINGTON, Ky., October 14—After postponement for three days on account of rain and the bad condition of the track, racing was continued to-day. In the first heat of the fourth race a serious accident occurred which will keep driver Middleton in the hospital for several weeks. While scoring in this heat Laurette, with Middleton up, swerved into Lady Katherine and both sulkies were overturned. Johnson, the driver of Lady Katherine, escaped without injury. Middleton's foot caught in the wheel of his sulky and he was dragged twenty yards. It was found on examination that his left leg was broken below the knee and the knee cap dislocated and he was otherwise bruised. Lady Katherine ran away a mile and the two finished fourth and sixth. Summary:

Trot, 2:11 class, $1500—Walnut Hall won the second and fourth heats in 2:12, 2:15½. Charley Mac won the first heat in 2:12½. Lilly Young won the third heat in 2:11½. Belle Kuzer, Alan, Van Sandt, Alice Barnes and Lassie Owens also started.

Free for all trot, to wags, amateurs to drive, cup—Idlewood defeated The King in two straight heats in 2:16, 2:13½.

Trot, 2:14 class, three in five, $1000—Invader won the fourth, fifth and sixth heats in 2:21½, 2:14½, 2:13½. A. J. D. won the third heat in 2:12½. Bedda won the first heat in 2:13½. Kelmont won the second heat in 2:14½. Crescent, Joymaker, Roscoe Medium, Betsie Tell, Black Lady, Eylene, Baron Bell, Philipe, Cretonnes and Alfred Star also started.

Trot, 2:18 class, two in three, $1000—Dr. Strong won two straight heats in 2:14, 2:13. Millard Sanders, Hall Fry, Mexican Boy, Earl Wilton, Lady Katherine, Berkshire Chimes, Prince, Billy Foster, The Parson, Daisy Woolf, The Astronomer, Laurette, Monti Cola and Jim Fenton also started.

Trot, 2:06 class, two in three, $1500—Lord Derby won two straight heats in 2:09½, 2:08½. Chain Shot and Monte Carlo also started.

LEXINGTON, October 15—Pacing, 2:25 class, $1000—Dorothy Wilton won three straight heats in 2:12½, 2:11½, 2:10½. The Judge, Ethel Mac, Ross Mason, Darkway and Altha A. also started.

Walnut Hall Farm cup, 2:15 class, trot, purse $3000—Nut Bearer won the third, fourth and fifth heats in 2:09½, 2:13½, 2:10½. Prince of Orange won the first and second heats in 2:10½, 2:10½. Alice Russell, Prince Zelma, Mabel and Gavatta also started.

Pace, 2:08 class, two in three, $1500—Sir Albert S. won two straight heats in 2:03½, 2:06½. Nervola, Pinchem Wilkes, Prince Direct, Dandy Chimes, Sphinx F., Carthage Girl, Schley Pointer, Albert Suffert, Lou Vaughan, Balmy L. and Savannah Maid also started.

Trotting, 2:09 class, $2000—Charles E. won three straight heats in 2:10½, 2:09½, 2:07½. Baron Deshay, Maxine, The Questor, Horace W. Wilson, Wilton Boy and Betsie Tell also started.

Trot, 2:13 class, to wagon, amateurs to drive—Pug won the second and fourth heats and race in 2:13½ and 2:13. Peko won the first heat in 2:14½. Joe Watts won the third heat in 2:16½. Crescent also started.

Pacing, 2:17 class, $1000—Daisy Field won three straight heats in 2:11½, 2:11, 2:17½. Babe Allerton, Little Sphinx, Hardcastle, Pure Gold, Montejo and Margaret W. also started.

Trot, 2:23 class, two in three, $1000—Judge Cullen won two straight heats in 2:18 and 2:15. Texas, Kipling, Director Belle and Hugh Wynne also started.

To beat 4:32, trotting record for two miles—Onward Silver 2:08, ch h. Time by quarters: 0:34, 1:06½, 1:40½, 2:14, 2:48, 3:20½, 3:55, 4:29½.

LEXINGTON, October 16—The $5000 McDowell stakes for 2:10 class trotters was the feature of to-day at the Kentucky Breeders' Association track. The event went to Susie J. in straight heats. Summary:

The McDowell stake, 2:10 class trot, $5000—Susie J. won three heats in 2:10½, 2:09½, 2:08½. Anzella, Ferno and Antesella also started.

Pace, 2:13 class, $1000—Kavallo won the first, third and fourth heats in 2:10, 2:09½, 2:09½. Gentry won the second heat in 2:10½. Kanawha Star, Garno, Olivewood, Flossie F. and Rex B. also started.

The Kentucky, for foals of 1899, trotting, two in three, purse $2000—Gail Hamilton won the second and third heats in 2:12½, 2:13½. Bugle won the first heat in 2:14. John Mc, Pat Henry and Hattie Smith also started.

Trotting to wagon, members of Gentlemen's Driving Club of Lexington to drive—Al won two straight heats in 2:17, 2:13½. Roscoe Medium, Marque and Florence Low also started.

The Lexington, trotting, for foals of 1900, $2000—Hilgar won the second and third heats in 2:16, 2:15½. The Pacolet won the first heat in 2:18½. Del Toro, Blossom and Fannie Summer also started.

Notes and News.

Lord Derby, with $31,675 to his credit, is the leading money winner of the year.

The Breeders meeting at Fresno this year was a financial as well as a racing success.

Cresceus has trotted 13 miles in 2:05 or better. No other stallion ever trotted one that fast.

Paronella, dam of this year's Kentucky Futurity winner, is also the dam of Country Jay 2:10½.

Ukiah held a very successful fair last week. A full report of the races will be given in our next issue.

Fidette, the Guy Wilkes mare which produced Mary Celeste 2:17½, was given a record of 2:28½ the other day.

Antezella 2:10½ has not won a heat this season. She cost E. E. Smathers of New York $6700 last November.

Ilolo 2:16½, W. E. Meeks' good trotter by his stallion Welcome 2:10½, is out of a mare by Nutwood Wilkes.

The produce of California bred sires and mares have made a wonderful showing this year all over the country.

Gail Hamilton is now the fastest three year old of the year. She won the Kentucky stake at Lexington Thursday in 2:12½.

The largest fields, to date, on the Grand Circuit, were 18, in both the 2:11 pace at Detroit and the 2:13 trot at Providence.

When all the returns for 1902 are in it will probably be found that McKinney leads all sires of new 2:20 and new 2:15 performers.

Now that the foals of 1902 are being weaned, they should be given an extra supply of feed and handled daily so as to gentle them.

The demand for first-class trotters and pacers has not been so brisk for years as at present, and prices still have an upward tendency.

Monbars 2:11½, seldom heard of nowadays, is the sire of Lill Bars, who recently won the 2:35 trot at Hamilton, Ont., taking a record of 2:23½.

C. W. Williams is still full of faith in his stallion, Allerton 2:09½, and believes that he will be the first sire represented by 100 in the 2:20 list.

Conrad (own brother to Anteros, Anteeo, Antevolo, etc.), by Electioneer 125, gains an additional performer in the trotting mare Madge Cobb 2:17½.

Thomas W. Lawson will be a seller instead of a buyer in the sales this season, and it is said that he will send Poindexter and others to the ring.

When the records are all made up at the close of the circuit it will be found that California has had a very successful season of harness racing this year.

While the Grand Circuit of 1902 has been noted for large purses, fast records and successful meetings, preparations are already being made to eclipse it by the circuit of 1903.

A trusty horse has a special value, not to be estimated in dollars and cents, for the reason that no man fixes a value upon his life or upon that of any member of his family.

There is no longer any growl about early closing stakes among the Eastern horsemen. They have found that entering in them is the only way to get in line to win big money.

Onward Silver 2:08 is now the champion two-mile trotter. He lowered the record to 4:29½ at Lexington last Wednesday. The former record was 4:32, made by Greenlander in 1893.

Dan Patch keeps pacing fast miles even though he does not beat Star Pointer's record. He turned the Davenport, Iowa, track in 1:01 last Thursday, which is a new record for the track.

May Horgan, a mare by McKinney 2:11½, took a record of 2:23 in a race at Bakersfield last week and is the ninth new standard performer for this horse. May Horgan's dam is by Raymon.

Major Delmar was purchased by Fred Parks, of Glens Falls, N. Y., for $2700 at the Fasig-Tipton Co.'s sale last fall. He has reduced his record from 2:15 to 2:08 this season, and won $12,000 in purses.

W. O. Bowers, of Sacramento, desires to claim the name of Fred Madison for a colt by James Madison, dam May by Rainbow; also the name Sylvia B. for a filly by Silver Bee, dam Sadie B. by Tom Benton.

George, the bay gelding owned by Mr. Bachant, of the Fresno Driving Club, and that took a record of 2:22½ at the Breeders meeting at Fresno this year, was sired by the stallion Loeber, a son of Whippleton.

Effie Powers 2:08½ has been retired for the season, having made a most creditable campaign for a twelve year old mare. During the season she has won nine firsts, one second and one third money out of eleven starts.

Susie J. 2:06½ again turned the tables on Anzella at Lexington yesterday and beat her for first money in the McDowell $5000 stake for 2:10 class trotters. Anzella got second money. The fastest heat, the last, was 2:08½.

Mr. A. H. Miller of Buffalo has ordered all of his trotters and pacers in the campaigning stables of W. L. Snow sent home to Hornellsville, N. Y. All engagements have been canceled for the remainder of the season.

There will be just one more chance to get some fine horses at auction this year. Mr. C. L. Griffith of Pleasanton, has ordered all his fine trotters to be sold at the Occidental Horse Exchange in this city November 11th.

The dead stallion, Day Bell, by Palo Alto 2:08½, dam Beautiful Bells, gains his initial performer in Jimmy Micheal 2:21½ trotting. Day Bell is the eighth son of Beautiful Bells to become sire of standard performers.

Altacora 2:13 is the eighth 2:30 performer for old Tecora, all sired by Altamont. Two are in the 2:10 list and four in the 2:15 list. Her daughters have produced two in the list and her sons have sired eight, which places her among the greatest of broodmares.

Mrs. Jennie Holly, widow of the late B. C. Holly, has sold the old race track and grounds three miles north of Vallejo, known as the Hollywood Stock Farm. The purchaser is Mr. A. H. Knight, of Humboldt county, who will re-establish a stock farm on the property.

It used to be said, and with considerable semblance of truth, that the average harness race horse was a homely creature. But not so nowadays. The American trotter is being recognized in every land as the handsomest horse in the world, and harness race horses of exceeding beauty of form, finish and style are seen on most every track.

Dr. Jay Tuttle of Astoria, Oregon, owns a Zombro colt that he has named Zadok, which he expects to win first money with in the Breeders Futurity for foals of 1902. The dam of the colt is Maisie by Planter. The youngster was foaled July 16th and is a very handsome little fellow, bay in color, with his left hind foot white and a white snip on the right hind foot.

It is said that trainer McHenry shipped his horses to Readville notwithstanding the purse classes were declared off. He says that he intends making a test of the matter to learn whether class races already closed can be declared off at will. The rules say stakes must be trotted or paced, but that unfinished or untouched races on the closing day of a meet shall be declared off.

The papers continue to speak of Heatherbloom as the champion high jumper. While he reduced, or rather raised, his own record at Philadelphia to seven feet four inches September 18, it seems to be forgotten that the Canadian mare Pearl, owned by George Pepper of Toronto, cleared the sticks at Des Moines, Iowa, on the same day, at seven feet six and three-quarter inches.

Promoter and Underwriter, the superb pair of chestnut high steppers shown by Jay F. Carlisle at White Plains, N. Y., last week, are said to be the highest priced carriage team ever exhibited in this country. Just what was paid for them is not known, but the figures were probably well above $10,000, as a New York firm refused $7000 for Promoter alone at the Boston Horse show.

It is said that Mr. Schlessinger, one of the most extensive buyers of American trotters of the European market, and who was in attendance at the Empire City Park races last month, offered $7500 for the three year old colt Boreazelle, owned by Henry Dykman, White Plains, N. Y. Mr. Dykman told him the colt was not for sale. Boreazelle is by Boreal (3) 2:15½ out of Luzelle 2:15½ by Patron 2:14½.

At a meeting of the California State Board of Agriculture, held at Sacramento last Saturday, bids for the lease of the track and fairgrounds for one year from October 1st were opened. The lease was awarded to John Norton, who agreed to pay $3001 for the lease. This is the largest amount received for the track for some years. James Martin, who had the lease last year and the year previous, bid $2500.

At Readville, Easter 2:12½, and Farris 2:12½, trotted a mile to pole in 2:14½. The pair are owned by B. F. Dutton, of Boston, and were driven by James Golden. Both trotters were practically off the road and in no condition to step to their limit. They showed themselves to be well mannered, easy mouthed and they drive like one horse. If they could be given two weeks' thorough training they should trot a mile right at 2:11.

There will be a novel race during the Memphis meeting, as Secretary Howe has decided to open a class for free-for-all pacing mares, having been assured that the following would enter: Mazette 2:04½, Edith W. 2:05, Fanny Dillard 2:05½, Twinkle 2:05½, Daniel 2:05½, Casonda 2:05½, Terrace Queen 2:06, Little Squaw 2:06, Daphne Dallas 2:06½, and Lottie Smart 2:07½. A race open only to pacing mares has never before been given and this one should result in one of the very best contests of the season.

Among the fast pacers that have reduced their former records this year are Sir Albert S. 2:03½, Shadow Chimes 2:05, Elderone 2:05½, Fanny Dillard 2:05½, Fred S. Wedgewood 2:05½, Roamer 2:05½, Billy H. 2:05½, Nathan Straus 2:05½, Twinkle 2:05½, Carl Wilkes 2:05½, Casonda 2:05½, Dumont W. 2:06, and Don Derby 2:06. Shadow Chimes, Fanny Dillard, Fred S. Wedgewood, Nathan Straus, Dumont and Sir Albert S. of those mentioned held records better than 2:10 prior to the making of their newer marks.

Among the visitors in San Francisco from Los Angeles this week is Mr. Byron Erkenbrecher, the well-known real estate broker who is treasurer of the Los Angeles Driving Club. Mr. Erkenbrecher informs us that he proposes taking up his black mare Galetta 2:12 by Judd Wilkes and driving her in some of the matinee events this winter. She made her record in 1899 and has not been raced since, having been bred two years, but failed to get with foal. Mr. E. thinks she will be able to trot close to her record with a little training.

American bred trotters are showing up well in Russia this season. Will Caton, son of Frank Caton, won the two big four year old races at Moscow with two fillies sired by Alvin 2:11. The Russian champion four year old of the season is also by Alvin. He trotted the track at Moscow in 2:16½, which Andy McDowell pronounced at least three seconds slow. This horse is called Alvin Molodoy, which being interpreted means Young Alvin. Frank Caton also writes that he won the three year old stake at Neshnia Novgorod, with a colt by Passe Rose, son of Patron.

Altivo 2:18½, the dead brother of Palo Alto 2:08½, comes into the sire list with two new 2:30 trotters. These are Dorothea A. (4) 2:29½, whose dam is Mary Osborne (2) 2:28 by Azmoor 2:20½, and Altoaine (5) 2:29½, whose dam is the famous mare Elaine 2:20 by Messenger Duroc. Altoaine makes Elaine's fourth 2:30 trotter, beside which she also produced the champion yearling, Norlaine 2:31½. The grand old matron, who was in her own day the champion three year old, is still living at Palo Alto, aged 28, but has been barren since 1897, Altoaine being her last foal.

I Direct 2:12½ is for sale. He is well known to nearly all the horsemen in California and there is no doubt but he can do a good business in the stud if handled by some experienced and enterprising man. No better bred horse can be found. His sire is the great race horse and successful sire Direct 2:05½ and his dam the great broodmare Francisca (dam of three in the list) by Almont 33. I Direct will not do to race—his owner does not desire to convey that impression, but he is a good road horse and if properly handled will do good service there for years and show brushes of great speed at all times. Read the advertisement and consult with Mr. Dunlap about the horse and the price asked.

The Rochester pacers, Connor 2:03½, and Daniel 2:05½, that made a team record of 2:08½ at Readville recently, driven by Alta McDonald, the Albany trainer, will be driven to beat the world's pacing record of 2:08 during the Memphis meeting, and with an excellent chance of succeeding. McDonald also is after the team record for trotters, and during the Memphis meeting he will make an effort to get that honor with the two good trotters, Major Delmar 2:08, and Wilque 2:09, the two geldings that he has raced so successfully this season. If they take to double-harness work they should be able to draw the Albany trainer a mile below the present record of 2:12½ held by Belle Hamlin and Honest George.

The summary of the internal trade movements for the current year up to the month of August has just been completed by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics. In the live stock trade, the receipts of horses and mules for the first eight months at five leading Western markets prove to be the lightest for three years, 240,348 head having arrived to the end of August, 1902, and 301,766 head to the same date in 1901, and 290,160 head for the like period in 1900. Another suggestive movement is that of feeder stock from the two reporting markets of Kansas City and St. Joseph. These points show an increase of 7.29 per cent in the volume of demand for stocking purposes for the first eight months of the year; 529,458 head having been shipped and driven out to August 31st this year, compared with 493,447 head last year.

The pacer Coney 2:02, now owned by a member of the New York Driving Club, has been worked this year without hobbles in the hope of getting him in shape to lower his record. At a matinee at Empire track last week he started in a race with the fast mare Bessie Bonehill 2:05½ and the Sun gives the following report of the race: "The stars of the day, Bessie Bonehill and Coney, got away fast in the first heat of their pacing duel, and Bessie Bonehill was in it to the quarter. She led to that point, but then Coney darted by her. Though he was without the hobbles the handsome black did not seem to mind it in the least. He swept along in fine form and increased his lead over the mare to the finish, winning by half a dozen lengths. Coney lost the second heat through breaks. They were sent away with the gelding in the lead, but he went up at the first turn so badly that he lost fifteen lengths before he got back into his stride. From the half to the far turn he closed fast, and coming into the stretch looked to be the winner. Then he broke again, and Bessie Bonehill, who was steadiness itself, led to the wire by four lengths. The third heat was rather easy for Bessie Bonehill, who was in front all the way. The time of the three heats was 2:09½, 2:16½ and 2:12½.

Nushagak and His Produce.

When the handsome, level headed, fast trotting colt Aristo won the historical Occident Stake this year at the California State Fair, beating such highly touted youngsters as Cuato 2:18 by McKinney and Zombowette by Zombro, and then repeated his victory the following Monday by winning the Stanford Stake over the same track, there were many inquiries among the horsemen as to the breeding of Aristo's sire. The official program said his name was Nushagak, a rather peculiar cognomen, but offered no further information. Those who were at all familiar with the stallions that have been at service in California during the past few years, knew that Nushagak was a standard and registered horse, and that his sire was Sable Wilkes, the first three year old to trot in 2:18. They knew that Nushagak had served but a very limited number of mares and that Aristo was the second of his get to start in a race, Majella B., a two year old filly that took a record of 2:29, being the first. In view of all these facts a short history of Nushagak and his foals will not be out of place at this time.

Nushagak is a black horse, one of the glossy, coal blacks, and as will be seen from the photo-engraving printed on our first page this week, is a horse of very handsome proportions. He was bred by the late William Corbitt at the San Mateo Stock Farm and foaled there in 1890. He is 15 hands two and a half inches in height. Nushagak was very promising as a colt, and trotted a quarter in 32½ seconds, but unfortunately went wrong and was never raced, although Mr. Corbitt selected him to take the place of Regal Wilkes 2:11½ in the stud after selling that horse for a long price.

Stout blood, the sort that manifests itself when the heats are split and the race long drawn out, is very prominent in the pedigree of Nushagak. He is by Sable Wilkes, son of Guy Wilkes and Sable, (dam of four in the list) by The Moor. His dam is Fidelia by the champion race horse and sire, Director 2:17; his second dam is by Reavis' Blackbird 2:22, and his third dam is by Lancet, a son of McCracken's Blackhawk. Through Guy Wilkes, Sable Wilkes and Director he closely combines the blood of four great broodmares—Lady Bunker, Sable, Dolly and Gretchen. Lady Bunker is the dam of Guy Wilkes 2:15½, El Mahdi 2:25½ and William L., the sire of the great Axtell 2:12 as a three year old. Sable is the dam of four in the list and two of her sons and two of her daughters are producers of speed. Dolly is one of the greatest mares in the stud book. She not only produced Director 2:17, that sired Directum 2:05½, Direct 2:05½ and many others, but she produced Onward, the leading sire of 2:10 performers in the world. Gretchen is the dam of three with standard records, has two producing sons and her daughters have produced five in the list.

Mr. Charles Spencer trainer at Walnut Grove Stock Farm who, trained and drove Aristo in his races, informs us that only three of Nushagak's colts have ever had a full season's training, namely Majella B. 2:29 at 2 years, Aristo 2:17½ at 3 years and The Boquet trial 2:21 at 3 years. Majella B. 2:29 at 2 years, was only beaten a nose in 2:22 as a two year old when very lame. Farmer Bunch worked her a mile in 2:13½ as a four year old. He and Jim Sullivan both say that she would have been a sure 2:10 performer, if she had stayed sound; Aristo 2:17½ at 3 years, was worked four months as a two year old, and trotted a quarter in 34 seconds on the 25th of July that year; on the first of August his shoes were taken off and he was not shod again until the 16th of January 1902, when his preparation commenced. His third heat in 2:17½ at Sacramento was as good as 2:13½, as the records of the Woodland and Stockton meetings show that there was from four to five seconds difference, between the Sacramento and Woodland or Stockton tracks. He could have trotted a mile in 2:15 at Sacramento if it had been necessary. In his third heat in 2:17½, he trotted the first eighth in 16½ seconds, and the last quarter in 32½ seconds and was pulled up the last hundred yards.

The Boquet was worked eight weeks as a two year old and trotted a quarter in 39½ seconds, on the 30th of May, then she was not worked again until the first of Jan. 1902. On the 30th of last July she worked a fifth heat in 2:21 the last half in 1:08, the last quarter in 33 seconds, and the last eighth in 16 seconds. Nushagak has only three year olds besides, Aristo and The Boquet. One of them a black gelding out of Addie W. by Whips was worked three months, trotted a mile in 2:35½, last half in 1:15, last quarter in 35½ seconds; the other two were not regularly trained just broken.

Dr. Martin, bay gelding, dam Viola by Gen. Benton, while being broken was started up ten times trotted a quarter in 42 seconds, last eighth in 20½ seconds, to road cart.

Black gelding, dam Penelope by Mohawk Chief, while being broken was started up 12 times, trotted a quarter in 41½ seconds, last eighth in 20½ seconds, to road cart.

Nushagak has two four year olds, one of them trotted a quarter in 41½ seconds, as a two year old with eight weeks work; the other one was broken and worked two months this spring and showed a quarter in 35 seconds.

In winning the Occident and the Stanford stakes at Sacramento this year, Aristo placed his name in the books as the first horse to win both these stakes. The fastest record made in the Occident was made by Sunol in 1889, when she trotted the mile in 2:16½ in a walkover. In 1900 Eula Mac by McKinney trotted the second heat of this race in 2:17½, the same time made by Aristo in the third heat this year.

Aristo and his sire Nushagak are both owned by Mr. Alex Brown, proprietor of the Walnut Grove Stock Farm, Sacramento county, California.

Onward is Dead.

LEXINGTON (Ky.), Oct. 10.—Onward, the great trotting sire, died suddenly to-day of indigestion at the farm of Peter Duryea. He was foaled in 1875 and was owned by Peter Duryea and W. E. D. Stokes, the New York millionaire.

The above brief dispatch announced the death of one of the greatest trotting sires that ever lived. At the close of 1901, Onward was the sire of 9 in the 2:10 list, which is more than are credited to any other stallion, 26 in the 2:15 list and 158 in the 2:30 list, while 106 of his sons were the sires of 246 standard trotters and 208 standard pacers, and 57 of his daughters had produced 63 trotters and 28 pacers with standard records. The fastest of his get were the trotters Beuzetta 2:06½, Onward Silver 2:08, Pilatus 2:09½, Cornelia Belle 2:10, Cut Glass 2:10½, Rex Americus 2:11½, and the pacers Pearl Onward 2:06½, Gazette 2:07½, Colbert 2:07½, Col. Thornton 2:09½, Major Mason 2:09½ and Byzantine 2:10½.

Onward was a son of the mighty George Wilkes 2:22, founder of the great Wilkes family, and his dam was old Dolly by Mambrino Chief 11, that was the dam also of Czarina 2:21, Thorndale 2:22½ and the wonderful race horse and sire, Director 2:17, that founded one of the greatest racing families that has ever appeared on American race tracks.

Up to the time of his death Onward had been a remarkably healthy and vigorous horse, and though kept as a private stallion during very recent years, has been annually bred to quite a number of mares. His list of standard performers is by no means completed, as he added six to it last year and there are already four or five new ones this year. Onward was bred by R. West, of Lexington, Kentucky, and owned afterwards for many years by Col. R. P. Pepper, in whose possession he acquired great fame as a sire. He was a fast trotter for his day, having a record of 2:25½, made in 1881, when he was six years old.

Half Mile Heats on the Speedway.

There were several hundred spectators at the speedway in Golden Gate Park last Saturday afternoon to witness the races given under auspices of the Golden Gate Park Driving Club. In the first event there were three heats, Mr. S. Sprague's Clara L. winning the first and Mr. J. W. Bonney's Echora Wilkes by Nutwood Wilkes taking the other two. Steve S. got third position and won the white ribbon.

The second race was won in straight heats by A. Jacob's horse Bum.

Owing to the fact that there is no place on the speedway from which both start and finish can be seen, there was no time taken.

The races resulted in good sport however and delighted a large crowd of people.

The club proposes to hold these matinees often in the future.

Adbell 2:23 Breaks a Leg.

While playing in a paddock at the Elmwood Farm, near Lexington, Kentucky on Tuesday of last week, the noted trotting stallion Adbell, holder of the yearling record of 2:23, slipped and broke his left foreleg and may have to be destroyed. John E. Madden, the well-known horsemen paid $10,000 for Adbell last winter. Adbell is by Advertiser, out of the great Beautiful Bells, and trotted to the world's record of 2:23 as a yearling on the San Jose track, September 27th, 1894. He is the sire of Rowellan 2:15½ and Adabella 2:25½. Every effort will be made to save the life of Adbell, and if the fracture can be reduced and the leg made to heal, no expense will be spared to accomplish this result.

Death of Hon. Frank Jones.

The breeding and racing interests of America suffered a loss when Hon. Frank Jones of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, died on the 4th day of the present month. Mr. Jones was the proprietor of the Maplewood Farm, and owned many trotters and pacers bred in California, among them Eleata 2:08½, Idolita 2:09½, Who Is It 2:10½ and others. He was a very wealthy man, interested in many large enterprises and had been a member of Congress. The selection of Mr. Jones' trotting stock and the management of his horse breeding establishment was intrusted to Daniel Mahaney, in whom Mr. Jones had implicit confidence. Whenever Mr. Mahaney attended the sales of trotting stock, and saw an animal that he fancied, he was never prevented from buying on account of the price.

A newspaper published at Portsmouth, his home, thus speaks of him: "In the death of the Hon. Frank Jones this city lost its foremost and most interesting citizen and a man who had really done more for the city than any other person who ever lived here. His great interest in the industries of the place had made him the most conspicuous figure in all business. While he retained this interest up to the time of his death, these industries will in no way be affected by his departure, since for the past year or more he had not personally done any business, all having been carried on by his managers. Of course the Frank Jones Brewing Company, which is now controlled by the English syndicate, will not be affected in the least, and it will be the same of the Morley button factory and shoe factory.

Some months ago there was formed in Concord, before the Secretary of State, a company known as the Frank Jones Stock Company, with Mr. Jones as president, and as directors men who were prominently identified with the management of Mr. Jones' business, such as J. V. Hanscom, Calvin Page, A. F. Howard, F. W. Hartford and John H. Bartlett. All the business of the estate will, it is understood, be under the management of these men, who have a thorough knowledge of the great property they will have to handle.

Two personal characteristics of Mr. Jones were his love of animals and his extreme neatness. At his farm he had the finest of live stock; hardly a day passed that he did not look them over, and outside of his racing stables his many yokes of slick oxen were his favorites. He never tired of showing people through the stables and the ox house. He was very fond of high bred horses, and liked racing, but never bet a cent on the result, although his stable colors have many times taken first money in the Grand Circuit.

Neatness with Mr. Jones was a hobby. At his farm the men all say he would stand almost anything without much complaint except slackness in the care of the place, and this was an unpardonable sin. The stables and all the outhouses were models of neatness, being kept as clean as a good housewife's kitchen, while the vast hedges and lawns about the magnificent farm were always looking spick-and-span.

Mr. Jones was a prominent factor in politics. For a man with his great business cares, he took a deep interest in city affairs, and was a power in both parties."

A Great Thoroughbred Mare.

Scepter, which won the Two Thousand Guineas, the One Thousand Guineas, lost the Derby but won the Oaks, has now won the St. Leger, thus cleaning up the last of the English classic stakes for three year olds in 1902. Finishing second and third to her in the St. Leger were Rising Glass and Friar Tuck, which finished second and third in the Derby behind Ard Patrick, Scepter herself coming fourth. How the mare came to lose the Derby is now a puzzle for the form is true enough it would appear. However if she did not manage to win the Derby she showed marvelous form when she came out on the Friday after the Wednesday on which the Derby was run and mowed down her field in the Oaks in fine style. Scepter has now won this season about $110,000, which places her sire Persimmon, bred and owned by King Edward, in the lead among the sires of money winners in England this year. Scepter was bred by the late Duke of Westminster, her dam being Ornament, full sister to Ormonde, for which Mr. O'B. McDonough, the California millionaire, paid $150,000 some years ago. In the dispersion of the Duke of Westminster's stud after his death Scepter was sold as a yearling for $50,000, the record price for a thoroughbred of the age. She was purchased by Mr. Sevier who still owns her. After she had won the Two Thousand Guineas and the One Thousand Guineas stakes, it looked as though she had the Derby at her mercy and thereon W. K. Vanderbilt, New York, then in England, offered $200,000 for her—the largest sum ever known to have been offered for a horse of any breed. She did not show any very promising form as a two year old and lost in the Derby and Grand Prix, but at that she has made a campaign extraordinary from every point of view.

Three Families Well Represented.

When The Monk, Lord Derby and John A. McKerron scored for the word in the Challenge Trophy, three distinct trotting families were represented and each was a very good representative of the best of each family. The Monk is a typical Electioneer; he has that low-headed carriage so characteristic of the family, and while possessing a little more action than is usually seen in members of his family, his stride was not unlike many of the get of the sons of Electioneer. Lord Derby represented a very different type. He is a typical Mambrino King, having the blood-like appearance so characteristic of the get of the noted "dude horse," as he was once called. Of the three trotters, the action of Lord Derby is one calculated to attain the highest rate of speed as well as to carry it the farthest, for while he lacks somewhat the absolute poetry in the gait of John A. McKerron, he has just enough action in front and behind to avoid the tiring gait of all horses whose action is perfectly pure and without much folding of the knee. John A. McKerron's gait is so pure that he needs very little in the way of boots or toe weights; he seems to skim over the ground, and for absolute purity I doubt if the horse has ever lived whose gait compared with his. The Monk swings his legs, especially behind, having very little hock action, and it is this particular style of moving that is apt to cause the horse to grow leg weary. That Lord Derby's way of going is easy for him, requiring little or no effort, is proved by his phenomenal burst of speed, the like of which has never been seen in any trotter. It is frictionless and easy, at the same time without the appearance of an automatic movement, noticeable in some very pure-gaited trotters. A study of the photographs of both scores and finishes in the race for the Challenge Trophy is of interest. In the start for the first heat Lord Derby might pass for a high stepping harness horse, while John A. McKerron and The Monk, both in exactly the same stride, will appear to have a swinging motion to their legs. In the picture of The Monk he is shown with every leg off the ground, as is Lord Derby, in the start for the second heat; in fact, in the latter picture Lord Derby seems to be several inches off the ground. A striking thing about these photographs is that John A. McKerron seems to have more hock and knee action at the finish of his miles than at the start, and in the finish of the first heat, in which he has the off fore and near hind foot on the ground, his action is excessive. There is no question but that horses lacking almost entirely hock and knee action become leg weary much more quickly than do those whose action is excessive. As an example of the two different styles one needs cite but those of Guy and Prince Wilkes. The former did not seem to fold his knee in the least, and had the appearance of trotting stiff-legged. With Prince Wilkes it was the other extreme, and his action, particularly in front, was so extreme that he pounded himself through his elbow boots.—Hawley in Ky. Stock Farm.

Closing Days at Bakersfield.

BAKERSFIELD, Oct. 10.—Fifteen hundred people attended the races this afternoon. There were two harness and two running events. L. W. won the mixed race for Kern county horses easily in three straight heats in 2:22, 2:24 and 2:20; Si S. second and Uncle James third. Ferndale was drawn after the second heat.

The 2:16 trot brought out a large field. Zambra, which is making a great record on the circuit, won in three straight heats. Time, 2:23, 2:24, 2:22. Foxy Mac and Tom Smith finished second and third, respectively. Prince Howard took fourth money.

Five furlongs, running—Sirdar won, Della Conner second. Time 1:05.

Half-mile—Tribby won. Buck Laddie second. Time, 0:51.

October 11.—Twenty-two hundred people attended the races Saturday, the last day. It was Bakersfield Day, and all the merchants closed their stores. The fair has been a great success. Summary:

2:10 pace, purse $500—Dictatress won in three straight heats. Time, 2:16, 2:17, 2:18. Midnight second and Alford C. third.

Kern county road race for gentlemen drivers—Del Paso won, Elsie second, Tommy third. Time, 2:40.

Five furlongs—Disturber won, Hercules second. Time, 1:02.

Half-mile—Wieland won. Damfino second. Time, 0:50.

Leola, 2:09½, is a high-class wagon trotter as was evidenced recently, when she took a wagon record of 2:12½ at Cleveland, in her first start to that kind of a hitch.

LOS ANGELES MEETING.

There were 6000 people present at the opening of the two weeks' meeting of the new organization known at the Los Angeles Racing Association down at the metropolis of Southern California last Saturday. Los Angeles society was represented by large numbers in the boxers and in tally-hos and other fashionable rigs in the infield. Governor Gage was present and many notables in the political and business world of the community were there also. "But," says the Los Angeles Herald, "the number of representative people present was smaller than was to have been expected on the opening day. The boxes were only fairly well filled and the grand stand showed many vacant sections."

A real holiday crowd down in Los Angeles, when there is some great event to be decided, and it must be a harness race at that to bring out the very largest number, means fifteen thousand people within the enclosure of University track.

Horace Egbert of San Francisco was presiding judge and Fred Mulholland, also of this city, wielded the starting flag for both running and harness races. The opening race of the day was the 2:17 pace, in which Col. Moorhead's good horse Robert I. ruled the favorite and won easily in straight heats.

To a good start in the first heat Alfred D. led at the judges' stand, but broke at the eighth, and Robert I. took a lead which he maintained to the finish. Eaglella made a bid at the head of the stretch but could not hold the pace and Robert I. finished under a strong pull. Time, 2:14 1-3.

In the second heat Robert I. led from the wire, and while Harry J. forced him to extend himself he caught the judge's eye a length to the good. Eaglella was third. Time, 2:13½.

Previous to the third heat Robert I. was made a 10 to 4 favorite over the field and showed how good a race horse he is by beating his nearest opponent, Eaglella, by two open lengths. Time, 2:15½.

The 2:14 trot, in which McKenna, Richmond Chief, Vic Schellar and What Is It were the original entries, was declared off.

The second event was for two year old runners, that were non-winners of a stake event. Maidens were allowed five pounds, and those that had been beaten three times five pounds additional. Warte Nicht, carrying 118 pounds, top weight, was made a 7 to 10 favorite, with Mimo second choice at 2. They finished in this order with Blue Miracle, a 7 to 1 shot, third and Tom Mitchell was heavily backed for place, but failed to make good. The time was 1:02.

The largest entry of the day showed in the third race, three-quarters of a mile, which was for three year olds and upward, selling. There were eleven starters, with Malaspina an even money favorite. Jim Gore II. was heavily played at 8 to 5 and the judgment of the betting public was justified by the result. Malaspina won in 1:14½, with Gore second and Frank Pearce, a 20 to 1 shot, third.

Interest in the previous events was forgotten when the entries in the Los Angeles Derby came to the post and a handsomer sight could not be imagined. The race was at a mile and a furlong, the winner to receive in addition to the stake a handsome silver cup, presented by C. A. Harrison, proprietor of the Hotel Rosslyn.

Dr. Rowell's stable, consisting of Bon Mot, Champagne and Candidate, were made favorites against the field at the prohibitive odds of 1 to 5. Claudator had some admirers at 4, while a few thought Dwight Way, at 8, looked well. Tibs, the other starter, was quoted at 30. Huachuca and Divina were scratched. Lester Reiff was up on Bon Mot, an added reason why the bay colt and his stable companions were such hot favorites.

The horses were sent away to a beautiful start, Champagne making the running. Reiff took Bon Mot back from the start and did not make a bid until the head of the stretch. Here he gave the grand colt his head, and sweeping around the outside assumed the lead. Dwight Way was coming fast, but his pace was not sufficient to overtake the Rowell entries and he finished third. Bon Mot was first in 1:54, with Champagne second.

The fifth race, the Angelus Hotel purse, at six furlongs, brought out five starters, with The Fretter a 4 to 5 favorite. Headwater took the lead until the head of the stretch, when The Fretter went to the front and won handily by a length. Headwater was second and Meehanus third. Time, 1:13½.

Of the eight starters in the sixth and last race of the day, El Pilar was made favorite at 2 and 2½ to 1, though nothing in his recent performance justified such action on the part of the books or public. Windward opened at 4 and was backed down to 2 before the horses reached the post. El Pilar, with his usual obstinacy, refused to start with the rest, got off last and finished away back.

Conejo, 7 to 1, won; Castake, 7 to 1, second, and Windward, 2 to 1, third. The finish was close and exciting, only half a length separating first and second and third at the wire. Summaries:

Pacing, 2:17 class; purse $700.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 6.

The second day of the meeting brought out a large crowd considering it was Monday, as that day is an off one on every race track. There was considerable betting done and the races proved to be close and spirited contests in the majority of instances. The 2:30 trot was the feature of the day's sport by long odds, and a battle royal between Princess and Iloilo during five heats, the mare finally winning. The followers of the circuit say it was one of the best contests seen in California for years, and both Farmer Bunch and J. Vance drivers of the contestants came in for much praise for their horsemanship.

Princess took the first heat handily. The second went to Iloilo after a bit of drying in the stretch by Bunch that ought to win on any track. Iloilo broke not fifty feet from the wire, with Princess coming along like a runaway locomotive, but Bunch caught the bay gelding and he hardly lost a whole stride before a quick recovery and a noble spurt enabled him to beat Princess by a nose. Bunch got a shade the best of the start in the third heat. Princess broke at the upper turn and Bunch got into trouble in the same place as before—close to the wire. Even his able driving could not save the heat and Princess added another to Vance's credit. In the fourth heat Bunch evened matters again, and another break in the stretch was the cause of it, Princess being the one to leave her feet. Even up for the fifth both drivers had their backers and it looked to be either man's race, according to the luck that determines whether a horse shall break half way around and recover or go up almost at the wire, when it is too late to mend. The fates nominated Iloilo and Bunch for further running honors, and Princess' break at the quarter did not retard her sufficiently to prevent Driver Vance from availing himself of Iloilo's usual trick at the finish. Bunch recovered quickly and made a strong bid at the wire, but Princess had the money already won. Very satisfactory time, ranging from 2:16½ to 2:18½, was hung up for the five heats.

The green class pace was won by Walter Maben's brown gelding Athnio in straight heats, the fastest of which was 2:16½.

A field of four warmed up for the Jonathan Stakes at five and one-half furlongs, with Dr. Rowell's chestnut colt, Warte Nicht, well liked at 2 to 5. L. A. Jackson, who does Dr. Rowell's ordinary riding, had the mount, and Mimo, with Fogg up, was the medium of considerable play at 2 to 1. Starter Fred Mulholland sent them away well. Tom Mitchell broke well in front, with Mimo close behind and Warte Nicht third, Ransch keeping Isabellita back for a possible chance at the finish. Mimo went out at the stretch taking the lead by a long length, and Ransch made his customary bid with such good effect that only a neck separated him from the money, both Mimo and Isabellita feeling the whip at the wire. Warte Nicht was pocketed at the upper turn, and ran into another mess of the same sort a few hundred feet after. The distance was covered in 1:08½, which is a fair sample of the excellent time made during the afternoon.

Eight fair ones came out for the six furlong event, with Jim Gore quoted favorite at 1 to 2, the public fancying Ransch after his showing in the last race. Their confidence was not misplaced, for Jerry clearly outrode Frawley at the finish, lifting in his mount, Jim Gore II., a winner by a neck. Time was 0:24½ for the first quarter, 0:49½ at the half and 1:14½ at the finish.

Another four-horse race at a mile and a sixteenth was the fifth event on the program, with Ulloa a favorite at 2 to 5 and Ransch up. Frank Woods broke a

THE TIME IS OPPORTUNE for all breeders and owners of the trotters and pacers whose records or breeding were not correctly given last year in the Year Book to take steps to have those mistakes corrected immediately, and the same suggestion is made to the owners and breeders of horses that have made records this year. There are errors in the Year Book that are almost unpardonable, but these are few compared to those which would be gladly rectified by the publishers, but which are there because the owners and breeders make no effort to furnish the correct information even when asked to do so. There are hundreds of horses named in the Year Book and given as "untraced" whose breeding can be correctly printed in the next volume if the owner or breeder will send the necessary information to Secretary Steiner. The time to send it is now. Every owner whose stallion has put any new ones in the list this year should see that Secretary Steiner gets a full and complete list of them, together with their breeding on the dam's side. It is not every man who owns a horse that fills out the required pedigree when making his entries and it is not every owner that even knows the pedigree of his horse on the dam's side. When the American Trotting Register Association gets copies of all the judges' books used at the harness meetings throughout the country, the clerks probably find there are more books in which the pedigree columns have been left blank than those in which they are filled out. If the owners of the horses thus recorded cannot be reached and the necessary information as to the pedigrees obtained from them, the word "untraced" will appear opposite those horses' names in the Year Book and there is positively no help for it. So it behooves every person who is interested in any horses that have made records this year to see that Secretary Steiner, of the American Trotting Register Association, gets a correct statement of the horse's name, age, color and pedigree. Do this and you will have no kick coming when the Year Book is issued.

TO THE READERS of this journal who get their papers Saturday morning we take this opportunity of saying that at the Palo Alto Stock Farm to-day are to be sold twenty-five head of royally bred trotters and no person who proposes to continue or engage in the breeding of standard stock can afford to miss the sale. The Palo Alto Farm, the greatest nursery of speed in the world, is gradually passing out of existence. By this time next year there will be nothing left there but a few old pensioned broodmares and a glorious memory. The breeding stock are to be entirely dispersed and those who secure some of them will be the wise and fortunate breeders of future champions. There are sixteen head of two year olds and nine broodmares to go at auction to-day. The two year olds are great speed prospects and the fillies and colts among them bred well enough to start a top notch breeding farm with, even in this day of high class breeding. There is sure to be a large attendance at the sale, which will begin at 11:30 A. M. William G. Layng will be the auctioneer and Superintendent Covey will tell the buyers all about the horses offered. Palo Alto's reputation of having everything just as represented will be adhered to as strictly in these closing out sales as they always have been.

THE CALIFORNIA BRED PACERS that have secured records of 2:04 or better are just five in number. Anaconda 2:01½ by Knight heads the list, Coney 2:02 by McKinney is second, Directly 2:03½ by Direct is third, Sir Albert S. 2:03½ by Diablo is fourth and the old hero Flying Jib 2:04 by Algona completes the small, but high class list.

THE WINTER RACING SEASON which will open in California on the 15th of next month will probably start at the famous Ingleside track, as Mayor Schmitz has signed the ordinance permitting racing to be carried on in this city forty days in each year. The list of stakes, seventeen in number, in every one of which, with the exception of the Burns Handicap, the money offered is added to the stake, will be found in our advertising columns this week. It is the richest lot of stakes ever offered by an association in California and will attract entries from all the leading racing stables in America. President Thos. H. Williams is now in the East in the interest of this great winter meeting and expects to induce more Easterners to visit California with their horses than ever before. During the racing season there will be no race run for less than a $400 purse and the overnight handicaps and special races will be for purses of from $500 to $1000. In making entries for any of these stakes send them to Percy W. Treat, Secretary, 23 Kearny street, San Francisco.

NOTE THE DATES of sales of thoroughbreds advertised by William G. Layng of the Occidental Horse Exchange. Owners and Breeders having thoroughbreds to sell should consult Mr. Layng immediately if they have not already secured dates for the sale of their horses. The racing season will open next month and prices promise to be better this year than ever.

Terre Haute Stakes Divided.

The $10,000 three-year-old stake at Terre Haute was settled in a novel manner. Owing to rain during the week of the meeting, the race was carried over into the following week and then as the weather still continued unfavorable the members of the Terre Haute association decided to divide the rich stake equally among the twelve colts that were on the track and ready to start. There were probably a dozen others that would have been on the track ready for a division of the money had the owners any idea that this great stake would have been settled in any other manner than by a contest on the track. As it was, each of the twelve nominators who were ready to race their colts received $835. The same conditions governed the Matron Stake for $2000, for two year olds, and each of the nine who were ready to start received $222. The action of the management in thus distributing the purse was undoubtedly satisfactory to the owners of the colts, as it enabled them to continue along and meet their engagements on the circuit, but there is not a horse owner in the country but what will extend their sympathy to the Terre Haute managers for having met with such unfavorable weather conditions. It is really too bad that these valuable colt engagements could not have been raced off, for they would have furnished a great deal of pleasure and rare sport as well to thousands of persons who would have witnessed the race as well as many other thousands who would have keenly enjoyed the reports of these events. —Chicago Horseman.

Care of Horses.

It is a common complaint among the older generation that harness bought in these degenerate days has not the stable wearing qualities that it had when made when they were boys, says an exchange. We have no doubt but that those made to-day are equally as good as those of fifty years ago, and if they receive the same careful treatment given them by our forebears, will last equally as well. In that day a set of harness represented quite an outlay and was consequently well taken care of. Wetting does not hurt leather if hung up to dry instead of being allowed to lay in a pile in the corner of the barn. They should be hung up on wooden pegs in a clean, dry room, so as to be free from dampness.

If soiled they should be thoroughly washed with castile soap, and should be oiled at least twice a year, and if in constant use, at least four times a year. For this purpose pure neatsfoot oil can be used, or any of the standard harness oils, sold in the stores. Before applying the oil every part should be unbuckled and taken apart and washed in a tub in warm soapsuds—not hot, or it will injure the leather. Wash only sufficiently to remove the accumulated dirt, and do not allow the harness to remain in the water long enough to absorb it. After washing, hang up in an airy place in the shade to dry. When it is dry enough so that when a strap is beat it will not exclude water, but is still damp, apply the oil. The oil should be well rubbed for a sufficient length of time to insure its entering the pores of the leather. Harness treated in this manner has been known to last 15 to 25 years.

Racing at Glenbrook Park.

Two days racing was given last week at the Glenbrook Park track, between Nevada City and Grass Valley before large crowds of people who were in attendance at the Seventeenth District Agricultural Society's annual fair. Results:

Trotting, 2:30 class—Meringo won, Inez second, Blacksmith third. Time—2:35½, 2:37½, 2:36½.
Running, five furlongs—Ernst won, Cyro second, Little Girl third. Time—1:06.
Running, four furlongs—Princess Marion won, Allison Rauch second, Echo third. Time—0:51½.
Trotting, trial against time—Lochinvar went the distance twice, failing to beat his record. The first was done in 2:30, the second in 2:31.
Running, four furlongs—Ernest won, Fairfax second, Little Fellow third. Time—0:54.
Trotting—Weke first, Hambletonian second. Best time—3:31½.
Trotting—Inez won, Mercer second. Best time—2:45½.

A One Wheel Sulky.

One of the latest patterns of sulkies, which it is hoped by the inventor may enable a horse to cover a mile in two minutes or less on a trot, has but a single wheel, hence its name, the unicycle sulky. The Cleveland Leader says: "A little, cramped-up room at the corner of Michigan and Seneca streets contains a few pounds of steel, wood and rubber, which have been so cunningly devised and combined that they bid fair to revolutionize horse racing, and, perhaps, lower the trotting record to a point under the two minute mark. The new sulky, which has but one wheel, will weigh from twelve to sixteen pounds less than the lightest bicycle sulky. Road friction will be reduced one-half, and on curves centrifugal force will help to decrease rather than to increase friction. The unicycle racing machine is the invention of J. S. Scarborough, the inventor of the Juniper steel process of the United States Steel Company."

Some Training Ideas.

At a recent half-mile track meeting, says Raymond, in the Horse World, my attention was attracted to a big, nice pacing mare that possessed a lot of speed, but that failed to get a very good place in her race. She wore hobbles, toe weights, quarter, shin and knee boots in front, scalpers, ankle and shin boots behind, and, although she acted exceedingly clever, she wore a kicking strap. A man who sat beside me in the stand happened to live in the town where the mare was owned, and when I remarked on the rigging the mare carried, he laughed, and said that the worst part of it was that she did not need a bit of it. He had watched her take her work for two seasons, and said that in all that time she had never touched one of her boots, never acted other than in the most decorous manner, and so far as he had been able to see both her hobbles and her toe weights were simply hindrances to her. The trainer of the mare seems to have a mania for using everything in the way of rigging that he has seen used on other horses, and the result is that he is spoiling a really promising young mare.

LOS ANGELES MEETING.

little ahead in a very fair start with Ulloa close behind, and Ransch inclined to force the running. Ulloa led at the quarter and cut out the pace until well into the stretch, but had nothing left to combat See's move on Frank Woods, and the bay gelding won by a length and a half, in 1:47, which is very close to the coast record.

Dolly Weithoff proved to be the best horse in the last field of eight and without the services of Jerry Ransch might have won, though Collis spoke strongly for the lead at the finish with Toribio. Dolly Weithoff was the medium of considerable play at 4 to 5, and was backed down to 3 to 5, the public's judgment being affirmed by the race. Time for the seven furlongs was 1:27½. Summaries:

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 14.

This was Ladies' Day, the fair sex being admitted free to the track and grand stand and as a result they turned out in large numbers.

The odds chalked up by the bookmakers were very close and while the favorites won in the harness races, they failed to land in the running events and the bookmakers won considerable money although they industriously circulated the report that they were losers.

The 2:15 trot was taken by Arketa, she being the class of the four starters, of which three were by McKinney. Arketa was not forced to trot within less than four seconds of her Fresno record of 2:14½.

Robert I. won the 2:10 pace very handily, this being his eighth win of the season. He won in straight heats as usual, Eagletta getting second money and Dictatress third.

The first running event saw the ignominious defeat of the favorite, Idogo. Although never better than 9 to 10 in the betting, he finished absolutely last, Ingo, with Ransch up, winning with ease. El Fonse took the mile selling, defeating his fall brother, the favorite, El Pilar, by a length, old Alicia getting the show. Jennie Hughes was made hot favorite in the six furlong sprint, but got off last and stayed there most of the way, Malaspina winning as she pleased from Montana Peeress, with Claudator third.

The bettors expected Dolly Weithoff, with Ransch up, to win the last race, at six and a half furlongs, and she was made a 7 to 10 favorite in the books. Dolly had enough at the paddock, however, after leading all the way, and February came with a rush and won by a length. Frank Pearce managed to land in third place. Summary:

Running, six furlongs—Ingo won, All About second, Tompion third. Time—1:14½. Jim Roberts, Dr. Shorb and Idogo also ran.

Running, one mile—El Fonse won, El Pilar second, Alicia third. Time—1:42½. The Hoodoo, Abano and Halmetta also ran.

Running, six furlongs—Malaspina won, Montana Peeress second, Claudator third. Time—1:14. Jennie Hughes, Great Mogul and Royal F. also ran.

Running, six and one-half furlongs—February won, Dolly second, Frank Pearce third. Time—1:19½. The Miller, Loyal E., Golden Light and Tizona also ran.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 15.

This was Governors' day at Agricultural Park, so called in honor of the presence of Governor Gage and Governor Torres of Sonora, Mexico and his staff of distinguished looking Mexicans. The party occupied two boxes at the front of the grand stand, about which were draped the Stars and Stripes and the Mexican flags.

Favorites fared rather badly to-day and the books again took in more money than they were required to pay out.

The 2:12 trot had two entries, but Richmond Chief alone appeared and he had a walkover. It required five heats to decide the 2:18 trot, which was the biggest betting affair of the meet thus far. There was not much choice for the first heat, but when Lady Fair took it in handy fashion there was a plunge on Bunch's trotter. Lady Rowena took the second heat, however, and the bettors switched to her. The third heat showed a surprise in McKenna, who won handily, Rowena coming in last. From this on McKenna ruled favorite in the pools and took the next two heats and the race.

Loyal S. won the first running event in a driving finish from Toribio, the strong favorite. In the two year old dash Caesar Young's Little Margaret was the "good thing" handed about and Ransch brought her in first by a short nose ahead of Blue Miracle, who made up a lot of lost ground in the last quarter. Old Headwater ran a splendid six furlongs in 1:13½, beating Lodestar half a length. Meehanus, an equal favorite with the winner, did not run to his best form.

Narra G. was the surprise of the day. She led all the way and won eased up by three lengths in the fast time of 1:40. The Fretter, with 122 pounds up, could do no better than a poor third. Filibuster took the last race from Pat Morrissey in easy fashion. Frank Pearce, the favorite, got the show.

The bench show and the horse and cattle exhibits were added attractions to-day. Summary:

Trotting, 2:18 class, three in five; purse $500.

Time—2:19, 2:19, 2:20½, 2:23, 2:24.

Running, six furlongs, selling—Loyal S. won, Legal Maxim second, Toribio third. Time, 1:15. Miss Culver, Delvita, Cincin, El Karu and Churchlight also ran.

Running, four and a half furlongs—Little Margaret won, Blue Miracle second, Vigoroso third. Time, 0:54½. Tom Mitchell, Harriet S. and Eva Frazer also ran.

Running, six furlongs—Headwater won, Lodestar second, Meehanus third. Time, 1:13½.

Running, one mile—Narra G. won, Albert Enright second, The Fretter third. Time, 1:40. Ulloa, Straggler and Wieland also ran.

Running, seven furlongs—Filibuster won, Pat Morrissey second, Frank Pearce third. Time, 1:27½. Mont Eagle, Mike Rice and Senora Caesar also ran.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16.

Ladies' day at the races to-day brought out a big crowd of them, packing the grand stand and overflowing into the grounds about the judges' stand and paddock. There was a great deal of betting, though, perhaps, the sum did not aggregate so large as yesterday, and plenty of excitement for the bettors. No less than three running events were taken by the small margin of a head and in only one did a favorite reward its backers.

The harness attraction was limited to one race, the 2:18 trot, which went to Briney K. after five heats had been trotted. Hopper started off with a heat in 2:19½, but lost the next two to Briney K. Tom Smith then managed to get a first place mark, but was unable to do better than second in the following heat, Briney K. winning the fifth heat and the race. Hopper was a strong favorite in the betting after the first heat, and a lot of money went in on the field at $4 against $10 for Hopper. The third heat was the most exciting, Briney K. winning by half a length from Tom Smith. Maggie May was distanced in the first heat.

Alicia took the mile selling race by a length from Morinel, the hot favorite, who ran in improved form.

The six and a half furlong dash resulted in a very close finish between Golden Light, The Miller and King Dellis. They finished in that order, with but a head and a nose separating the three.

The five and a half furlongs selling event to Meteor by a head from Fine Shot. Castlake, with Ransch up, was made a strong favorite in the last race, and just managed to win from Wayward by a head. Summary:

Trotting, 2:18 class; purse $500.
 Briney K., b g by Strathway.....(Cody) 2 1 1 2 1
 Tom Smith, b s by McKinney.....(Van Bokkelen) 3 3 2 1 2

Time—2:19½, 2:19½, 2:22, 2:27, 2:25½.

Running, one mile—Alicia won, Morinel second, Halmetta third. Time, 1:43. Tibbs, Wieland, General Cronje and Sirdar also ran.

Running six and a half furlongs—Golden Light won, The Miller second, King Dellis third. Time, 1:20½. Montana Peeress, All About and Talves also ran.

Running, five furlongs—Meteor won, Fine Shot second, Miss Dividend third. Time, 1:01½. Mythrox, Cors Gootz, Royal F., Great Mogul, Tompion and Tanna also ran.

Running, one mile—Castake won, Windward second, Cowboy third. Time, 1:41. Dwight Way, El Fonse and El Pilar also ran.

John A. McKerron's Record Now 2:06 1 2.

At Lexington last Friday, the Nutwood Wilkes stallion John A. McKerron, winner of the Boston Cup race, was started to beat his former record of 2:10. The event was regularly advertised and programmed that there might be no dispute in regard to the record and all the little technicalities of the rules complied with. The great trotter earned a new record of 2:06½, equalling his matinee record and demonstrating clearly to every horseman present that no horse in America has any license to beat him in a brush, as he covered the first quarter, which is notoriously a slow one, in 30½ seconds, and the second one in 30 seconds, making his time to the half just 1:00½.

Mr. Devereux believes he can drive his horse a faster mile yet at the Memphis track.

Robert I. 2:10, Green Meadow Stock Farm's pacer, now in W. G. Durfee's string, is the best money winner of the pacers on the California Circuit this year. The largest purse he has won is the Raisin City Stakes at Fresno, $1000, of which he drew down $500 as first money. This son of Hambletonian Wilkes and Anna Belle by Dawn has started in eleven races this year, of which he has won eight and been second in the remaining three. The total of his winning up to October 15th, this season, is $2825. Deducting the entrance money there remains $2185 to his credit. His mark of 2:10 was made at Napa when the track was not fast, and many watches caught him in 2:09½.

Like all good things, Jackson's Napa Soda has a dozen counterfeits. Watch out!

Fall.

By the day that shorter grows,
By the night with lengthen'd close;
By the sky that seems less blue,
By the clouds of somber hue;
By these signs, yes, by them all,
We note the coming of the Fall.

By the sighing of the trees,
By the dropping of the leaves;
By the garner full of grain,
By the stubble on the plain;
By the harvest gather'd all,
We note the coming of the Fall.

By the aspect growing drear,
By the grasses turning sere;
By the flowers that droop and fade,
By old Sol less bright array'd;
By the air in hut and hall,
We note the coming of the Fall.

By the birds that southward fly,
By the brook that hurries by;
By the threatening whip-poor-will,
Sounding note that bode ill,
By the quail's familiar call,
We note the coming of the Fall.

By the golden-red night,
By the sumac red and bright;
By the cardinals ablow,
By the lilies lying low;
By the reeds now rank and tall,
We note the coming of the Fall.

By fair Summer's requiem sung,
By Dame Nature's plaintive tongue;
By the sobbing of the rain,
By our hearts that join the strain,
By the joys we would recall,
We note the coming of the Fall.

On a hot day drink Jackson's Napa Soda lemonade and be refreshed.

Wild Turkeys of the Mogollon Mountains.

Spanish historians and explorers tell of the immense wild turkeys which flocked in the mountain forests of Arizona, and truly the present day birds bear out the statements of the Castilian chroniclers. If all the wild turkeys in the Mogollon mountains, from Turkey creek to the New Mexico line, could be killed or trapped, there would be Christmas dinner material for half of the families of the nation, such is their abundance in some districts.

When the turkey season opened last year, in the middle of October, Ed Bush a Cibique Apache half-breed, brought to the military post at San Carlos a gobbler which weighed 34 pounds. Three weeks later, when the turkeys had fattened on the beach nuts of the forest and the grain fields of the mountain ranches, a party of officers from the fort, on a three days' hunt up the White Mountain creek, killed eighty-one turkeys, averaging 19 pounds each. Even then the turkeys were not in their prime, they are found at their best weight about the first of the year, at which time the Cibique braves hold their great annual hunt, and then feast for two weeks on the result.

To the frugal housewife, who makes her Christmas turkey last over three days, with her escallops and the soup, the Cibique method would be a revelation in economy. The Cibique is probably the wildest and most exclusive of all the Apache race, and in the unexplored fastnesses of the great mountains in the Mogollon and White ranges he has held aloof from the white man's companionship longer than any other American Indian. Not until two years ago, when John Dacey, the chief of the tribe and a stickler against the ways of civilization, was killed in a quarrel with a Deputy Sheriff, did the Cibiques permit a white man on their hunts or at their feasts. Since then they have accepted the newcomer as a necessary evil, and last year invited a number of officers from Fort Apache, together with several civilians, to accompany them.

Nearly seventy bucks, with the seven or eight whites, killed over one hundred birds in the hunt of two days. In the dense and nearly impenetrable scrub oak of the mountain sides the turkeys were extremely difficult to find, and in their runways along the ground made almost impossible game to any sportsmen but the Indians. The white guests soon wearied of the tiresome work of crawling and writhing through the brush, and most of them awaited at the camp the return of the red hunters. Not a bird was touched at camp until all the hunters were in, and then the squaws prepared the feast. That night and all next day the gorging lasted. The following day it continued, and then a hash was made of the remains. This diet served another day, and then the last member of the white party left the village. Three days later one of them chanced again to visit the village and the whole population was absorbing turkey soup, while the chief declared that the bones would serve food purposes for three days more.

Last December, a hunting party from Globe shot nine turkeys in the vicinity of Turkey creek, three of the birds weighing over 25 pounds and one tipping the scale at 42 pounds, the largest ever known to be killed, although the Apache guide declared he had shot them weighing as heavy as 50 pounds.

Fra Agapida, historian and confessor to Cortez, doubtless had in mind the wild turkeys of Arizona when he wrote a brief narrative of his first visit to Mexico and the adjoining country. He speaks of the abundance of fine food fish in the American streams, and tells of the venison and of a variety of wild cattle, meaning, perhaps, the bison, which were hunted for food. "There is also a bird," says he, "much greater in bigness than the peacock, that is found within the forests and meadows all over the country. It surpasses as food any wild birds we have found up to this time. The natives do shoot these birds with arrows and catch them in various kinds of snares. They can fly, but prefer to run, which they do with exceeding swiftness."

It is very likely that nowhere on this continent is the wild turkey to be found in such numbers as in the mountains of Eastern Arizona, and, indeed, it seems probable that he will become extinct elsewhere.

The wild turkey's range once extended from Mexico northward as far as the present State of Michigan and even into Ontario. Turkeys were plentiful in Tennessee, Kentucky, Illinois, Indiana and Ohio one hundred years ago, but are now becoming as scarce as the deer. In consideration of the manner in which have been hunted, in season and out, by whites and Indians, it is a high compliment to the turkey's intelligence that it exists at all.

In Texas, Louisiana and nearly all of the Southern States the turkey is slowly disappearing. He is a great lover of the pecan nut, and in these Southern States he is at his best at the time the nut ripens. Bear and deer, too, are lovers of the pecan, and they, with the turkey, fall easy victims to the hunter when the nut covers the ground. Early New England writers tell of the shooting of wild turkeys in Western Connecticut, and it seems probable that the birds were at one time found in Western New York, but they seemed to have disappeared from that portion of the country during the past century.

Wild turkeys, like their tame brethren, are gregarious, and live and feed together; but wherever the turkeys are to be found are several old stags. They seem to have discharged their domestic duties and settled down to hermit life. These old birds do not afford the best meat, but provide the finest sport, and to kill or capture a stag turkey requires the most delicate of woodsmancraft.

It is a well known fact among hunters of the turkey that if one bird is wounded or sick the others will stay close by and guard and feed it. Instances, too, have been known where wild gobblers have faced death to defend their mates. William Moeur, a hunter and cattleman in the White mountains, tells of the narrow escape from death which his young son experienced at the beak and spurs of a huge and angry gobbler a few years ago. The boy, but 13 years old, with a rifle, had gone in search of turkeys. Just outside of the clearing around the Moeur home he came across an immense gobbler and his mate. They had been feeding with the chickens and were heavy with food. The boy shot the hen and she fell, badly wounded. Young Moeur started toward her, neglecting to reload his rifle. He stooped over the hen to pick her up, when the gobbler came out of the bushes and in an instant had flown in the boy's face. The latter was knocked down, and with bill and claws the big turkey attacked him. The bird had badly scratched and pecked him when one of Moeur's dogs which had followed the lad, came up and drove away the gobbler. The boy dragged himself to the ranch and was in bed for weeks. He will always bear the scars left by the frenzied turkey.

Another instance of the wild turkeys was illustrated one day last winter when another dog of Moeur's treed a large flock of turkeys and pulled down a gobbler. The other birds came to the rescue and by the time the hunters came up the dog was nearly chopped to pieces.

Mining for Eels.

Mining for eels promises to become a lucrative industry in Chappaqua, N. Y., the residents of which place recently reveled in fish dinners, the material for which had come from deep down in the ground. Laborers on the excavation for a proposed railroad station made the surprising discovery.

They broke into an old drain, and out wiggled a great mass of eels, as fat and healthy as though they had come fresh from the waters of New York bay. The whole find, or catch, weighed just about 600 pounds, enough for everybody in town to have some. For a few days nothing else was talked of about the local places of resort, and old timers recalled that the ground once was a part of the old Greeley swamp, which was filled in more than a quarter century ago.

It was always supposed that the tons and tons of loam that were then dumped upon the soft ground would effectually destroy all life, but it has long been noticed that in different spots about the old marsh the land trembles perceptibly beneath any heavy load, and the generally accepted theory now is that the earth beneath is honeycombed with water courses, or perhaps traversed by a subterranean river, permitting fish to pass at will between buried springs and basins.

In making a professional call recently, Dr. Bromley, of Calaveras, had occasion to travel the Parrot's Ferry road, and passing a particularly wild and lonely point his attention was arrested by two wild animals engaged in a life and death struggle. At the same time his horses stopped and trembled with fright. The fighting animals were probably seventy-five yards distant from the doctor, who soon discovered that a deer was struggling to free itself from the vicious grip of a large wild cat. The doctor endeavored to urge forward his horses, but they too were witnesses to the encounter and refused to move. Finally the deer fell to the ground, and the cat, discovering the observing party, sought safety in the brush. Tying his team, the doctor approached the scene of conflict, and there upon the ground lay the dead deer with a crimson stream flowing from a deep throat wound inflicted by the claws and teeth of the wild cat.

It would be well, if hunters could remember that a lunch for the dog would be appreciated by a faithful, hardworking companion. When filling your canteen, fill a large one, for you may get into territory where the dog cannot find water, the animal will get as thirsty as the master. Sportsmen generally do these things, but there are lots of men who go out season after season and, unthinkingly, overlook providing for the dog certain things that the dog is rightly entitled to.

On Wednesday, the 15th inst., the open season on quail in Marin county will be in vogue. Quail have been seen in large beevies in many parts of the country. The birds have done very well there this year. A day after the hunters open on them with the guns the birds will get extremely shy and resort to numerous clever tricks in hiding and running.

Rumor hath it that the Oregon law prohibiting the shipment of feathered game from that State is systematically evaded. Ducks expressed from Oregon arrive here often and in fine condition.

Weather conditions for quail hunting have been decidedly unfavorable. The best hunting ground for local hunters has been found in the vicinity of Napa and in the Alameda county hills in and about Pleasanton, Sunol and Haywards.

The Decoy Duck.

The dawn was barely breaking when Mr. and Mrs. Pintail began to stir in their little brown nest, hidden under rushes on a bank at the edge of the marsh against which rippled the cool waters of the lake.

Mr. Pintail had been summoned by the Governor of the Pintail colony to attend an emergency meeting at the further end of the blue waters, to discuss the reasons for the mysterious disappearances from among the members of the small though aristocratic flock. Before he left the little housekeeper on the nest he gathered some berries of water grass for her breakfast and made a careful morning toilet.

With tender interest she watched him as, balancing on one leg on the bank beside the nest, he laid in place each soft feather on his shiny gray back and smoothed his snow satin waistcoat and the white collar which outlined a standing ruff of dark green velvet behind his slender head. As he stretched his graceful neck, raised the strong lithe wings, and with a swift whirr soared off against the blue she was filled with pride and love. For some time she sat, lulled to sleep by the soothing lap of the water, and then occupied in watchful care for the tiny eggs snuggled in their warm little bed, lined with soft feathers plucked from her own downy breast.

The hours flew by, and as the inquisitive sun crept up from its pink sunrise bed and peered down at her through the reeds, she began to feel worried that her mate did not return. The willows, trailing their yellow-green boughs above her, offered a tempting shade, and she flew about in their cool branches to get a view up the lake. Frogs croaked in the marshes; silvery fish darted through the green depths below her, and some crows were noisily disputing further inland, but no sign of Mr. Pintail was visible.

Out on the gleaming waves something dark was creeping slowly along, breaking the ripples into silvery sparkles at its sides. Unconscious of danger, she flew out above it for a better sight, when something in it moved, a puff of white cloud leaped toward her and a soft "ping" sounded in her ears. There was a sharp agony in her breast, a helpless beating of her shattered wing, the sky and lake whirled before her eyes, and then came a downward plunge into darkness.

Several hours later, when she awoke in a strange place, she heard a man say: "There, the shot are all out, Dorothy, and with this bandage on the wing I'm sure it will heal nicely, and she'll be quite well by the time I need her. I am so glad to get her alive, as pintails are very scarce, and she will make a splendid decoy. Take her down to the hut with the others."

"You darling, soft little thing," murmured a sweet voice, and Mrs. Pintail felt herself gently lifted and held against something smooth and warm as the child hurried with her down a hill to the lake shore at the foot of the garden. She opened her eyes and found she was lying close to a pink cheek with a tear-dimmed blue eye above it.

"There, you poor little dearie, get well as quick as you can," said the girl, placing her on some dried reeds which formed the floor of the wild duck hut close by the water's edge. "Here are some nice seeds, and I'll go away, so you won't be afraid."

Left alone, her courage revived and she looked about her. The hut was open toward the lake, and running out from its ends a fence of woven wire inclosed a yard that extended some distance into the water. Roused by the child's voice, the other residents of the yard came waddling up from the cool ripples where they were taking their evening bath. Mrs. Pintail's heart sank as they approached, headed by pompous old Mr. Mallard, his burnished green head glistening and his plump black velvet breast fairly bursting from his dove gray coat. His white collar shone pure from the recent bath, and his pale yellow bill stood open in amazement and wrath. Behind him followed the two Messrs. Canvasback, stretching their cinnamon brown necks to get a look at the intruder around Mr. Mallard's portly person, and behind them straggled the nine common Black ducks that completed the family.

"I wonder who this newcomer is," said one of the waddling Blacks.

"I can't see from here," replied the smallest Mr. Canvasback, "but I expect we'll see some fun if it's a gentleman. Remember how old Mallard thrashed Brother Canvasback the day we came?"

"Yes, it's plain there'll be only one master here while Mr. Mallard stays," quacked another Black, jumping on a large stone the better to watch the fray. "See how he struts, with fire in his eye—why—what's happened? He's lowering his wings and seems to be talking quite amiably."

The fury had died out of Mr. Mallard's eyes as he realized that here was no fierce contestant for leadership, but only a frightened little gray lady who shrank from him in deadly fear.

"Don't run away," he said, patronizingly. "I'm sure you are quite welcome to a home here. I'll see that these other persons don't hurt you. Won't you have some nice fresh seed?"

Poor Mrs. Pintail could but feebly quack her thanks, and Mr. Mallard, seeing her terror, led his flock down to the water and left her in peace.

As days passed and her wounds healed she began to feel more at home, and would take her morning bath with the flock, splashing the cool water over her smooth gray back and head and preening the feathers that lay like a drift of snow above her stricken heart. Then, while the other ducks met on the sunny bank for their daily gossip, she would climb to the highest point in the yard and sit motionless for hours, staring out over the glimmering lake, striving in vain to catch a glimpse of her mate. Sometimes at night, when the rest were asleep, she would crawl quietly out of the hut and send her yearning cry over the waters and up to the twinkling stars, while she grew faint with longing for the little nest among the reeds.

One day there was a commotion in the duck family, for the man did a most curious thing. He fastened to the left leg of each bird a small iron ring by a leather band bound tight above the webbed foot. After he had gone Mr. Mallard called the flock together for a consultation, but no one could solve the mystery.

Summer passed, and the ache in her heart told on

Mrs. Pintail till she became but the shadow of the plump little bird that had joined the group in the spring. As the October winds began to creep up the lake, shaking the loosened leaves from the willows, the man came one morning before daylight, and, picking out Mr. Mallard, the two Messrs. Canvasback, and three Mrs. Blacks, put them with Mrs. Pintail in a small crate in his boat, and started off for the lake.

The three blacks were quite voluble in their vulgar curiosity, and Mr. Mallard had several times to suppress their loud quacking, but Mrs. Pintail remained quiet. For a long time they floated, until at last the man laid down his oars and dropped something with a loud splash into the water. The boat stopped. Carefully raising the cover of the crate, he lifted out the ducks one by one, and fastened them by the rings to long, fine chains which were attached to a float that lay above the anchor. When all the birds were secured and placed on the water, he picked up his oars and disappeared among the reeds some distance away by the shore.

Then arose such a clamor among the flock that Mrs. Pintail was roused and looked about her. Above was the same clear sky, but in the distance the dear familiar hills were outlined against the clouds, the willows softly swept the water, and just a little way beyond was the sedge bank where her nest lay hidden. With her heart beating joyfully she tried to rise on her feeble wings, but they would not lift her even the length of the chain, and she could only drift helplessly on the shifting waves.

Meanwhile the other ducks were straining at their bonds, and Mr. Mallard was so engrossed in quacking that he quite forgot to snub the noisy Mrs. Blacks, one of whom became wild with delight as she heard some of her family calling to each other away down the marsh. She sent out shrill cries again and again as answering calls sounded nearer. Suddenly the air was full of the whirr of wings as the large flock of black ducks settled down near her, and Mrs. Black almost exploded with joy.

"Ping, ping, ping, ping," came a sound from the bank, and four of the visitors tumbled heavily into the water, dead. With frantic cries the rest leaped into the air and sailed madly off up the lake, leaving Mrs. Pintail stunned by the report, which brought to her mind the day of her own capture when she heard that same death-dealing sound.

As the flock flew off the man appeared, gathered up the four dead birds, and vanished from sight. Time after time the scene was repeated, as mallards, canvasbacks, or black ducks answered the cries from the marshes. All day Mrs. Pintail had floated on the gently heaving waves, and not once did she hear the longed-for cry of her kind. At last, as the sun began to drop behind the willows and their shadows streaked out long and dark over the lake, a shrill, clear note rang faintly out on the evening air. The little mother bird's heart leaped in her breast, for it was a pintail calling his mate.

As the answer rang back other notes joined in, and she knew the flock was gathering for the long trip South for the winter. With ears strained, she listened, her eyes peering into the fast-deepening twilight, and at length, above the notes of the rest, rang out the one sweet tone of her mate.

With all her strength she raised her head to pour out the full call of love which she knew would draw him to her, when a sudden terror seized her and she strangled the sound in her throat. Some keen, loving instinct warned her of the danger to which she might lure him and she kept silent, though every impulse of her nature leaped in response to his cry.

Behind her, hidden in the reeds, the man moved uneasily in the boat. His trained hunter's ear had recognized the distant cries. The gun sprang to his shoulder, awaiting the rush of the eager wings of the flock. Louder and louder rang the notes, and the little gray body quivered in an agony of love and longing. * * * Nearer and nearer came the flock, till, when almost in sight, its leader chanced to veer southward, and, all unconscious of the poor, tender, suffering comrade left behind, they soared off and away.

The man waited till the last echo had ceased, and then, rowing hastily toward the small gray wife, he snatched her roughly from the water. There was but a faint quiver of the slender throat; the tired eyelids fluttered; the broken heart ceased to beat, and little Mrs. Pintail's sorrows were ended.—Laura G. Smith in N. Y. Times.

Fastidious Fish.

It very often happens that certain lakes and ponds become well stocked with fish, and yet no angler, angle he never so skillfully, can secure more than three or four fish per day at the most. Several such instances are well known, and in one case at least, that of a pond in Marin county, nothing but fairly large fish are ever landed from it. The lake is full of fish, but yet never more than three and four can be caught in one day, not even with a variety of baits and any amount of patience. The reason is supposed to be that the bass are fat, lazy and fastidious by reason of the large amount of natural bait that swims by them, and that is to be had for the asking any time the fish is hungry. It is rather exasperating to sit all day in the hot sun and catch fish at the rate of one every three hours, particularly when you know that the water is just teeming with them; but what can you do? Certain fishermen suggest seining to destroy the shoals of shiners and minnows that feed the fish, but this seems a measure too heroic and too lawless to meet with very general approbation. The only thing that really remains is to grin, bear it and catch your three or four fish a day.

During the progress of the dinner the conversation drifted to the popular books of the day.

"Didn't you admire 'Bob, Son of Battle?'" asked one of the ladies of the party.

There was but one doubtful note in the song of praise for the book. It came from one of the ladies, of course, and was sounded in this way:

"Don't you think there was a trifle too much about dogs in it?"

A Duck Pond on the Sulu.

A swimming fish and a running horse are objects about equally difficult to photograph. But of the two, the former is the most difficult. The moving of the fish, the moving of the water and the reflection of the light makes a combination of obstacles almost fatal to a picture. However, for a study of marine life and where pictures may be obtained with careful working and correct lenses at our very door, is at the aquarium at Avalon, Catalina Island.

The variety of fishes and the curious specimens of marine life that are found in this aquarium is wonderful, and the fact that every specimen in these tanks is found in the waters near and adjoining Avalon bay is a fact that all California should be proud of. Nowhere in the world, excepting, perhaps, in the far-famed aquarium at Naples, are there so many curious specimens of aquatic life.

The aquarium was opened on the 4th of July, 1899, and within two years it has become one of the attractions of the Pacific Coast. Scientists may find the rarest specimens for marine studies, and photographers may find the one place in the West where pictures can be successfully taken of both common and curious fishes as they appear in their homes. The three long rows of tanks are well lighted and are kept in clean and pure condition. The early morning sun shines down upon the top of the eastern tanks, while the noon sun visits the western. It is perfectly fascinating to spend a morning trying to catch these finny creatures on the fly.

The pet of the island is a grand old fish whose home is now in the aquarium. It is a dignified specimen of sheephead. He is full grown and of age; but before the aquarium was started he attracted his share of attention sailing around in a big tank kept on the veranda of the Metropole. That was some three years ago, when his majesty's coat was a bright rose pink; but now, from age and usage, it has become a beautiful iridescent red and blue of velvety softness. His throat is of woolly white; his large, rolling eyes match in hue the red and blue of his robes, while a full set of teeth complete the peculiarities of this much petted fish. Unless there lurks an interest in the fact that in youth he wore a greenish-blue set of scales which turned into pink, no chameleon could change his colors more decidedly than does a sheephead fish. Being a pet his portrait must be taken, and during the process he seemed to realize that something was desired of him, for he moved with stately grace near the clear plate glass side of the tank and remained in almost perfect quietude, only batting his eyes while he carefully watched the proceedings.

The exposure was made at 10 A. M. The tank was in the center of the room, and the light was directly back of it. Diaphragm f 32; exposure one second; plate Imperial Standard; Taylor & Hobson lens with a No. 1 Nehring ampliscope attached.

It was one of the sheep-head's quiet days, and it was believed that the exposure could have been made longer, as he scarcely moved head or tail and only now and then a slow gesture with his fin, for fully a minute.

Next the artist tried to catch a group of baby blue-eyed perch, with their checkered pinafores and almost laughing blue eyes; but they shot in under the moss and hid.

The golden perch are beautiful to look upon, but make only a silhouette against a bit of sea fern and weeds. As there was no contrast to be obtained, they did not get their pictures taken.

Turning to the cucumber fish, those hideous wonders of the deep, they were easily secured, as they move slowly and the light was good. They were taken with a Nehring No. 3, f 32, and exposure one second.

Having practiced on easy work the camera was operated on a tank containing the daintiest fish of the sea. Peeping out of a small cave in the wall of its tank was a little angel fish with the brightest blue head of indigo blue, and when it popped out of its door, behold, the most gorgeous of decking; it was arrayed in rings of vermillion and indigo. It was not more than an inch in length and was certainly the loveliest creature that wears fins.

Curiosity brought it to the front, together with a walking companion of the same size, decked in sea green. It looked more like a bird than a fish. The two sat and looked at the artist and his companions focusing the camera on them as they took a snap shot, with the shutter at 100 and the diaphragm wide open. The picture was a perfect success and the memory a treasure.

One of the best photographs taken in the aquarium proved to be a snap shot of a perch focused upon the seaweed within his tank; the artist then waited for him to come within range of the focus.

Another snap-shot was taken of a daintily clothed jelly fish as she appeared in her party robes of pearl-blue white, with frills and ruffles edged with richest maroon. The pulsation and restlessness of this creature are remarkable. With tentacles or feelers ever waving and creepy, she makes an enticing subject, which is as difficult to obtain as it is interesting when possessed.

In one tank may be seen a devil fish in all its hideousness. About the only good photograph to be taken of that devil is when it is on a stretcher, dead. However, Mr. Ironmonger got an excellent one, some time ago, of the repulsive monster all coiled and crimped, looking more like a shell than a creature.

In the waters of Avalon bay may be found a hundred different varieties of marine life; many of them may be seen daily when brought in by the fishermen and may be photographed there on the shore, as there are stands erected for the purpose of displaying each catch to the admiring "ohs" and "ahs" of the interested spectators. The black sea bass and the tuna steed were photographed by Mr. Swenson of Avalon and give a very good idea of the size of some of the monstrous fish that are caught in the bay.

One of the rarest fishes is the opah, king of the herring, and one of the most interesting is the flying fish, upon which the tuna prefers to feed.

The still waters of Avalon bay and the great variety of sea life, together with the beautiful beds of kelp and the submarine pictures that may be had near Sugar Loaf will make this bay a point of great interest to scientists, when the submarine camera has become more practicable and in general use, which it doubtless soon will be.

The secrets of the sea and its mysterious beauty have been recorded by the camera of several scientific men, and the vast landscape of the submarine wilderness is being explored just like any new country. It is being photographed and studied from the pictures. The busy little kodak is most frequently sent down upon its strange mission alone. It is equipped and commissioned to steal all secrets of the deep; it is to pry into corners of the vast meadows and narrow by-paths and record all the beauties and the strangeness of submarine scenery for the benefit and interest of inquisitive man.

Monsieur Boutan has made the greatest progress in the matter of submarine photography, and deserves the credit of successfully applying the idea advanced by Dr. P. Regnaud, that of photography through and beneath water.

M. Boutan's latest camera is a "Detective," incased in a watertight compartment of sheet copper the lid and joints being made impervious to water by means of india-rubber padding. The plates are renewed automatically. The time for exposure at the depth of four feet below the surface of the water is about five times as long as above the water and the time lengthens, in increasing ratio, as the camera descends.

Striped Bass.

So that upon a clear, bright day with the water perfectly calm, it will take ten minutes' exposure at the depth of sixteen feet to make a good picture. Of course that length of exposure would make it impossible to obtain any fish or animal life, therefore, the next thing to be considered was light. After many trials and experiments it was found that an electric light could be sent down and used with success. At present everything connected with submarine photography is too expensive for amateur indulgence, but is reserved for scientists. However, it will not be long before improvements will be made which will bring the fascinating pastime of photographing the landscape of the deep within the reach of amateur enthusiasts in the craft.

Entries Pacific Northwest Field Trials Club.

The following are the entries for the All-Age Stake for the third annual trials of the Pacific Northwest Field Trials Club. They number 17, 13 Setters and 4 Pointers. What is lacking in quantity is made up in quality and it is almost a foregone conclusion that all will start. J. A. Balmer, who has officiated as judge in the past with entire satisfaction to all, will be seen in the saddle again this year. Birds are plentiful and the club will be fortunate in having more stubble to work out than ever before. Hotel accommodations at Coupeville, where the trials will take place, as well as livery hire have been looked into and outsiders who contemplate going north to witness the running, can feel assured that everything will be in readiness for them.

Kennel Suggestions.

A dog should never be washed after food; about an hour before the night feed being the best time, so that having a good meal immediately, it raises his temperature, necessarily somewhat low, and he readily goes to sleep and recuperates after what is at best a rather fatiguing ordeal. If going to a show he should always have a night's rest before travelling. On no account must a bitch showing the slightest sign of "heat," or for a week after, be given a bath. Such a procedure has frequently resulted fatally, and almost invariably caused much trouble.

I am inclined to think that many consider the matter of soap to be employed far less than they should. Any soap which gives an abundant lather is not necessarily beneficial; on the contrary, to acquire this lather much soda and other alkalis are included, most injurious to the coat in excess. Cheap scented and opaque kinds are the chief sinners in this connection, the clear or semi-transparent varieties not lending themselves well to the addition of impurities. The ideal compound for the use of dogs should be soft with a good lather, and containing ingredients soothing to the skin, stimulative to the hair and inimical to parasites. I do not say that such cannot be bought but they are decidedly rare, and there is no reason why any dog proprietor should not make his own.

The finest for all round purposes can be manufactured as follows: Take of the very best quality soft soap one pound, of blue mercurial ointment one-half ounce, of finely powdered camphor one ounce. Thoroughly mix with the addition of a little water. Experience has shown this to be superior to any other, and it has been used for years by fanciers in the habit of thinking for themselves. The base has all the properties required for cleansing without deleterious adulterations, and is easily handled; the mercury is penetrating, stimulative, and death to all uninvited guests, yet in such quantity as to be absolutely harmless to any dog; whilst the camphor soothes and softens the skin. If desired, any chemist will make it up.

Another very excellent preparation, and one which can be strongly recommended for toy dogs is this: Take of best white curd soap four pounds, glycerine four to eight ounces. Cut up the soap into small pieces, add some water and the glycerine and reduce to a jelly, in which form it can be used when cold, though, of course, it contains nothing calculated to have any medicated effect upon the animal. Speaking of parasites, the dog has many both inside and out. First of all comes the fruitful and frolicsome flea, who is always more troublesome in hot weather and in the neighborhood of sand, where he breeds for choice, though if he can't get sand, not being particular, he will oblige elsewhere. The best of all cures is prevention, secured by thorough cleanliness both of the animal's person and domicile. To remove fleas, however numerous, from a dog is a comparatively simple matter, but it will be at once obvious, that after doing so, if you re-introduce him to the bed, where in all probability he acquired them, or at least which is pretty certain to contain plenty, you will have your trouble for nothing, and the host will be precisely in the same condition within a day or two.

The most valuable agent for the sudden death of Pulex canis is, without doubt, carbolic acid, but many of the soaps containing it are not sufficiently strong for the purpose. Make your own by mixing half an ounce of pure (liquid) carbolic acid with one pound of soft soap as given above, but without the other additions. Lather the animal thoroughly and rinse him off as rapidly as possible to avoid absorption through the skin. Another efficient flea destroyer is an infusion of quassia chips, about a pound to two gallons of water, simmered for three hours. Soak the dog well with this when cool enough and see that he swallows none; he won't willingly.

Insect powders are only partial in their action, soon lose their strength and do not really kill the proposed victims, but merely discommode and stupefy them. However, before operating on the dog you must have his apartment in readiness. The bedding should be burnt, and all corners and interstices liberally treated with strong paraffin, the whole being well lime-washed. In long standing and obstinate cases it is even better to destroy the box. Yet should this be out of the question, then, after stopping up every outlet, fumigate the same with sulphur. This can be done by placing flowers of sulphur in a tin vessel with a dash of paraffin on top, and applying a match, carefully fastening up the doorway with a piece of old carpet. If a dog's bed be always well looked after, ordinary grooming will, as a rule, keep him clear of fleas; but frequently there appears a perfect epidemic of them in hot seasons, and he will often acquire hundreds in an hour or two if exercised on sand.

Lice, on the other hand, except under extraordinary filthy conditions, are rarely found on the adult animal, though puppies are often great sufferers. Paraffin will do their business satisfactorily, but is rather severe for youngsters, and a better plan is to make an emulsion—one-third milk, two-thirds paraffin. Bring the milk almost to a boil, place in a good-sized bottle, then add the paraffin and shake vigorously for five minutes. They (the lice) will usually be found running along the back in greater quantity towards the neck. Nevertheless, saturate all over with a brush and comb out next day. Two or three applications will generally suffice.

Probably the most effective of any dressing for all external parasites is ordinary benzine, which is not suitable, however, when the skin is broken; it neither harms nor stains the skin, and is extremely penetrating, besides having a stimulative action on the hair.—The Kennelman in American Stock-Keeper.

THE FARM.

Changing the Seed.

There is a common belief among grain growers that seed necessarily "runs out" and requires a change from one locality to another, from one kind of soil to another every few years. This theory is very misleading and unless the changing of seed is followed intelligently it will be only by accident that the desired end is accomplished. There is abundant evidence to show that varieties of grain crops do not "run out" when they are well cared for. The results from ten years' experiments at the Ontario Agricultural College show that the productiveness of varieties of grain can be improved by selection.

Unfortunately, however, a great deal of the seed grain that is used is taken from stored grain which has been threshed from unthrifty crops. Among the influences which tend to reduce the vigor and productiveness of grain crops are using seed (1) from a crop grown on an impoverished field; (2) from a crop grown on a soil that tends to produce an excessive growth of straw with a small amount of grain; (3) from a crop that has suffered from a wet spring; (4) from a crop that lodged badly before maturing; or (5) from a thickly seeded field on which the straw is fine, weak and spindled. The weaknesses that are brought about by such unfavorable conditions are transmitted through the seed to the next crop just as surely as the weak points in poultry are transmitted through the egg to the chick.

The idea that seed is better when introduced from a distant locality is quite contrary to the most reliable evidence. It is quite true that many of our best varieties of grain have been imported from European and Asiatic countries, but it should be remembered that in most cases it is not until they became acclimatized that they showed their superiority. Seed imported from England generally produces well the first year when sown on the experimental farm at Agassiz, B. C., while on the inland experimental farms the results are usually disappointing the first two years, or until the variety has become acclimatized; the climate along the Pacific Coast is not very unlike that of England. Extensive experiments have been conducted at the Missouri experiment station to determine the effects of changing seed from one locality to another. Seed was secured each year from various experiment stations in the United States and from the Ontario agricultural college. The results of many trials point to the conclusion that home grown seed is the most reliable and that treatment manifests its influence more readily than climate.

In an exceptionally favorable season seed imported from a distance and sown under different conditions of soil and climate may do as well as home grown seed of the same variety, but it is more likely to succumb to an unfavorable season than seed that has been grown in the locality for a number of years. If the conditions on a farm are not favorable to the vigorous growth of grain crops the seed from the crop produced on the farm, if taken in the ordinary way, from the general crop, will become less productive each year, until it reaches a certain limit. Again, if the conditions of the soil are favorable for growing large fields of grain of good quality but the crop becomes injured by wet or being badly lodged, the seed from such a crop may be reduced in vigor to an extent that it will not be able to overcome for two or three years. Under such circumstances better results could reasonably be looked for by securing seed from a crop that has been grown under the most favorable conditions throughout, and which has been very vigorous and productive for some years previous, if the changes in climatic conditions are not too great. In getting a fresh strain of seed, it is highly important to get a variety that is well suited to the particular soil on the farm where it is to be used; if such can be obtained it is very often wise to make a change of seed, provided that the fresh seed has for several years previous had better care and selection than that which is being discarded.

The Value of Silage for Horses.

Concerning the value of silage for feeding young and breeding horses almost nothing is known. Originally stock growers regarded silage made from the corn plant as suitable only for the dairy cow. Now we are coming to learn its high value as a feed for young cattle, for breeding cattle and last of all for the fattening steer, especially during earlier stages of that process. Recently at this station Professor Carlyle has been experimenting with silage as a feed for breeding ewes. The shepherd was prejudiced against this material, but the results show that corn silage is a most excellent feed for breeding ewes, taking the place of roots.

Now, with the widening use of silage as experience and experiments are showing, what is its place on the horse farm? We all know that roots, especially carrots, are greatly appreciated by horses and may be fed to all classes of animals in proper amounts with advantage. But the American people very properly do not take to the growing of roots even for horses, because a great deal of hand labor is required in producing this crop, and wages are high in this country. A given amount of nutrients can be produced in the form of corn silage for half the cost of that in the form of roots. This true, if silage will only take the place of roots on the horse farm we have a most valuable adjunct to our present list of feeding materials.

No horseman would think of using roots in any large quantities with horses in training or at hard work, for such succulent material tends to produce a watery flesh, which is unsatisfactory with animals at hard work or required to move rapidly. But even such animals relish and are benefited by a limited supply of roots. It would seem possible and it is worthy of trial to use silage even with such animals to a very limited extent. For young things, broodmares and idle horses it would seem as though corn silage might be used to some extent with profit. At least this material should be tried as a substitute for roots in order to cheapen the cost of maintenance. If corn silage proves so valuable for the dairy cow and the breeding ewe, why should it not be satisfactory with the broodmare? If it is satisfactory with young cattle and with steers in the first stages of fattening, it also should be acceptable and useful with growing and idle horses.

Upon receipt of a two cent stamp to cover cost of mailing the Wisconsin Experiment Station, Madison will be pleased to send a bulletin on silo construction to any horseman desiring it.—W. A. Henry in Field and Farm.

Cost of Milk Production.

Prof. T. L. Haecker, at the meeting of the Connecticut Dairyman's Association, said that when he took charge of the dairy herd at the Minnesota Experiment station he determined to know the cost production. Since then they have weighed every pound of feed given the animals, known its cost, weighed all the milk and tested it for butter fat. At the end of the first year they found that some produced butter fat at a cost of 12 cents a pound, others at 17 cents, and the rest ranging between these two rates. Some of them made but little over 200 pounds of butter in a year and others gave over 500 pounds. The breed made little difference, as some Shorthorns made cheap butter and some Jerseys costly butter. Size or color nothing to do with it.

All the cows that made the cheap butter were set on one side, and they were of the genuine dairy type, light quarters and a heavy wedge-shaped barrel. Those that made the costly butter were sleek nice looking animals that would answer the description of the general purpose cow. A good cow should have a sharp spine, sharp hip bones, and sharply developed nervous system. She should have a large wedge-shaped stomach, that she may have a large and powerful digestive system to use up her food. The poor cow has a straight thigh, with no space between thigh and udder on one side and the tail on the other. There should be plenty of room between the tail and udder. By selection of cows of dairy type, not high priced stock, but the common dairy type, he brought his entire herd last year to an average of 399 pounds of butter per cow, at a cost of 4.2 cents per pound for the food given. One cow gave 512 pounds of butter during the year.

A Model State Fair.

Some of the good reasons for the great success and high reputation of the Ohio State Fair are given by Mr. Joseph E. Wing in The Breeders Gazette as follows:

"What is the purpose of a State Fair? Is it to encourage breeders of animals and growers of crops to do well and bring for reward their best? Is it to show the people what the best is like, that they may go and do likewise in their own endeavors? Is it to make a meeting place, a great picnic ground and outing day for the country people? Or is it to be a great money making affair, with huge crowds, huge receipts, hosts of bawling fakirs and lewd exhibits, with gambling and debauchery openly preached to the young men and boys of the country?

"In all that constitutes true greatness in a State fair—beautiful grounds that are the result of years of patient work and care, imposing buildings that show the exhibits of livestock admirably and keep the animals in perfect comfort, great exhibitions of animals in nearly all classes, and a great meeting together of country people—the Ohio State Fair may well be a model type. It is strong in what it has. It is stronger, in contrast to other State fairs, in what it has not. There was one side-show on the grounds, but in an out-of-the-way place where it did not distract the attention from the real sights, and it was a clean and good show of wild animals. There was not a bawling fakir nor a sleek 'grafter' in all that throng of people. Nor did I hear of an arrest nor see an intoxicated man."

Selecting Brood Sows.

The chief end of the brood sow is to grow fine, healthy pigs and plenty of them. It makes a great difference, says Wallace's Farmer, whether a brood sow grows three pigs or eight. The one may possibly pay the expenses of keep, the other brings the profit. We cannot always tell by the looks of a brood sow whether she will be prolific or not. If she is fat, chuffy short, tight, you may be quite sure that she will prove a poor breeder. If she is lengthy, rather than fat, with a motherly look, the prospects are that she will prove a good breeder. If she comes from a large litter, if that litter was thrifty and even, it proves two things: That the mother was well bred and that she was a good suckler. Milking capacity is quite as valuable in brood sows as in cows. A good milker in the hog lot is worth two that are inclined to take on excessive fat.

In selecting from his own herd, the farmer who has had his eye on his hogs all summer knows his good milkers. Good milkers are nearly always good breeders. It the farmer will keep this one thing in mind and always select young sows from well-nourished litters, he will not go far wrong. The great trouble in selecting the brood sow is that the farmer often picks for good looks. Pretty is as pretty does; the good looker is seldom the best mother.

A good remedy for a kicking cow consists in slipping a spring nose-ring into the cow's nose and then raising her head until her nose is on a level with her back. Tie the rope to a scantling located above the cow in such manner as to hold her head in this position until she is milked. Two or three applications will teach her to keep her feet quiet while she is being milked. One thing should always be remembered in handling a cow, and this is to go about the work quietly and not attempt to apply any penalty until after the offense has been committed. If she kicks, get the rope and nose ring, which should hang in the stable ready for use, fasten the nose-ring in position, slip the rope over the scantling and tie the end to one side of the stall. When the milking is finished release the nose without a word or a blow.

Those who have tried the experiment of feeding beet pulp to dairy cows most satisfactorily consider from twenty to twenty-five pounds a head daily a sufficient amount of beet. With this pulp it is well to feed from twenty-five to thirty pounds of uncut hay and from three to five pounds of bran. There is no noticeable odor in the milk when feeding pulp, but too much pulp has the tendency to lessen the yield of milk as well as to impoverish it. Some feeders have been in the habit of running up the pulp ration to seventy five or eighty pounds a day and this might be all right if they are preparing their stock for the shambles.

It is sometimes asserted that cattle and sheep require the same amount of feed to a thousand pounds of live weight. This statement seems not to be well founded. In some experiments at the Iowa station the cattle consumed 19.6 pounds of dry matter to a thousand pounds of live weight, against an average of 29.07 by the sheep. Both sheep and cattle were on full feed. The sheep made a daily gain of 3.73 pounds to a thousand pounds of live weight and the cattle 2.14. While the sheep ate forty-eight per cent more than the cattle, they also gained nearly seventy-five per cent more flesh.

New Zealand authorities are determined at all costs to put a stop to the importation of disease germs into that country. Recently a law was passed providing that bones either in the piece or ground up for manure must be disinfected or thoroughly sterilized at the port of embarkation. Dr. Gilruth, chief veterinary official for New Zealand, states that anthrax has been imported in ground bones, an outbreak of that malady in New Zealand having been traced back to a shipment of this sort.

Pigs should be stirred about in their bed when two days old and be closely observed each day thereafter and made to take considerable exercise. The bed for the sow and litter must not only be free from draught but must also be dry and free from dust. Bright wheat straw seems to be especially well adapted for bedding the sow and litter. Rye straw seems to cause coughing and oat straw is not fit for such purposes. Grass or some succulent feed should be provided for the sow and litter, and the pigs should be allowed a liberal amount of solid food as early as they will partake of it. It seems to be necessary to the health of the pig that he be able at an early age to procure solid food in considerable variety. The usual form of creep should be used for the little fellows to make it possible to feed them unmolested by their mother. A separate lot and sleeping house should be set apart for the use of each sow and litter.

In cool, damp weather especial care must be exercised to prevent thumps. The practical eye of the experienced feeder at once sees danger of thumps in the glossy coat of his little beauties. The sure, quick remedy for thumps is exercise, either by brisk driving or by dropping the affected pig into an empty barrel or box apart from his mother and allowing him to fret and try to get out for an hour or so each time and two or three times each day until the trouble disappears. If the pig gets stupid and refuses to fret and jump when placed in the empty barrel, lay the barrel down and roll it back and forth with the pig in it for a few times; this will wake him up and cause him to want to get out. Scouring is usually due to either a damp bed or the condition of the sow's milk. Upon the first appearance of scours among the pigs give the sow a tablespoonful of sulphur or about the same amount of slacked lime in her feed each feed until the trouble disappears. See that the bed is kept dry and free from dust or draught.

The addition of lime seems to be an advantage to almost any ration; use it in proportion of about one tablespoonful of slacked lime to each two hundred pounds of hog. The addition of lime to the ration seems to grow a much stockier, stout built pig, and to develop the litter very uniform. Continue liberally feeding the sow and litter up until the pigs are eight or ten weeks of age, when the sow should be removed entirely out of sight or hearing of the pigs, and after about five days she should be ready to breed for the succeeding litter. Such treatment should produce more than one hundred strong, healthy, vigorous pigs each year to each half-dozen sows used in the breeding herd — W. A. Hart, in National Stockman and Farmer.

Difference in Sires.

Two neighbors of my acquaintance bought 100 breeding ewes together, giving a joint note for them. They divided them equally. One paid $20 for a pure bred mutton sire; the other said he couldn't afford it, and bought a mongrel for $8. Both flocks were cared for alike, and were well kept. The one where the $20 sire was used produced 52 lambs, that sold at weaning time for $3.50 a head. The one headed by the mongrel sire produced 41 lambs that were kept until December, making them nearly seven months old, when they sold for $2.65 a head. The produce of the first mentioned when the lambs were four months old was $182. The produce of No. 2 was $108.65 when seven months old. These are illustrations of the value of pure bred stock. An outlay of $12 in the one case made a difference of $74, besides three months' keeping. Enough for this time. — C. D. Smead in Tribune Farmer.

Many of the land-grant titles in New Mexico are fading like a summer dream. Out of 34,000,000 acres thus far passed upon by the special court of land claims 32,000,000 acres have been rejected and thrown into the public domain.

Jacks.

The best jacks in Europe are the Poitou, from the south of France, says John J. Jellicorse in Practical Farmer. They are used by the French government to breed artillery mules from Percheron mares. They are round bodied, with short legs; not tall. There are two reasons why these have never been imported to the United States. One is the price, which is $1000 and up at home. The second is their long hair, which would be unpopular here and which makes them somewhat delicate. Their mules are also apt to have long hair when young under the belly. The Andalusian is a better shaped jack than the Caalonian, but is generally gray. The few white jacks imported must have been of this stock—anyhow, they are generally good mule breeders. The Italian jacks are smaller, and many are shipped to India by the British government, where small mules are needed.

In a recent number of the Shepherd's Bulletin a breeder boasts that he recently sold twenty-five ewes and his flocks were so even in quality that the buyer agreed to take the first twenty-five that went through the gate. That certainly speaks well for the uniformity of the flock, but it also shows some shrewdness on the part of the buyer. Those that go ahead are those that are the natural leaders of the flock, and likely to be the strongest and most vigorous. The custom of having a bell wether to lead the flock is so seldom followed now that it devolves on the strongest ewes to take the leadership when there is no ram with the flock, and even if there were it is probable that the best ewes would be in the advance next to him, unless at a season when they were heavy with lamb. This is true in regard to nearly all stock. When you see them self-assertive, and even aggressive, you will find them hearty eaters, strong, healthy and with good digestive powers.

How to Tell a Good Beef Steer.

In breeding or buying cattle for fattening purposes, we should endeavor to get an animal that has the aptitude to lay on flesh readily and in form and quality that will command the highest prices on the market. It may be rather difficult in some cases to detect the imperfections but there are some distinctions easily detected. Some types for instance never feed properly or profitably under any condition and it is as important to discriminate against these in the feed lot, as it is to be able to recognize the excellence in the other types. The dairy type is a good example of this and the native or scrub is equally as good. In fact any unimproved steer that presents a similar outline, spare, bony form and rough exterior, should be discarded. It is a serious mistake and positive evil to claim any beef excellence whatever for the dairy type, for the beef such animals are capable of producing will invariably cost the producer more than its value on the market.

The characteristics that make up a profitable feeder are naturally more difficult to detect in stock condition than one in a finished form, but notwithstanding this there are a number of reliable indications. Though the young steer may be comparatively thin in flesh and lacking the thick, even covering of the back and ribs so essential to a good carcass, it must nevertheless present that stoutness of build, blocky form, wide back and loins, well sprung ribs, accompanied by short, straight legs, fullness of shoulders and in flank; full neck veins, wide chest and well rounded barrel, together with a soft mellow handling skin, giving what is termed a glossy coat without coarseness and with all of these a strong, vigorous head, full clear eye and quiet temperament. The bone should be fine and clear, as coarseness is very objectionable, indicating coarseness throughout and late maturity. While this perhaps represents a higher standard of excellence than can generally be obtained in feeding cattle, the standard is none too high for best results and should be as closely approximated as practicable.

It is but a few years since the prevailing practice was to allow a steer the first three years of its existence to maintain standard growth and then feed heavily for six months for the fattening process. A marked change has taken place within recent years, however, and the over-fattened steer is generally considered a thing of the past, while the well-fattened, medium weight carcass has been found to yield better returns in the feed lot and more profit on the block. It is probable that the old, short heavyweight will never again outsell the tidy range steer of prime quality, weighing from thirteen to fifteen hundred pounds. It is a well established principle in animal nutrition that a young animal makes more economical gains than an older one, and that the amount of food for a given gain increases as the age of the animal advances toward maturity. Therefore, the policy of feeders should be to make use of early maturity as far as practicable.

It is not in all cases practicable, however, only in a moderate degree. In cases where lands are cheap and pastures and coarse fodders or feeds can be had in abundance, it may yet be desirable to take more time in finishing a steer for market and thereby secure a greater weight with a smaller amount of gain. In feeding sections of the country known as the corn belt the conditions are such as to favor a liberal feeding from first to last. Early maturity may be obtained by a liberal ration of the ordinary feed stuffs through the entire growing and fattening period. That is to say, early maturity may be largely accomplished by a liberal use of the cheap feeds of the farm, combined with a suitable grain ration, which may be moderate, except at the fattening period.

In selecting steers for feeding purposes, the prime object of every feeder is to get animals that will return the most profit in the feed lot at the least possible expense. These should be selected from one of the beef breeds, the three most important of which are the Shorthorns, Herefords and Aberdeen Angus. Too much care cannot be exercised in buying feeding cattle. Be sure that they have that typical beef form and have not coarse bones, long legs or harsh skin and by all means do not purchase an animal that has been half starved when young, as it will never feed well.—William Walsh in Field and Farm.

Future of Prices.

Will this country ever see cheap meat again? This is a question that is being discussed by those familiar with the conditions surrounding the meat food supply of the country. There is plenty of argument to show that while prices will be lower than the present, the low prices of only a few years ago have passed never to return. The two requisites for cheap meat under present conditions are cheap corn and cheap stock. There is reason to believe that with the increased use of corn by the world that cheap corn as it has been known in the past in this country will never again be seen in the future. The settling of the great arid public lands of the west has gradually made cheap stock unprofitable. The modern meat food animal is bred especially for the purpose, and good blood is not cheap. There is just one chance for cheap meat in the future. That chance is buried in the great undeveloped west. Government assistance to irrigation and high prices for meat are the inducements that may encourage the western stock farmer to build up the supply which will eventually lead to reasonable prices, possibly not so cheap as in the past, but still low enough to allow the people to eat freely of this food. Without the assistance of the west, the day of cheap meat food has past forever.—Record Stockman.

An Egg Trust.

A company at Danvers, Illinois, is working hard to corner the egg market, and thousands of the hen product are being purchased and placed in storage. The name of the organization is the United States Egg Preserving Co. and it is rapidly becoming one of the leading industries of that vicinity. The secret of the simple solution which keeps the eggs fresh for many months lies buried in the breast of a single man, and he stoutly refuses to reveal it. A special trip was made by this member of the firm to Denmark for the purpose. What means he used to secure the information no one knows. The vats are open for inspection, but the visitor goes away no wiser than when he came. The thickness of the receptacles excites comment. The walls of the vats are over a foot in thickness and are composed of concrete. The vats are then filled to the top with the mysterious preserving fluid, the ingredients of which are kept such a profound secret. The water or whatever the fluid is, has a scum on the surface which resembles ice, and may be that product. Each vat has a capacity of from 8000 to 10,000 dozen, and up to the present time about 25,000 dozen are in storage.

Texas cattle to the number of 500, shipped to South Africa by the British Government, have been landed in Natal in good shape and are now being acclimated and inoculated against rinderpest, which for many years has broken out periodically in that country. The advice from Natal speak very well of the heifers, the latter being described as large well shaped, not too long of leg and with satisfactory frames. They are to be used for the purpose of breeding work or "trek" oxen as they are called down there and if they succeed Britain will buy many more of the same sort. When the shipment was made from New Orleans the dispatches stated that these heifers were mostly grade Herefords.

THE ONLY PLACE.

Occidental Horse Exchange

246 Third St. San Francisco

It's location is unsurpassed; only three blocks from Market street. This large brick fire-proof building fronts on Third street, the busiest thoroughfare in San Francisco. The main building contains 75 large single stalls, besides 10 horse stalls, 12x14 feet in size. Particular attention has been paid to the lighting, ventilation and sanitation of this, as well as the adjoining building, which is connected with it by a covered driveway. There are 20 box stalls 12x12 feet, facing the court, in which is an oblong show ring 40 feet in diameter and extending 150 feet into the sales pavilion. The seating capacity of the latter is 1200. The lots on which these buildings (the stable and pavilion) are built cover an area of 210x250 feet, affording ample room for vehicles and horse show purposes. The ring is covered with tanbark, and, when evening sales are held, the pavilion presents a dazzling effect, illuminated as it is by electric lights.

MY AUCTION SALES.

The Occidental Horse Exchange and the able manner in which sales of thoroughbreds and trotting horses are conducted there have made it famous throughout the United States. Since its opening in 1896, over 1000 of the grandest bred California and Nevada trotters, pacers and thoroughbreds, besides innumerable other horses, have been sold therein, and I intend to continue holding sales in the same way, with this exception, however: I have BETTER ACCOMMODATIONS for caring for a larger number of horses than heretofore. I have held sales for the following, to whom I take pleasure in referring all who contemplate buying or selling horses, either at public or private sale: A. B. Spreckels, W. O. B. Macdonough, Prince Pontatowski, Charles Kerr, Palo Alto Stock Farm, C. E. Needham, Oakwood Park Stock Farm, Santa Rosa Stock Farm, Brentwood Stock Farm, Rancho del Paso, Edw. Corrigan, J. "SAVE-THE-HORSE"

SPAVIN CURE

NEVER IN THE HISTORY

of achievements in scientific and physiological chemistry has anything been discovered capable of producing such wonderful results as "Save-the-Horse" Spavin Cure.

In the face of deep seated prejudice and skepticism, at first considered an improbable and expensive experiment, no preparation ever made so marvelous a record in such short time.

The fire iron is uncertain at the best and invariably only aggravates the disease or injury; blistering is less effective than the fire iron and both necessitate laying up the horse from four weeks to two months; arsenic, mercurial and poisonous compounds produce irreparable injury.

"Save-the-Horse" eliminates all these factors. Horse can be worked continuously.

It can be applied at any time, anywhere, any place and in all conditions and extremes of weather—hot or cold. And no matter what the age, condition or development of the case or previous failures in treating, the concentrated, penetrating, absorbing power of "Save-the-Horse" is unfailing and no case can withstand the force of its action, whether a Bone and Bog Spavin, Ringbone, Curb, Thoroughpin, Splint, Capped Hock, Shoe Boil, Wind Puff, Weak and Sprained Tendons and all Lameness caused by such injuries.

It cures without scar, blemish or loss of hair.

$5.00 PER BOTTLE.

Written guarantee with every bottle, constructed solely to convince, satisfy and protect you fully. We know positively "Save-the-Horse" will absolutely and permanently cure, and for that reason guarantee is made all your way.

Need of second bottle is almost improbable except in rarest cases. Guarantee covers effectiveness of one bottle.

IF YOU ARE IN DOUBT WRITE US.

As we do not put the preparation out on speculation, we will advise you frankly as to the possibility of the remedy effecting a cure. Give explicit particulars; do not go altogether by the veterinarian's diagnosis unless you know he is competent—inform us fully as to the age, development, location of swellings, lameness, action and previous treatment.

Copy of Guarantee sent upon application. $5 a bottle. At all druggists and dealers, or sent prepaid.

Veterinary Pixine

Apply it. Rub it in on bare spots, inflammatory swellings, old sores, scratches, grease heel or skin disease. It penetrates and soothes, and the horse grows well as he toils throughout the day.

SCRATCHES, GREASE HEEL, MUD FEVER, HOOFF ROT AND SPEED CRACKS.

Cases where ulcerations extend with transverse cracks which open at every step and often bleed, no matter how complex, aggravated, deep seated or chronic, if treated according to directions as given on circular with every box, positively cured with Veterinary Pixine.

After Blistering

Veterinary Pixine is the very best application that could be indicated. It absorbs all inflammatory exudate and hastens the reparatory process. Will heal the most severe cases without scar and prevents loss of hair.

As a Preventive.

If a light application of Veter' arix Pixine be used before speeding, driving in wet, muddy or slushy weather, your horse will never have speed cracks, scratches or grease heel.

For Hoofs.

It will keep the hoofs healthy, soft and in perfect form. This penetrating, stimulating, soothing, absorbing, anti-septic, healing ointment heals from beneath the surface by disinfecting the parts, subduing inflammation, and stimulating healthy granulation, not by drying and scabbing. 2 oz., 25c; 8 oz., 50c; 5 lb. pkg., $4. AT THE UKIAH FAIR

JOTTINGS.

WHAT STRIKES AN EASTERNER MOST at the California auction sales," said a gentleman to me the other day, "is the fact that so few of the owners of stock farms are among the buyers. Now over in our country the breeders are the heaviest buyers and few big stock farms consign horses to sales without having a representative present to bid on the offerings from the other farms. Among the thoroughbred breeders in the East this is especially noticeable and the custom is observed by the harness horse breeders also. This is one of the principal causes why prices and confidence are kept up over East. In California it is different however. At the few sales I have attended I notice that there are few bidders among the stock farm owners. Down at Palo Alto last Saturday Mr. Henry Pierce of the Santa Rosa Stock Farm was a bidder and bought three, and James Faris, Jr., who has a small stock farm on the Sacramento river, purchased two or three, but outside of these gentlemen not a stock farm had a representative at the sale. I don't see how breeders can expect other people to have confidence in the future of a business that they seem to have none in themselves. Breeders should be buyers as well as sellers and in the East they are expected to be."

The gentleman's remarks are, alas, too true. Outside of Messrs. Pierce Bros. of the Santa Rosa Stock Farm I do not know of a large breeder on the Coast who will pay a good price for a horse or mare for breeding purposes. There are stock farms in this State that have high class stallions, but need mares to mate them with. Others are well supplied with mares but need a stallion. It is impossible to breed the best without the introduction of new blood and California breeders should begin to realize this. I would like to see a more general recognition among breeders on this Coast of the fact that there is good blood on the farms of their rivals. Nothing would help the business more than for the breeders to become ready buyers as well as prompt sellers. There is no business on earth where reciprocity will pay a larger profit or accomplish better results.

The McKinneys are making a wonderful showing this year, and when the season's records are all made up, California breeders will begin to realize more than ever that this State suffered a great loss when the great son of Alcyone was purchased by the Hoosier showman, Mr. H. B. Gentry. At the Lexington meeting El Milagro trotted to a record of 2:11½ and is being talked of as a certain 2:08 horse for next season, and last Tuesday at Memphis big Charlie Mac, Ed Gaylord's trotter by McKinney, reduced his record to 2:07½, making the third new 2:10 performer for McKinney this year. Up to this writing, October 23d, McKinney has no less than nine new standard performers to his credit, and nine with reduced records. Of the nine new performers, seven are trotters and two pacers. Of the nine with reduced records, but one is a pacer. The most remarkable thing about these new performers and those with reduced records is the speed they have shown. Of the seven new trotters the slowest has a record of 2:23. Of those that have reduced their records, the slowest has a record of 2:17½. Here is the list, already the best showing made by any stallion this year and it will be improved a little before the close of the season, although that date is not far off.

McKinney 2:11½ by Alcyone 2:27, dam Rosa Sprague by Gov. Sprague.

NEW PERFORMERS.

Lijero, br g.....	2:14½
Tom Smith, b s.....	2:16½
Hopper, b g.....	2:17½
Cuate, b g (3).....	2:18
Coronado, br s.....	2:19
Welcome Me, br g.....	2:20½
Foxy Mc, b g.....	2:20½
May Horgan, br m.....	2:23
Miss Georgia, b m.....	2:25

In the above table Lijero is placed among the new performers for the reason that his record of 2:22 was made at the pacing gait in a race for roadsters at the Los Angeles fair in 1900.

REDUCED RECORDS.

You Bet, b g.....	from 2:11½ to 2:07
Charlie Mc, br g.....	from 2:11½ to 2:07½
The Roman, b g.....	from 2:19 to 2:09½
El Milagro, b g.....	from 2:14½ to 2:11½
Nora McKinney, b m.....	from 2:16½ to 2:12½
Arketa, gr m.....	from 2:22½ to 2:14½
Mack Mack, br h.....	from 2:29½ to 2:15½
Zambra, br g.....	from 2:23 to 2:16½
Ollie McKinney, b m.....	from 2:21 to 2:17½

It will be seen from the above tables that McKinney has nine 2:20 performers, four new 2:15 performers and three new comers to his 2:10 list, which now numbers seven at fifteen years of age, more than any other stallion ever had at the same age, and only exceeded by Onward that died this month at the age of 27, leaving nine 2:10 performers, Altamont, still living aged 27, with eight in that list, Baron Wilkes, aged 20, with eight, Chimes, aged 18, with eight, and Mambrino King that would be 30 years old were he now living with eight 2:10 performers to his credit.

There is nothing that tends to dampen the ardor of harness horse admirers more than a track on which they are to race cut up from ten to twenty feet from the pole in order to accommodate the running horsemen who think a deeply harrowed track is necessary to the salvation of the legs and feet of thoroughbreds. Harness races are judged by the time made as much as anything else, and when horses have been trotting miles around 2:15 in one town on the circuit, and can't do better than 2:20 at the next place the public imagines there is something crooked and loses interest. Where the meetings are gotten up particularly for the runners as is the case at some of the important places on the California circuit it may be all right to harrow up the track and the feelings of the harness men at the same time, as the latter are only tolerated and not really welcome, but where the harness horses would furnish the chief attraction digging up the track should be protested and protested vigorously by every owner of the trotters and pacers that are entered. In this day of combinations and trusts it might not be out of place for the harness horse owners to organize and refuse to make entries or race their horses over any track that is cut up for the runners.

It is very pleasing to note that Mr. M. M. Vincent of Merced, in this State, had the courage to bid $325 at the Palo Alto sale last Saturday for Alta Vista, a two year old brown colt by McKinney out of the famous race mare Expressive 2:12½ by Electioneer. If ever a colt has been the subject of systematic knocking from the date of its birth to the present time it is Alta Vista, and it undoubtedly took sand to bid on him at all. That he is a beauty no horseman will claim, and that his legs are not models no one who has seen the colt will deny. But there have been many worse prospects in the way of form and gait that have turned out remarkably well and there are ten chances to one that Alta Vista will grow into a good looking horse and show speed, and forty chances in favor of his proving a great sire to one that he will not. "Blood will tell," there is not a particle of doubt about it. Alta Vista has in his veins as choice a line of winning and producing blood as is carried by any colt of his age in the country. His sire was one of the greatest and gamest race stallions ever foaled and they are still talking about the wonderful campaign made by his dam on the Grand Circuit when she was a three year old in 1894. Expressive is by Electioneer out of the thoroughbred mare Esther, that produced four standard trotters. If that breeding is not good enough for a sire I should like to know what is. Most advocates of the "strictly trotting bred" theory would ask for nothing better in the dam of a sire than the ability to produce four standard performers, and the "thoroughbred close up" brigade would consider a colt by Electioneer out of a thoroughbred mare that had produced four in the standard list as about the acme of breeding. I look for Alta Vista to be a great producer of speed with half an opportunity, and congratulate Mr. Vincent on securing him. He will be siring race winners when the knockers have taken their proper places among the other fellows that are "unwept, unhonored and unsung."

What a splendid thing is sentiment, whether it is shown in the horse business or in any other walk of life. There is too little of it in business affairs, and in the sports and pleasures of life it is too often displaced by the money getting instinct. The following story comes across the continent from Lexington, Kentucky, where the roan filly Nella Jay won the Futurity two weeks ago. Some weeks before the race was trotted, Nella Jay's owner, Mr. Geo. R. Woodin, of Boston, Massachusetts, told his trainer, McKey, that he would give him the purse if he won the Futurity with Nella Jay. No further reference was made to the matter until after the filly had won and McKey had been carried on the shoulders of his admirers to the stand. Then Mr. Woodin made his way through the crowd and grasping the driver by the hand, said: "It's all yours, Fred, first money in the stake; just as I told you it should be if you won. Take it and share it with your wife, and I hope it will be the foundation of a fine fortune for you both."

Taking a diamond horseshoe from his scarf and thrusting it into McKey's tie, Mr. Woodin said: "Here's a little keepsake for you, my boy, that you may be reminded of a man who loves sport for the sport's sake, rather than for the money consideration attending a victory."

Ten thousand dollars is quite a little start for a poor man and those who know McKey say that he will do with it just as Mr. Woodin suggested and that he and the wife will take care of it. May there be more wealthy men like Mr. Woodin enter the ranks of harness horse owners. Men who love the sport for the sport's sake will do more to build the sport up and keep it on a high plane than a host of those who own and race horses solely for the chance to make money out of them.

Agricultural District No. 45, the last district organized under the State law, held its second annual fair at Ukiah week before last, beginning on Tuesday, October 7th, and continuing four days. Impelled by a desire to see how a county fair is conducted in that "neck of the woods," I took the train for Ukiah on the last day of the meeting and was more than pleased with what I saw. The enterprising board of directors had enlisted the aid of the management of the California and Northwestern Railway and an excursion train was run from Ukiah that day from Petaluma. To my surprise fourteen coaches were required to accommodate the crowd that wanted to visit the Mendocino fair, and at least seven hundred people were carried on this train. I found Ukiah to be an enterprising and thriving county seat of a rich and productive county. Everybody seemed interested in the fair and both the pavilion and the stock exhibits would have done credit to a larger and older community. The fair grounds are over a mile from the town, but that made no difference as far as the attendance was concerned, as nearly every man in Mendocino county owns a horse and buggy, and there were all sorts of conveyances pressed into service to convey the transients to the races.

The Ukiah track is a half mile affair, and one of the best, if not the very best in the State. It is nicely graded, the turns thrown up to the proper pitch, and the soil furnishes a perfect footing. I never saw a country track in as good shape as this one. The fact that a half mile was run over it in 49½ seconds, and three-eighths in 36½ is proof enough that it is a fast. Nearly all the races were running events, as Ukiah is far away from the main circuit and Mendocino county has not yet devoted much attention to harness horses for racing purposes. However, the track is owned by two or three gentlemen who are interested in harness horses, and by another year harness racing will cut more of a figure in the annual racing program.

They told me at Ukiah that the fair was much more largely attended than it was last year, when the first fair was given. Secretary C. H. Kent is undoubtedly the right man in the right place, and had everything moving like clock work. There were no delays and everyone seemed to fully understand they would not be allowed.

My friend H. B. Smith had charge of the track and the horsemen present all spoke in the highest terms of his management. Another old acquaintance Thos. Charlton was presiding judge and stood no funny business from anyone. In fact the prompt manner in which the crooked races were declared off and the owners and riders set down was an object lesson to older associations. There were but one or two of these "incidents" but the judges were right every time.

On the front page of this issue of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN are a couple of photographs taken at Ukiah. One is of the stallion St. Patrick, a handsome son of Hon. Jesse D. Carr's old horse Mambrino, son of Mambrino Patchen. St. Patrick has a good looking and numerous family in Mendocino county. The other is H. B. Smith's mare May Ayers, own sister to Jasper Ayers 2:09. She was caught up out of pasture ten days before the Ukiah fair, her colt by Lynwood taken away and weaned, and the mare worked a little for the race in which she started on the last day. She turned the track pulled up in 1:15 and I believe she can trot a mile in 2:20 with two or three months work.

November 6th the Date.

On Thursday, November 6th, there will be sold by William G. Layng at the Occidental Horse Exchange in this city, a consignment of high bred horses from the paddocks of Mr. C. L. Griffith of Pleasanton. There are eleven head of standard bred trotters and pacers, among them broodmares of the choicest breeding, and young horses fit to campaign on the circuit. Vida Wilkes 2:18½ by Guy Wilkes, Nola (dam of Sharkey 2:15) by Nutwood, Alta Nola, a daughter of Nola and sired by the great Altamont, and Bonnie Derby, a four year old filly by Chas. Derby, dam of Bon Bon (the dam of Bonnie Direct 2:05½ and Bonsilene 2:14½) by Simmons, and a few of the bargains to be offered. These three mares are alone sufficient to start a small stock farm with and bred to first class stallions will bring a big profit to their owner. Mr. Griffith is so engrossed with the cares of a large business that he has no time to devote to his many horses, and for that reason desires to sell. See advertisement.

Notes and News.

Charlie Mac 2:07½.

California horses are very prominent this year.

Syndicate books are in less favor than ever in this State.

Cresceus trotted a mile in 2:04 at Memphis last Thursday.

All the Oregon and Washington fairs were largely attended this year.

Prince of Orange, 2:07½, is now the fastest new trotter of the year.

The Cleveland challenge cup for amateur drivers of trotters will be of gold.

Well bred stallions are certain to be well patronized in California next spring.

Jessie Herr (2) 2:18 is the first of the get of Charlie Herr 2:07 to obtain a record.

Miss Logan's mile in 2:05 at Stockton is the fastest mile paced by a mare this year.

Foxy Mac by McKinney, trotted to a record of 2:20½ at Los Angeles last Wednesday.

Catalogues for A. B. Spreckels' great sale of thoroughbreds will be issued next Tuesday.

Next year all the big fairs in Northwestern Ohio will fix an earlier date, so as to avoid the risk of fall rains.

United States Consuls in France report a great demand for American horses in that country at present.

When Sir Albert S. made his record of 2:03¾ at Lexington he paced his quarters as follows: 31, 30, 31, 31½.

Onward Silver has again reduced the two-mile record. He trotted the distance at Memphis Thursday in 4:28½.

Kavalli 2:07¾ is the fastest four year old pacing colt of the year, and is also the initial 2:10 performer of his sire, Kremlin 2:07¾.

President Ijams thinks Dan Patch's mile in 2:01 at Terre Haute, day and track considered, is the best mile he ever paced.

This year's Transylvania race—six heats in 2:09½, 2:09½, 2:07½, 2:08, 2:09, 2:09½—is the world's record for six heats on the trot.

Arthur Wilkes got a new performer at the Spokane meeting when County Attorney won the 2:30 pace and took a record of 2:20½.

The average value of a horse in the United States is $49.07, being lowest in Arizona ($13.61) and highest in Rhode Island ($86.12).

Clark Bros., of Liberty, Ind., have sold the pacing stallion, Hal Clipper 2:07½, by Hal Dillard 2:04½, to Joshua Davis of Liberty, Ind., for $5,000.

In round numbers Scott Hudson has won $75,000 in stakes and purses the present season, which means that he heads the list of winning drivers.

Prince Direct, formerly Freddie C., has reduced his record to 2:07. It was in the fifth heat of a race and the tenth heat he had paced in four days.

John H. Shults of New York declares that he will never again campaign a stable of horses. He will not, however, abandon the breeding of trotters.

Nervolo 2:07½ by Colbert 2:07½ was priced recently to M. E. Sturgis, owner of Dan Patch 1:59½, at $10,000, and Sir Albert S. has beaten him twice since.

The eighteenth annual New York Horse Show takes place at Madison Square Garden the week of November 17th. $30,000 will be offered for 119 classes.

The Transylvania is certainly "Mars" Geers' hoodoo. He has won heats a number of times in this classic event, yet has never been able to land it.

Major P. P. Johnson, president of the National Trotting Association, was a liberal purchaser at the recent sale of H. L. Asher's trotting stock in Kentucky.

The third Pacific Breeders Futurity for foals of mares bred in 1902 is advertised this week. It has a guaranteed value of $6000, the same as its predecessors.

Katherine A. 2:14, is not only the fastest two year old trotter of the year, but she has also equaled the world's record for two year old trotting fillies held by Janie T.

John Dickerson will next season train for W. B. Dickerman, of New York, who owns an extensive breeding establishment at Mamaroneck, headed by Bellini 2:13½.

It is said that the entire $10,000 won by Nella Jay, in the Kentucky Futurity, went to her driver, Fred McKey, as a present from Geo. B. Woodin of Boston, owner of the filly.

The dam of Lord Derby's sire was out of a strictly thoroughbred running mare, and the horse that got Lord Derby's second dam was also out of a thoroughbred running mare.

Report says that Frank Yokum showed a mile in 2:08 over a half mile track before becoming the property of his present owners. He is liable to be a large money winner in his class next year.

It is reported that Santa Cruz is to have a race track in the near future. It will be built at a convenient point along the new electric road soon to be constructed between that place and Capitola.

The highest price of the recent Palo Alto sale was $340, paid for a bay gelding, two years old, by Mr. A. B. Spreckels' stallion Dexter Prince, dam Loraneer by Electioneer. The Dexter Princes always sell well.

El Milagro reduced his record to 2:11½ in the race he won at Lexington. He is by McKinney out of Adelina Patti, the dam of Margaret Worth 2:15. The Eastern turf writers predict a mark below 2:10 for him next year.

Adbell 2:23, the champion yearling trotter, is dead. As mentioned last week, he broke his leg playing in his paddock. His leg was put in a cast, hoping to save him, but it was found necessary to end his life to save intense suffering.

The Fasig-Tipton Co. will handle the dispersal sale of thoroughbreds at the famous Belle Mead Farm near Nashville, Tenn., on October 29th and 30th, when General William H. Jackson will dispose of his entire stud of world-famed horses.

The judges at Lexington fined Ed Geers $100 for not trying to win a heat with Dan R., after the latter had made two breaks. Geers came back at them with a bill for $100 for services rendered, he having been substituted behind Billy H. the day previous.

The trotters and pacers will be barred during the remainder of the Los Angeles meeting, which has been extended to November 1st. This is a good thing. Harness races and syndicate books make about the worst combination that can be imagined.

There are few colts with a greater speed inheritance than Directum Peer, the two-year-old by the four-year-old champion, Directum 2:05½, out of the well-known mare, Pixley 2:08½. In the lot he acts like a born trotter, showing fine action and speed.

Nora McKinney won a race at the Parkway Driving Club's meeting on Long Island last week, trotting both heats in 2:13 hitched to a wagon. The price ($5000) which Mr. Brayton Ives paid for her is looked upon as a bargain price by the New York speedwayites.

A German horse dealer started a Russian-bred mare in a race, and represented that she was bred in Germany. He was caught, tried, convicted, sentenced to one year in prison at hard labor, and deprived of his civil rights for three years after completing his prison sentence.

Ozanam, the winner of the Transylvania, is by Axtell, first dam by Director 2:17, second dam by Governor Sprague, sire of the dam of McKinney 2:11½, third dam Patchena by Mambrino Patchen, fourth dam the strictly thoroughbred mare Vandalia by Revill, a son of Vandal.

In the first heat of the Transylvania Waubun made a break in front of Rhythmic and Hudson was obliged to take up the blind horse so quickly that he got on to his right forward quarter and cut himself so badly that he had to be drawn. The injury will necessitate his retirement for the season.

Dr. J. L. Wentz of Scranton, Pa., owner of the famous show horses Lord Brilliant and Lord Golden, will campaign an extensive stable of light harness horses next season. One of the most recent purchases is the chestnut mare, Frances B. 2:11½, son of Alcantara 2:23. He also owns Hal B. 2:04½ and Fanny Dillard 2:05½.

City Counsel Hiram W. Johnson has reported to the Sacramento City Trustees that the city has no right under its charter to purchase additional land adjoining Agricultural Park and lease it to the State Agricultural Society. The proposition to bond the city for $75,000 to purchase this land will therefore be dropped.

P. B. Haight, of Omaha, Neb., has bought from Mrs. C. W. Williams, of Galesburg, Ill., a weanling colt by Expedition 2:15½, dam Gul Bahar, dam of Milerton 2:28½ by Guy Wilkes 2:15½; grandam by Nutwood; third dam by George Wilkes, fourth dam the famous Alma Mater, by Mambrino Patchen. The price was close to $1000.

A gentleman who attended the Watsonville races this year tells us that it was very successful and well attended. The track is a very poor one and situated six miles from town, but the people went to see the races. If Watsonville had a good track close to town a big meeting could be held there as it is a very prosperous community.

The types were in error last week when it was stated in these columns that Dan Patch had turned the Davenport, Iowa, track in 1:01. The figures led some to think the track was a half-mile affair. Dan Patch made his mile at Davenport in 2:01 and the time by quarters was 29½, 30½, 30½ and 30½.

Howell W. Peel, of Spokane, had the misfortune to lose by fire his fine McKinney stallion, Prince of Spokane, out of Hazel May 2:29½, by Ingraham. He was only three years old, but the making of a very fast trotter. The stable caught fire from sparks from a locomotive and burned down before the horse could be gotten out.—Rural Spirit.

E. E. Smathers has made far and away the best showing of the New York owners as he raced more horses and his wagon starts resulted in frequent victories. He himself lowered Lord Derby's old record of 2:06½ to 2:05½ and cut Ida Highwood's 2:13½ to 2:09½, Alice Barnes' old 2:11½, made in 1900, to 2:10½, also won with Gold Brick 2:09½ in 2:09½.

Report has it that Mr. Harry Hamlin won $15,000 on the Direct Hal race at Readville. As a rule, the Messrs. Hamlin never wager much money, but it appears that on this occasion the junior proprietor of the great breeding establishment became interested in the nice smooth way in which Frank Hamlin timed off the $500 tickets, and took a small pack just for a pastime.

Blaze o' Glory, the little bay cob for which C. K. G. Billings recently paid $5000 to A. E. Ashbrook, is the registered trotting stallion Warship, No. 20,529, by Masterpiece, son of Masterlode, dam Jane B., by Lexington, Chief, Jr. He has won thirty-three blue ribbons and one championship in the West, and was not once defeated while owned by Mr. Ashbrook.

Frank, the brown gelding by Secretary that has been doing so well over East this year, reducing his record from 2:17½ to 2:10½, won another race at the Parkway track, near Brooklyn, New York, October 14th, beating a field of seven fast pacers in straight heats. The fastest heat was 2:12½, but the newspaper report says that Frank was pulled double each heat to prevent him reducing his record.

Joe Pointer 2:08½ hasn't been doing much since his Charter Oak race on August 2d. On that day Sphinx S. made him step close to a minute in going the first half of the second mile, but he could not beat the son of Star Pointer home, although the heat was given to him on a foul. Dave McCleary will hold the horse till next season, when Joe will go down the line with the rest of the star performers of the Grand Circuit.

Dr. F. H. Shanks of Susanville, Lassen county, sends us a photograph of his black horse Romulus by Lassen, son of Kebir 2:28, dam Maud by Geo. Wapple 2:25, second dam by a son of Gen. Reno. Romulus was two years old last April and weighs 1000 pounds. He trotted three-quarters of a mile, his first workout this year, in 1:59 and at Susanville on September 27th last, won a race against four year olds and trotted to a record of 3:12.

A regular meeting of the Board of Review will be held at the Murray Hill Hotel, New York, at 10 o'clock A. M. on Tuesday, November 2, 1902, in accordance with the by laws. All communications intended for the consideration of the Board at the December meeting must be forwarded to the Secretary not later than November 18th, and all parties who desire that their cases should be acted on at the Spring meeting should immediately notify the Secretary to that effect. The Board of Review is empowered to act in place of the full Board with the same authority and jurisdiction, and at the above meeting will consider business arising in each and all of the districts.

El Milagro 2:11½, the handsome son of McKinney, greatly simplified and beautified his name at Lexington last week by the cleverness with which he nipped several very close heats (and races) in the 2:13 trot. In the first heat that he won he came from where no one could tell, as he was not supposed to be in the hunt at all at the distance flag, but between there and the finish a "streak of bay horse" was seen to shoot past the leaders, and El Milagro was a winner. He duplicated this performance till he had first money to his credit. He demonstrated the fact that he is a sensationally fast trotter, and when he learns to get away a little faster the first end of the mile he will surely take a low record. His speed at the finish is wonderful. It is useless to add that both Senator McCarthy, his owner, and H. B. Gentry, owner of McKinney, were greatly pleased over the performance.—Western Horseman.

Next season it is said Direct Hal 2:04½, Geers' unbeaten pacer by Direct, is to be retired to the Village Farm stud and not a horse from the big farm at East Aurora again to be raced. John Bradburn, for thirty-five years head of the establishment, has been at death's door for many weeks following an operation. C. J. Hamlin is now an old man and his two sons are in business. In future, having to date produced more 2:10 performers than elsewhere bred, Village Farm stock will merely be developed and sold without records to purchasers who may race or road the horses as the case may be. Geers will never leave Village Farm as long as the elder Hamlin lives, as the great trainer has so completely revolutionized matters there, made the farm world famed as the nursery of the age, and so endeared himself to the millionaire owner that he will likely receive the $5000 he now draws even should he be privileged to make the Grand Circuit with horses he may himself own and desire to race.

Palo Alto Stock Farm Sale.

The sale of two year olds and broodmares held at Palo Alto Stock Farm last Saturday was a success. It was conducted by William G. Layng, of the Occidental Horse Exchange in this city, who managed to secure good prices for the stock sold. The two year olds were a well bred lot, and were intended for the Blue Ribbon Sale at Cleveland last May, but were attacked with distemper and could not be sold at that time. The broodmares were from twelve to twenty-three years old, some of them great producers, but there was little contest for their ownership. The two year olds, sixteen in number, averaged $208 each, and the nine broodmares $109. The sales were as follows:

Alta Vista, br c, 1900, by McKinney 2:11½, dam Expressive 2:12½ by Electioneer; M. M. Vincent, Merced, $325.

Athene, b f, 1900, by Dexter Prince, dam Athena 2:15½ by Electioneer; A. M. Fosdick, $140.

Racing in the Rain.

Horsemen talking about the rain interfering with the program at the Empire City meeting the other day, expressed the opinion that there was really no more reason for postponing trotting or pacing races on account of rain than there was for declaring off running races. The element of danger, it was argued by some, was not greater for the harness than for the saddle horses and that it would bring mud horses to the front. On the European tracks, all races are rain or shine. I saw Isidore Schlessinger at the Empire track on the first day the race was postponed. He is a member of the Vienna Club, the most prominent trotting club in Europe. He appeared greatly amused when told the races were postponed on account of rain.

"Why," he said, "we never think of such a thing. If it is pouring down rain, the races are called on time, just the same. Of course, some horses would be favored by a muddy track; but on the other hand, horses that cannot go well in the mud, are favored by a good track, so that evens it up. Probably more than a third of our races are trotted in the rain or on a heavy track. Most horsemen think that it takes a big, strong horse for a good mud trotter; but my experience has been that just the opposite is the case. I have one or two horses that have been successful winners in the mud and they are rather light of build than otherwise.—Trotter and Pacer.

The California bred mare Lady Mackay by Silverthreads, son of The Moor, died recently at Mariposa Farm, Saylesville, R. I. She was the dam of Oakland Baron 2:09½ and three other standard performers. She was foaled in 1880, and her death came from starvation, as she had lost all her teeth.

Racing at Hollister.

The San Benito County Fair was held at Hollister from October 8th to 11th, and was quite well attended. The results of the races were as follows:

Buggy horse, purse $150.—Ellsworth's Dolly Brown took first, second and fourth heats; Willson's Little One the third. Time—2:31½, 2:27½, 2:32, 2:31½.

2:25 mixed, purse $175.—Cuicello's Puerto Rico took first heat; Dwain's Shelby the second, third and fourth heats. Time—2:18½, 2:23½, 2:22, 2:21.

Three-eighths dash—Wimmer's Tucalotte. Time—0:37.

Special mixed, purse $175.—Shaw's Aunt Sally took first heat, Storm's Muldoon second, third and fourth heats. Time—2:27, 2:27½, 2:26½, 2:30½.

2:20 pace, purse $175.—Ferguson's Inferno took first, third and fourth heats, Hind's Ethel C. the second. Time—2:18, 2:23½, 2:16½.

2:25 trot, purse $100.—Parrott's Dolador took first, second and fourth heats, Hind's Estelle the third. Time—2:25, 2:25, 2:24½, 2:24.

Special buggy, purse $100.—A. G. Willson's Little One took first and second heats, Dwain's Larkin W. the third, and Wright's Black Diamond fourth, fifth and sixth heats. Time—2:37, 2:37½, 2:35, 2:39, 2:37, 2:39.

2:19 mixed, purse $175.—Harris' Sylvian in straight heats. Time—2:24½, 2:24½, 2:24½.

Five and one-half furlong dash, purse $75.—Wimmer's Tucalotte took first, Trainor's Moano second. Time—1:12.

2:18 pace, purse $250.—Ferguson's Inferno in straight heats. Time—2:18½, 2:18½, 2:18½.

Barstow's Alone to beat 2:04. Time won—2:16.

Special mixed, purse $150.—Hind's Estelle first, third and fourth heats, Storm's Muldoon the second. Time—2:27½, 2:28, 2:26½, 2:28.

Special match, purse $150.—Aunt Sally and Jerry Driscoll, two in three. Former won in two heats. Time—2:36, 2:25.

Brighton Beach Stakes.

This week the Brighton Beach Racing Association will issue entry blanks for a number of valuable stakes to be run in 1903 and 1904. The events will be the Brighton Junior Stakes of $10,000, the Neptune Stakes of $5000 and the Venus Stakes of $5000—all for two year olds—to be run in 1903, and the Brighton Derby of $10,000, at a mile and a half; the Iroquois Stakes of $5000, at a mile and a furlong, and the Oaks of $5000, at a mile and a sixteenth—all for three year olds—to be run in 1904. The value of these stakes as given is guaranteed and a liberal amount of money will be added in each event. The Derby distance has been increased from a mile and a quarter to a mile and a half and with $5000 in added money should be one of the most valuable, as well as one of the most interesting three year old events of the Eastern turf. There has been a generous increase in the value of the Venus Stakes and the Brighton Oaks, each for fillies exclusively. This year the Venus was worth $3000 and the Oaks $3500. The value of each of these events now is $5000, a substantial increase.

There can be no doubt that horsemen will appreciate the association's offering by nominating generously to these stakes, which will close on the first of November.

President Engeman not only has increased the value of his stakes, but he is going ahead with the work of improving the course, which, with its new clubhouse and paddock already is well nigh perfect. Work has been commenced on a chute at the head of the homestretch which, when completed, will give a straight run of a quarter of a mile to the judges' stand.

The value of this improvement will be appreciated by none so much as by horsemen who may have starters in the Brighton handicap or in other races over the handicap distance of a mile and a quarter. Heretofore the starting point for races at a mile and a quarter position there has been much crowding before the field was straightened out for the run through the stretch. When the new chute, or extension to the homestretch, is opened, there will be no excuse for crowding, as there will be a straight run to the stand. Track Superintendent, William Clare, has a large gang of men at work on the new chute and expects to have it completed before the end of the month.

Santa Rosa Stock Farm's gelding Sir Albert S. 2:03½ placed another race to his credit last Tuesday. He won the 2:08 class pace at Memphis, beating Nervolo, Sphinx S, Dandy Chimes, Prince Direct and other fast ones. He took the second and fourth heats in 2:04½ and 2:07½. It is a pity this great gelding was not in shape to start earlier in the season as he would doubtless have been beating Direct Hal and all the other crackerjack side wheelers of the Grand Circuit in the big stakes. He starts again next Wednesday and will meet Direct Hal 2:04½, Twinkle 2:05½, Dan R. 2:04½, Daphne Dallas 2:05, Carl Wilkes 2:05½ and several other free for allers in this race.

John A. McKerron's Mile at Lexington.

[Hawley in Kentucky Stock Farm]

One of the most interesting events of last week was the performance of John A. McKerron to harness on Friday. He was driven by Doc Tanner, and started to beat 2:10, which was the record attached to him in his first race for the Challenge Trophy. The day and track were well suited for a fast mile, and while visiting horsemen familiar with the horse's great flight of speed were prepared for a brilliant dash against time, few had any conception that the horse possessed the marvelous flight of speed that he exhibited. After scoring twice the stallion took the word when going at a terrific rate of speed, accompanied by Scott McCoy behind a runner. The first eighth was reached in fifteen seconds, and it then became very apparent that such a clip must be materially reduced or he would not be able to stay the distance. He rounded the first turn with undiminished speed, reaching the quarter pole in thirty and one-half seconds, and on entering the back stretch he seemed merely to increase his marvelous flight. So perfect was his action and so easily did he seem to be moving few of the spectators not registering his flight with their watches could realize that he was trotting a two-minute gait. Passing the half in 1:00½, the fastest official half ever trotted over the Lexington track, and with three exceptions the fastest half ever trotted, the horse flew on his journey. Many an exclamation could be heard when the time for the half was announced by the indicator, and all who witnessed the flight knew that it would be impossible for the horse to continue at anything like this rate of speed. It then became noticeable that Tanner was trying to take the horse back, and when the three-quarter pole was reached it was seen that he had trotted the third quarter in thirty-three seconds. He swung into the homestretch at this rate of speed, and not until the eighth pole when the stretch had been reached did his driver call on him to increase his clip. Encouraged by the voices of his driver and Scott McCoy, the horse finished resolutely, and rushed under the wire like a flash, trotting the mile in 2:06½.

Tanner on entering the stretch had so materially taken him back that the eighth from the head of the stretch to the middle of it was the slowest of the whole mile, and this enabled him to trot the last eighth in fifteen and one-half seconds. The mile was a remarkable one in view of the fact that the horse had been given comparatively little slow work within the ten days previous to that mile, and in view of the fact that the first half was made under such high pressure, it can be considered little short of phenomenal, and had the horse been possessed of anything short of phenomenal gameness he would have stopped to a walk. After returning to the stand it was quickly explained by Tanner why he had allowed the horse to trot such an unevenly rated mile, his explanation being that the horse was hitting himself above the hock, and an examination of the braces showed that they had been bent by the force with which he fairly lifted the sulky from the ground. There is little question but that under different circumstances John A. McKerron would have trotted a mile in 2:05 or better, for he has the capacity of making a record second only to that of the champion stallion himself. It was a rare sight and a fascinating one to witness this faultless piece of machinery with his frictionless action and absolute lack of waste motion fairly skimming over the ground. His gait is the poetry of motion, his speed marvelous, and if the opportunity should present itself and the horse in prime condition, find a day and track favorable at Memphis, there is little doubt but that he will trot a mile in 2:04 or better. At Memphis he will make two attempts to vanquish time, one under the same conditions as at Lexington and the other to wagon driven by his owner. It is to be hoped that these two tests may be made under similar condition in order that the question relative to the friction of a wagon and a sulky may be made known. It is reasonable to suppose that there is a difference in favor of the sulky, especially with some horses, yet in the case of McKerron one cannot help but believe that in view of the fact that the horse has through constant practice become accustomed to the wagon, and because of his owner's familiarity with the horse, his performance to wagon at Memphis will equal if not surpass the one with the sulky. He is a wonderful horse, a credit to his trainer, and a worthy exponent of the American light harness horse.

Direct Hal 2:04½ is the fifth 2:05 pacer to carry the blood of the great Tennessee pacing sire, Tom Hal. The others are Star Pointer 1:59½, Hal B. 2:04½, Hal Pointer 2:04½ and Hal Dillard 2:04½. While only five of the thirty-nine pacers in the 2:05 list trace to the Hal family, it is noticeable that every one of the five is or was a race horse of the highest class, and the chances are that before the season is finished two more of the same kind will be added, for Fanny Dillard 2:05½ and Twinkle 2:05½ are both able to beat 2:05.

LOS ANGELES MEETING.

As will always be the case where a race meeting is run primarily in the interest of the running horses, with the harness races a sort of side issue, the trotters and pacers are not putting up a very high class performance at Los Angeles. In the first place the track is cut up for the runners at least twelve feet from the pole, compelling the harness horses to go long miles, consequently the time has not been sensational. Then there are the books, and where the bookmakers control the betting and make the odds on the syndicate plan, there will always be dissatisfaction.

Some day California may progress far enough in racing matters so that harness and running races will only be combined at the small district fair tracks and the larger meetings will be either strictly running or strictly harness meetings, as is the case now all over the East. The manners, customs and rules made for the government and conduct of running meetings are so widely different from those controlling harness meetings that they cannot be made to harmonize. There is little in common between running and trotting horsemen, and the sooner they are divorced the better it will be for all concerned.

The 2:23 trot, which opened the Friday program at Los Angeles last week, was one of those unsatisfactory races which ended in bets being declared off on some of the heats, and a general lot of trouble all around. There were five starters in the race—Arketa, Zambra, Forrest W., Rozell and Lady Rowena. W. G. Durfee's good stallion Petigru was entered, but was scratched the evening before, and it was said that Durfee had been promised first money to keep his horse in the barn, which proceeding is not uncommon where one horse outclasses the others.

The first heat of the race was won by Forrest W., in 2:18½, with Arketa going easy in second place. The next heat Green brought Arketa to the front and she won from Zambra in 2:16½. The bookies roared and the judges promptly declared all bets off, as Forrest W. was the favorite. Rozell, a gray mare by Bob Mason, won the third heat from Arketa in 2:17½, which looked very bad when her position of 5-4 in the two previous heats was considered, but as she was 50 to 1 for the heat and consequently had not been played to any extent, the books were permitted to keep the money. Arketa won the next two heats, presumably according to program, and the bets on the final heat and on the race were declared off. Al McDonald, driver of Forrest W., was fined $100 for rough driving in this heat. It was a bad race all through and the only losers were the public.

A race for gentlemen drivers came next and while warming up for it, Dr. Ralph Hagan's sulky frame collapsed and he was thrown out. Patrol officer Arguello succeeded in throwing the lasso over the Doctor's mare Polo before she had done herself any harm and she started in the race. Mamie B., a pacer by Dexter Prince, was the winner of the race in straight heats, her best time being 2:22.

Nine good platers came out for the first running race, and Bozeman took El Karn to the front, never being headed in the five furlongs, the 3 to 2 favorite, Dulcimer, going back in the betting to 2 to 1 from light play. Montezuma was well liked by many for the place, and she cashed all tickets written that way.

Cesar Young's Little Margaret had a host of friends in the fourth event, another five furlong dash, a leading one being Cesar himself, who would give only even money on the colt, though the other layers were offering 6 to 5. Many played the chestnut filly for the place and won, but Florinel II. received a strong ride in the stretch from Frawley, and took the lead from Pilon, who had been in front all the way previous. Time was better, 1:01½.

A second choice, Golden Light, at 6 to 5, Bozeman up, took the fifth event at six and one-half furlongs from the public's choice, Jim Gore II., quoted at 4 to 5. The pair fought it out all the distance, and Bozeman rode out his mount a winner. A barrel of money was dumped on Black Orphan, one report having it that a bet of $500 was made with the Chicago club on the Zahn mare.

A hot tip was abroad for the last race and it said "Morinel." There were many followers and they cashed at 3 to 2, Ransch showing his versatility by leading his field from the barrier to the finish. Time for the mile was 1:42½. Frank Pearce, also at 3 to 2, ran a good race under Frawley, but finished second being unable to catch the fleeting Morinel. Summaries:

Running, selling, six and one-half furlongs—Frank Pearce second, El Pilar third. Generalissimo, Moriel, Queen May and Horace also ran. Disturber left at the post. Time, 1:42½.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 18.

The feature of Saturday's racing was the close finish in the last race. Fully nine tenths of the people present thought the favorite Mythrox won, but the judges awarded the race to Galene, a ten to one shot and the books kept all the money.

There was one harness race and this went to the pacer Harry J. in straight heats. For purse offered trotters of the 2:12 class Petigru had a walkover.

Tibs broke in front at the start of the first running race, but yielded command to Little Secret at the half, being headed by Jim Roberts at the turn, the latter retaining his lead in a driving finish, thanks to Ransch's strong ride. Time for the six furlongs—1:14½.

King Dellis was well played in the fourth and after fighting it out with Fine Shot all the way around, he proved the best in 1:14½ for the three-quarters.

Tizona had a big following in the mile event simply because Jerry Ransch had the mount. After a false start in which several of the field exhausted themselves, the bunch of bad actors was finally sent away with Del Vista ahead and Ransch in his usual position—second. Tizona soon dropped back, but came up again strongly at the finish and Ransch rode him out winner with Dwight Way and Cowboy in the money as named.

The day's feature was the Santa Monica handicap at a mile and one-sixteenth. Ransch's mount, Flush of Gold, had a big backing, and again little Jerry was not found wanting. The start was fair, Ransch taking his mount out at once, and she was never headed. In the stretch Narra G. and Ullola made a bid, but the last mile had been covered in 1:39, which is the pace that kills, and there was no reserve left for a final dash. The race brought $590 to the Owen Brothers' stable. A long line of betters cashed in their fliers on Ransch after the run was over. Time was 1:46½—very satisfactory for the distance.

There was a long delay in the last event. Mythrox doing some very bad acting. Finally Mulbolland got them away. Cinon in front. Galene took command at the three-quarters pole, but Ransch on Mythrox made his usual bid at the finish with such strength that he was going two feet to Galene's one under the wire. The judges declared Galene the winner to the great dissatisfaction of the crowd. Time was 1:08½. Summary:

Pace, 2:23 class, purse $700.
Harry J., b g by Reavis' Steinway.....(Trank)	1	1	1
Eagleita, br m by Ketchum.....(Durfee)	2	2	3

Time—2:11½, 2:13, 2:11.

Trot, 2:12 class, three in five, purse $500. Petigru, b s by Kingward, had a walk over in 2:27.

Running, six furlongs, selling—Jim Roberts won. Tibs second. All About third. Time, 1:14½. Black Orphan, Little Secret, Sir Claus and Nora D. also ran.

Running, six furlongs, selling—King Dellis won, Troy second, Fine Shot third. Time, 1:14½. Legal Maxim, Gypsy Boy and Senator also ran.

Running, one mile, selling—Tizona won, Dwight Way second, Cowboy third. Time, 1:41½. Gladiador, Mont Eagle, Del Vista and Windward also ran.

Running, one and one-sixteenth miles—Flush of Gold won, Ullola second, Narra G. third. Time, 1:46½. Lodestar, Straggler and Frank Woods also ran.

Running, five and one-half furlongs, selling—Galene won, Mythrox second, Senora Cesar third. Time, 1:42½. Tempore, Miss Culver, Cinon, Miss Dividend and Royal F. also ran.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 20.

Ladies were admitted free to-day and the result was the biggest aggregation of femininity that ever assembled in Los Angeles. More than 4000 women packed the benches, the boxes and the aisles of the stand. About nine-tenths of them played Jerry Ransch's mounts and they must have carried home a large sum in the aggregate.

The bookies got "it" again today and would have been hit much harder had Malaspina come in ahead of Golden Light. As it was Golden Light was liberally played at odds of 2 to 1.

The two harness races went off in prompt order, three heats being sufficient in each to return the winner. The 2:25 trot was easy for Hoilo, Briney K. getting second money. The 2:11 pace had four starters and Dictatress showed good class by winning in three straight heats in fairly good time. Midnight was second in each heat.

There was a match race between two polo ponies belonging to well known residents of Los Angeles. Car-

San Francisco, Saturday, October 25, 1902.

THE THIRD Pacific Breeders Futurity Stake has been opened, entries for which are to close December 1st. This stake is for foals of mares bred this year, 1902, to trot or pace, as two and three year olds. The first payment is only $3, which is the nominating fee of the mare bred. The first of these stakes, all of which are guaranteed by the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association to be worth $6000, was opened in 1900. It had 305 original entries and at the present time there is in the hands of Capt. N. T. Smith, treasurer of the association, the sum of $3603 to the credit of this stake. The second stake was opened in 1901. It received 299 original entries, but the nominators were more numerous than in the first stake—that is, there were more individual nominators. Some of the large stock farms fell off in the number of entries made, but the smaller breeders were more numerous than the previous year. Of the second stake, Capt. Smith has in his hands the sum of $3126. There has seldom been a more popular stake inaugurated in any State in the Union. The third stake, which is now guaranteed to be worth the same amount as its predecessors, will close December 1st. There have been numerous inquiries already as to the date of closing, showing that the breeders of this Coast are greatly interested in it, and the chances are that it will receive more entries and be worth more money than either of the others. The advertisement setting forth all the conditions of the stake appears in our business columns this week.

AS EVIDENCE of the increase of interest in harness horse affairs in California the meeting of the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association at Fresno this year can be cited. In spite of the fact that the sum derived from the betting privilege was about a thousand dollars less than the amount heretofore obtained when books were permitted, the financial showing in general is far ahead of any meeting held by the Breeders in years. Had the Fresno meeting been held at any other date than the one selected (which was the very height of the raisin gathering and drying season) the attendance would have been enormous, in spite of the fact that the railway transportation facilities from the town to the track were not completed. The Fresno meeting is proof conclusive that the better class of the people enjoy good honest harness racing and since its close nothing but words of praise have been heard of it on all sides. With syndicate books prohibited and the tracks kept in shape for fast time, there need be no fear but harness racing will regain all its old time popularity with Californians.

AZOTE'S RACE RECORD of 2:05½ has stood for several years, but has at last been equaled by Major Delmar. In the first heat of the Diamond handicap at Memphis, last Thursday, this son of Delmar won the first heat at a mile in 2:05½, the second heat at a mile and an eighth in 2:22½, reducing Janice's record of last year 1½ seconds, and the third heat at a half mile in 1:01, the record for the distance. It is pleasing for a Californian to note that Major Delmar carries some of the same blood that helped Azote in his fast flight, both being sons of stallions bred at Palo Alto Stock Farm, that were sired by the great Electioneer.

Official Report on British Remounts.

LONDON, October 18.—A blue book has been issued containing a detailed report of the officers appointed by the commander-in-chief of the army to inquire into the work of the remount department. The report speaks in general favorably of the arrangements of the department and of the class of animals purchased.

Dealing with the case of Captain Smith, who was attached to the purchasing commission at New Orleans, the report finds that he received a commission on every animal he purchased; that many of the mules bought by him were absolutely unfit and useless, and that he was guilty of malpractice, and brought the greatest discredit upon the department.

The report also finds that Captain E. R. Mandslay and Veterinary Surgeon Hawes behaved with extreme impropriety in purchasing for their own use and shipping to England horses brought up for inspection as remounts, and which actually had been branded. The report says, regarding American mules: "In our opinion nothing approaches them except the gun mules of the mountain batteries in India. We do not see a fault to find with them as a class."

Of the horses, the officers say: "Judging them as a class, we think them the very type for mounted infantry horses. With time and training the American horse would turn out to be the ideal horse for mounted infantry or to carry light cavalry without equipment."

The report considers that the dealers at first made undue profits, but this was mostly in the latter stages. It says that the officers cannot conceive the possibility of Chicago's becoming a very valuable center for remounts. Dealing with Canada, the report says the Dominion does not appear to be able to furnish a very large number of horses, and that the supply is not likely to increase unless breeding is stimulated by a steady, permanent demand for army horses, and unless suitable selected stallions are introduced.

The Pacing Record.

About the first pacing feat to attract attention in this country was the two-mile heat of Bowery Boy in 1829, when he made a record of 5:04½. In 1835, Oneida Chief by Kentucky Hunter paced a mile to saddle in 2:31. This was looked upon as a marvelous performance. He supplemented this three years later with a two-mile saddle record of 5:09½. In 1839, Drover paced a mile in 2:28, and in 1844, Unknown pulled a wagon a mile in 2:23 at the pacing gait. In 1852, a roan gelding named Pet marked off a mile in 2:18½. It was in 1855, however, when the pacing meteor, Pocahontas electrified the world by pacing a mile in 2:17½. Then we come along down from Billy Boyce's feat of a mile under saddle in 2:14½ to Old Sleepy Tom, who went from wire to wire—and blind at that—in 2:12½, to the old high wheeled sulky. In 1881, Little Brown Jug went one better and set the mark at 2:11½, and there it remained until 1884, when Johnson knocked it down to 2:06½. In 1892 came Mascot with 2:04, Hal Pointer 2:04½ and Direct 2:05½. In 1894, Robert J. placed the record at 2:01½. In 1896, John R. Gentry reduced Robert J.'s mark one second, and one year later Star Pointer went below 2:00 and placed the record at 1:59½. At Readville, Dan Patch equaled this, and the two horses stand tied for the championship.—Exchange.

To Start A Balky Horse.

Says the Horseshoers' Journal: "For the benefit of those who have been caused a great deal of anxiety by a balky horse, lost trains as well as tempers, and even sometimes ruined the horse, the next time they have the experience to run across a balky horse, no matter how bad he is let me tell you how to start him 99 times out of 100. Of course, it may fail one time in a hundred. When a horse balks, no matter how badly he sulks or how ugly he is, do not beat him; don't throw sand in his ears; don't use a rope on his forelegs, or even burn straw under him. Quietly go and pat him on the head a moment; take a hammer or even pick up a stone in the street; tell the driver to sit still; take his lines, hold them quietly, while you lift up either front foot; give each nail a light tap and a good smart tap on the the frog; drop the foot quickly, and then chirp to him to go. In 99 cases out of 100 the horse will go right on about his business, but the driver must keep his lines taut and not pull or jerk him back. If I have tried this once I have tried it 500 times, and every time I have suggested it people have laughed and even bet $5 and bottles of wine that I could not do it. So far I have won every bet. This makes you smile, but a horse has more common sense than most people are willing to give him credit for. The secret of this little trick is simply diversion. I am a firm believer that with kindness and proper treatment a horse can be driven with a string."

C. L. Griffiths' Sale.

The last opportunity of the year to purchase at auction high class, well bred and perfectly trained horses is offered at the closing out sale of Mr. C. L. Griffiths' carefully selected horses on November 6th, at the Occidental Horse Exchange. There is the road mare par excellence Vida Wilkes 2:18½, perfect in every way; Bonnie Derby, as promising a mare as was ever foaled by Chas. Derby 2:20, out of Bon Bon 2:26, etc.; Phoenix 2:15½, a crackerjack pacer; besides these there are several very fast mares by Directum 2:05½, Lakeland Pilot, Robt. McGregor 2:17, Altamont 2:26 and imp. Sain all in foal to the greatest Direct stallion ever foaled, Bonnie Direct 2:05½. One mare however, Bonnie Derby, is in foal to McKinney 2:11½. Seekers after roadsters, fast trotting prospects and choice broodmares should attend this sale. The only reason they are being sold is Mr. Griffiths' business cares absorb too much of his time and it is with reluctance he is compelled to part with this choice collection. This is a sale which should be well attended. Wm. G. Layng the auctioneer will have catalogues issued Monday.

Los Angeles Meeting.

lotta, ridden by Juan Fuentz, easily outfooted Soubrette, ridden by Mr. Norton.

Ransch drew two fine finishes, one on El Pilar and the other on Morinel. In fact, it was Ransch's riding that landed El Pilar.

Golden Light showed a great burst of speed in the stretch in the six and a half furlong event and beat Malaspina out by a small margin. The summary:

First race, 2:25 trot; purse $500.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 21.

Manager J. W. Brooks has announced that the Los Angeles meeting will continue until November 1st, but after Saturday there will be no more harness racing.

The first race on Tuesday was the 2:16 class trot, and like several races held on the circuit this year it resulted in a battle between three of the get of McKinney. The race finally went to Lee Rose's gelding Zambra after Foxy Mac had reduced his record to 2:20½ in the first heat, and the second and third had gone to McKenna.

The running events were about the usual order, one lonely favorite managing to win and the bookmakers therefore having a good day. Summaries:

Trotting, 2:16 class, purse $500.

Running, six furlongs—Straggler won, Albert Enright second, Cowboy third. Del Vista and Sea Queen also ran. Time, 1:14.

Running, six furlongs, selling—Our Pride won, Anna Max second, Jim Gore II third. Nona B, Jennie Hughes, Quidado also ran. Time, 1:13¼.

Running, one mile—Flush of Gold won, Meehanus second, Lode star third. February and The Miller also ran. Time, 1:41.

Running, five furlongs—Montana Peeress won, Little Margaret second, Florinel II third. Fine Shot, Cora Goetz, Meteoro, El Karn, Pilon, Nullah, Hercules also ran. Time, 1:02.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 22.

A slight rain kept the attendance down to a small crowd at the track on Wednesday. But one harness race was on the card and this did not come off as three of the four entries were scratched. Cornelius D. walked over for the entrance money to be paid in. There were five rather ordinary running events, in which three favorites and two second choices were the winners, and in spite of this fact the books quit the day winner. Summaries:

Running, six furlongs—Valmar won, Nora D. second, Black Orphan third. Time—1:16. Talves, Black Laddie, Miss Jackson and Senator also ran.

Running, six furlongs—Claudator won, El Piloto second, Tibbs third. Time—1:14½. Little Secret, Temecuma, Black Thorn and Felicita S also ran.

Running, one mile—Pat Morrissey won, Halmetta second, Legal Maxim third. Time—1:42. General Cronje, Newgatherer and Dulcimer also ran.

Running, six furlongs—Warte Nicht won, Mimo second, Isabellita third. Time—1:14½. Dotterel and Tom Mitchell also ran.

Running, six and a half furlongs—Dolly Weithoff won, King Dellis second, Loyal S. third. Time—1:20½. Frank Pearce, Sea Queen and Quidado also ran.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 23.

If one should rely on the reports of the daily papers published in Los Angeles and San Francisco, the impression would prevail that the books were losing a barrel of money at Los Angeles. "The public took home the money" is one of the stereotyped expressions of the reporters, a majority of whom are on the pay roll of the association. But the regular track follower knows that the claim is absurd and that at least eighty per cent of the money played in the books at Los Angeles is kept by the bookmakers.

There seems to be an organized effort on the part of officials and the kept press representatives to discredit every harness race, and if a favorite among the trotters or pacers is beaten a howl goes up that can be heard all over the State, but everything goes in the running events no matter how rank they may look. There was a slim crowd at the Los Angeles track Thursday and the racing had no sensational features. Summaries:

First race, 2:25 class, pacing three in five.

Athlio, br g, by Junio-Athalie.....(Maben)	1	1	1
Enoch, b g, by Sidmore.....(Bunch)	2	2	2
Billie F.....(Sampson)	3	3	3

Time—2:14½, 2:16, 2:17½.

Second race, pacing, two in three.

Proctor, ch g.....(Deloray)	1	1
Elizabeth G.....(Redpath)	2	2

Pacing, to beat 2:17½—Richard B, b h, by Woolsey won. Time—2:16.

Running, five furlongs—Miss Calver won, Rottaire second, Idogo third. Time—1:02½. Dr. Short, Aluma, Del Vista and Great Mogul also ran.

Running, one mile—El Pilar won, El Fosse second, Legado third. Time—1:44½. Legal Maxim, Dexter Way and Altona also ran.

Running, five and a half furlongs—The Major won, Troy second, Senora Caesar third. Time—1:27½. Tompion, Nona B, Della Connors and Gypsy Boy also ran.

Memphis Results.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., October 21—The Memphis Driving Association's fall meeting was opened auspiciously here this afternoon with an attendance of 5000 people. Summary:

The Magnolia 2:11 trot, purse $2000—Fereza won the second and third heats in 2:07½, 2:08, Charley Mac won the first heat in 2:07½. Miss Whitney, Van Zant and Palm Leaf also started.

Pace, 2:08 class, purse $1000—Sir Albert S. won the second and fourth heats in 2:04½, 2:07½, Mervole won the first heat in 2:07½. Sphynx won the third heat in 2:07. Dandy Chimes, Prince Direct, Daisy Field, Larry Ginter, New Richmond and Baron Rogers also started.

Trot, 2:14 class, purse $1000—A. J. D. won two straight heats in 2:09½, 2:09½. Envader, Lady Constantina, Beldia, The Questor, Judge Cullen, Gold Standard, McKinley, Billy Foster Boy, Virginia Jim, El Milagro, Joy Maker, Roscoe Medium, Tony W. and Oxford Chimes also started.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., October 22.—A world's record was made at the Memphis trotting track this afternoon in the first race, a free-for-all pace to wagon, with amateur drivers. Edith W., driven by Frank G. Jones, of Memphis, and Fred S. Wedgewood, handled by C. K. G. Billings, of Chicago, were the contestants, the former winning both heats, each being paced in 2:05½. The judges announced that this was a new record for two heats for a mare. Summary:

Free-for-all pace to wagon, amateur drivers—Edith W. won two straight heats from Fred S. Wedgewood. Time, 2:05½, 2:05½.

Pace, 2:19 class, $2000, Sunny South Stake—Direct Hal won two straight heats in 2:08, 2:08½. Dr. Madera, Cousin Madge, Cubanola, Stranger, Cotillion and Miss Willamont also started.

The Dividend Stakes, 2:20 trot, purse $2000—Prince of Orange won two straight heats in 2:09, 2:10½. Dulce Cor Frances B. and Maxine also started.

Pace, 2:06 class, purse $1000—Fanny Dillard won the second and third heats in 2:06½, 2:06½. Dariel won the first heat in 2:05½. Little Squaw, Major Muscovite, Harry O., Lottie Smart, Riley B., William Mc. and Martha Marshall also started.

Trot, 2:11 class, to wagon, amateur drivers—Imogene won two straight heats in 2:11½, 2:12½, defeating Franker and Alice Barnes.

John A. McKerron, br h (Devereux), to beat 2:06½—Time by quarters, 0:32½, 1:04½, 1:35, 2:07.

The Monk, blk h (McCoy), to beat 2:05½—Time by quarters, 0:32½, 1:04½, 1:35½, 2:07½.

October 28.—Trotting, 2:15 class, three heats, first one mile, second one mile and an eighth and third half a mile, purse $6000—Major Delmar won three straight heats in 2:05½, 2:22½, 1:01. Monte Carlo, Chase and Nut Bearer also started.

Pacing, 2:18 class, purse $1000—Orin B. won two straight heats in 2:09½ and 2:10½. Harry D., Eleanor Hale, Dorothy Milton, Ross Mason, Hard Cash, Dark-way, Five Points, Ethel Mac, Irene S. and Perry K. also started.

Trotting, 2:20 class, purse $1000—Billy Foster Boy won two straight heats in 2:12½ and 2:13. Grace Boyd Lauretta, Clarita W., Juanita, Katie S. and Oneonta also started.

Pacing, to wagon, 2:10 class, amateur drivers—Gold Brick won two straight heats in 2:10½. Nickel B., Dr Monical, Frazier and Carlo M. also started.

Onward Silver to beat the world's two-mile trotting record of 4:29½ (Scott Hudson)—Time by quarters, 0:34½, 1:08½, 1:41½, 2:14½, 2:48½, 3:21½, 3:54½, 4:28½.

Crescens to beat the world's trotting record of 2:02½ (Ketcham)—Time, 2:04.

Another Fine Track for New York.

According to a New York paper, there is to be established in Jamaica Plains, L. I., a race track that shall surpass anything of its kind in the world. The ground, it is asserted, has been purchased for a combination of millionaire horse owners, including August Belmont, William Whitney and Thomas F. Hitchcock, Jr., and comprises a tract of 480 acres, the price paid being about $800 an acre. It is intended the American says, that the new track with its buildings and equipments shall be ready for racing by the time Morris Park passes out of existence as a racing course.

The Denver Horse Show Association has decided to go out of business and will be formally dissolved. The apathy of the public toward the shows which have been given by the Association in past years is the chief reason for the dissolution. The show this year was better patronized than any of the previous exhibitions but had it not been for the bronco busting contest it would have proven a great fizzle. The bronco busting feature enabled the Association to pay all its bills and left a balance in the treasury, so it is said. The Association has met with but little support from the persons on whom it relied. Much labor is involved in giving the show and it has been, to a large extent, a thankless task. It is quite evident that Denver is not quite ducky enough to support a bang-tail exhibition in which the costuming of the women in the boxes is reckoned of more importance than the equines. Denver Post and Enquirer.

FISH LINES.

Devotees of striped bass angling are now so numerous that each particular locality where the fish can be taken by rod and line has its coterie of frequenters who often make excursions to their favorite resorts.

Among the fishing waters nearest this city are Raccoon Straits and the angling grounds about Tiburon, Belvedere and Angel Island. The favorite trolling course over there seems to be off the fog bell, which is located on the western end of the island. Recently, one Wednesday morning, Al Wilson put out from Tiburon for the "fog bell course" and caught two striped bass, averaging about eight pounds apiece and also two "green cod" averaging about five pounds each. These fish were caught on a No. 7 spoon. The following morning Wilson was out from daylight until 10 o'clock without getting a strike. "Parson" Jackson and "Professor" McFarland in one boat and another boat containing three fishermen put in an appearance on the scene later. The boat containing the three fishermen on the second run over the course hooked and landed an eight-pound fish, an exemplification of "fisherman's luck" that was exasperating. These men then left and inside of an hour the "Parson" landed an eleven pounder. Wilson still had his first fish to get. During all this time the boats were trolling along close together and in unison. The "Parson" finally went around the bell point and in a short time hooked a nine and a half pound "green cod."

The boats next tried the waters west of Belvedere Island. The day was calm and a neap tide with but a small rise enabled the anglers to try bait fishing while drifting. Here Wilson caught his first fish, a striped bass about five pounds in weight that from its appearance, at one time had its back broken it was so deformed and crooked in shape.

Frank Marcus hooked a twelve pound leopard shark and landed the fish, assisted by the sarcastic suggestions offered by his amused brother anglers.

The waters off the Alameda shore near Sunny Cove baths have been full of striped bass for over a week. The fish have been running in immense schools, jumping and rolling along in the tideways and close to shore. C. R. Bond and George Mastes have caught several large fish there during the week.

Striped bass have also been caught from the rocks of the narrow gauge mole and from the estuary sea wall. Last week C. R. Bond caught a twenty and a five pound bass from the railroad mole. Clams and chicken entrails were the baits used.

Green cod is a fish belonging to the same group as the rock fish, capazoni, etc., and is a delicious fish for the table. The taking of these fish with the trolling spoon marks the possible development of another form of bay fishing that was not dreamed of while the drop line only was used. The fish do not put up a very lively fight, but just give resistance enough to make one careful in handling them with light tackle.

The possibilities of sport in Lake Merritt are gone over by a well known angler who speaks as follows of bass fishing in that water:

Angling for striped bass this season in Lake Merritt has not been up to the standard of past years, still the fish are being caught in fairly good numbers from the lake at the present time. One well known angler, James Watt, has taken out of the lake so far this season over 375 pounds. Other sportsmen have done equally as well, and it is claimed a number of other fishermen have doubled that catch. In the early part of the year the cry was that fish taken in Lake Merritt were not wholesome, which, to a certain extent, had some merit of truth, the cause being that the fish then in the lake had undoubtedly come up in the fall of the previous year for the purpose of spawning, and it is believed were more or less sluggish and could hardly be as bright and sweet as those taken fresh run from the ocean. That these fish were in the lake during all winter is borne out by the fact that not a single bass was taken by any fisherman in the estuary, or at the approach to the lake, nor in fact anywhere else. When the spring runs start about the end of March, of course new fish get into the lake, which is shown by the number of small fish caught weighing from one to three pounds, whereas in January and February a fish was seldom taken less than eight pounds and were mostly from twelve to fifteen pounds. Naturally there are certain seasons when they are not fit to eat, as is the case with steelhead or salmon. Bass taken during that time, which should be the close season, but unfortunately is not, accounts for the erroneous idea that bass caught in Lake Merritt are unfit to eat.

Fishing from the shore is truly "the poor man's sport" and fishing from a boat unless you own one or get your friends' is only for the rich, and they even kick at the exorbitant prices asked. If the boatman was a business man and had a few more skiffs not so elaborately polished and finished and rented them for a reasonable sum per day, he would coin money, but as it is at present the average sportsman does not fee like purchasing a boat every time he goes "a-fishin'." Anglers are at all times liberal when good sport is to be had, but even then, as in the case of Lake Merritt, they feel that they are paying much more than the usual rates in similar localities where bass are taken.

It is a pleasant thing for the angler to contemplate when, for the moderate fare of 20 cents, he can within an hour after leaving his home or office be indulging in his favorite recreation, fishing on a beautiful sheet of water, where the gamey striped bass are plentiful, and at this particular time put up a lively fight, which is indicative of conditions acquired outside of the Golden Gate—for fresh run fish from the ocean are known by unmistakable signs.

At high water the boats line up on either side of the lake flood gates and as the tide sweeps in the bass cannot possibly fail to see the hundred and one clams in front of them, their voracious appetites being whetted by their run from the ocean they greedily gorge the bait thrust before them by thirty or forty fishermen who use two or three clams on each line. But the true sport for bass in this lake has become quite a science. An old experienced bass fisherman adopts the following plan: Upon leaving home for the lake he visits the first bakery open (he is an early riser), and purchases a dozen or so of doughnuts. Soon after leaving the boat landing he carefully drops a trail of doughnut crumbs as he quietly rows for his favorite spot near Adam's Point. The doughnuts have the effect of drawing around the boat schools upon schools of silver smelt who stay as long as the doughnuts last, during which time the anglers have not been idle. Their tackle is now ready and they cast out a juicy clam attached to a float of large dimensions. The smelt are ready for something nice in the shape of food and keep circling around the new lure. The bass notice the commotion, visit the spot with a rush, scatter the smelt and dart at the clam. If there is not too much slack on the line the fishermen are able to strike the fish and bury the hook well in and the bass is theirs, but this is by no means easy and the boys are open for information on this point, viz., how to hook a bass when fishing with a clam suspended three feet from a float and distant from the boat thirty feet, with currents, etc., if any, unknown. These conditions in float fishing have been such as to puzzle many of the fraternity to devise the proper plans to overcome them.

Striped bass are still to be found in San Antonio slough, among them some big fellows. Last Saturday A. M. Cumming hooked on to a hefty fish that after a lively fight carried away his tackle, breaking loose the agate ring guide and parting the line in the struggle. This fish jumped twice full length and possibly two feet out of the water in his strenuous efforts to get clear of the hook. This leaping feature is a somewhat unusual episode and adds another link to the chain of unexpected performances indulged in by the fish and coming under the observation of various anglers from time to time. All of which goes to show that our salt water fishing is still in its infancy in San Francisco bay and vicinity.

Prior to Mr. Cumming's arrival at the Anglers Club, three other fishermen had fished the previous day without any results whatever. On Friday afternoon he caught 5 fish that weighed 21 pounds, the largest scaling 9 pounds. On Saturday he hooked 11 fish that weighed altogether 80 pounds—5 of these run up to 58 pounds; 8 of the 16 fish caught were taken on a spoon, the others were caught on clams.

A curious development in striped bass fishing is the frequent taking of bass that are deformed or maimed and which have survived the wounds which caused the deformities or have grown up cripples from various causes. The latest take in this respect was a six pound fish caught in Midshipman slough by Jules Bruns. The fish, with the exception of the whole upper jaw in front of the eyes, was a fine specimen. Its deformity consisted in a blunt and short upper jaw, in fact the similarity, by comparison, was suggestive of a bull dog or pug dog face. The under jaw was so much ejongated and the upper jaw so short that the fish could not close its mouth. How the fish could exist and grow, being so evidently handicapped in its food getting capacity, was a feature curious in the extreme.

A striped bass weighing 32 pounds and measuring 46 inches in length was taken on a handline by an angler fishing from the Alameda mole last Saturday. On Sunday among other fish caught by rod and line were two bass weighing respectively 17 and 12 pounds.

The angling frequenters of Lake Merritt have organized a club. One pleasant result already accomplished by the combine, is that the price for the hire of row boats on the lake has been reduced to a reasonable figure. Fishermen can now procure boats for trolling without buying them. This move will result in mutual satisfaction and profit to both the boatman and the sportsmen.

Bass are still being taken with happy frequency in Lake Merritt. James Watt hooked a 4 pound fish last Saturday, using an 8 inch smelt for bait.

About 100 handlines were in use on the Alameda mole last Sunday. Most of the fishermen were of the genus "Dago." A few bass were taken and quite a number were lost from the hooks while the fish were being dragged from the water up and over the rocks to the fisherman. This is indicative that the bass are going into the Oakland estuary again.

Annual fishing prizes have been awarded to members of the Tuna Club at Catalina Island, as follows:

For the first tuna of the season, weight 150 pounds, silver-mounted rod; Frank C. Winter, Los Angeles.

For second largest tuna, there is a tie between F. C. Winter and R. F. Stocking, at 150 pounds. The prize is a silver-mounted rod.

For smallest tuna, the booby prize goes to Col. John E. Stearns of Los Angeles, a line dryer. His booby fish weighed 65 pounds. Col. Stearns gets also a silver-mounted rod for the first tuna of the year, caught out of season, March 11. The largest taken during the year, weighing 197 pounds.

For largest black sea bass, 419 pounds, the world's record for rod and reel fishing, H. T. Kendall of Pasadena is awarded the Tufts-Lyon silver cup, the Rider-Macomber gold medal, and a silver-mounted rod.

The booby prize in this class belongs to Artemas

White sea bass—First prize, R. F. Stocking, Los Angeles, silver-mounted rod; weight 45 pounds. Second prize—Miss Florence Haas of San Francisco, a gaff; weight 41½ pounds.

Yellowtail—First prize, Dr. G. H. Trowbridge, Fresno, John F. Francis gold medal and silver-mounted rod; weight 47½ pounds. Second—William A. Rothwell, Moberly, Mo., weight 47 pounds.

Gen. A. W. Barrett, president of the Tuna Club, offered a special prize of a silver-mounted reel to the lady taking the largest yellowtail, which goes to Mrs. John E. Stearns of Los Angeles; weight, 36½ pounds.

Abicore—First, Ernest Fallon, Avalon, silver-mounted rod; weight 35½ pounds.

Bonita—Fred C. New of Denver, line dryer; weight, 24 pounds.

Sheepshead—John E. Stearns, Los Angeles, angler's pipe, weight 28 pounds.

Whitefish—John E. Stearns, gaff, weight, 7 pounds.

The boatman's prize for first tuna of the season, a silver-mounted rod, was won by Harry Elms.

Harry C. Golcher, last Saturday at Stow lake, lowered the colors of Champion long distance caster Walter D. Mansfield. Mr. Golcher put out his line the almost incredible distance of 140 feet, beating Mr. Mansfield's record by about six feet, we believe.

The steelhead anglers were awaiting rain. After the first freshet the fish will run up the coast streams from the ocean seeking spawning grounds. In some streams, Eel river and the Garcia, small fish have been taken. The big fellows, however, will not make their appearance until after the rains. Eel river this fall has been rather disappointing so far, the best fishing having been found in the Garcia.

AT THE TRAPS.

Many sportsmen were at San Bernardino on the afternoon of the 12th at the grounds of the San Bernardino Gun Club to witness the shoot between Gus Knight, of San Bernardino, and D. D. McDonald, better known among the sportsmen as "Pumpgun" McDonald. The purse was $100. Some time ago McDonald issued a sweeping challenge to all Southern California for a match shoot for $100. Gus Knight no sooner heard of the challenge than he accepted. The men arranged to shoot fifty live birds each. Each killed forty-two birds and the balance went out of bounds. Immediately another match was arranged and the purse was increased to $150. It was decided to shoot at twenty-five birds in this second attempt to settle the supremacy between the two men. McDonald killed twenty-four birds, but one went out of bounds. Knight killed twenty-five birds and one fell out of bounds, and the San Bernardino man was declared the winner. Immediately at the conclusion of the contest another match was arranged to take place at Santa Ana on the 17th inst. There were three shooters entered for this contest and more were expected before the day of the shoot. Those who have entered are Gus Knight, D. D. McDonald, of Prescott, Ariz., and J. E. Vaughn, of Santa Ana. The entrance to the shoot will be $100 and thus the purse has already reached the sum of $300. Each man will shoot at one hundred birds.

Advices from Los Angeles state that Gus Knight and his old screw stocked 10-12 gauge howitzer was too stiff a combination for "Pump Gun" McDonald and "Cock Feathers" Ed Vaughan on the 17th inst. at Santa Ana. They shot 100 live birds apiece for $100 a side in the ball park and Knight scored 94. Vaughan got 89 and McDonald quit in disgust on his last string of 25, being hopelessly beaten.

The birds were a strong picked lot of Orange county screamers and Ed Vaughan got rather more than his share of the dark blue twisters. Knight and his old brass shells were getting them anywhere in the field, and according to Vaughan nobody with a 12-gauge gun has any business attacking the combination.

San Francisco Kennel Club.

The San Francisco Kennel Club has been reorganized. The newly elected officers are W. C. Ralston, President; J. E. de Ruyter, Vice-President; Chas. K. Harley, Secretary-Treasurer, and W. S. Kittle and E. Courtney Ford, Directors.

Mr. Harley requests us to state that every obligation, if any now, of the club will be promptly discharged upon receipt by him, at his office, No. 844 Harrison street, this city, of a communication from each and every exhibitor or others who have not received medals, prizes, etc., to which they are entitled.

Cash prizes for the late show have been paid up on request and in every case where the address of those entitled to the same was known a check was mailed.

The reason for the recent delay was partly contributory, a number of those interested were dilatory in responding to the repeated advertised notices of the club to make early application for settlement.

The club is strong financially and composed of a number of leading and enthusiastic fanciers who are determined and willing to take the initiative in all matters pertaining to the advancement of the Coast fancy.

Past history of the club is replete with setbacks and several entangling episodes that should not reflect upon the motives or actions of the club members themselves. Criticism should be applied to the deputized executive influences, which we regret to state have undoubtedly, at times, taken advantage of positions gained by plausibility and grandiloquent promises which were given on no other foundation than a desire for personal gain. The club members themselves were the greater losers by their readiness to accept the offices of alleged talent in doggy affairs. Inexperience in executive affairs and details and a willingness to foster dogdom was pitted against experience and craft.

How Far Does a Dog Run in a Day?

(MORRIS GIBBS, M. D., Special Correspondent.)

Sportsmen do not often stop to think how far their dogs travel in a day, and it not infrequently happens that animals are over worked when in the field. Dogs are often forced to do too much work in very rough country and many green dogs are just about ruined by over exertion during the first week's hunt of the season. There are many hunters who favor themselves but do not have the humanity to save their faithful companions. Then again there are some, and much fewer in number than the last spoken of class, who endeavor to save their dogs and sometimes exert themselves beyond their capacity in an endeavor to relieve their canine assistants. The distance that a dog covers in a day's trip in wood and field is often quite remarkable and it is interesting to record the miles traveled when it is possible to do so.

Of course you have all noticed how a dog zig-zags all over the country when on a trip with his master. First he runs ahead to scare the chickens out of the road, then he returns to us to receive our approval, or possible condemnation, and then starts on a tour of investigation in a neighboring orchard. After this he interviews a neighboring canine; barks, growls, sniffs, scratches, leaps, fawns, and at last gets acquainted and wags his tail. Next, when we have passed the country dog's residence, ours leaps the fence for, say, the fiftieth time, and takes a dash through the woods, only returning to again start on a run through the marshy tract at the side of the road. During the entire day he is on the move, and only gives over when the trip is finished. He investigates everything, and takes as much interest as a boy on his first summer holiday, and there is no doubt in my mind but that he enjoys an excursion of this nature as much as any person, either hunter or ordinary stroller, possibly could. And you will please to notice that he does not wish to make trouble. Chasing chickens is sport for him, and the extra effrontery he assumes when in the presence of the road-side dog is nothing more than a bluff, and means no more than the noise made by boys when they meet on the road to school.

But if you think that a dog ranges over a good deal of country in a walk through wood and field, you should see him in company with a good fast team to really learn of his ability to stand hard jaunts, or you should see a dog run singly or in company with a pack after a fox in a rough section where everything is in favor of the pursued.

Two of us started in a carriage and my friend's dog Jimmy accompanied us. It was in the month of July and we started at 4 A. M. We drove direct to a point eighteen miles distant, where we changed horses and then drove thirteen miles further. After transacting our business, we returned to our first stopping place and dinner, and then took the morning's team and came home; all told, a trip of sixty-two miles for us. On this trip, Jimmy, a red Irish Setter, ran the whole distance; climbed or leaped the fences a hundred times or more, and investigated everything; got acquainted with over a score of dogs, bathed in a dozen brooks and twice that number of mud holes, and chased cats, chipmunks and chickens every mile of the route and was full of spirits at all times. When we were resting in the village he could not be kept quiet, but ran about the streets, only taking a short nap after dinner. Several times we tried to hold him in the carriage, but he always broke away and seemed to prefer running to riding.

It was a very warm day, and the horses suffered from the heat, yet the dog seemed to stand it perfectly, and at the end of the trip, after running at least one hundred miles, was apparently fresh and gamboled about his master as if about to start on a trip.

It is safe to say that this Irish Setter traveled as much as three miles to our two and probably more than this and on a hot summer day. If this animal could perform this feat without showing any discomfort with the mercury at 90 degrees it seemed quite fair to say that the dog would make at least one hundred and fifty miles with the conditions just right.

A friend of mine who was returning from the races and who had his pet Bull Terrier in the box car with him, saw the dog fall from the open door at the side of the railroad when the freight train was in full motion. This was at a point seventy miles from home and of course he never expected to see his dog again. Judge of his surprise when in less than thirty-six hours the dog walked into the home town apparently as good as ever and with only a scratch on the side of his head, which he had probably received in his fall from the train. This dog had never been over the route before and was guided home by his sense of direction entirely. It is quite likely that the dog did not zig-zag much in his trip home and it is reasonable to suppose that he did not stop to pick up many acquaintances on the way; nevertheless, it is an interesting point in dogdom that a Bull Terrier could make so long a trip in so short a time and over an unknown route.

Among certain people there is a strong idea that nothing is worse for dogs than salt, but as a matter of fact, when administered in small quantities, it materially assists the process of digestion. There is no doubt, however, that to give dogs or any other animals broth or pot-liquor in which salt pork or bacon has been boiled would be almost equivalent to giving them a small dose of poison. The use of salt among horses, cattle and sheep is advocated by the highest veterinary authorities. Pigs, on the contrary, are extremely susceptible to the poisonous influence of the agent, and experiments have been made which had, after small doses regularly administered, fatal results. Habitually, as a matter of course, all animals consume a certain portion of salt, as it exists in certain proportions in most articles of food.

The Fox Terrier.

[BY G. L. WARING.]

The most important part of a dog is its ears. This does not seem quite right, because a dog has only two ears and four legs; but any dog show man who has any time for reflection will realize that most dogs that do not possess ears of the right type are out of it. Imagine a Collie or a Fox Terrier with prick ears. Yet a Chow, a Scottish Terrier, a Pomeranian and others, must have ears at full cock; a Collie has ears at half cock (a hard position to fill); and an Irish Terrier, Welsh Terrier or a Fox Terrier must always have his ears at "safety."

Irish Terriers used to have their ears cut, and then they knew where they were. But now they have to drop them like a Fox Terrier and they haven't yet found out where they are. Bull Terriers with their ears on look thoroughly ashamed of themselves and seem to be undecided whether they are Pointers or not; and Great Danes, if not cropped, look boundy, though this does not matter much in California, as most of them have boundy heads anyway. One characteristic of the good Great Dane is his peculiar head, thick right to the muzzle and blunt at the nose. This all tends to show how important ears are; some must be up and some must be down and some, like the Duke of York's 10,000 men, must be "neither up nor down;" and the fact remains that a dog with really bad ears cannot win. Ears are—or is—a "sine qua non." In a Fox Terrier they may be a little large, but they must be carried correctly.

After ears (seemingly insignificant, but on reflection, important) comes quality. Quality is very hard to define: You can see it in a cart horse, a harness horse, and a thoroughbred, and it is different in each; but in horses I imagine it all traces to the thoroughbred, because trotters seldom have it unless they have a strong strain of thoroughbred. But in dogs it is different, because they cannot all trace to a thoroughbred ancestry. Quality might be called "style" or "type," but it isn't quite style for a "showy," "corky" dog might be "stilty" and "jumped up;" and "type" has changed so often that it is evanescent. When I first remember Fox Terriers they were round-bodied, short-headed and spindle-shanked, and of such a sort was the celebrated "Old Jock." But I suppose "quality" was "quality," even then, but of a different kind from what we demand now. There was no coat then, but now we must have hair. If one could put "quality" into commonplace exact terms I should say, with Fox Terriers, it depended more than anything on a short back, sloping shoulders—which give a good carriage of head—and a long neck. Also a good head—you cannot get away from a good head however good a judge you are. A good head "will cover a multitude of sins." Legs and feet ought to be good, of course (and a wide chest is unpardonable), but legs and feet won't—on their own recognizances—carry a dog through, though practically they ought to.

A long back and pipe-stem tail, especially if combined with a very smooth coat—which generally happens—is what I "cannot abide." As to size, though I have confessed, a prejudice in favor of dogs about twenty pounds weight or under, there is no reasonable ground why Fox Terriers should not be large. Fox Terriers were originally supposed to bolt foxes and therefore had to be small to get into the earth. Twenty years or so ago when I was young—I mean, younger—I hunted with the Glamorgan-shire, Lord Tredegar's, the South Notts, and Mr. Tailby's, and I only saw a Fox Terrier go to ground once in many years. At any rate now they are not used for that purpose, but simply as companions or to occasionally kill rats—at which they are not proficient—and I see no reason why they should not be as large as they like to be.

It is easier to get a good little horse, or a good little man (I am told that all women, big or little, are good, but hard to get), than a good big one, but it is much easier to get a good big Fox Terrier than a good little one. (Per passim in the big breeds of dogs good small ones come oftenest.)

I wonder if it has struck many judges of live stock that the horse is the only animal (including cats, tigers, lions, hyenas, etc.) that ought to have a small head.

Certainly men with "big heads" are objectionable, but they are the only animals that I can think of that resemble the horse in that respect, except perhaps the jackass, and I am not sure of that.

To sum up, a Fox Terrier should have a good "outlook," which means that his ears must be properly carried, that his head must be even (not pinched below the eyes), and long (not necessarily greyhoundish); his eye must be small, dark and piercing; his chest must be moderately narrow (not necessarily having his two legs coming out of one hole); his legs must be straight; he must have a good outline, which means he must have a short back; sloping shoulders, a long neck, head carried high, straight legs with good bone, round feet; tail carried gaily, but not curled over his back too much; a good stiff coat, mostly on his back (generally plucked out of his neck to make it look finer).

Also he should be a good shower, which means that he should stand on his toes and have a tendency to growl at other dogs.

All this equally applies to "her," though "she" generally is longer in the back than "he" ought to be, and is not so long-headed as "she" might be.

Many people show Fox Terriers too fat. This makes their heads look small in proportion.

Charles Dresser disposed of J. A. Martin's puppy winner Golden West (Ch. Niola Daddy-Golden Sunshine) to a Los Angeles fancier. This puppy, although having a bit too much air under him, is a good one. He shows Champion Daddy in a very marked manner. This Fox Terrier has a faculty of transferring quality and character to his progeny that is very pronounced.

The Los Angeles Show.

The show given by the Sixth District Agricultural Association last week was somewhat disappointing in numbers; the entries were 131, dogs benched 84, of these one-half were from San Francisco principally. The weather was excellent and the show was undoubtedly one of the attractions of the Fair, the canvas covered pavilion being well patronized by visitors each day. The apathy of the Los Angeles fanciers is responsible for a small local entry. The officers of the association and show were E. T. Wright, President; F. G. Teed, Secretary. Directors—S. N. Andrews, Clarence E. De Camp, K. Cohn, G. B. Barham, E. T. Wright, N. A. Covarrubias and M. C. Marsh. Bench Show Committee—Messrs. Marsh, De Camp and Barham. Judges—S. Tyler, of Pasadena, large breeds. J. X. De Witt, Hounds, Setters and Pointers. James Lamb, Greyhounds. G. L. Waring, of Santa Monica, Fox Terriers. All other breeds, John Bradshaw, of San Francisco. Veterinary Surgeon, Dr. J. A. Edmonds; Superintendent, John Bradshaw; Ring Steward, J. L. Eigholz. Spratts' Patent benched and fed and were represented by Mr. Thomas Banks, who helped materially in having a smoothly run show. Among the visitors from other points were Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Albee, Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Plume, Mr. J. H. Dorian, Thomas Blight, Chas. Dresser, J. Niehaus, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Brown, of Riverside; Mr. and Mrs. C. E. McStay of Santa Monica and others. The fact that the show was determined on so short a time before the dates claimed also militated against a larger entry. A review of the dogs benched and judging follows:

Mastiffs—One dog entered, and, as usual at a Coast show, lacking in Mastiff type and quality. Prince, however, has a better head than the general run of dogs shown here. He is a large bodied and rather a lanky dog, but sound for his size. St. Bernards showed up rather a fair sprinkling in quality and style considering that this is the time of year not favorable to heavy coated dogs showing in full bloom. The class of the entries was Grand Master II., who rightly took the tri-color and also blue in open and limit. He is a very sound big fellow and shows plenty of quality; barring his slight lack of markings he will go in any company. King, second to Grand Master in limit and open, was not in best condition; he could be better in loins and hind legs. Prince Royal, first puppies and reserve winners, has a fair head, a bit narrow in muzzle, was shown in poor coat, is well boned, somewhat low in shoulders, but withal a dog showing a lot of quality. In bitches Gypsy Lee II. won out. She is a good bitch and will improve. Nairod Marian is a very promising puppy. In smooths, Duke Russell was shown in better condition than when we saw him in April. He shows plenty of quality and is a well developed sound big dog.

Great Danes resulted in a walkover for the well known Blue Beard. Tempest was in fine condition and is much improved. Zambra, a harlequin, was a young puppy, good but undeveloped.

Greyhounds were but ordinary, The Rabbi being the best of three shown. Old Gladiator, a well known dog to leashmen, has a temper as black as his coat.

Among Foxhounds, Irish Water Spaniels and Field Spaniels, there was not a dog worthy of mention saving the Foxhound bitch Lizzie, second limit. She is a very good specimen, more on the English type than American, but was shown in execrable condition just after whelping. The Bloodhounds, so called, were a lot of mongrels. They were given credit for being a lot of well-trained trailing and hunting dogs, but aside from this they had no business in the ring. The award made was merely for best kennel, given to grown and developed dogs over puppies, bad as the lot was.

In bird dogs the entry was not up to what it could have been. At this time of the year, however, it is hard work to have a Pointer or Setter in show form, besides most of the dogs are in demand for field duties. The work cut out for us in Pointers was easy. First open went to Phoebe, a lemon and white one rather coarse in head but a well built, strong boned, fairly good looking Pointer.

English Setters brought a rather stylish, handsome looking one, Dolly Gray, to the front. She is just about right in size, has a neat and well turned head and showed much quality. Ruby III. is rather an undersized orange and white bitch of but ordinary style and character. In Irish Setters the competition was a bit interesting, so far as a class of dogs of good average merit and where a certain dog lacked in one thing and beat the other in another point can make a contest. Mack first, Colonel second, are both a bit large and coarse; the general difference between them was but slight, but enough to make the Colonel's owner hot in the collar when his dog was beaten. Queen Mc, first open and winners, has more type and quality than her condition showed; she has a rare good head and won out more on pronounced quality than condition; the same may be said of her daughter, Gypsy Queen. Lady Lucy was shown in tip top condition, had a rich color, but was rather rough in coat. Her head was coarser than we like in the breed and brought her a second, which was so much appreciated by her handler that Spratts' beautiful illuminated award card was thrown on the ground.

As this was our debut in the judging ring the incident was regarded with innatesatisfaction and received with a zest that prompted us to offer another second card in open to the disgruntled dog gent. The tender was accompanied with a bland smile and a polite request to tear up the card and swear. This was complied with in part, again to our serene satisfaction, although we are extremely sorry that the episode transpired outside of the ring. We feel that we missed something. By the way, this incident, and the weighing of Bull Terrier bitches by a rival contestant who brought his own pocket scales and had two other dogs disqualified, were about the only things which happened that stirred up the even and smooth course of events at the show.

Cocker Spaniels few in number were strong in quality. Hampton Promise first open and winners in black dogs was turned out in fine shape and condition easily winning over Black Silk II a handsome and showy dog too. In bitches, Plumeria Portia, looked upon by many as about the best black bitch on the Coast handily won first open and winners. Imp, first limit and reserve winners is a nice sort with good body and looks just a trifle long in muzzle. Beautiful Bells, first puppies, is a fair little bitch, well proportioned but has too short a coat. Honey second puppies aside from a long snipey muzzle, shows good substance in body and bone.

In colors, Little Dorrit led the female procession and won well in her classes, ahead by far of the other bitches, barring the black winner. Lorita, reserve winners, first novice, third limit and second open, a bit too high in the legs.

Plumeria Mignone, second limit is a fair little one but is somewhat lacking in substance. In dogs Hampton Goldie a well known shower, now A. K. C. Champion, was in good shape and won easily. Plumeria Beau II is a fair and even sort of dog, but seemed to be out of shape and had a glaring coat. Judge Bradshaw handled his classes well, his awards being accepted without dissent.

Collies brought out Ch. Ormskirk Emerald, Jr., and two good puppies. The class of four were up to the average of high class and quality always shown by Oak Grove Kennels.

In Bulldogs, Endcliffe Pleasure had a walkover. Beau Brummel has an excellent head, a good looking body, is light fawn colored with a reddish brown mask, an odd colored dog by all means; he could be a bit shorter in legs. Duke was shown behind a screen, where he should have been kept when the judging was on. He is more of a Bull Terrier than Bulldog.

Bull Terriers brought out a good young one in Woodlawn Flashlight. He has a Woodcote Wonder head that is unusually good and set off to advantage by a pair of excellently cropped ears. He shows indications of body and bone development that, if it holds good, will turn out a remarkably high class dog. Wonder's Evidence is a bitch with good length of head, plenty of substance, character and quality. Lady Smith was fortunate, in limit and open; her two competitors were found over weight; she would have been beaten easily.

Fox Terriers were judged by Mr. George L. Waring, who knows the breed and whose decisions were accepted without dissent. By reason of the non-appearance of Wandee Kennels entries (which were not accepted on account of suspension of certain members of the S. F. Kennel Club by the A. K. C.) there was not an overly keen competition. Baby Elvet was easily the leader of the sprightly ones. He was in good fettle, is a nice headed dog with an excellent coat, is good all round in body, legs, feet and bone and has character, substance and quality. Woodlawn Two Spot, a well known youngster easily beat Forest Flash all over, who has developed something of a dewlap, is throaty, rather snipey muzzled and does not carry out the promises of his youth. Kitchener is a stylish dog, with a fair coat, his serious fault is a thick skull. Golden West is a Daddy puppy all over in character and quality, but is bit too long in the legs.

In bitches a new one, recently from the East, was shown in Mill Stream. She seems to be the right type and is about the longest headed one we have yet seen shown here so far. She is racy and clean built, good trim shoulders, classy legs and feet and a good hard coat laid on in the proper place and manner, she won easily over Vina Belle, another well known, all sound good bitch turned out in excellent shape. Cairnsmuir Favour, shown in fine condition, gone a bit wide, but much improved over last year. A bitch whose progeny should do well, she is bred right and should do something in the proper swing when served by the right dog. Powhattan Queen, bad in ear carriage with a light eye and slightly thick shoulders, could do a pretty good race withal. Awards in puppies and second novice bitches were rightfully withheld. Trixie is a Fox Terrier of the pet dog variety, a good natured little dog for a lady's pet only. Vina Belmont, a new one by Daddy out of Vina Belle, was sick and absent. Taking the Fox Terriers as a whole the exhibit was a very good one.

Two Irish Terriers of more than average worth were benched; Irish, although a trifle longcast in body and bit loose in ear is a better dog than usually seen. His coat is right and far better than anything we have had here for some time. Lady Power, by the same sire and out of Virginia F., is a handy, well proportioned bitch, just a little smaller than we like them. The excellent Toy Pom Eno, a good Jap in Inglenook Zaza and two good French Poodles, Jim Jeffries and Beauty, made up in quality what was lacking in numbers for toys and the small breeds.

THE FARM.

The Heifers.

It is generally recognized among good dairymen that the dairyman who has not a capital beyond the actual needs of his farming business can most cheaply and profitably replenish or increase his dairy by raising his own cows rather than by buying them. There are many men who claim they can tell a good cow by the looks and feel of her, but as a matter of fact very few actually can. Usually those who have this good opinion of their judgment are willing to back the opinion and judgment with their cash, and continue buying cows; but, as I have said, the more modest dairyman considers he is safer if he raises his cows from calves of his best cows crossed by a superior bull pure in the blood of the dairy breed he prefers. The sire should be good and be from a good cow, with as many good cows in his pedigree as possible. With such a sire the dairyman who has a well-established herd, that he has selected and built up by good feeding, the milk-scales and Babcock test, will find it good business policy to raise all his heifer calves to cowhood, and keep up the process of selection and rejection. Some will be so manifestly bad with their first calves that they need no further probation. Others will not be absolutely condemned until the second or third calf. It must be a matter for the individual dairyman to decide what he shall do with the rejections from his herd—send them to the butcher or sell them to the dealer who makes it his business to sell cows to the fellows who don't raise them. The cows may not be good enough for the exacting producer of them, who may have his standard fixed much higher than the man has who is the patron of the dealer. If the breeding dairyman has a herd of registered animals, and intends to make commercial breeding part of his business, he should by all means send his rejected animals to the block; for unless a registered animal carries with it, in addition to its pedigree, individual and inherited excellencies, it remains a standing discount to him as a breeder and his herd as representing the pure blood of its breed.

It is very little in the future cow's usefulness that she be merely well fed. She shall not only be well fed as a calf, but on up until she becomes a cow, and then on in her life forever. It is a pernicious doctrine that some teachers advance, and one that at once proves their lack of knowledge of what they teach, that the heifer shall not be well fed for fear she grows too rapidly and gets fat. I recently read where one such teacher warned against feeding the heifer heavily before parturition, lest she be taken with milk-fever, previous to the critical time of their becoming fresh, but my heifers I have eat all they will for two or three months before they become cows. If the heifers are of dairy families and dairy type I never yet had one get too fat for me. Upon two occasions, however, when I was yet a very young and a very wise breeder, I almost made the mistake of discarding heifers that got quite fleshy and beefy-looking, and to-day they have a record of being among the best cows I ever owned.

About Handling Hides.

"Don't ship hides with from ten to forty pounds salt in them. It will cost you double freight. Don't buy green hides and salt cure them and expect pay for green weight. They will shrink from 20 to 25 per cent in curing. Don't expect cured prices for a green or half-cured hide. A cured hide will have shrunk 20 to 25 per cent from green weight, and when the dealer pays cured price it is on the basis that the hide or hides have shrunk from green weight, at least 20 per cent. Don't buy a hide without opening it and knowing what you are buying. They often contain salt, meat, mud, which must be removed. Hides are bought to be made into leather and anything you would not be willing to buy for leather should be removed. Don't buy hides with from three to twenty pounds meat, sinews, tailbones, horns, and sometimes skull bones in them and ship them so, expecting to find someone as 'easy' as yourself. You may get left. Hides are now trimmed closer than for years on account of high price. Don't ship hides poorly tied or without your full name on tag. Some only sign their initials on tag. This tag is often all the dealer has to make returns from. Every shipper who does not sign his full name and address on shipping tag is liable to have trouble. Don't make up your mind that you will teach the hide dealer how to run his business before you have bought one dozen hides. The hide dealer to whom you ship will always do the best he can for you, as without your trade he could not survive. Hides well bought are half sold. Don't ship green salt-cured hides after you have cleaned off all the salt and expect to get pay for more than ninety-six pounds on every 100 pounds you ship. Hides well cured with hair reasonably dry will shrink 4 per cent in transit and handling, and if they are wet and contain a surplus of salt, meat, tailbones, etc., they will shrink over 4 per cent, according to amount of such surplus material."—J. C. Smith in Breeders Gazette.

Of Value to Horsemen.

Do you turn your horses out for the winter? If so, we want to call your attention to a very important matter. Horses which have been used steadily at work, either on the farm or road, have quite likely had some strains whereby lameness or enlargements have been caused. Or perhaps new life is needed to be infused into their legs. Gombault's Caustic Balsam applied as per direction, just as you are turning the horse out, will be of great benefit; and this is the time when it can be used very successfully. One great advantage in using this remedy is that after it is applied it needs no care or attention, but does its work well and at a time when the horse is having a rest. Of course, it can be used with equal success while horses are in the stable, but many people in turning their horses out would use Caustic Balsam if they were reminded of it, and this article is given as a reminder.

That the feed has its effects upon the beef is well illustrated by the communication of an Illinois feeder to the Indiana Farmer. He said that when at the Chicago Stock Yards with a load of steers he met another man who had also a carload that looked as fine as his. They both sold to packers the same morning. The writer sold his at $8 per hundredweight and the other received only $6.25. Both lots were grade Shorthorns, a little more than two years old. He had fed his on corn, stover, clover hay, cowpea hay and wheat bran. The other had fed only corn and stover. The expert buyer said the other man's cattle were very good, but they were deficient in the thick loin beef which his had, which made his beef more valuable. In this case it was not "half in the breed and half in the feed," but all in the feed. The cowpea hay, clover hay and wheat bran were richer in protein than corn and stover.

A new kind of wire stretcher can be made by the employment of a piece of iron about the size of an old horse power tumbling rod, six feet long; a piece of gas pipe, four feet long, a crowbar and a chain. The iron rod is driven in the ground to a safe depth, in line with the fence and guyed with two chains, attached to stakes, or another post, if possible with the piece of gas pipe passed over it to use as a windlass. The piece of chain should have a link on one end large enough for the crowbar to pass through and the other end some device to attach to the wire. By putting the crowbar through the ring and winding it around the gas pipe a leverage is obtained that will break any fence wire.

A few years ago the Kansas Station had a herd of twenty-eight common or scrub cows. While the average Kansas cow was yielding ninety pounds of butter per annum this herd, by good feed and proper care, was made to yield an average of 270 pounds. Considerable difference was noted in individuals. Four cows ran in debt for their feed. Five of the least profitable cows, while they paid for their feed, brought in an income above cost of feed of $28.89. So far as dairy products are concerned one average cow of the most profitable five lacks only $2.86 of bringing in as much net cash as the whole five of the least profitable cows.

There is no hard and fast rule which determines the growth of black wool. Out of a flock of 200 sheep there may be one black sheep. In the next year there may be five and in the next year none. An absolutely white woolled sheep may be the offspring from a black ram and a black ewe. Furthermore, a case is cited where one identical sheep changed the color of its fleece five times before it was shorn, the stages at which these changes occurred being plainly discernible in the fibre of the wool. The number of black sheep varies from year to year and consequently the yield of black wool. A black sheep is apparently a freak and its appearance may occur in any flock. At any rate there is no generally accepted theory to determine the amount of production of black wool.

A sale of Rambouillet sheep were held in the Sale Pavilion, Union Stock Yards, Chicago, October 8th, with offerings from many of the leading flocks in the country. The attendance was not large. Colonel Perry, Columbus, O., well versed in the selling of sheep, cried the sale. The top price paid for a ram was $165. Other good prices were $120, $110 and from that on down. The offering consisted chiefly of rams, not many over 100 ewes being on sale. Prices in the main were disappointing, though some of those interested considered that things went fairly well. The sale was held under the auspices of the American Rambouillet Sheep Breeders' Association.

Buffalo Grass in Europe.

An extraordinary swindle has come to light. It seems that some enterprising Kansan managed to get it noised about in continental Europe that the buffalo grass of the great American cattle section where beef is made for nothing would grow on land that had never been plowed or tilled and produce luxuriantly without any more care than just to scatter the seed on the ground. One plowing, however, would get rid of it forever. The bait took, but to what extent does not seem clear, and the Kansan went to exporting grass seed in rather large quantities. European seed houses took hold in good shape, it is said, and business was good until some inquiry was made of the agricultural department at Washington, which promptly replied that the genuine buffalo grass had never been known to make seed at all, and in any case that there was but little of it left, and none of it in a position where its seed could be had in large amounts even if it did produce seed heads. The department of agriculture of course gave this promising trade its quietus at once, and now the European seed houses are wondering what manner of man that enterprising Kansan can be.

"SAVE-THE-HORSE" SPAVIN CURE

MORE CONVINCING THAN STATEMENTS ARE THE ACTUAL EXPERIENCES of those who have tried "Save-The-Horse" Spavin Cure. Such results as the following are carrying "Save-The-Horse" over skepticism, prejudice and uncertainty. No man will see his horse suffer and become incapacitated when such facts prove convincingly the possibilities of this remedy:

1752 END STREET, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Gentlemen—In the case of my horse I can say I was not sanguine when three veterinary surgeons after examining the horse said he could not be cured. All agreed that he would be lame probably for the rest of his life. It was a bone spavin of two years' standing, and the horse was twelve or thirteen years old, and they said it was almost impossible to cure such a case. I had him blistered several times without relief. I paid $10 for two applications for a wonderful cure, and I sent him into the country the early part of summer for pasture, and while there tried a bottle of —, but he came back to me on three legs as it were, with an awfully blistered leg. I sent for your medicine, and after the sore healed my groom applied the remedy as directed. I did not use him for a week or two, but as he grew better I used him frequently. His lameness gradually left him, and to-day he seems as well as ever, so that the horse which three months ago would not have brought $5 at auction is worth all of $300 to me, and I have never ceased to be grateful to the "Save-the-Horse" remedy, and have recommended it without hesitation, and you deserve all success. With sincere thanks,

W. H. BURNETT.

BICKNELL, IND.

Gentlemen—I had a three-year-old filly with bone spavin which had been lame for fifteen months or more. I used "Save-the-Horse" as directed and the spavin left at once and I didn't use quite half the bottle. I then had a mule which had thoroughpin bad on both legs. I used the rest of the bottle on them; they are not entirely gone, but I think if I had used the whole of the bottle on them they would be. I have used many spavin cures, but regard yours the best I ever had.

R. T. Cox, Breeder of High Class Jersey Swine.

NEW YORK, N. Y.

Gentlemen—I used two bottles of "Save-the-Horse" as a last resort, not having very much faith in advertised preparations. The horse treated was a very valuable bay, tandem leader. He had a bone spavin, deep seated, and at the time I started in to use "Save-the-Horse" had been laid up about eight months. He had been blistered and had been fired once and was just as lame as before. My coachman applied your remedy as directed, and I am glad to say that the horse is absolutely sound to-day and has been so for several months. I used the horse during treatment for light driving only. I consider your remedy one of the most wonderful things on the market to-day and I am very glad indeed to be able to state the facts in the case.

EDWARD H. HAWKE, JR.,
Law offices, Manhattan Life Insurance
Building, 66 Broadway.

MIDDLE GRANVILLE, N. Y.

Gentlemen—Some three years ago my horse, Clyde Wilkes 2:21½, brother of Earl Wilkes 2:17½, met with an accident which brought on a bone spavin. After applying several highly recommended cures in vain, I had him fired. He went lame and I had him fired the second time, but it did not help him and he was laid up about a year again. In July last I procured a bottle of your "Save-the-Horse," and began driving him while treating him, and he is as limber and strong on the leg as he ever was. It took two months' treatment and I consider "Save-the-Horse" the greatest cure I ever saw, and I honestly recommend it to all horsemen.

JOHN REIL,
Proprietor Central House.

FORT PLAIN, N. Y.

Gentlemen—I wish to add my testimony to the value of "Save-the-Horse." My valuable chestnut mare threw a bad bone spavin several months ago, and for some time I could not move her out of the stable. Noting your ad I bought one bottle of "Save-the-Horse" and in three days could use the mare and did so every day afterwards and followed the directions carefully, and the one bottle I bought completely cured the horse, so that to-day she has no sign of the spavin and is as well as ever. You have a wonderful remedy and I am very

NEVER IN THE HISTORY

Of achievements in scientific and physiological chemistry has anything been discovered capable of producing such wonderful results as "Save-the-Horse" Spavin Cure.

In the face of deep seated prejudice and skepticism, at first considered an improbable and expensive experiment, no preparation ever made so marvelous a record in such short time.

The fire iron is uncertain at the best and invariably only aggravates the disease or injury; blistering is less effective than the fire iron and both necessitate laying up the horse from four weeks to two months; arsenic, mercurial and poisonous compounds produce irreparable injury.

"Save-the-Horse" eliminates all these factors.

Horse can be worked continuously.

It can be applied at any time, anywhere, any place and in all conditions and extremes of weather—hot or cold. And no matter what the age, condition or development of the case or previous failures in treating, the concentrated, penetrating, absorbing power of "Save-the-Horse" is unfailing and no case can withstand the force of its action, whether a

GRASS VALLEY, CAL.

Gentlemen—Our horse was lame in the ankle caused from continually knocking with the other foot and he was lame on it for about one year and when I started to train him it came on again. He was so lame he could not even jog so I blistered him and did most everything to get him well, but I never fired it and it looked as though he would not be able to race again so I concluded to try one bottle of "Save-the-Horse" and it did save my horse for I used it three days and then worked him two slow heats and he did not show lame so I used the whole bottle and he is as sound to-day as he was the day he was foaled. I trained him and got him ready for his races and the lameness has not come back on him yet. The ankle is getting stronger all the time and the first race out this year he won easy in three straight heats at Colusa, trotting one heat in 2:20½ and the first half in 1:07 and is ready to-day to trot the best race of his life. Whenever I have a horse that is affected in any shape with weak tendons or weak ankles I shall use "Save-the-Horse" as I think it is a God-Send to the Horsemen and Horses. Hoping this will reach you all right, I am, very truly,

JNO D BLAMEY.

CHELSEA-ON-HUDSON, N. Y.

Gentlemen—"Save-the-Horse" is the greatest remedy of the age. Spavins are chronic in my business, and all remedies tried before this left the horse with a big scar and as lame as before. The horse I tried your remedy on had about the worst spavin I ever saw, he could not get his heel on the ground when in motion, and less than half the bottle fixed him up as good as ever. With your remedy I would not hesitate to buy a horse with a spavin at a reasonable price, although I dread the disease. Wishing you success,

JOHN PINCKNEY, Coal, Ice and Teaming.

BLAUVELT, N. Y.

Gentlemen—As you will see by the enclosed card, our business is boarding and caring for horses. We have many sent here to be treated for various afflictions, among them, and on which our first trial of "Save-the-Horse" was used, was a valuable mare with a pair of bog spavins. We do not know definitely of how long standing, but she had been treated by a Veterinarian and pronounced incurable. Having noticed your advertisement, we concluded to give it a trial. We began treating her about the middle of June; at that time she was very lame, but we allowed her to run in pasture all the time we were using "Save-the-Horse" (of which we used not quite one bottle), and to-day she is as sound as ever. We will soon begin treating one with bone spavin that has been fired, but not cured. Our faith in it is so strong that we are almost willing to guarantee its cure.

Yours very truly,

W. H. BURR.

PARK RIDGE, N. J.

Gentlemen—My mare had bog spavin on both legs, and I treated them with "Save-the-Horse" for three months, using one bottle, and she never stopped a day while treatment was going on. I have spent considerable time and money on Veterinarians and quacks, but was never satisfied until I used "Save-the-Horse," and which I am satisfied will cure any case in existence.

Very truly yours,

J. S. MITTAG,
Mittag & Vogler, Carbon Papers & Ribbons.
Branches, New York, Chicago and San Francisco.

HEDRICK, IA.

Gentlemen—On July 21 last, Mr. A. M. Utterback of this place put his horse in my hands. He was at that time very lame from a ruptured tendon close to his near front ankle, and I thought the horse worthless as a race horse, but as I knew he had lots of speed and was dead game, I took charge of him, and seeing your ad., I had Mr. U-

send for a bottle, as you are aware, and it worked like a miracle. On the 21st of July, when I got him, he was a very lame horse, and on the 9th of September we gave him four heats, all around 2:30, and the next day we gave him five heats from 2:26 to 2:24½, which was a severe test, but he never flinched. He is as sound as ever a horse was, but the ankle is enlarged some yet. Will it remain so? My idea in having Mr. Utterback send for the second bottle was to try to take the enlargement down, and at the same time continue the treatment a little longer. Perhaps I used the remedy too liberally, but I thought if a little was good, a good deal was better. Please answer, stating what you think of the case.

Respectfully yours,

ALEX PATTERSON

SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

I treated my horse, which had a bad spavin, with your remedy "Save-the-Horse" and it thoroughly removed the blemish. I never saw anything to equal it. Mr. Chas Welby and several horsemen, who are friends of mine, tell me that they have had equally as good results as myself.

JOHN NOWLAN,

Wholesale and retail dealer in meat, 487 Haight street.

PITTSBURG, PA.

Gentlemen—I had a young horse that had a small splint in front leg. He went lame shortly after I got him. He was treated with another liniment with no improvement. I turned him out to pasture and used in five weeks about half a bottle of your "Save-the-Horse." At the end of five weeks the lameness was entirely gone. The horse has been used constantly since bringing him in from the pasture, now eight weeks ago, and since that time has not been lame.

EDWARD JOHNSTON,
Pittsburg Steel Foundry.

CHICOPEE FALLS, MASS.

Gentlemen—I had a horse with a bad ankle, which the Veterinarian Surgeon claimed would never be right again. I saw your ad and thought I would try "Save-the-Horse," and I am pleased to say the horse recovered from the lameness and I sold him for $350 within six weeks of first application. I think it a wonderful remedy.

GEORGE T. MOSHER.

QUOQUE, L. I., N. Y.

Gentlemen—"Save-the-Horse," which I purchased from you, will do all you recommend it to do. The two horses I used it on were both laid up, one for six weeks or more and the other for ten weeks. The first one had a large splint running from ankle joint to knee, also enlarged tendons on same leg. I used your liniment on this horse about two weeks according to directions, then commenced to drive him and have worked him hard on a butcher wagon ever since. He is now sound. The other horse belonged to a friend of mine that has a cottage here for the summer; his mare made a misstep and injured her ankle. It became large and calloused and she could not go. He employed two Veterinarian Surgeons, then he got another to fire the ankle at once and kept doing so for awhile, still his mare could not go and was no use to him. I told him when he got through doctoring her to send her to my stable and that my man would cure her with "Save-the-Horse." He did so. She was kept still for two weeks, then I told him he could drive her moderately, but that she was to stay at my stable until my man got through applying "Save-the-Horse." I sent her back to the livery stable last week, and she can go as far and as fast and quick as any horse on earth now, and go sound. The result of the firing shows and always will, otherwise she is perfect. He drove her to Eastport last week in thirty-eight minutes, which is ten miles. I consider "Save-the-Horse" will do more than you recommend it to do, and will do more than any liniment I ever used. I enclose check for $5 for another bottle. I did not expect to give you a detail report of the horses, but could not do otherwise after seeing how the horses came out.

WILLIAM H. CAMERDEN, Real Estate Agent.

$5.00 PER BOTTLE.

Written guarantee with every bottle, constructed solely to convince, satisfy and protect you fully. We know positively "Save-the-Horse" will absolutely and permanently cure, and for that reason guarantee is made all your way.

Need of second bottle is almost improbable except in rarest cases. Guarantee covers effectiveness of one bottle.

IF YOU ARE IN DOUBT WRITE US.

As we do not put the preparation out on speculation, we will advise you frankly as to the possibility of the remedy effecting a cure. Give explicit particulars. Give the veterinarian's diagnosis, if you know he is competent. Inform us fully as to the age, development, location of swelling, lameness, action and previous treatment.

Copy of Guarantee sent upon application.

Investigation brings manifold satisfaction. Learn of the penetrating, soothing, antiseptic and marvelous healing power of

Veterinary Pixine

I had a horse in my stable that had an aggravated case of cracked heels. Had used many different remedies; some would heal the surface, but after driving the parts would crack again. I used Veterinary Pixine according to directions and soon had it healed from the bottom, and the parts kept sound although the horse was out in all kinds of traveling. I like it and recommend it. There are parties who wish me to keep it and I also want more myself. How can I get it to sell again? Please quote price.

J. M. TERRILL,
Dealer in Horses, Bridgeport, Conn.

I have used nearly every preparation on the market and several private formulas, but during my experience I have never used anything equal to Veterinary Pixine for speed cracks and scratches.

A. L. THOMAS,
Parkville Farm, Parkville, L. I.

Enclosed $1 for two 4-oz. packages of Veterinary Pixine. It is the best thing I have ever used for sore shoulders on horses and mules. I work forty head and have tried nearly everything, but Veterinary Pixine is the best so far. Shall want more later when we start up spring work.

W. H. FRAZINE, Montpelier, Cal.

You have the best thing on earth for sores. Do you want to give me the agency for county? Think I can sell some.

T. E. LINDLEY,
Oak Grove Farm, Eastville, Va.

Veterinary Pixine cured a galled shoulder on my horse that had been there for a year, and I had tried everything that I could hear of to heal it. I can recommend it for all sores.

S. C. GODDARD, Petersham, Mass.

I have used Veterinary Pixine on scratches, sore teats and cracked udder with perfect satisfaction. I never saw anything like it. It cures sure and quick. I recommend it to my friends and neighbors, and to every man who owns a horse or cow.

C. P. DAVIS, Hartford Mills, N. Y.

I have never used your spavin cure, so cannot tell anything about that, but your Veterinary Pixine is a grand remedy. Do not think I have ever had any remedy that compares with it for the treatment of galls. Enclosed find 50c for another box.

E. W. MASON, Owosso, Mich.

Enclosed find 50c in stamps for which please send us an 8-oz. box of Veterinary Pixine. We purchased an 8-oz. box some time ago and it healed a collar sore in three weeks that had continually grown larger for two months. We also use it for cows' teats and it beats all other salves and ointments we ever used.

R. S. & H. W. DAVIS, Williamstown, Vt.

I used Veterinary Pixine at Danbury Fair on my mare for bopple chafes. I found it to be the best thing I ever used and the only thing I got to cure her and keep on working her. I cannot say too much for it.

A. T. MILLER, Mt. Kisco, N. Y.

Being in the ice business I have from 15 to 20 horses. The box of Veterinary Pixine proved more than satisfactory. I always keep some in the stables, as it is the best thing out for wounds and gall sores on horses.

LAWRENCE M. LYONS, Binghamton, N. Y.

I am much pleased with the results obtained with Veterinary Pixine. The case of speed cracks of which I wrote is cured and the horse goes sound, but I don't want to be without it. Please find enclosure for ¼ lb. box.

M. B. SULLIVAN, M. D., Dover, N. H.

I have used Veterinary Pixine for the last year for scratches, galls, and especially for cracked teats on cows, and can recommend it as one of the best applications for all sores and abrasions that I have ever used.

JAS. A. PENDERGAST, V. S.,
316 Willow St., Syracuse, N. Y.

I have used Veterinary Pixine in my practice and have had the best results in diseased udders in cows and all kinds of skin diseases in horses and dogs.

HARRY A. TURNER, V. S.,
435 S. Salina St., Syracuse, N. Y.

I have used your Veterinary Pixine in my livery and am very much pleased with the result in every case. Please send me a 5-lb. pail at once.

SEYMOUR G. CAMP,
Livery & Exchange Stables, Oneonta, N. Y.

I have used Veterinary Pixine on very bad cracked heels and I have never found anything to equal it.

MERT F. FULTON,
Trainer & Driver, Hartford, Conn.

We have one customer who says a 50c box of Veterinary Pixine increased the value of his horse $25.

R. J. PLEAS, Spiceland, Ind.

Stinging, burning sores, chronic scratches, grease heel, mud fever, bopple chafes, speed cracks, abscesses, inflammatory swellings, hoof rot, mange, and all sores and skin diseases absolutely and permanently cured. It is the one scientific, pharmaceutical veterinary ointment. Heals naturally by granulation without scab and stimulates growth of hair natural color. There exists no healing remedy so all-powerful and unfailing.

ENTRANCE and PAYMENTS. $3 to nominate mare on December 1, 1902, when name, color, description of mare and stallion bred to must be given. $5 April 1, 1903. $5 October 1, 1903. $10 on yearlings April 1, 1904. $10 on two year olds April 1, 1905. $10 on three year olds April 1, 1906

STARTING PAYMENTS.—$25 to start in the two year old pace. $35 to start in the two year old trot. $35 to start in the three year old pace. $50 to start in the three year old trot. All starting payments to be made in ten days before the first day of the meeting at which the race is to take place.

Nominators must designate when making payments to start whether the horse entered is a trotter or pacer.

Colts that start at two years old are not barred from starting again in the Three Year Old Divisions.

CONDITIONS.

The races for two year olds will be mile heats (2 in 3) and for three year olds mile heats (3 in 5). Distance for two year olds, 150 yards; for three year olds, 100 yards.

If a mare proves barren, or slips, or has a dead foal or twins, or if either the mare or foal dies before April 1, 1904, her nominator may transfer his nomination or substitute another mare and foal regardless of ownership; but there will be no return of a payment, nor will any entry be liable for more than amount paid in or contracted for. In entries the name, color and pedigree of mare must be given, also the name of the horse to which she was bred in 1902.

Entries must be accompanied by the entrance fee.

Should the amount of entrance money received be in excess of the amount of the stakes, the excess will be added, less the cost of advertising, to the stakes for the three year old divisions in proportion to the amount offered for each division.

Nominators liable only for amounts paid in. Failure to make any payment forfeits all previous payments. Hoppies will not be barred in pacing races.

Right reserved to declare off or reopen these stakes in case the number of entries received is not satisfactory to the Board of Directors.

Money divided in each division of the stake 50, 25, 15 and 10 per cent.

There will be no more moneys in any division than there are starters.

ENTRIES OPEN TO THE WORLD. MEMBERSHIP IN THE ASSOCIATION NOT REQUIRED TO ENTER, but no horse owned in the State of California will be allowed to start until the owner has become a member. Horses owned outside of the State of California are eligible to start regardless of membership.

JOTTINGS.

LOS ANGELES has borne the reputation for some years of being the best harness horse town on the Coast, and now that Mr. J. W. Brooks and his associates have secured a five years' lease of Agricultural Park there and propose giving a forty days' running meeting during the early part of 1903, I have heard the remark made frequently of late that it is "all day" with the trotters and pacers down there and that the old days of big purses and big crowds at the harness races in Los Angeles are gone forever. I don't believe it. While there is not a particle of doubt but long running meetings with bookmaking get the speculative public to liking that game and makes professional and constant players out of many who would other, wise only bet their money occasionally on a race for sport, yet I believe there is such a strong admiration for the truly American sport of harness racing that a first class meeting of one week in Los Angeles, with attractive features, will draw as large a crowd as ever passed through the gates of the track down there. I don't know of a successful meeting of any kind, running, trotting, baseball or anything else, that is conducted by managements that are lethargic and have little interest in the sport. During the past few years the Los Angeles fair association, as an association, has cared little for the harness races. It has offered some good purses, it is true, and has paid them promptly, but the program has been arranged principally for the runners and the books have been looked to for the main part of the revenue. There is not a really successful harness meeting held in the United States but is given by an organization that is formed especially for this purpose, on a track prepared particularly for harness racing, and the program of which provides solely for harness horses. The days of running and trotting at the same meeting are doomed, except at the small country fairs, as the modern methods of conducting these two great sports are putting them farther apart every year. Los Angeles is no longer a country town. It is a metropolitan city of over a hundred thousand inhabitants, a very large proportion of whom are people of wealth who enjoy and are willing to patronize good sport. There are enough admirers of the harness horse there to make a success of a week's trotting and pacing under the proper management, and we do not doubt but there are also enough to make a running meeting of forty or more days pay well. But there will never be a really successful meeting given there if the program is especially prepared for the runners with the harness races made a side issue. Los Angeles has been a good harness horse town in the past and it doubtless is yet. If a club could be formed of such gentlemen as now conduct the Los Angeles Driving Club there so successfully, a program announced each year and the meeting advertised and boomed properly, there is little doubt but as large or larger crowds would turn out to witness the contests than the runners now draw. The Los Angelenos have not been weaned from the sport of harness racing, but they like it as the Kentuckian likes his whisky—straight. A mixture of trotting, running and syndicate book making is not to their liking.

That the circuit of harness racing in California this year was quite an improvement over that of 1901 is acknowledged by every horse owner in the State and that the circuit of 1903 can be made still better is beyond dispute. There were three meetings this year that are entitled to nearly all the credit for the improved harness racing. These were the meetings at Woodland, Stockton and Fresno. At all three the tracks were prepared especially for the harness horses, and at two there were no books. There is one thing that will assure successful harness racing next year and that is an early announcement of dates and purses. Horsemen have urged this for the past four or five years but their request does not seem to be heeded. There were hundreds of dollars of entrance money paid out to Eastern associations this year by California owners who did not send their horses East, but raced them at home. They wanted to stay here, but the announcements of meetings were delayed so long that they entered over East so as not to be left out entirely in case there was no circuit in California. When the district and State Fair programs were finally given out these owners entered liberally at home, but were compelled to pay their forfeits to the Eastern associations amounting to large sums, for which they could get no return. I hold that associations are not treating owners, breeders and trainers right when they delay making their announcements until the last moment and then expect to secure large entry lists. It is the early advertising of the big programs of the Grand Circuit that induces men to train horses for them. If a harness racing circuit could be organized for 1903 by associations or clubs at San Jose, Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Napa, Vallejo, Woodland, Stockton, Pleasanton, Fresno, Bakersfield and Los Angeles, and announcement made as early as February of dates and a few purses and stakes for each there would be five horses trained for these races where there was one this year. It would not matter if the purses were not over $500 each. Even lesser amounts with early announcements would be better than waiting until July and August before letting horsemen know whether there were to be meetings or not. This circuit should be for harness horses alone, with bookmaking barred, and no town should attempt to give a six day meeting unless it is certain of getting an attendance each day that will justify it. Four days is enough for most towns and in many three will accommodate all the good racing that can be programmed.

Prince Alert beat Sir Albert S. in the match race at a half mile at Memphis last Monday just as nine out of every ten horsemen in California believed he would. It was no disgrace to the sexless son of Diablo to be beaten by such a horse and in such time—0:57½, two and a half seconds faster than a half mile was ever paced before in a race. While Sir Albert S. is one of the very best race horses at the pacing gait ever bred in California, he has never yet done anything in public that would lead one to think he could defeat Prince Alert. He probably showed Millard Sanders that he possessed as much speed as any living horse or he would not have made the match, and the fact that he led Prince Alert at the quarter pole in 28½ seconds is proof positive that two minute speed is only play for him. But the best mile Sir Albert S. has ever shown in a race was 2:03½, while Prince Alert, a sound and seasoned race horse, has a race record three full seconds faster made, too, in a race after he had won the first heat in 2:02½. There are but three pacers that ever lived that have faster records—Star Pointer 1:59½, Dan Patch 1:59½, and John R. Gentry 2:00½. All these are time records, and the only horse that ever paced a heat in a race faster than Prince Alert's record, was the mighty Star Pointer whose heat in 2:00½ is only a quarter of a second faster. This being the record of Prince Alert, is it any wonder that he defeated Sir Albert S.? The Diablo gelding was sick and ailing all summer, besides meeting with an accident in which he was injured. He has recovered however, and has paced some wonderfully fast heats for a horse in his second year's racing. With good luck he will come very close to reaching the two minute mark before he is retired and it should not surprise anyone if he does, as he has as much speed and is as game as any horse. Condition and racing experience are all that are required to make him a two minute horse, and he has got to have both.

The breeding of Prince Alert is not fashionable by a good deal. His dam belongs to that prominent and numerous family known as "Untraced." His sire, however, is of good stock, as he was got by Crown Prince, a son of Artemas 1792, he by Hambletonian 10 out of Dolly Mills by American Star, second dam Jenny Lewis by Roger's Young Messenger, third dam Fan by Dinwiddie, a grandson of imported Diomed. The dam of Crown Prince was by Young Proud American, a horse that also carried a great deal of thoroughbred blood in his veins. Prince Alert is ten years old and has a splendid set of legs and feet under him, but he wears the hoppers. He is one of the greatest pacers that has appeared thus far, and his owner believes the world's record is within his reach.

A couple of pacers were hitched together at Memphis last Wednesday and at the first attempt lowered the world's team pacing record 2½ seconds, the time being 2:05½. They were both sons of our former California champion Direct, whose record is also 2:05½. Direct Hal and Prince Direct were the horses that accomplished this feat and the veteran Ed Geers held the lines. The wonderful part of the performance was the last half of the mile, which was paced in 1:01½. On the same day Nervolo, a stallion of the Onward family, being a son of Colbert 2:07½, lowered the world's two mile pacing record to 4:24½, and Onward Silver, a trotter by Onward, equalled his world's record made the week before of two miles in 4:28½. Every year the blood of old Dolly by Mambrino Chief adds to the fame of the American harness horse. She is the dam of Director and Onward and these two stallions have founded two of the greatest families of race winners and record breakers ever produced. I believe there will be many great trotters and pacers produced hereafter by bringing the descendants of these two stallions together. Mares with Onward blood, bred to stallions of the Director family, and the opposite cross as well, will certainly produce horses that will have the instinct, the speed and the stamina to trot and pace miles close to two minutes and to stay as long as the race lasts.

Five Mile Trotting Races.

Captain Tom Merry (Hidalgo) writes the following interesting reminiscence in the Los Angeles Herald of last Wednesday:

In the early days of turf sports in California, long-distance trots were very largely in vogue. In 1854, Fred Werner, proprietor of the Empire Market in Sacramento, had a big bay horse called Tom Maguire, which he matched against a horse called Rattler to trot ten miles to harness. Maguire, driven by Simeon Eyclesheiner, won in 32 minutes and 10 seconds. The next long match was at thirty miles between the same Rattler and the stallion, General Taylor, who figures in so many California pedigrees. The stallion won after a desperate contest, the gelding leading him for the first twelve miles.

In 1857, a merchant named Edward T. Pease had a brown gelding called Honest John, who won two races of ten miles each, beating Warren Loud's Powder in the first and Tom Maguire in the second. He was matched against the eastern mare, Princess (afterwards the dam of Happy Medium) and in a trial of ten miles, which he covered in 28:12, pulled up lame in the coffin joints and never started afterwards. Princess was then matched against Captain Card's Glencoe Chief to trot two races, on consecutive days, for $50,000 each. In the first both were to go to skeleton wagons and in the latter she was to go to wagon and he to sulky. James Eoff, who drove Princess, had agreed to throw the first race by letting the gray horse pass him in the ninth mile, but drove the race out on them and won it in 29:10½. The Pease party were reported to have lost over $40,000 on this race. The next day he went to sulky, but that did not help matters any for she beat him away off in 29:16½, which I regarded as the better performance as a strong wind was blowing at the time. I recollect it very distinctly, because it was the first race at which I ever acted as a judge. My associates were Frederick D. Kohler and Stephen H. Meeker, two good men now over thirty years dead. At the state fair of 1854 Glencoe Chief won the ten mile race in 31:28, beating Bell Ringer, Powder and Tom Maguire. In 1864, they had another race at this distance, won by W. H. Seward, Mr. Teackle's horse Gentleman George, leading for the first seven miles. This was covered in 29:23½.

In 1863 there was a race at the Willows track near San Francisco—the first five miles I can remember to have seen. The contestants were E. H. Parker's mare, California Damsel, to wagon, and George W. Bidwell's chestnut gelding, Fillmore, to harness. The track was a very bad one for a horse to wagon, as the half-mile pole was down in a hollow and the finish from there was all up hill. The betting was 100 to 40 on the mare just before the start, with but few takers. The mare seemed to get away from the gelding so easily that offers of $100 to $70 were freely made as they went into the third mile, which found only a few takers. As they went down into the hollow on the fourth mile Bidwell called on Fillmore and he began to overhaul the mare, but she showed no great signs of fatigue until reaching the half-mile on the fifth round, when the horse lapped her and beat her home by six lengths in 13:15, a record that stood unbeaten for nearly twenty years.

Along in 1864 several pacers came out and showed a disposition to go long distances. One of these was a gray mare called Unknown, which beat everything in California except Seward. Two other pacers, Dick Gough and Lady Don, got five-mile records inside of fourteen minutes. After that came the famous mare, Mattie Howard, who trotted twenty miles in 59:28. But this triumph was short-lived, for in 1873 a brown gelding named Controller not only trotted twenty miles in faster time than that of Mattie Howard, but also beat it to wagon. He followed this up by trotting twenty miles inside the hour to a skeleton wagon. These performances of Controller's are still the world's record.

Of late years there have been no five-mile trots in California, and James W. Brooks, manager of the new Los Angeles Racing Association, has taken the bovine by the antlers, to give our people a novelty in the shape of a five-mile dash, which will take place at Agricultural Park on Saturday, November 1st, being the chief feature of the day. The horses named for this exciting contest are Lady Fair, Zambra, McKenna and Foxy Mac. All these horses have records about 2:20, which is ten seconds faster than Controller ever trotted in his life, and about fifteen seconds faster than Seward had done, and he was the great long-distance trotter of his day. John Stewart, the Boston theatrical manager, offered to match his horse Jack Stewart against him for $10,000 and allow Seward $2000 for expenses, but Mr. Morrow, owner of Seward, deemed that insufficient, and negotiations ended there. Certainly, these horses, with their greater speed than the old-time record breakers, ought either to tie or lower the five-mile record. The track is in only fair condition just now, but will be just about perfect by Saturday next, and I look for the race to be trotted very close to thirteen minutes.

Notes and News.

The Los Angeles meeting ends to-day.

John A. McKerron's record is now 2:05½.

Petaluma citizens say their town will be on the circuit in 1903.

Ten sons of Alcantara have sired new 2:20 performers this year.

Prince Alert 2:00½ is not only a very fast horse but he is a good looker.

Sir Albert S. won the fifth heat of the novelty race at Memphis Wednesday in 2:04½.

Thirteen may be an unlucky number, but Axtell has that many new ones in the standard list.

The Breeders' Futurity for foals of mares bred in 1902 will close December 1st. It only costs $3 to nominate a mare.

It has been suggested that a trotting and pacing circuit be arranged for next year in California, and the idea is a good one.

Bertie R., the mare that has a reputation as being an international ringer, is said to be with foal by Too Soon 2:24½, son of Direct 2:05½.

Baron May 2:21½ is a new standard trotter for Tom James' stallion Barondale 2:11½. Baron May made his record recently at Bloomfield, Iowa.

The Santa Rosa Stock Farm track will be better and faster than ever next summer. A high class trotting and pacing meet will doubtless be given there.

The regular circuit will close at Los Angeles this afternoon and the Hot Air circuit will open up immediately to remain open as long as the tracks are closed.

Ozanam 2:08, winner of the Transylvania, is by Axtell, dam by Director. She is a brown mare with a blaze face and both hind legs white nearly to the hocks.

There will be a trotting dash of five miles at Los Angeles to-day between Zambra, McKenna, Foxy Mac and Lady Fair. The three first named are by McKinney.

An advertiser wants a standard or trotting bred stallion, stout built that is 14 hands or under. No objection to a pacer but must have speed. See advertisement.

James Thompson has taken up his residence at Pleasanton once more, and has seven horses in his string. Among them are Col. Kirkpatrick's pacers, Clipper 2:06 and Thornway.

Good road horses are so scarce that buyers are hunting sellers all the time. If you don't believe it advertise one for sale in the columns of this paper and note how your mail increases.

Mr. John Thoms of Alameda is driving on the road the handsome pacing mare Diablita 2:15½ by Diablo. She is a fine road mare and should be a good one to race in the 2:16 class next year.

It is a fact worthy of note that the pedigrees of Dan Patch, Nella Jay and Gail Hamilton all show one or more crosses of Justin Morgan through his best grandson, Vermont Black Hawk.

The chestnut gelding, The Mikado, that trotted to a new record of 2:24½ at Rockport, Ohio, recently, is by Russia and out of Lea 2:18½, the full sister to Cupid 2:18, Adonis 2:11½ and Sidney Dillon.

The Abbott 2:03½ was beaten at Memphis by Chain Shot in 2:08½ and 2:10½. The son of Chimes needs a rest of a year or two, and then would probably come out and show as much speed as ever.

There are but two editors in the 2:06 class—William G. Layng, former editor of this paper, who bred Sir Albert S. 2:03½, and Dr. J. W. Neal, editor of the Western Horseman, who bred The Bishop 2:06.

The many friends of the well-known horsemen, Hi and William Hogoboom, will be sorry to learn that their brother, Neil Hogoboom, died at his home in Baker City, Oregon, last week of heart disease.

A very fast pacer with a record of 2:12 is offered for sale by T. W. Barstow of San Jose. The horse is absolutely sound, a pleasant driver and will work single or double or under the saddle. See advertisement.

There was a match race at Honolulu, October 4th, for $250 a side between the runners Racery and Racine Murphy. It was a half-mile dash and was won handily by Racery in 49½. Racery was well ridden by George Thomas.

The executors of the estate of the late Frank Jones are authorized under the will to continue Maplewood Farm "as long as they think proper." It is thought the farm will be used for breeding purposes for several years at least.

Ed Geers will train a string of trotters and pacers at the Memphis track this winter. Among those already shipped to him there from Village Farm are two youngsters by Direct Hal that look very much like their sire.

In the race wherein Charlie Mac trotted to a record of 2:07½ at Memphis there were five starters. The fast mare, Fereno by Moko, won the race, trotting the last heat in 2:08 with the McKinney horse second and very close at that.

Stallion owners should begin advertising their horses early. The breeding of standard horses will have a decided boom next spring and owners of mares are already figuring on the best crosses to produce speed, size and good looks.

The Rider and Driver of New York has enlarged and increased the number of its pages, and now devotes considerable of its space to yachting, golf, automobilism and dogs. It is a very handsomely printed journal and is in a class by itself.

Brown Heels, that paced to a record of 2:09½ recently, over the half-mile track at Mount Holly, N. J., is another 2:10 pacer for Brown Hal 2:12½. He is out of a Snow Heels mare, consequently a brother in blood to Star Pointer 1:59½.

The Baron Wilkes family won nearly twenty-five per cent of all the money raced for on the Grand Circuit this year. Make a note of this as Barondale 2:11½, one of the best-bred sons of Baron Wilkes, will be in the stud next spring in California.

A California trainer who is one of the most conservative of men in the business, stated in this office last week that in his opinion J. M. Alviso's pacer Rey del Diablo, two year old record of 2:23, is as fast a horse as Sir Albert S. and will get as low a record.

"Jo" Bowers, mine host of the Capital Hotel, Sacramento, claimed a name for his handsome colt by James Madison out of May by Rainbow the other day, and in printing it the types made the name Fred Madison when it should have been Ferd Madison.

Scott Hudson has sold to S. Schlessinger & Co., Vienna, Austria, the good race mare, Alice Russell, six years old, by Gambetta Wilkes, dam Sally Jones by Socrates, for $7500. Alice Russell has earned $5300 on the turf this year, and her present record is 2:11½.

Direct Hal was scratched from the race in which Sir Albert S. started at Memphis last Wednesday. Was Geers afraid he would have to lower the stallion's record to beat the son of Diablo, or was he afraid that Direct Hal's unbeaten record would get a black mark?

A correspondent wishes to know how many horses have pacing records of 2:02 or better. There are nine: Star Pointer 1:59½, Dan Patch 1:59½, John R. Gentry 2:00½, Prince Alert 2:00½, Joe Patchen 2:01½, Little Boy 2:01½, Robert J. 2:01½, Anaconda 2:01½, and Coney 2:02.

L. C. Lee, the brown pacing horse by Elmo 891 that made his record of 2:15 in this city in 1887, when he beat Ella S. and Homesake in straight heats on the old Bay District track, was sold at public auction in Denver last week for $80. John D. Morrissey of Denver purchased L. C. Lee years ago for $7500. Lee is now about twenty-three years old.

While at Lexington H. B. Gentry secured the engagement of a lot of good mares to McKinney 2:11½ for next season. Mr. J. C. Lineman of Lima, O., booked six of his best mares: M. L. Horner, Baltimore, Md., booked two; N. T. Wood, Waterloo, Ia., two, and several other parties from one to four each. Clearly McKinney is in great favor.—Western Horseman.

Last week at Lexington, thirty weanlings bred on shares by various Kentucky breeders and C. W. Williams, Galesburg, Ill., by such sires as Allerton 2:09½, Expedition 2:15½, Belsire 2:18, Infact 2:26½ and Sir Vincent 2:13½, were divided up. By sealed bids the division was made, and for twelve head Williams proved the highest bidder. Some of these weanlings he went to $1000 or over to secure.

In the 2:08 pace the first day of the Memphis meeting Sir Albert S. won, and his positions in the summary were 6-1-5-1. The local papers are very severe in their criticisms of Millard Sanders, and claim that heats were deliberately laid up with Sir Albert S. to beat the pool box. The judges fined Mr. Sanders $250 for violating the rule prohibiting laying up heats, which is the heaviest fine of the year.

Sam Hoy of Winters was in town this week for a few hours. He is already booking mares to his stallion Baywater Wilkes, sire of Kelly Briggs, and will again have a choice lot of mares for him. The son of Sable Wilkes is certain to be a great producer of speed if he lives. There is not one of his get that has been worked but shows great speed at the trot or pace, and they are all strong built, good looking horses.

A noted broodmare that died very recently at Village Farm was Geraldine, dam of Robert J. 2:01½. Geraldine was sired by Jay Gould, dam Nancy Claggett by Nann's Senator. Geraldine was bred by H. B. Holton of Powhattan, Md., in 1877. Her son Robert J. 2:01½, holds the world's record for the fastest four-heat race, with an average of 2:02½. Gerald Rex by Rex Americus 2:11½, Gerald Chimes by Chimes, Geraldine by Mambrizo King King Gerald by Mambrino King, and the Ambassador, one of the youngsters purchased by the Japanese government last summer, are her other foals.

Sir Albert S. won the first heat at a mile, in the novelty race at Memphis this week, in 2:04½. He was a close third to Carl Wilkes in the second, one mile and an eighth in 2:20, which is a 2:04 gait, and was a close second in the last heat won by Carl Wilkes in 1:00½. Sir Albert S. has twenty-four winning heats to his credit, the average time of which is 2:08.

J. H. Steiner, secretary of the American Trotting Association, has issued his notice that the next regular meeting of the Board of Appeals of the American Trotting Association will be held at the Auditorium Hotel, Chicago, on Tuesday, December 2d, at 10 a. m., for the transaction of such business as may properly be presented to the Board for its consideration. All new applications and written evidence must be received at his office not later than November 18, 1902.

In addition to the Griffiths consignment of horses to be sold next Thursday at the Occidental Horse Exchange the fast and beautiful pacing mare, Twilight 2:18½ by Noonday, will be sold and about ten other good ones, including Dolly Gray, a 2:10 pacer; Jasper by Dictatus, Teddy by Directum, two mares by Steve Whipple 2:12, Annie Laurie 2:30, a handsome team by Dexter Prince and a coal black pacer, trial 2:16. This is the last sale of the year, and a better lot of useful, fast and promising trotters that are guaranteed in every way has not been heretofore offered in this city.

The first entry to the Pacific Breeders Futurity for foals of mares bred in 1902 was received by Secretary Kelley Tuesday morning, and was mailed at Sacramento the day previous by Mr. M. L. Lusk of 631 K street, that city. As the first advertisement of the stake appeared in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN of the Saturday previous, Mr. Lusk wasted no time and has the honor of making the first entry. The mare he nominates is Sallie Brooks by Doc Button, son of Alexander, dam Gip by Gen. Buford. Sallie Brooks was bred to Zombro 2:11 this year.

Kentucky's supremacy as the birthplace of fast horses is shown by the fact that eight out of twenty of the new 2:10 trotters were foaled in the Blue Grass region, while no other State except California produced more than three. Alice Carr, Baron De Shay, Dulce Cor, Hesperus, Ozanam, Poindexter, Rythmic and Susie J. were all raised within a radius of a few miles from Lexington. California produced Charlie Mac, Idolita, Monte Carlo and The Roman. Major Delmar and Wilque were bred in New York, the former by the late William E. Spier of New York City and the latter by Delbert Dinehart of Hudson. Illinois, with Ida Highwood and Waubun, is the only other State that has sent to the turf more than one such fast one this year.

Lexington's wind up was brilliant despite the many trials and tribulations caused by the rain throughout the fortnight given over to the trotters in the blue grass city. Scott Hudson's remarkable trotter, Chase 2:07½, won his third race of the meeting, defeating the erstwhile cracks of the year. Chase has had nearly as brilliant a campaign as the blind Rythmic 2:08, and, although supposedly not as fast, has gone the little stallion three-quarters of a second better. Each started without racing experience even, let alone record, and each last fall showed around 2:10. Chase was not considered a really high-class horse earlier in the season, being lame at Brighton Beach trots and all out of kelter. Hudson's partner, Gatcombe, put in many long hours nursing the horse back to form.

In the nine days of the meeting of the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders Association forty races were trotted and paced and sixty-one stables divided among them the $73,825 hung up. Nella Jay, by her victory in the three-year old division of the Futurity Stake, won for her owner, George Woodin, $10,000, putting the Boston man at the head of the list. Of the drivers Scott Hudson leads with seven races won, Fred Cares being next with four to his credit. A. McDonald, J. Gaghan and E. E. Smathers each drove three winners, and Ed Geers, Ed Benyon and Fred Keys two each. Dr. Strong and Chase were the only horses to win three races, the latter's performance being the most creditable, as all the events he won were stakes. Sir Albert S. paced the fastest mile of the meeting, 2:03½, while the fastest heat trotted in any race was 2:07½, scored by Prince of Orange in the third heat of the Transylvania.

The potency of the blood of Aberdeen has not for several years been more prominently asserted than in a number of the sensational records of the season now closing. Anzella 2:06½, is by Antrim, a son of Aberdeen; Katherine A., who won the Lexington Futurity, trotting to a record of 2:14, marvelous time for a two year old, is by Wiggins, another son, and Hilgar, who was second to Katherine A. in that heat and won second money, is by Wiggins, out of Ellen Tucker, by Aberdeen, being thus closely inbred to Widow Machree's noted son. But perhaps the traditional characteristic of the Aberdeen blood was as well manifested in the performance of Onward Silver, when he trotted two miles in 4:28½, as in anything else. A feat of this kind requires the stoutest determination and the most rugged qualities of endurance, a pronounced characteristic of the Aberdeen family, and these the son of Onward and Sylvan Maid has never failed to demonstrate. While the mile record has been lowered thirteen times during the past twenty years, the two-mile record has been changed but three times since Morneo Chief trotted in 4:46 in 1882. In 1885 that fast but erratic race mare, Fanny Wither- spoon lowered the record to 4:43; in 1892 Hamlin's Nightingale trotted the distance in 4:33½, cutting 9½ seconds from the record. The following year Greenlander placed the record at 4:32, where it remained until Onward Silver's record-breaking performance at Lexington.—Trotter and Pacer.

Sam Gamble, Broncho Buster.

Sam Gamble dropped into the BREEDER AND SPORTSMEN office one day this week, as is his custom, and was congratulated on the fact that another mare bred by him had turned out to be a producer of great speed. The mare referred to is Muda S., the dam of the fast three year old filly Bugle, that took a record of 2:14 at the Lexington meeting two weeks ago. We had just finished looking up the pedigree of Muda S. and found she was by Stamboul 2:07½ out of Nancy Lee, the dam of Nancy Hanks 2:04. As Sam picked out and purchased Nancy Lee for the Hobart Farm before her daughter Nancy Hanks had made her champion record of 2:04, and then bred her to Stamboul, he is entitled to the credit of being the breeder of Muda S. We do not believe there is another horseman in America that has purchased and bred as large a proportion of great broodmares for the number owned as Mr. Gamble. The books of Oakwood Park and the once famous Hobart Farm will prove this unless we are greatly mistaken. While we were congratulating him on his success, as a breeder, he reminded us that there were several failures to his credit, and he wrote out the following in regard to his experiences as a broncho buster, although we have it from good authority that in his young days Sam could ride almost anything in the shape of a horse:

"On two occasions in my life," says the narrative, "I have attempted to ride a 'broncho,' as the cowboys call a 'high strung' horse. If you want to know just how high one is strung climb on his apex. My first broncho ride was in 1867 at Leavenworth, Kansas. After seeing several others trying to ride this fellow, I, with a high opinion of my ability as a rough rider, mounted the animal. I didn't ride far, but the ride was mighty exhilarating while it lasted. I got on his back with great pomp and a derrick, but I didn't put on any unnecessary style when I got off. The broncho evinced considerable surprise when I took up my location on his dorsal fin; he seemed to think a moment and then he gathered up his loins and delivered a volley of heels and hardware straight out from the shoulder. The recoil was furious. I saw that my seat was going to be contested and began to look about for a soft spot whereon to dismount. He was under way however and had it all his own way and he gave me all his spasms of high, stiff legged bucks. He bounced me so high that every time I came down I would meet him coming up on another buck. He finally gave me a farewell toss and I clove the firmament and split up through the hushed ethereal until my toes ached from the lowness of the temperature and I could distinctly hear the sound of the spheres. Then I came down and fell in a little heap about fifty yards from where I first mounted Mr. Broncho. All kinds of Samaritans gathered up my remains in a basket and carried me to a drug store.

"My second broncho ride was in the fall of 1899 (I know it was the 'fall') at Gilroy in this State. I was not in such practice as on the former ride, as it was just fifteen years since I had been on a horse's back, and I was at least 65 pounds heavier and 29 years older than when I made my ascent at Leavenworth. This Gilroy broncho had been highly recommended to me as being very gentle, and the information was furnished that 'a lady had ridden her with perfect safety.' On mounting I soon found out that she was not only 'high strung' but a very convertible power. Right from the first jump I was in trouble, as the bucking was done going and coming, and in the hasty jumping of fences I had no time to study her power of adaptability or my power of adaptation to her. I put forth all my efforts to meet her half way, but those efforts entirely exhausted me. I finally slowed her up in the stable yard and noticed that the animals there were all laughing. I had heard of animals possessing this faculty, but this was the first time I had ever seen it displayed. The horses, cows, chickens, and even the birds in the trees seemed to snicker as I came down from the back of that mare and fell in a little heap on the same spot where I had mounted a few minutes previous.

"Although the animals laughed, Budd Doble and all the stablemen looked pityingly at me and inquired as to the nature of my mishap. Some said it was a cyclone, others that it was a railroad smash-up, and I have a faint remembrance that one said: 'The old man can ride some yet.' However, I laid there until a surgeon found that three of my ribs were broken.

"The next morning I went to the stall of this broncho that 'a lady could ride with safety' and as the calico-bided animal ate peacefully of the sweet hay she gave me an 'octave expression' that I never will forget. My stay at the pretty town of Gilroy with its many pleasant citizens was cut short, but the memory will linger with me always.

"I desire to register the above with others of my so-called 'failures' that are related by those who 'know not what they speak'."

SAM GAMBLE.

A Horse Laugh.

"Extinct? Not much!" the horse exclaimed: "No more I hang my head ashamed. What, though they scurry in machines O'er hills and valleys and ravines, I snicker as I see them roam So very far away from home. For well I know that they'll break down Upon some grade remote from town, And vainly then their fists they'll clench And dally with a monkey wrench. Whom will they seek in such a plight? Whom will they beg to set them right? Who is the hope they stoutly clutch? 'Tis I: the horse! Extinct? Not much!"

Races at Victoria.

Two days racing were given at Victoria, B. C., by the Victoria Jockey Club on Friday and Saturday, October 10th and 11th. Judge J. A. Fullerton of Victoria acted as presiding judge, while Mr. Robert Leighton was the secretary. Both gentlemen are capable and efficient and are doing much for clean and honest racing in the northwest. The summaries:

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 10.

Trot or pace, one mile, three in five, purse $250—Prince Tom won, Eventide second, O. C. third. Time, 2:25½.

Prince of Wales Handicap, one and one-half miles, purse $500—Tosti won, Idaho Chief II. second, Dance Along third. Time, 1:46½.

Five-eighths mile dash, purse $200—Carabel won, B. Girl second, Eldred third. Time, 1:04.

One mile dash, for horses foaled in British Columbia, purse $200 and the Moet and Chandon Cup, which must be won twice in succession to be the property of the winner—Reciprocity won, Gray Friar second, Thunder third. Time, 1:53. Had she been pressed much better time could have been made.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 11.

Trot or pace, free for all, two in three, purse $400—Maplemont won, Barnacle second, The Freak third, Prince Tom fourth. Best time, 2:20.

Trot or pace, for horses bred in British Columbia, three in five, purse $100 and silver cup—Nellie McLean won, Glengary Patchen second, Primer third. Best time, 2:46.

One mile dash, weight for age, purse $200—Barnadillo won, Pettigrew second, Tosti third. Time, 1:46½. Idaho Chief II. left at the post.

Half mile dash, weight for age, purse $150—Beautiful Girl won, Carabel second, Eldred third.

Onward Made a Fortune for Col. Pepper.

The death of Onward recalls the early history of his career and the struggles of his former owner, Col. R. P. Pepper, together with his ultimate success, which was financially the greatest of any breeder that ever lived in America, writes Hawley in the Kentucky Stock Farm. Onward was taken to South Elkhorn Farm at a time when the business affairs of his owner was somewhat involved. In fact, I have frequently heard him say that the stallion not only established for him a handsome fortune but helped him out of a debt that was more than he could have carried had he not found just such means as this. Onward's racing career was limited, the object of his owner being merely to prove that his horse was possessed of speed and trotting action, and while the stallion never made a great reputation as a trotter, he was known as one of the purest gaited sons of George Wilkes, and nearly all of his get were like him in this respect. Colonel Pepper was forced to wait several years before he profited by his judgment in securing the son of George Wilkes and old Dolly, yet he never lost faith in his horse, and when the rich vein of speed was finally struck and the boom in Onwards was fairly begun, the Colonel owned so many of his get that he reaped a rich harvest. The first of his get to trot in 2:30 was the chestnut mare Emulation, at that time owned by Kalamazoo Farm, and this record was followed in quick succession by numerous youngsters, among these being the sensational filly Hourie, whose racing ability, speed and great beauty attracted attention to her sire, and for the succeeding five or six years South Elkhorn Farm reaped a golden harvest. I know from what Colonel Pepper told me himself, and from having seen his books that the stallion Onward brought directly considerably over a quarter of a million dollars to the fortune of his owner. He brought the family from straightened circumstances to positive affluence, and in addition to the material benefits that he brought to the man that first pinned his faith in him, the stallion founded a family that is in my judgment destined to be, if it is not already, the greatest of any of the sons of George Wilkes.

The Lameness in Horses.

Among the causes of lameness are weakly conformation of bones, muscles, etc., tissues being too frail to stand the strain; the fetlock may be too long, causing an extra strain on the tendons; the hock may be too angular, predisposing the animal to curb, or too straight up and down, predisposing to spavin; the hoof may show too high a heel, favoring contraction; or too low a heel, favoring corns; punctures, bruises, inferior shoeing—that is, fitting a shoe while too hot; having the shoe press upon the sole instead of the walls; overtaxing muscles, tendons and ligaments by pulling a heavy load over rough and heavy roads, constant jerking and blows from the wagon pole and harness—all these are causes of lameness. How to discover when a horse is lame or where it is lame is not so easy a matter as some may imagine. It is best to observe the animal first standing. If the horse points persistently—that is, places the foot in front of the normal position—the lameness is very apt to be below the fetlock. If the knee is affected it is often kept in a bent condition, while in shoulder and fetlock lameness the toe generally rests upon the ground. After examining the horse standing, allow it to go in a slow trot to and from the observer, holding the halter strap about a foot and a half from the head. Watch carefully the horse's head and ears while trotting forward. It will attempt to protect the lame leg by throwing the most of its weight on the sound one, and if the lameness is in front will nod the head when the weight is thrown upon the sound one. When the animal trots away, if the lameness is behind, it will attempt to protect the lame leg by throwing its weight heavier on the sound one. Having determined which leg is lame, the next thing is to locate the seat of the lameness. If there is any doubt about whether the animal is using its legs properly, take a sound animal and trot it up and down, comparing its action with those of the lame one. Shoulder lameness is evident by limited action of the entire shoulder. The animal seems anxious to keep stationary and in bringing the leg forward does so by an outward swinging motion. The horse that is knee-lame aims to keep the knee as stiff as possible and in moving the leg forward brings the shoulder muscles into play. The leg is advanced in a dragging manner, the toe hardly leaving the ground and the leg is bent as little as possible. Fetlock lameness is manifested by a short, jerky step, the animal stepping on the toe or often hopping on three legs. Lameness caused by soreness or enlarged tendons is similar to shoulder lameness, and is best examined with the animal at rest, as then the swelling, heat or pain is generally detected along the course of those parts. It is more difficult to diagnose foot lameness. The best thing is to pick up the foot and tap it lightly with a hammer and notice the flinching when the sore spot is touched.

Horses for the Export Trade.

Within the past few weeks several foreign buyers have put in their appearance in the leading Western American horse markets and the ever recurring question comes up as to how horses should be "fixed up" to best suit their trade. It seems that some men have a perfect mania for trimming and clipping their horses before sending them to market, but such policy never wins with either export or domestic professional dealers. The fact is, that if a horse comes to market all trimmed up and docked, foretop shaved neatly off and mane pulled the dealers at once, rightly or wrongly, jump to the conclusion, no matter how fresh he may be, that he is second hand somewhere, somehow, and while they will pay a price for him (or any other horse for that matter) they will not pay as much for him as if he had come before him with all the hirsute adornments nature gave him. Naturally there is a happy medium. Buyers want to see the horses in good condition as to coat and legs, but they do not want to buy horses from which the long hair or the tail bone has been cut. It is right for every shipper to dress up his horses' legs to a certain degree, for no matter how good care he gets in the way of feed, the horses that rough it on the farm grow longer hair on their legs than a dealer wants to see there. He does not, however, want to see the legs shaven and polished to the same degree as the finished carriage or coach or saddle horses in his own stable ready for sale. He wants some evidence that he has a new subject to begin on, not some old stager which has learned bad tricks, perhaps, or one that may be affected with some recurrent disease that will not show itself until just at the wrong moment. Clean them up well, but leave the hair all on them.—Breeders Gazette.

What They Say of Sir Albert S.

It will be interesting to California horsemen to know how the Eastern turf writers view Sir Albert S. and his race at Lexington, where he won in the 2:08 class and made a record of 2:03½. The Chicago Horseman's Lexington correspondent describes the race as follows:

It was in the 2:08 class for pacers that the real sensation of the day occurred. In the early spring Millard Sanders brought over from California with him Sir Albert S. 2:08½, a gelding that had been well nigh invincible ever in California last season. He was entered in all of the 2:08 and 2:09 stakes from Detroit to Memphis and was believed by his owners and those in a position to know, to be the best one in his class. Before the bell rang, however, at Detroit he developed lameness and had to be let up on entirely. He had made two or three starts previous to this race, but had not made a creditable showing and was not taken into account by anyone when figuring on the probable winner of this event.

There were thirteen starters and out of the number Prince Direct was most thought of, selling at $50 while the field fetched $100. The fight from the moment the word was given was fast and furious and Sir Albert S., scoring in fourth position, got a length the best of the start and had the lead at the pole before a sixteenth of the distance had been covered. McHenry took time by the forelock and was in second position about a length back as the leader flew past the second furlong post in 31 seconds. The little black pony had his nose at Sir Albert S.'s girth as they passed the half in 1:01, and they raced to the three-quarter pole in 1:32 on nearly even terms. Up around the upper turn a big bay horse was seen to flash out of the bunch, although the leaders were going at nearly a two-minute clip at the time. He came so fast that the others looked to be stopping, and everybody commenced to inquire as to the identity of the horse. When the three headed into the stretch it was discovered that the horse was Nervolo, with Charley Dean up. McHenry evidently saw that he was beaten and before the seven-eighths was reached he had stopped driving Prince Direct. The real fight for the heat then centered between Sir Albert S. and Nervolo. It was a great finish between the two. The mile was in 2:03½ and Sir Albert S. won by an open length.

The fight for the second and final heat was between these same two horses. Their great effort in the first heat took much of their speed away, still they possessed enough to make the balance of the field look somewhat second-class. Sir Albert S. again won, the time being 2:06½. While the Californian won, it must be remembered that he had been many miles below 2:08, while the other horse, Nervolo, started out a comparatively green horse the present season and for this reason his showing is the greater of the two. His present record is 2:07½, and it is a question if there is any horse eligible to the 2:08 class at the present time that can give him a beating.

The correspondent of the Chicago Horse Review gave his account of the race in the following language:

Sir Albert S., the much touted California pacer, made good to-day for the first time this season. Millard Sanders had made the claim that 2:04 was not too fast, when the son of Diablo 2:09½ was in condition. The race was the 2:08 class, in which thirteen started. Little Prince Direct was favored at $50 to $100. In later selling Nervolo was a second choice and Sir Albert S. unthought of. His price in the books for the first heat was 4 and 5 to 1, and Millard Sanders is said to have taken a heavy chunk of it. The pace was furious from the start. Sir Albert was out in front before the turn was reached and McHenry followed with Prince, while Dean came from three lengths back at the score and was just behind the leaders at the quarter, which was stepped in 31 seconds. In the same position they passed the half in 1:01 and scudded around to the three quarters in 1:32. The balance of the field were half a distance behind. Prince Direct fell back at the head of the stretch and Sir Albert and Nervolo continued the fight. The drive was a hard one and Sanders' horse landed a neck to the good in 2:03½. Nervolo was timed separately from wire to wire in 2:03. Pinchem Wilkes was third five lengths back. This corking heat was reckoned as likely to stop the leading pair, but the result proved that they outclassed their field. They tied up again in the second and raced all the way. Ten yards from the wire Sir Albert had a slight lead. Then he faltered for an instant and but for Sanders' skillful catch might have been beaten. The time was 2:06½.

A Two Year Old Breaks a Record.

The fastest time made at five and a half furlongs by a running horse on a straight-away track up to the 21st of this month was made by Tormentor, a six year old carrying 121 pounds. This record was made in 1893 at Morris Park. On the 21st of this month, the two year old, Plater, with 107 pounds up, lowered this record three and one-half seconds. It was at the same track and he ran the race in 1:02½. Plater is a brown gelding by Henry of Navarre, dam Invermay by imp. Mortimer, second dam by Lexington.

Los Angeles Meeting.

On account of the muddy track there was no harness racing on Friday, October 24th, five running races making up the program. The results were as follows:

Running, five and a half furlongs—Fine Shot won, Jennie Hughes second, Miss Dividend third. Time, 1:09½. Nullah, Senora Caesar, Castaine, Disturber and Mountain Queen also ran.

Running, seven furlongs—King Dellis won, The Miller second, Jim Gore II third. Time, 1:39¼. Expedient and Ingo also ran.

Running, one mile and a sixteenth—Filibuster won, Loyal S. second, Mont Eagle third. Time, 1:49. Windward, El Pilar and Capistrano also ran.

Running, one mile, handicap—Lodestar won, Flush of Gold second, Albert Enright third. Time, 1:42½. February also ran.

Running, five furlongs—Florinel II. won, Dole Margaret second, Montezuma third. Time, 1:02. Royal F., Galea, Pilon, Classic and Meteoro also ran.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 25.

Two harness races were on the program at Los Angeles last Saturday, one of which, the 2:18 trot, took seven heats to decide. There were five starters and four of them, Zambra, McKenna, Princess and Lady Fair, are about as evenly matched a quartette in point of speed as can be found in California. They can trot heats right around 2:20 all the afternoon but can't beat that time very much unless all the conditions are favorable. This is good time for the Los Angeles track and equal to 2:18 on a good trotting course.

The first heat in this race on Saturday went to Mr. J. B. Iverson's mare Princess in 2:19½, after which Bunch landed Lady Fair first two heats in 2:20½ and 2:19. Then Ward won a heat with McKenna in 2:20½, and Zambra had to win the next heat or go to the stable. He not only won it, but got three in succession and won the race. Walter Maben's mare Ama A. acted badly and was distanced in the third heat.

The match race between Dictatress, Robert I. and Harry J. was finished in the shortest possible time, the little chestnut daughter of Dictatus making it three straight. Vance gave her a splendid drive in this race, keeping her back until entering the stretch and then sending her to the front. Her first heat in 2:13 was as good as 2:11 over a good track. Robert I. was second each time.

The five running races, which completed the program, were good contests and the betting was the heaviest of the meeting. The summaries:

Trotting, 2:18 class, purse $500.

Running, six and a half furlongs—Mythrox won, Legal Maxim second, Quidado, third. Time, 1:23¾. Cow Boy, News Gatherer, Disturber and Wieland also ran.

Running, five and a half furlongs—Idogo won, Del Vista second, Tompion third. Time, 1:09. Mike Rice, Dwight Way, Altara, Great Mogul and Delia Conners also ran.

Running, one mile and a quarter, Santa Anita handicap—Frank Woods won, Lodestar second, Morinel third. Time, 2:08. Ulloa also ran.

Running, six furlongs, Hotel Rosslyn handicap—Golden Lights won, Straggler second, Annie Max third. Time, 1:13½. Troy and Malaspina also ran.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 27.

Not a favorite finished in front at Los Angeles on Monday and the books kept nearly all the money that was played, which was considerable. The 2:16 pace, which opened the program, was a split heat affair, but was of very poor class, as the time varied from 2:18 to 2:26. The summaries:

2:16 pace, three in five.

Time—2:20½, 2:18, 2:23, 2:26, 2:23½.

Running, five and a half furlongs—Nora w n, Dr. Shorb second, Blue Miracle third. Time, 1:09. Black Thorn, Black Orphan, Vigoroso, Felicitas S and Miss Jackson also ran.

Running, one mile and fifty yards—Hallett's won, Frank Pearce second, Expedient third. Time, 1:45. Windward and Mont Eagle also ran.

Running, five furlongs—Senora Caesar won, Troy second, Roltaire third. Time, 1:02. Royal F., Nona B, Gypsy Boy, Cora Getz and Miss Dividend also ran.

Running, seven furlongs—February won, Golden Light second, Albert Enright third. Time, 1:27¼. Meehanus also ran.

Running, six and one half furlongs—Claudator won, Montana Peeress second, Ingo third. Time, 1:21¼. Mike Rice, Tizona, Dwight Way and La Calma also ran.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 28.

The 2:16 class trot, which opened the program on Tuesday, proved a good race, but little attention was paid to it by the crowd of regulars which now visit the track daily to gamble on the running events. It took six heats to decide which horse was entitled to first money, Briney K. by Strathway outlasting his field. Foxy Mac won two heats, but had to be drawn on account of lameness. Summaries.

Trot, 2:16 class.

Running, seven furlongs—El Piloto won, Valmar second, Jim Roberts third. Time, 1:29½. Yguacio, Ulm, Cowboy and Colonel Smith also ran.

Running, five furlongs—Mimo won, Isabelita second, Tom Mitchell third. Time, 1:01. No other starters.

Running, seven furlongs—Loyal S. won, Filibuster second, El Pilar third. Time, 1:28½. Castake, Elfonse and Legal Maxim also ran.

Running, five furlongs—Jennie Hughes won, Roltaire second, Fine Shot third. Time, 1:01. Del Vista, Florinel II, El Karo, Miss Culver and Meteoro also ran.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 29.

The 2:17 class trot was the only harness race on Wednesday and it was a special with four starters—horses that had been meeting regularly every few days at the meeting. There were four heats to this race and all were below 2:20, showing that there was some driving done. Lee Rose's gelding Zambra won the last three heats after Hopper had taken one heat. The harness race is always called at 1 o'clock each day, which is a little too early for the crowd to reach the track, and this, together with the fact that the bookmakers do not care to lay odds on the harness races, and the management looks upon these contests as a sort of necessary evil, makes the trotting and pacing events occupy the same position at Los Angeles this year that a poor relation does at a rich man's Thanksgiving dinner. The races will end on Saturday of this week, and the track will be occupied by the Los Angeles Driving Club during the interim between the close of this meeting and the opening of the running meeting in January. There will be several matinees and there is no doubt but large crowds will attend and attest the popularity of harness racing without books or other betting in Los Angeles. The summaries of Wednesday's races are as follows:

Trot, 2:17 class.
Hopper, br g, by McKinney.....(C F Bunch) 1 2 3 3

Running, five furlongs—Pilon won, Quidada second, Tompion third. Time, 1:00½. Miss Dividend, Nona B, Altara and Gypsy Boy also ran.

Forty Day Meeting for Los Angeles.

The Los Angeles Racing Association, of which Mr. J. W. Brooks is manager, has decided to give a forty days racing meet at Los Angeles beginning some time in January next and continuing through March. Mr. Brooks expressed himself as follows to a Los Angeles newspaper reporter the other day, when speaking of the meeting which closes there to-day:

"I am well satisfied with the results and am more confident than ever that racing in Los Angeles can be made a success. We have had splendid crowds, good support, and the best people in the city have attended the races and assisted in making the meeting a success. I do not think we will make a great deal of money this time; in fact if we break even I shall be satisfied, and I feel certain we will at least do this. We are arranging for a running race meet to open in January to last through March, when I think we will make enough to warrant greater efforts next year."

Mr. Brooks has decided to take up his permanent residence in Los Angeles and has purchased a home in West Twenty-third street, between Grand avenue and Figueroa street.

Mr. Brooks has taken a five years lease of Agricultural Park for the association he represents. He intends to improve the entire plant, expects to have the infield planted to grass for polo grounds or a football field and contemplates repainting the stand and possibly moving it back far enough to allow abundant space in front.

One Bottle Caustic Balsam Can Do Wonders.

RIDGEWAY, IA., Jan. 22, 1902.

The Lawrence-Williams Co., Cleveland, O.

Will you please be kind enough to mail me full directions for using GOMBAULT'S CAUSTIC BALSAM? I purchased a bottle last summer and have lost the directions. I am a horse trainer, and have used the Balsam on two cases, one of splint on a valuable pacing filly and on a bad ankle on a black pacer that I drove last year. The result could not be better, and I still have enough of the remedy left to cure all the lame horses in this county. I am a great admirer of your remedy. CAAS. DOTY.

Charles Caffrey 1043, son of General Knox 140, dam Rosalind 2:21½ by Abdallah 15, is still able to perform stud service although foaled twenty-seven years ago. Charles Caffrey is perhaps the only Western stallion now living with the unique record of having sired the champions of three States. He is the sire of Giles Noyes 2:05½ (inbred to Caffrey), holder of race record for Nebraska-bred harness horses. Askey 2:08½, champion Kansas-bred trotter, was sired by son of Charles Caffrey. Louise Jefferson 2:09½ (wagon record), by son of Caffrey, is the fastest Colorado-bred trotter.

COLT STAKES are the life of the business of breeding trotters and pacers. No matter how great a colt one may breed, nor how great a demand there may be for speed, the value of every colt is enhanced by his being well staked. It stands to reason that a buyer will pay more for a promising colt that has a chance to win first money in a large stake than for one equally as promising that has not that earning capacity. Outside of the financial profit, however, what breeder is there that does not get more satisfaction out of the glory of winning a stake than he does from the money won. The Pacific Breeders Futurity, No. 3, which is for the foals of mares bred in 1902, is guaranteed to be worth $6000 and should have a larger entry list than was received for either No. 1 or No. 2. Both these stakes are great successes so far as the money now in the hands of Treasurer N. T. Smith, of the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association, is concerned, and when the two year old divisions of No. 1 are trotted and paced next year an interest will be started that will increase year after year until the Pacific Breeders Futurity will become a classic, and we believe in time increase in value to three or four times its present amount. We would impress upon the mind of every stallion owner on this Coast that the get of his horse should be well represented in the stake to close December 1st. As an instance of how the winning of a stake will bring the sire of the winner into prominence, take the Occident of this year at Sacramento. Nushagak was a rather obscure horse until that day when his son Aristo showed his heels to the crowd of high class three year olds that started against him, but when the race was over there were inquiries on every side as to how Nushagak was bred, who owned him and what sort of a horse he was. And before the fair was over several high class mares had been booked to him and he will make a heavy season this year, as breeders do like to patronize the sires of the winners. Ask Mr. Brown, proprietor of the Walnut Grove Stock Farm, if he believes the entrance money paid by him on Nushagak's get in the Occident Stake was a good investment, leaving the money won entirely out of the question. No one knows what stallion will be the sire of the winner of the first Breeders Futurity, but it will be easy to name stallions whose get will not win it, as they have not been entered. No stallion owner should prevent his stallion from siring stake winners by failing to enter or to induce others to enter his get in the stakes offered. The Pacific Breeders Futurity is one of the most liberal stakes ever devised and the cost of making all the payments is comparatively small. We ask readers to carefully peruse the conditions of this stake as published in our advertising columns this week and to make an entry if they are owners who have bred mares this year.

SEEKERS after well trained, well bred, stylish and fast trotting horses and mares have had very few opportunities to purchase them at auction in California. Whenever horses show speed and are bred "in the purple" the owners have been induced to ship them East to the large auction sales, thus depriving the horsemen here of purchasing, and forcing them to pay high prices at private sale. No one knows this better than Mr. C. L. Griffith, of this city, and notwithstanding the numerous letters he has received by Eastern auctioneers to ship his select string of exceedingly well bred horses to them, he has decided to sell them in this city and has selected next Thursday as the date and the place they are to be sold in is the Occidental Horse Exchange. Among those offered are daughters and sons of the great Robt. McGregor 2:17½, Nutwood 2:18½, Guy Wilkes 2:15½, Altamont 2:26, Chas. Derby 2:20, Piedmont 2:17½, Directum 2:05½, Direct 2:05½, Lakeland Pilot, Waldstein 2:22 and Diablo 2:09½. The breeding on the maternal side of these individuals can hardly be surpassed. Every one offered is thoroughly broken (one has a pacing record of 2:15½, has shown a two-minute clip for a quarter), and to all classes of buyers, road drivers, horse trainers and breeders this is a sale which appeals to them. There are mares in foal to Bonnie Direct 2:05½, the handsomest and purest gaited, as well as the best bred son of the mighty Direct 2:05½, while one, Bonnie Derby by Chas. Derby 2:20 out of Bon Bon 2:26 (dam of Bonnie Direct 2:05½, etc.) by Simmons 2:18, is in foal to McKinney 2:11½. Has anyone got a better bred mare than she? Besides these, the wonderful mare Twilight 2:18½ by Noonday. She was second to Petigru in 2:15½ this year; Dolly Gray, a mare well known on the speed track, trial 2:10, perfectly sound; Jasper by Dictatus 2:17, Teddy by Directum, a well matched team of trotters by Steve Whipple 2:12, the fastest black pacer in California, and a number of others that must be sold without reserve. The sale will commence promptly at 10:30 and Mr. Layng, the auctioneer, says that he thinks they will all be disposed of by 12:30. Send for catalogue.

ANOTHER OF THOSE SCHEMES of the wicked trotting horse people was nipped in the bud by the officials of the Los Angeles Racing Association Thursday. It was in the 2:15 class trot, and "Kid" Green was the accused party. After winning the first heat of the race in 2:17 with Arketa, he was last in the following heat in 2:19. The judges fined him $50 and closed up the mutual box so that the trick could not be worked again and Arketa won the next two heats in 2:15½ and 2:18 without getting tired. It is one of the pleasing features of this meeting that the judges have been so prompt to stop anything that looked like a job in any of the trotting or pacing events, and they are to be complimented for their keen watchfulness and careful protection of the public. There has been no occasion seemingly to declare bets off or kick up any muss over the running races, as the running horse owners, trainers and jockeys are "all honorable men" and as one of the Los Angeles papers stated the other day, "The racing has been clean throughout the meeting, without a suspicion of fraud in the running events." It is to be hoped that the good work will go on and that at the close of the meeting every wicked trotting horse man will see the error of his ways and resolve hereafter to drive in that straight and narrow path so carefully followed by the running contingent, even though the path be harrowed pretty deep and the going is rather heavy.

SENSATIONAL AND INACCURATE stories have been published in the daily press of this city during the past week in relation to the illness of the veteran driver Orrin A. Hickok, who is now an inmate of the Lakeside Hospital, at Cleveland, Ohio. As was published in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN several months ago, Mr. Hickok was taken ill at Cleveland last summer after reaching the Glenville track with Col. J. C. Kirkpatrick's horses Clipper 2:06 and Thornway, which were entered all through the Grand Circuit. Mr. Hickok's illness became so serious that he was removed to the hospital mentioned and was looked after by President H. M. Hanna and other members of the Cleveland Driving Club. Since then the mind of the once great reinsman has become affected and it is not likely that he will ever be well again. A sad feature of the case is that Mr. Hickok is entirely without means, although a few years since he was in comfortable circumstances, but there is no likelihood of his suffering for the necessary medical treatment or nursing to make him as comfortable as possible in his declining days. Mr. Hickok counted among his intimate friends many of the wealthiest and most generous men in the trotting horse business and they can be depended upon to see that he is supplied with all that he requires.

THE SECOND PAYMENT of $5 is due to-day on the entries in the Stanford Stake of 1904, for foals of 1901. This stake closed June 1st this year and those having entries should not overlook the date of this payment, but should send the amount, $5, to Secretary Jackson of the State Agricultural Society to-day.

TONS OF HAY ARE WASTED in California every year by feeding it to stock uncut. Baker & Hamilton advertise in this journal the Ross feed-saving implements and stock owners will do well to look into the merits of these machines. The cost of one can be saved before spring and the condition of all animals fed be improved besides.

Jackson's Napa Soda is sold in every city, town and hamlet in the State.

THE ATTENTION OF HORSEMEN is called to the fact that a number of valuable stakes offered by the Brighton Beach Racing Association will close on Saturday of this week. The events are the $10,000 Brighton Junior Stakes, the $5000 Neptune Stakes and the $5000 Venus Stakes, all for two year olds and to be run in 1903; and the $10,000 Brighton Derby, the $5000 Iroquois Stakes and the $5000 Brighton Oaks, all for three year olds and to be run in 1904. The Venus Stakes and the Brighton Oaks are for fillies of their respective years. In this stake offering owners of yearlings should find much to interest them. Entries should be addressed to the Racing Secretary, Brighton Beach Racing Association, No. 215 Montague street, Brooklyn.

Dr. P. O. O'Rear, of Indianapolis, last week bought of a Kansas City gentleman, through Budd Doble, the high-class trotting mare, Miss Jessie 2:13½, by Gossiper 2:14½, son of Simmons 2:28, dam Leonor (dam of Jenny Mc. 2:09), by Dashwood 14962, son of Legal Tender; second dam Durferine (dam of Aimee 2:24½), by Echo 1162. Dr. O'Rear bought Miss Jessie for the express purpose of breeding her to McKinney 2:11½, and what race horses this union should produce.—Western Horseman.

There is a little three year old here in California that is a sample. His name is Cuate and his record is 2:18. He is a twin and if it is true that "twins never amount to much," as some horsemen will tell you, a single foal from Miss Jessie by McKinney should come near being the two-minute trotter.

The Doctrine of Heredity.

American Sportsman.]

Wooster, Ohio, is a university town, hence it is in the alert environment of deep study. Evidently a student of human destiny as well as a "book worm" of the ancient classics, writing from the dizzy sanctuary on the hill, wants to know why it is, if our much vaunted doctrine of heredity is true, that no great American statesman has ever reproduced himself, and why none of the great English poets have ever produced a poet.

This is not hard to explain without fracturing our theory of heredity. It is biological law that human beings, same as animals, transmit characteristics to their offspring. The claim that mental attributes are not transmitted with the certainty of physical qualities, may be well founded, but in all human history the experiment has never been tried. The ancient Spartans bred men and women, as we are now breeding horses, to produce supreme physical perfection. And they were successful. But no people or race at any period of the world's history, has ever attempted to breed for mental attributes.

There has never been a rule formulated for mating the sexes with a view to improve mental forces. Perhaps a potent cause, why no distinguished American statesman (except President Martin Van Buren and old John Adams), ever produced a great son is because none were ever mated to a great dame. Geo. Washington married a woman with two children, and he must have thought that two were enough, or else he was too busy trying to save his country to even think about posterity. But old John Adams, who was married to a woman of brains and quality, produced John Quincy Adams, a much greater man than his sire.

Why Shakespeare, Chaucer, Pope, Byron, Spencer or Burns never produced a poet is easily explained. Not one was mated to a woman with any poetic instincts. And Gray, Collins, Goldsmith and Shenstone were never married. Dryden, for instance, married Lady Elizabeth Howard, a wee-faced votary of fashion, who never had a thought above her bust. Sir Walter Scott, in discussing this wife of the poet, Dryden, says: "She had not intellect enough to appreciate her husband's poetry, nor good nature sufficient to overlook his infirmities."

John Milton, who attempted poetic visions in "Paradise Lost," married a romping country lass with a mind only distressed with a great mental vacuity, and she and John, failing to harmonize, separated.

To sum it up short, the human race is not being bred on scientific lines like the horse tribe, hence one cannot expect like results.

The Best Ever.

The harness racing season of 1902 closed with the meeting at Memphis. Although rain interfered with the sport to an unusual extent, it nevertheless has been the most successful year which the trotters and pacers have ever had. More money was hung up by the big racing associations than in any previous year and the time made in the class racers averaged faster than that made during any previous season. This shows that systematic methods in breeding are constantly improving the speed of the trotting horse. The element of luck is being to a large extent eliminated. In the old days the great performers were largely the result of accident, but a study of the breeding of almost all of the sensational performers of the year shows that they are the result of thought and judgment by their breeders.

With the increased earning capacity of trotters and pacers the value of first class racing material has greatly increased, as has also that of breeding stock and untied youngsters. This is bound to be of great benefit to the small breeders and farmers, particularly in that section of the country where the trotting turf is on a secure basis. In England and Continental Europe, the benefit which the turf is to a large number of people is appreciated, and instead of antagonizing racing they foster it.—Boston Courier.

Memphis Results.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., October 24—Dan Patch failed in his attempt to lower the world's mark of 1:59½ at the trotting park this afternoon. The champion got away after scoring once, accompanied by a runner and stepped the first quarter in 0:29½. Up the backstretch he moved like a machine and the half was passed in 0:59½. A shout of approval went up from the crowd and the next quarter was watched with anxious interest. The time, 1:30, was disappointing. Turning into the stretch McHenry urged the pacer on, but Dan Patch tired perceptibly and the wire was reached in 2:01 flat. It was said that the condition of the track on the backstretch was not satisfactory and Dan Patch will probably make another effort to reduce the record next week. Summary:

The De Soto, three year olds, purse $3000—Gail Hamilton won two straight heats in 2:12½, 2:11½. John Mc, Ilive and Bugle also started.

The Gayoso, 2:12 trot, purse $2000—Walnut Hall won the third and fourth heats in 2:09½, 2:11½. Miss Whitney won the second heat in 2:07½. Chase won the first heat in 2:09½. Van Sandt and Aggie Medium also started.

The Bluff City, two year old trot, purse $2000—Hilgar beat Fannie Summers in two straight heats. Time—2:28½, 2:16½.

Trot, 2:10 class, to wagon, amateur drivers—Ida Highwood won the second and third heats in 2:10½, 2:13. Louise Jefferson won the first heat in 2:10. Mabel Onward also started.

Pacing, 2:10 class, to wagon, amateur drivers—Daisy Fields defeated Joseph in two straight heats. Time—2:17½, 2:13½.

Dan Patch to beat world's pacing record of 1:59½ (McHenry). Time—0:29, 0:59½, 1:30, 2:01.

MEMPHIS, October 25—Another world's record for stallions was announced from the judges' stand at the Memphis trotting track to-day when the bay stallion Nervolo paced two miles in 4:25½. The horse was accompanied by a runner over the entire course, and was cheered to the echo when the figures were hung out, Summary:

Special trot to wagon—Imogene defeated Franker in two straight heats in 2:12½, 2:13½.

Trotting, 2:16 class, purse $1000—McKinley won the third and fourth heats in 2:10½, 2:12. Beldia won the second heat in 2:11. Lady Constantine won the first heat in 2:12½. Fall Frye, Tony W., Dr. Strong, Billy Foster Boy, Joymaker, Astronomer and Jurash also started.

Pace, 2:10 class, $1000—Gentry won two straight heats in 2:08½, 2:07½. Home Circle, Lou Vaughn, Josh, Tommy Mack, Dora Delphie, Captain Potter, Balmy L., Carlo M. and Garnetta also started.

Free for all pace, purse $1500—Prince Alert won two straight heats in 2:02½, 2:03½. Harold H. and Dan R. also started.

The Cotton stakes, 2:14 class, pace, $2000—Direct Hal won two straight heats in 2:05, 2:04½. Dr. Madera, Carl Wilkes, Prince Direct, Rosebud and Stranger O. also started.

John A. McKerron, to beat 2:06½ (Devereaux)—Time, 2:05½.

Nervolo, b s, to beat 4:30½, two miles, pacing (Deahn)—Time by quarters, 0:35½, 1:09½, 1:42½, 2:16, 2:48½, 3:21½, 3:54, 4:25½.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., October 27—The special match race for $12,000 a side between the pacers, Prince Alert and Sir Albert S., one heat at half a mile, resulted in an easy victory for the former at the Memphis Driving Park to-day in the remarkable time of 0:57½. This establishes a new world's record for this distance in a race, beating the former time by 2½ seconds.

The contest was not satisfactory in all of its details. After scoring half a dozen times the horses got away from the half-mile pole in perfect alignment. Sanders immediately sent Sir Albert S. forward and the son of Diablo led Prince Alert by two lengths. At the quarter pole Sanders increased his lead by three lengths and the timers hung out 0:28½ for the quarter. Making the turn for home Sir Albert S., still in commanding lead, broke badly, and Prince Alert, coming from behind like a piece of machinery, forged to the front and won by three lengths. Many horsemen expressed the opinion that had the California horse kept his feet the result would have been different and the time reduced at least a quarter of a second. The former record for a mile was 1:00½, held by Audubon Boy. Summary:

The Masuma, 2:30 trot, purse $2000—Maxine won the second and third heats in 2:08½, 2:12½. Chase won the first heat in 2:08½. The Questor, Baron de Shay and Betsy Tell also started.

The Queen's cup, free for all pacing mares, purse $1000—Fanny Dillard won two straight heats in 2:05½, 2:05½. Little Squaw, Edith W. and Lottie Smart also started.

2:09 trot, purse $1000—Ferenow won two straight heats in 2:07½, 2:08. Tilly Young, Belle Kuser, Wilque, Miss Whitney and Palm Leaf also started.

Special match, pacing, half a mile dash, one heat—Prince Alert, b g, by Crown Point (Demarest) beat Sir Albert S., br g, by Diablo (Sanders). Time, by quarters—0:28½, 0:57½.

Memphis gold cup, valued at $5000, free for all trot to wagon, amateur drivers—Lord Derby won in two straight heats. Time—2:08½, 2:08½. The Monk also started.

MEMPHIS, October 28—Cresceus failed in his attempt to-day to lower his former mark of 2:02½, trotting the mile in 2:05½. The weather was too cold for comfort, and a strong breeze was blowing directly down the back stretch. Before Cresceus made his appearance it was announced from the judges' stand that record-breaking time was out of the question, but that Cresceus would do his best. Dan Patch, the pacer, also made an effort to reduce the world's mark of 1:59½, but failed, the mile being paced in 2:01½. Summary:

Pace, 2:10 class, to wagon—Dr. Monical won two straight heats in 2:09½ and 2:09½. Major Muscovite, Gold Brick and Garnetta also started.

Pace, 2:13 class, purse $1000—Gentry won the second and third heats in 2:09½ and 2:12½. Cubanola won the first heat in 2:08½. Cousin Madge, Brown Heels, Orin B., Garnet, Olive Wood, George Starr and Rex B. also started.

Trot, 2:24 class, purse $1000—The Dean won two straight heats in 2:20½ and 2:19½. Hugh Wynne, Director Bell and Edgewood Belle also started.

Trot, 2:12 class, purse $1000—A. J. D. won two straight heats in 2:13 and 2:10½. El Milagro, Invader, Baron Bell, Judge Cullen, Gold Dust Maid, Spotty M., Oxford Chimes, Allen and Billy Foster Boy also started.

Against time—Dan Patch, to beat 1:59½ (Myron McHenry). Time by quarters, 0:29½, 1:00½, 1:31½, 2:01½.

Cresceus to beat time of 2:02½ (George H. Ketcham). Time by quarters, 0:31, 1:02½, 1:34½, 2:05½.

MEMPHIS, October 29.—Two world's records were reduced and another tied at to-day's meeting of the Memphis Trotting Association track. The first special event was the attempt of Direct Hal and Prince Direct to pace a mile as a team against the record of 2:08½. The pair were driven by the veteran Geers, and when the time, 2:05½, was hung out the crowd gave the stars an ovation. The first quarter was paced in 32½, the half in 1:04 and the three-quarter pole was passed in 1:34½. Onward Silver next appeared to beat his previous two-mile trotting record of 4:28½, but he could only tie it. Nervolo was sent against 4:25½, the pacing record for stallions at two miles. Doane handled his horse well, and at the end a full second was chipped off the old figure. Prince Alert failed to beat the gelding's pacing record of 2:00½, finishing the mile in 2:01½. Summary:

The Emerald purse, $3000, 2:09 pace, three heats, one mile, one mile and an eighth and one-half mile—Carl Wilkes won the second and third heats in 2:20, 1:00½. Sir Albert S. won the first heat in 2:04½. Dan R., New Richmond and Casino also started.

Free for all trot, purse $1500—Chain Shot won two straight heats from The Abbot in 2:08½, 2:10½.

Trot, 2:30 class, purse $1000—Hugh Wynne won the second and third heats in 2:18½, 2:16½. Director Bell won the first heat in 2:18½. The Dean and La France also started.

Trot, 2:11 class, to wagon—McKinley won the second and third heats in 2:12½, 2:13½. Imogene won the first heat in 2:12. Frances B. and Franker also started.

Against time—Direct Hal and Prince Direct to beat 2:08½, pacing (Geers). Time—0:32½, 1:04, 1:34½, 2:05½.

Onward Silver to beat 4:28½, two miles, trotting (Hudson). Time—0:33½, 1:07½, 1:40, 2:13½, 2:46½, 3:20, 3:53, 4:28½.

Nervolo to beat 4:25½, pacing, two miles. Time—0:33½, 1:06½, 1:40, 2:13, 2:45½, 3:19, 3:51½, 4:24½.

Prince Alert to beat world's record (geldings), 2:00½, pacing (Cheney). Time—0:29½, 0:59½, 1:30½, 2:01½.

MEMPHIS, October 30—The fall meeting of the Memphis Trotting Association closed to-day. The association will give a matinee Friday afternoon, free to the public, at which several well-known stars will attempt to lower former records. Cresceus will trot against his record and Dan Patch and Prince Alert, pacers, will try for marks at a mile. Lord Derby was sent to-day against the world's trotting record of 2:02½, but 2:06½ was the best he could do. In the 2:06 pace, a mile-dash, the bay mare Dariel came home first in the fastest time made by a mare this year, 2:04½. Summary:

Trot, 2:08 class, one mile and a quarter dash—Lilly Young won in 2:44. Palm Leaf, Belgia, Bell Kuser and Miss Whitney also started.

Trot, 2:15 class, one mile and an eighth dash—Lauretta won in 2:31½. Hall Fry, Joy Maker, Betsy Tell and Tony W. also started.

Trot, 2:09 class, to wagon, amateur drivers—Miss

Whitney won two straight heats from Prince Orange in 2:11½ and 2:10½.

Pace, 2:06 class, purse $400, one mile dash—Dariel won in 2:04½, beating Little Squaw and Rosebud.

Trot, 2:12 class, one mile dash—Baron Belle won in 2:12. Lady Constantine, Wilton Boy, Darwin, Roscoe Medium, Virginia Jim, Joymaker and Spotty M. also started.

Trot, 2:16 class—Lauretta won the second and third heats in 2:14½ and 2:17½. Astronomer won the first heat in 2:13½. La France and James B. Duke also started.

Free-for-all pace to wagon; amateur drivers—Edith W. won the second and third heats in 2:07 and 2:08½. Fred S. Wedgewood won the first heat in 2:07½. Little Squaw and Sphinx S. also started.

Pace, 2:10 class, one mile—Stranger O. won in 2:09½. Home Circle, Brown Heels, Tom Mac and Lou Vaughn also started.

Lord Derby to beat 2:02½, trotting (Spear)—Time by quarters: 32½, 1:03½, 1:34½, 2:06½.

The Wilkes-Strathmore Cross.

The fact that Chase has a double cross of Wilkes blood and a daughter of Strathmore for his third dam calls attention to the large number of good performers which the Wilkes-Strathmore cross has produced. Among the new ones this year are those two sensational trotters, Rhythmic 2:08 and Baron de Shea 2:08½, both by the Wilkes Oakland Baron, out of Strathmore mares; and Chase 2:07½, who, as before mentioned, has a double Wilkes cross and a cross to Strathmore. Among the good ones sired by a direct cross of Wilkes sires on Strathmore mares are: Bumps 2:03½, Dan Cupid 2:09½, Alves 2:09½, Ithuris 2:09½, Fred W. 2:08½, Ambulator 2:09½, Kelvyn 2:11½, Edward G. 2:12½, Baronmore 2:14½, Red Strath 2:13, Colonel Strathmore 2:14½, John Henry Walmer 2:14½, Le Simmons 2:15½, Simmocolon 2:13½, Prestoria Wilkes 2:13½, Tesla 2:12½, Ambryon 2:16½, Kilda 2:14½, and a lot more with records below 2:20. Among those having both Wilkes and Strathmore blood, although not so directly, are: Sir Albert S. 2:03½, Ferenow 2:10½, Silver Coin 2:11½, Agitato 2:09, Berdina 2:10½, Owyhee 2:11, Much Better 2:07½, Little Better 2:11½, and a lot of others with fast records. If breeders had recognized the merit of the blood of Strathmore 20 years ago, he would occupy a much more prominent place in the speed tables than he now does, although, as it is, he is one of the real great sons of Hambletonian.—Horse World.

Thos. Ronan, who bred Anzella 2:06½ will arrive at Pleasanton in a few days with a car load of horses which Mr. Geo. A. Kelly, (who developed Anzella and raced her one year over east and another in California) will begin work on getting them in shape for sale and for the races next year. There are six very promising ones by Antrim 5918, sire of Anzella, and others by Alexis and Arronna. Alexis is by William L. sire of Axtell. A two year old by Alexis won the colt stake at Salem, Oregon, this year, trotting to a record of 2:26½.

Chase has had nearly as brilliant a campaign as the blind Rhythmic 2:08, and, although supposedly not as fast, has gone the little stallion three-quarters of a second better. Each started without racing experience even, let alone record, and each last fall showed around 2:10. Chase was not considered a really high-class horse earlier in the season, being lame at Brighton Beach trots and all out of kelter. Hudson's partner, Gatecomb, put in many long hours nursing the horse back to form.

Like all good things, Jackson's Napa Soda has a dozen counterfeits. Watch out!

EFFECTUAL

The most effectual remedy in use for the cure of ailments of horses and cattle is

GOMBAULT'S
CAUSTIC BALSAM

Used as a Blister or Lotion.

This preferred remedy is prepared exclusively by J. E. Gombault, ex-Veterinary Surgeon to the French Government Stud.

As a HUMAN REMEDY for Rheumatism, Sprains, Sore Throat, etc., it is invaluable. Every bottle of Caustic Balsam sold is warranted to give satisfaction. Price $1.50 per bottle. Sold by druggists, or sent by express, charges paid, with full directions for its use. Send for descriptive circulars, testimonials, etc. Address: THE LAWRENCE-WILLIAMS COMPANY, Cleveland, Ohio.

Fall Duck Shooting.

The year is waning, and November late,
Paints with its frosty brush the forest green;
Now prairie ponds and shallow sloughs are skimm'd
With the thin ice that gleams with silvery sheen;
The wildfowl now those icy haunts forsake,
To seek the running stream, the rivers deep,
Where they may gather and enjoy their feast,
And o'er the waters sweep.

By the steep banks, where swift the currents run,
Or where the open water spreads a lake,
They congregate in numbers infinite,
And with their dipping wings the surface break.
Fast by the reedy shore securely hid,
The fowlers in their boat thro' bushes peer;
They watch those circling squadrons high in air
Wheeling and poising in their fleet career

The Mallard Duck.

[MORRIS LEBBS, M. D., SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

There are about forty kinds of ducks in North America, but aside from ten or a dozen species, which are commonly hunted, the others are comparatively little known. Among the stand-bys probably the best known is the mallard or greenhead. It is known north, south, east and west, and if undisturbed would nest almost throughout its range. It has been the principal target for the gunners for ducks for over one hundred years and yet it holds its own as well as any bird that we have. It keeps up its numbers much better than many species that only visit us in the spring and fall. This is a singular fact, though amply proven, and is equaled by many other peculiarities in the distribution and supply of our game. Of course, the greenhead is gradually becoming scarcer and scarcer, which is but natural when we consider that it has been subject to persecution for generations, and yet it seems to hold its own while other species of no practical worth are growing scarce. For instance, the hooded merganser, which is unsalable because uneatable, and several other species of no particular merit, is gradually disappearing, a fact that leads us to think that there are other causes besides the destructive gun which greatly influence the growing scarcity of some birds.

The bird known as the Labrador duck, now extinct, became so before the time of the general use of shotguns, yet it is safe to say that if their utter disappearance had occurred during the last twenty years, the papers would maintain that advanced (?) civilization and the greed of gunners had caused their extinction. But this is surely not the reason, and neither is there any sensible explanation for the disappearance of many other species of birds and mammals upon this earth. Clearing of land and the drainage of lakes did not affect the Labrador duck, as it was a strictly northern species, never, so far as I can find, going far to the south and generally confining itself to the territory north of the 45th parallel.

There are several good reasons for thinking that the disappearance of the passenger pigeon is not entirely due to the interference of their worst enemy, man. After they were so badly thinned there were still countless thousands in the country and they nested in isolated pairs for some years after the laws to protect them were rigidly enforced. Still, they have continued to thin out and I have not heard of a reliable instance where a bird of this species has been seen for several years; and yet the English sparrow continues to thrive, notwithstanding that a price is placed upon its head. This detested bird is sure to become, like the rat and mouse, a cosmopolitan nuisance.

So with our ducks; there are species that continue to thrive, although greatly reduced in numbers. Most of the ducks that we find in numbers in the autumn are species that nest to the far north and only visit us in migrations; yet the greenhead nests nearly throughout its range, and commonly in all wilder districts north of the 43rd parallel; still it is about our main reliance.

The mallard generally arrives in early April, but often in March and is sometimes seen nearly all winter in the Great Lake region. The river ducks, teal, black duck, wood duck, shoveler and others of that division do not arrive as early as the deep water ducks, and neither do they remain as late; these latter often being found in winter, as the golden-eye. Still, mallards, though generally making the trip by November fifteenth, are not rarely seen in January, and sometimes in February; so that it may be said that there is not a month in the year, some seasons, when mallards may not be found as far north as the 42nd parallel.

Upon reaching us the flocks break up into pairs, for I am well satisfied that wild ducks are quite constant to their mates, and as a rule have but one attachment. Hence, it follows that the polygamous trait found in the domestic bird is the direct result of the barn-yard civilization. These isolated pairs spread out over the whole country and occupy the fresh water lakes in all not too well civilized sections. Very often a pair of greenheads will be found occupying a small interior lake when least expected, and wherever found in June and July it may be considered the best of evidence that the nest is in the immediate vicinity.

Very few sportsmen, comparatively, have found a duck's nest, and as I have discovered several, a few observations may be given. The greenhead selects its home about the middle of April, although complete sets are found by the twentieth of that month; and again I have seen young not above a week old in the middle of July. It is quite reasonable that these late dates are the result of disturbances in the earlier attempts. From seven to thirteen eggs are laid, generally ten or eleven, in a place that does not deserve the name of nest. It is more often placed upon the ground and is usually composed of grass, weed stalks and sometimes small twigs. But if the nest structure is nothing of worth, the lining is perfection. The old bird plucks the down from her breast and covers the eggs to the depth of several inches. The down, though sufficient to nearly fill a hat may be confined in a small space, and this covering is kept upon the eggs until hatched. It is not known why this down is plucked and used as a covering for the eggs, but some claim that it is used as a protection and warmth during the absence of the bird, others say that it is used for concealment, while most observers think that it answers a double purpose. This habit of covering the eggs with down is a common one with all ducks, I believe, at least it is so with the ducks' nests that I have found, and it is probably for the purpose of concealment of the eggs. But there are many points in the study of natural history which are but little understood. In considering the point of concealment we find that other birds besides the ducks follow this practice; one bird, the pied-bill grebe being a well marked example; but in this case the material that is used as a covering is not feathers but a mass of rubbish, grass and dead reeds and rushes. The duck's eggs are probably constantly covered with down, even when the bird is upon the nest; at least when the old bird leaves the nest the eggs are found to be well covered. Once when I came close to a nest when the sitter did not know of my presence, the eggs were found to be covered nicely when the female hastily left.

The mallard generally selects nesting sites in the fields and marshes along the edges of the lake, preferring situations along the borders of rank growths of grass and sedges. The nests are often found at over one hundred yards from the edge of the water and sometimes at fully a half mile distance. One nest that I found was made in the hollow end of a ten foot stub, which stood in two feet of water and quite ten feet from the shore of a lake; a most unusual situation and more nearly like the kind of a nesting site chosen by a wood duck. The down covered eleven eggs, much like the eggs of the common barn-yard bird but rather darker.

Young mallards dive and swim at once upon entering the water, and they soon learn to escape danger in the water. On a few occasions I have come upon a flock of ducklings of this kind and they were always upon a small lake. Upon a note of warning from their mother they will seem to entirely disappear. The younger the little fellows are the more solicitous the mother appears to be for their safety. When the young reach the condition known as "flappers" they are left at once to care for themselves on the first indication of danger. As they are sporting and swimming about in the cove, an observer may appear, when presto, in a moment they are all flicked out of sight. Out of the ten or a dozen that dive only two or three are seen to come up, and these appearances are found to very often scurry away. As they scuttle off with the bodies nearly all above the water they beat the surface with their tiny wings. But it is all over in a few minutes and where there was a flock of ducklings just previously there is now not a feathered or fluffy creature in sight.

It takes a duckling at least six weeks to acquire the proper use of its wings, and in the meantime it feeds upon the water and escapes most of the dangers by the use of its paddles. Ducks have many enemies, and though man is the worst in the lot, there are many furred varmints and also some feathered foes to keep the duck tribe within bounds. Members of the weasel family play havoc with the sitting bird, eggs and young. I once found a nest where the eggs were destroyed and the bird lay dead and mutilated near by.

The greenhead is an excellent table bird and a well known delicacy to all sportsmen; but there is all the difference in spring and fall birds for eating. The layer of fat which is found just beneath the skin in the fall is almost entirely lacking in the spring, and there is an absence of that gamy flavor which is so much prized. This reason alone should deter hunters from shooting birds in the spring migrations. When we add to this the common sense plea to give the ducks and all other birds a chance to nest in peace, it ought to appeal to all considerate gunners and law makers who have the protection of our game at heart. Furthermore it does appeal to all thinking men who have the welfare of their fellow men in their consideration. The ignorant ignore the principles which should regulate their actions toward posterity, and do not heed the multitude of warnings which are ringing in their ears. But there is the matter of common sense that appeals to you, my individual reader, and no matter what some other man may fail in, it does not excuse you in this relation. Two wrongs do not make a right and you are not excusable in any laxity because your neighbors and friends transgress the laws of decency and common sense. Therefore, do not let any outside matters influence you to the detriment of the remnant of our game; and no matter what state you are in remember and do not shoot game in the spring, no matter whether the laws of the locality permit it or not. Too much cannot be said on this subject as it is a matter of vital importance to us all. There is not a man of good judgement in America, who is a true economist, who fails to comprehend this question of vast importance.

In concluding this sketch a few remarks will be offered on the pursuit of this royal game bird. Ordinarily the flocks embrace from ten to twenty birds, but sometimes there are flocks of from one to five hundred, and I have been told that there are sometimes flocks of a thousand. I am sorry to relate that I know of a party shooting 480 ducks on St. Clair Flats, Mich., and all were mallards excepting 27 which were of scattering species. In localities where not too much hunted the greenhead decoys well and in flying in to settle present a perfect mark for a shot. I know of a gunner, I regret to state, shooting nine ducks as the flock sat on the water and an equal number as they arose.

Widgeon ducks are to be found in immense flocks in and around the Rio Vista district and further up through the Yolo basin. Limit bags have been shot daily by a large number of hunters. Canvasback ducks are already more in evidence than usual so early. Last Sunday near Collinsville, William Wattles bagged 11 fine birds. Bunches of "cans" were numerous on the adjacent ponds.

With the Anglers.

A most important article in the tackle outfit of the striped bass fisherman is the gaff. This implement is used to take the fish from the water when it has been reeled up to the side of the boat or to the bank of the fishing water. Gaffs of several designs and styles are used, from the home made one—a large fish hook, with the barb on or off, as the fancy or ingenuity of the owner dictates, and tied or otherwise fastened on or into the end of a handle, the whole affair procured at a very small expense of coin or labor—up to the elaborately finished and expensive telescope gaff, an implement that can be used with either a long or short handle as desired. It is the prevailing fancy of most of our bass anglers who find their principal sport in the trolling boats that a gaff with a handle not over eighteen inches long is the most convenient and accomplishes the best work. The proper use of the implement in securing the fish after it has been hooked is an art and not learned offhand, but acquired after practice that must be backed up with a quick eye and skillful wrist.

A gaff that will stow away readily and not have the big steel hook in the way and constantly in danger of impaling the owner, wounding a friend or, most important, of piercing airholes in a pair of gumboots, is a much sought-for article by the angling fraternity. Some gaffs are constructed with a screw cap to fit on the point, some have a folding device to cover the sharp end, others again are fixed so that they may be unscrewed from the handle and packed away in a leather case, this latter device having a big choice with a number of fishermen. Others again do not care to take chances of losing or mislaying one or two essential parts that are needed at a critical time and so prefer to have a gaff that is all there when wanted.

A device that has found favor with the fishing guild in another country, among the sportsmen of far away India according to the Asian, is a clever and effective adaptation, it is claimed, of the ordinary wire snare, which latter is doubtless familiar to many who as boys yanked fish out of brooks and ponds with a wire loop affixed to the end of a stick or pole.

A strong strand of steel pianoforte wire in a running slip knot is held in by means of clips to a semicircular steel or brass hoop, the hoop being attached to the end of a wooden handle or staff. The wire loop, when the lower part touches a fish, after being slipped over the tail, is instantly released and drawn tight around the fish. This device has been patented and the inventor has scored a distinct success. Some of the special advantages he claims are the following: First—The fish is not damaged or marred, as with a gaff. Second—It is much easier to use than a gaff, which latter instrument invariably requires a certain amount of practice. Third—The fish once snared can be carried anywhere by the tail, over sand, mud or high rocks, and has no power to thrash about or flop away. Fourth—This fish lander is far superior to any net for the angler, who is fishing, can use it himself as easily as a gaff, and there is nothing for the tackle to get entangled in as in a net. Fifth—It can be carried like a gaff and is also made to screw into a landing net handle. These are a few of the advantages claimed for this device for landing fish.

To use it the noose is slipped over the fish's tail up behind the dorsal fin and not in front of it, and a sharp jerk upward to the full length of the wire secures the fish. Striped bass and salmon anglers could, it was demonstrated by several of our local experts, use this newly adapted device with a degree of accuracy and satisfaction that will go a long way in the vexed question of gaffing a hooked fish and landing it safely and without a lot of incidental bother and inconvenience.

Many local salt water fishermen still find great sport with and also have brought home plenty of striped bass recently. In fact the allurements of salt water angling has diverted a number of knights of the rod from the customary fall trip to a favorite coast stream. The sport is not monopolized by a particular set or class of fisherman, but is indulged by a large number of people daily. At some fishing resorts about the bay the drop line habitues who heretofore have been content to lure the frisky rockcod from the water around the wharves and rocky embankments, now devote their entire attention to the striped bass. One incentive for the change is that the same tackle, etc., can be used for both bass and rockcod and, more inducing, is the fact that long or expensive trips are not necessary to reach a good fishing ground for indulgence in the sport.

Visit the Alameda mole and you are on most excellent bass water. The shores of Alameda bay and the mouth of the estuary are daily lined with fishermen from the "dago" with his hand-lines to the amateur sportsman with bright new and the most improved rod and tackle. Wherever you see a "dago" fishing, stay by him and you will be rewarded, as they are more familiar with the haunts of the bass in and around the bays contiguous to San Francisco than the majority of anglers.

Last Sunday anywhere from one hundred to one hundred and fifty fisherman, including women and children, were out in full force along the Alameda rock wall for a mile or so, the majority using hand-lines of the heaviest patterns with sinkers weighing from a half pound to two and three pounds in weight. Quite a number of bass were taken, many of goodly proportions, some weighing fifteen and seventeen pounds and more than a few fish were also lost through the inexperience of those handling the lines.

Going fishing and fishing are two different quantities, as was illustrated last Sunday to a mixed audience of amused striped bass fishers. A gentleman in his Sunday clothes, knickerbockers to boot, accompanied by two ladies, made his way along the rocky shore of the Alameda bay, said a well known local angler. The trio gave no intimation of their fishing aspirations so far as any of the ordinary signs denoting angling designs were apparent. One would rather have imagined that the party had simply gone over for their usual Sunday outing. Greatly to the surprise of the fishermen when the supposed lunch basket was opened there was exposed to view two lines of immense size and sinkers to match. The gentleman immediately proceeded to do business "a la dago." The ladies accompanying the would be angler had evidently been on similar trips with him and former experiences kept them a respectable distance away, out of danger from the extremely heavy weight attached to the line which he swung around his head several times in a vain attempt to get his line out. He was not as proficient as his neighbors and landed the sinker dead center in the rocks. After retrieving his slack line he found that the sinker was firm and fast. He tugged and pulled and pulled and tugged, got the "clothes-line" around his arm several times and withal could not budge the chunk of lead. At last, completely fagged out in trying to extricate the sinker from the rocks, a bystander offered his assistance and by their combined efforts the line parted. Had he tied the sinker to the link with a piece of lighter weight string he would have avoided all the worry and trouble and excitement which he caused. He, however, made another attempt and got his line away about twenty feet from where he stood, the satisfied expression on his face after this feat being most amusing to the onlooker. Needless to say that his efforts were unrewarded. His fellow fishermen were lucky indeed to land a few fish despite the commotion and noise which were seemingly necessary but laughable elements of his debut among the bass fishers.

The Raccoon straits and nearby fishing grounds are ripe for the bass angler. A number of fine fish, in prime condition and full of fight, have been caught there this week. The fish average rather large and only a few small fish have been taken. Among the lucky fishermen were Al Wilson who landed a 17 pounder on Saturday, on Sunday Messrs. Jackson and McFarland caught four fish that scaled 37 pounds—10, 12½, 8½ and 6 pounds respectively; J. Christianson made a record catch on the same day, he hooked four fish that weighed 59 pounds, the largest turned the scale at 18½ pounds. On Tuesday, Messrs. Kittle and McFarland caught three fish—2, 15½ and a 12 pounder. They left this city on the 7:30 A. M. boat and were back in town at 1:45 P. M. The same day Mr. Christianson landed two fish, one weighed 12 pounds and the other 15½ pounds. Messrs. Terry and Marcus' boat this week landed an 18½ pound and a 12 pound bass.

For striped bass fishing from the Alameda mole the tides were excellent this week; weather permitting to-morrow, the fishing should be good over there. The best time to fish there is claimed to be about two hours before high water and one hour after the tide turns; rarely is a fish taken after that time.

Last Sunday at the mole, A. C. Cunningham hooked on to a very large fish apparently, but lost it in his over anxiety to land the fish at once. The fisherman is said to be very strong in his arms—the hook broke; a little playing and the fish probably would have been landed. All there was to it, however, was a story about the usual "big 'un" that got away.

Captain Battu landed a 12½ pound bass and also a 17½ pound leopard shark. These two fish took time, patience and work to bring to gaff. Battu's inquisitiveness was rewarded in one respect, by finding a mixed lot of potatoes, carrots and clams in the shark's stomach. By the way, this find is a usual one for sharks. The vegetable debris is accounted for by the presence of all kinds of water craft, mouths of sewers, etc., in the creek; the leopard is a bottom feeder. "Bat" was under the impression possibly that the shark might have disgorged a bass that had been swallowed. This is only speculation; they do not get any live striped bass as a regular diet.

Absolutely necessary for a thorough enjoyment of the sport a strong and not too heavy line is one of the essentials for success in striped bass fishing. The favorites for our local bass fishing waters have been linen lines, those known as "cuttyhunk." All linen cuttyhunk lines are not good lines by any means. Inferior flax spun up into 18, 15 and 12 strand lines, these being nicely slicked and coated have been sold for medium prices. They do not last and are very unreliable, parting at the most unexpected and apparently uncalled for times, much to the disgust of the fisherman. We were much pleased to see in a local dealer's showcase the other day some 200 yard spools of Abbey and Imbrie's best. We know what this means, it fills a long felt want. These lines are sold for a good price, but are the cheapest in the end.

Our anglers have many ways of waterproofing and otherwise treating their lines so that they may not only last, but likewise be in good working order all the time.

The life of a first class bass line can be prolonged almost indefinitely with proper care and attention. The most important thing in looking after one's line is to thoroughly dry as soon as possible after using in salt water. A wiping also, with a dry linen cloth is not time wasted. If one wishes to do a little extra work in a good cause, a rinsing out in clear fresh water and a careful drying and wiping afterwards will do the linen line much benefit.

Many anglers dye their lines with tan bark. What particular virtue there is in this feature we are not prepared to state, this is the invariable practice of the net fishermen and they religiously believe it is beneficial for both their ordinary cotton mesh nets and the linen mesh gill nets.

For cotton lines any tar preparation is preservative and excellent; for linen lines, tar is ruinous.

Paraffining a line is generally done by melting the paraffine in a vessel and then immersing the line in the warm liquid, rapidly drawing it out and wiping the surplus paraffine away. A good rubbing of the stretched line afterwards with a piece of chamolite sets the coating well in as well as gives the line an excellent finish.

The Dog and the Law.

A brief review of how the dog has been regarded by the law in the State of Massachusetts may perhaps be of interest with the reader, as well as contain suggestions of profit with him. And the first distinction under the statutes of this State worthy of note is that drawn between the owner and the keeper of a dog. It has been decided on more occasions than one that the keeper, and not the owner, of a dog is liable for neglect to keep him properly collared, licensed and restrained, provided the keeper and owner are not one and the same person.

The justice and fairness of such a ruling is apparent at the first glance. How shall the owner of a dog which he has entrusted to the charge of another, know that he is being properly cared for? The law excuses him from this responsibility, as well as assists him in holding one commissioned with the care of his animal responsible for this attention.

As to the license itself, some interesting decisions have been handed down by the court. One is to the effect that if one purchases an unlicensed dog after the 30th of April in any year, the limit of the time allowed for taking out a license, he is not liable to any penalty for neglecting to have him licensed and numbered until the same day and month in the following year. Doubtless the same would hold good as to puppies born after the required date of licensing.

Another decision worthy of note is as to the nature of the license. The court on this occasion said that "a license to keep a yellow and white dog named Dime will not authorize the keeping of a black Newfoundland dog named Nigg," the difficulty being that the description is an essential part of the license, so that it would become void in case one dog dies and another is purchased in its place, the license being not to keep a dog, but a certain dog numbered and described.

When a dog may be regarded as "being at large," and not under the control of its owner, is a question which has received much attention in our courts. One ruling is to the effect that he is still at large if he be loose and following the person who has charge of him, through the streets of a town, at such a distance that he cannot exercise control over him which will prevent his doing mischief. A dog at play with its owner's son, upon the owner's land, has been held to be not at large, and a constable or other person who pursues him while on the land and shoots him is liable for the damage he thus causes.

As a general thing the owner of a dog is liable for the injury which he may inflict to one's person or property, but not if he venture wilfully within his reach, knowing him to be savage, or madden or tease him. Grown people are supposed to exercise more caution in these matters than children. The court has said, "The owner of a dog which has inflicted an injury on a child cannot exempt himself from the liability imposed by statute because it appears that the child did not act with the discretion and judgment of a person of mature years, but he is liable if the child was bitten while using such care as is usual with children of its age."

In order to recover damages from the owner of a dog it is not necessary to prove that he was aware of the vicious character of the animal, or that the dog was accustomed to bite, or had been known to bite on former occasions.

One of the cases decided bearing upon the liability of the owner of a dog for injuries done to property must surely prove of interest with every owner of a dog. It is, in substance, that when two or more dogs together, belonging to different persons, inflict injury upon the property of another, each owner can be held responsible only for the wrong done by his own dog, and cannot be held accountable for that of any of the others.

This case dates back to the year 1838. Some dogs had been worrying and killing sheep, and the owner of them brought suit against the owner of one of the dogs for the full amount of the damage. But the court held that it was only justice that "he should be held liable for the damage done by his dog alone, and not by the dog of another."

In still another case it was decided that if a dog owned in this State strays into another State, and there bites a person, its keeper cannot be held liable for the injury. This seems almost without just reason at first thought, but with further consideration the line of reasoning becomes evident. The plaintiff brought suit, relying on the law of Massachusetts for his justification, but the law of the place where a wrong is committed determines its penalty, and as the accident happened in New Hampshire, and no evidence was offered as to what the law of this State was as to injuries inflicted by stray dogs, the action could not be maintained.

A case of much more recent decision contains a warning which every owner of a dog should take well to heart. It affirms that if a statute exists requiring dogs to be equipped with a collar, even though licensed, a dog cannot be allowed to roam about without a collar, and an officer who finds one thus is justified in shooting it, even though he knows at the time that it is licensed. This, perhaps, may seem harsh at first, but it is simply fulfilling the requirement of law.

Many have made the mistake of imagining that they have a perfect right to appropriate as their own a dog that is not licensed and that is found at large, but such is not the case, and its actual owner can recover it, or its market value, if it cannot be produced, in an action at law.

In a general way it may be said that as a whole the dog license laws are beneficial to the owners of these animals, since they recognize and protect their rights in them.—A. K. C. Gazette.

The Boston Terrier.

A paper read before the Ladies Kennel Association of Massachusetts recently by Mrs. H. G. Vose contains some interesting data concerning a now popular breed of dogs.

The Boston Terrier made his first appearance about thirty years ago. Mr. Hooper, of Boston, bought from a Mr. O'Brien (also of Boston) the dog Judge, afterward known as "Hooper's Judge." This dog, no doubt, was imported. Judge was a cross between an English Bulldog and a Bull Terrier. He was, however, more on the bull than the terrier type. His head was square and blocky, yet he was nearly even mouthed. In this respect he resembles the modern Boston Terriers.

This dog was bred to Burnett's Gyp and from them descended Wells' Eph. This dog was bred to Tobin's Kate and from them came Barnard's Tom, the first Boston to boast of a screw tail. Of course, there were other dogs in Boston, but Barnard's Tom is the ancestor of nearly all the true Boston Terriers of to-day.

Another dog was Townsend's Sprig. From this dog descended nearly all of Mr. Goode's dogs, noted for their color and markings. Others were Hall's Max, Ben Butler, O'Brien's Ross and the dog known as the Perry dog. This little dog was imported from Scotland and weighed only six pounds. Most of these dogs were small; this is no doubt the reason that our Boston Terrier of to-day is a small dog.

The interbreeding of Tom's sons and daughters has tended to make the breed permanent; it has also tended to weaken the breed, and has made them almost an impossibility to raise.

The appearance of the Boston Terrier is that of a smooth, short coated dog, compactly built and of small stature or rather medium size. His skull should be flat and broad and the forehead free from wrinkles, stop well defined, but indented not too deep. The eyes must be far apart, and should be large and round, and of a dark color, ears small and thin; muzzle short and wide, but without wrinkles. The jaws broad and square, the teeth short and regular; the teeth should be covered when the jaws are closed. The body deep and broad of chest, the forelegs wide apart and straight and well muscled. The tail either a short, fine, tapering tail or a kinky one. Any color brindle with even white markings, blaze and face, collar, feet and chest. This is the standard according to the B. T. S. S. book, but nearly all the judges of to day are in favor of the terrier type instead of the bull type. The Boston Terrier in my opinion is an extremely difficult dog to raise. Many pups die at birth or a day or so after. Many die at six months of age and I think the only way to be certain of a Boston Terrier is to buy a full grown one.

I find my dogs are in better condition than ever, and for the last six months I have been feeding one part ground beef and three parts shredded wheat. I give it to mothers that are nursing pups and also to puppies after they are three months, starting first with just wheat. My dogs have never been sick since I started with this. I give them plenty of big bones and also a few pieces of dry stale bread at night. They have their large feed at nine in the morning. I think scraps from the table mixed in with this is also good. Sometimes I mix vegetables with it, but generally give it plain.

I give my dogs a good brushing every two or three days and a washing about every two months and their coats look a great deal better than formerly, when I washed them every fortnight.

Much has been said about clipping the ears. My experience has been that I could always sell a pup for twice as much after he was nicely trimmed than before. I think it is a wicked thing to do, but when one has to consider the almighty dollar sentiment goes to the winds. The Boston Terrier is most affectionate and intelligent, never picks a fight on the street, but can take care of himself if war is declared. They are lovely with children and I have a bitch that sits by the baby's carriage while he is asleep and takes better care of him than any nurse maid.—The American Stock-Keeper.

U. M. Damon's English Setter bitch Mar's Princess (Mars-Thier's Ruby) whelped a litter of six puppies last month to Gablian Kennels Danstone's Pride. They are a handsome and evenly marked lot of puppies. An opportunity to get a well-bred pup from this litter is noted in the classified advertisements.

Some excellently bred Great Dane puppies are offered for sale in a recent litter whelped by O. Bergsten's Maud S. to Blue Beard.

Good Collies are not lacking in the southern part of the State. It is to be regretted that there were not more entries. It was intimated that owners were somewhat reluctant to enter the lists with O. J. Albee, who beat them out last year. Quite a lot of dogs bred by Mr. Albee are in that part of the State. He was anxious to see what the southern breeders have developed, in fact, would have rather liked it, had he been turned down for one of his own breeding or the progeny of the same.

DOINGS IN DOGDOM.

Sonnet.

Sing a song of dog-handlers
And flasks full of rye—
Four and twenty Fox Terriers
Howling at the sky.
When the show was opened
They all began to sing—
Hurrah for Jack Bradshaw,
His "embonpoint" beats everything.

The annual meeting of the Santiago Fox Club of Orange County park in Santiago canyon opened on the afternoon of the 17th inst. with a large attendance, for beside the club members a number of invited guests from other places were present. The program included a barbecue, dinner in the evening, dancing and musical exercises in the park pavilion. The next day at dawn the dogs were taken out and after the kill luncheon was served.

Hampton Goldie is now an A. K. C. and a P. K. L. champion.

Delverton, Nairod and Plumeria Kennels won leading honors in Cocker at Los Angeles.

Inadvertently the win of reserve in other than black Cockers was credited last week to Nairod Kennels' Lorita; the place was awarded to J. Hervey Jones' Mignone instead.

WANDEE KENNELS' VIBO.

Fair weather permitting, to-morrow the formal dedication of Wandee Kennels in their new location, on 25th Avenue and Lake streets, near Baker's Beach, will take place. A large representation of the Coast Fox Terrier breeders have been invited to view the kennels and bring along their dogs for comparison, inspection and the customary dog chat always incidental when doggy men get together.

This gathering will bring together a bunch of dogs that will be hard to equal anywhere. Besides the Wandee string, headed by Blizzard (formerly Lithian Blizzard), Revelry (formerly Saltscar Revelry), and the new arrival, Mayse; there will also be John Bradshaw and Woodlawn Kennels' The Barrister, Mill Stream, Raby Elvet and Woodlawn Two Spot. N. H. Hickman will turn out Norfolk Trueman and Imelda. J. B. Martin should not miss having Aldon Swagger on a lead. Irving C. Ackerman's two crack wires, Hummerstone Bristles and Maggie the Maid, will be present. Wallace's Moore's Vina Belle will grace the matron's circle with some snappy terrier teacup gossip. This meeting will be a red letter day in Fox Terrier circles and should evolve something of extreme value in the interests of the Coast breeders.

Three good ones have recently gone to join the canine majority. First went one of Wandee Kennels crack studs, the Fox Terrier Vibo (Visto-Eggesford Dora), a dog that commenced his ribbon winning career in England and is too well known here for an extended description.

The next to follow was John Connelly's corking good Bull Terrier puppy Woodlawn Flashlight, which died the day after his arrival here from the Los Angeles show. In the death of this puppy, one of the best looking homebred young ones we have seen has been lost.

Winner, the handsome prize winning Boston owned by Mrs. William Thomas Magee, succumbed to an attack of spasms one night last week. Winner was out of Ruth by Booker and never failed to come out where his name suggested, at the local shows. He was the pet and amiable companion of his mistress who very much regrets her loss.

A pleasing result at the New York show was the win of Ivel Damon, Mrs. Charles K. Harley's Bulldog. Concerning classes entered of this breed, the current number of Field and Fancy says:

Bulldogs were quite one of the special features and made a long row on the benches, and several classes filled the ring and gave Mr. Mortimer quite a little work. A few nice home bred ones were scattered through. Mr. Kilmer, with a couple of nice pups, got into the money, and Earlington Kennels pushed their way in quite strongly. Despatch, out of Danbury, got out in the front row in novice dogs, but was beaten by Mrs. Charles K. Harley later; ladies first again. Ivel

Doctor was not to be denied in open dog and Rodney Rosador ran in second in limit, under 45 pounds. Dr. Haskell annexed novice bitches and Miss Bird and Mrs. Thomas took the prizes in limit over 40 pounds. Rodney Sceptre beat the ladies in under 40 pounds bitches, but Mrs. Thomas and Miss Bird came again in 40 pounds and over.

The awards in novice were, 1 Ivel Damon, 2 J. F. Kirley's Despatch, 3 Glen Dale Marvel, res Remlik Chinosal in a class of 12 entries. Limit (under 45 lbs.)—1 Ivel Doctor, 2 Rodney Rosador, 3 Despatch, res Fireworks in a class of 8. Limit (over 45 lbs.)—1 Ivel Doctor, 2 Don Juan, 3 The Paraden, res Navy Boxer. Open dogs (under 45 lbs.)—1 Ivel Damon, 2 Rodney Rosador, 3 Despatch, res Remlik Chinosal in a class of 6. Winners, dogs—1 Ivel Doctor, res Ivel Damon.

The Boston Terrier Magda shown at Los Angeles is a neat little bitch of more than average good quality. A Dachshunde bitch, Queen Victoria, a black and tan of more than average merit was distinctly the class of the long dogs benched. Three others shown were somewhat better than we expected to find down South.

The Late Horace Smyth.

The passing away of Horace Smyth in this city last week was not unexpected by his relatives and a large circle of friends. Mr. Smyth was a prominent member of the San Francisco Fly-Casting Club, having been, it might be said, the permanent Secretary of that popular organization by general desire of his fellow members. Mr. Smyth had the interest of the club at heart and to his efforts much credit is due for the present standing of the club. It would be unfair to Mr. Smyth's memory however to omit stating that his labors in the club's behalf were met with the collaboration and active assistance of many other gentlemen who took pleasure in the same pleasant task.

Under a brusque exterior Mr. Smyth carried a genial disposition and amiable qualities that were the sign manual of the gentleman and true sportsman. As an angler, he was an ardent devotee of the sport and will be well remembered by many of his associates with whom many pleasant days were passed on the banks of favorite streams.

For a good fellow, it is a sad contemplation, that his last days were clouded by a malady that, slow and inevitable in result, whilst holding all of his physical self in thrall, left him with mental faculties unimpaired but otherwise more helpless than a nursing child.

Feathers and Fin.

Night shooting is the regular thing in the vicinity of Mt. Eden. This unsportsmanlike practice has been carried on in that section for years. Immunity has possibly engendered a feeling of safety that has made the contemptible practice regarded as the proper custom when the birds are feeding at night.

A suggestion by a local sportsman, prompted by the knowledge of certain ways various hunters have who frequent that district, is that the fellows use rubber boots (?) for their elbows, stomachs and knees instead of wearing them in the orthodox fashion.

Ducks in large flocks are seen daily on the waters of the upper and lower bays. On the Sonoma, Petaluma and Suisun marshes the club sportsmen have generally had excellent shooting for the past week. Blue bills are becoming more numerous daily. The main northern flight of ducks has not yet commenced to arrive.

The constitutional amendment to district the State into game zones, is practically a measure to enable political jobbers to procure salaried positions. These tricksters are at the bottom of the movement but keep hidden in the background, using sportsmen who are honestly interested in game protection as puppets. Whenever the fraudulent intentions of the "apostles" are exposed and commented on, instead of coming to the front and facing the music the wire pullers dodge the issue and incite their dupes to take up the cudgels in their stead. The proposed amendment, we believe, is not in the interest of genuine protection, but will be the nucleus for legislation providing for a new crop of officials.

Fall fishing in Eel river has been fairly good so far as the run of large fish could make it so. The failure of the usual September rains has had the effect of spoiling the fishing for the small steelhead—the half pounder run of fish this year has been a very late one. They were at least seventy local anglers on this favorite stream this season.

Private advices recently received from Point Reyes report that quinnat salmon, in large numbers, are now running in Paper Mill creek.

Ducks are plentiful in the tide water marshes of that section and quail abound in the open country nearby.

Steelhead are running in Russian river, some good catches having been made near Duncan's Mill and Guerneville.

The fishing on Eel river is a combination of fly, spoon and bait fishing. Salmon, and a number of nice sized fish have been taken, can be caught with the spoon. Small steelhead, the few that have been landed, will take the fly. "Salmon Roe John" has a pet wrinkle for this stream. A double hook baited with roe and above it a red fly is the rig for two fish at a time, he claims.

James Maynard, Jr., and Ed Schultz hunted quail last Sunday near Walnut Creek, contra Costa county. The country seems to have been pretty well shot out thus early in the season, seven birds was the combined bag for the day.

THE FARM.

Hens are Profitable.

Hens are profitable, according to the Rural New Yorker, which reasons as follows: "Take a bushel of wheat, with a hen having a fair range, a point of much importance, the sixty pounds of wheat will provide a fair grain ration for at least 300 days. The hen might use more grain to advantage, but we know from experience that three and one-half ounces of wheat per day will keep the machine busy. The number of eggs obtained from the wheat will, of course, be determined largely by the breed and character of the hen.

"On the other hand, feed the bushel of wheat to a cow and get the value of the milk and butter resulting from it; or to a hog, and see how much pork he makes. In nine cases out of ten you will find that the hen has paid a better price for the wheat than any of her competitors—including the miller. One reason for this is the fact that the egg is largely composed of water and lime—two substances which cost little or nothing.

"When man puts sand in his sugar, sawdust in his coffee and plaster in his flour, we fine him if we can catch him at it. When the cow imitates the milkman and puts more water than the law allows in her milk, we beef her, and deny her the hope of posterity. We find no fault with the hen when she packs the water inside her shell. In fact, it is as a packer that she excels, for she can put more culls into her basket and have them turn out good fruit than any other worker on the farm. She will take a bug, a worm, a blade of grass, a weed, seed, or a piece of bone and a few kernels of grain and within thirty-six hours make them into an egg—its shell inclosing not only that which nourishes and sustains human life, but also the promised life of another hen. There can be no doubt that the hen not only contributes a vast sum to our national wealth, but that she can turn cheap and easily obtained wastes rapidly into human food. In this respect she stands at the head of all domestic animals—rivaling even the bee in such economy."

Keep the Cow.

Perhaps it is not altogether to be regretted that, when prosperity comes and nature smiles, man is apt to forget the times of adversity. At the same time, it is ungrateful, to say the least, to forget the instrumentality that pulled him through and it is foolish to suppose that adversity is banished for good and prosperity will continue forever. It is not many years since the dairy cow stood between the western farmer and very hard times indeed. Money was scarce. Prices of grain, of beef cattle and other stock were low. Prospects did not seem very bright to the farmer. In this emergency the dairy cow stood between many a farmer and hardship. She brought in cash every week or every month. She bought shoes for the children, dresses for the women folks and—well, in some cases, perhaps, tobacco for the men. She enabled some farmers to float over the period of depression comfortably, and many to swim where without her they would have sunk. The hard times have gone. The pig, the horse, steer grain, are all bringing good prices. Money is plentiful and cheap. Bank accounts are carrying a comfortable surplus. Under these conditions many a farmer is forgetting the old cow that pulled him through. He is forgetting and his children are not learning how to milk. The usefulness of the cow for the dairy is being destroyed. When the turn of the tide comes and the farmer must turn to the cow again she will not be able to serve him as she did before, not through any fault of hers, but because of his neglect.

Men cannot farm high priced land on horseback, neither can they always afford to sit on the fence and watch the calf do the milking.—Wallace's Farmer.

Choice of a Ram.

The season of mating is at hand. On no other thing does so much depend as on the wise choice of a sire. Young breeders should form correct ideas. All is built upon the ideal. If the breeder is seeking to develop a stud flock he must be a student of type. He must know whether the breed is tending and choose rams that will keep him going in the same direction. The Shropshire ram that won in the show rings of ten years ago would not receive a second look from the judge to-day. I am not saying that he was not as useful a type, but he is discarded for another conception of the breeder. He must now be more compact, more refined, better covered. And he must have that wonderful development of wool over the head. With each breed there is a steady drifting toward new and probably better types. The young breeder must then study type. The breed show is the best place at which to study it.

There are certain characteristics that should be diligently sought in a sire. The first is form. Choose the ram with great thickness of heart girth, wide spread rib, straight back. Set him up on straight short legs. Give him a short thick neck and a bright lively eye, an alert aggressive appearance. Do not be so particular about size. Avoid the over-fitted. Do not be misled by the length of fleece or the artful clipping into form sometimes practiced. Very generally the smaller rams, when vigorous and of the right type, beget the best lambs. Do not buy a lamb for service unless you are willing to give him good care and only moderate service. Never turn a ram lamb out to run constantly with a flock of ewes. To turn him with the flock for half an hour each day, keeping him quiet by himself at other times, and giving good food and attention will produce good results. It will much more than pay for the trouble. After the season of service give the ram lamb careful nurture during the winter and he may develop as well as though he had had no service. Avoid over-grown, over-finished, sluggish show rams. They seldom sire good lambs.—Jos. Wing in Breeders' Gazette

Burros as Flock Leaders.

Everyone who has lived or sojourned in a sheep country is accustomed to seeing flocks of sheep led by goats, but the flocks of John McGlinchy, the veteran sheep man of this valley, are led by burros—the plain dejected looking jack which is so often seen in mining districts loaded down with prospector's outfits. The sheep follow the burros as faithfully and submissively as they would an old bell wether. The idea is a novel one here but we are informed that it is practiced generally in the Pyrenees, and Mr. McGlinchy adopted the plan after he had seen it worked successfully by some French Bisques who ran their flocks on the slopes of the Sierras. The Basques utilize the burros for the double purpose of carrying their camping outfits and leading their flocks.—Livermore Herald.

What is a Dual Purpose Sheep.

It is generally conceded that the type of sheep produced in any particular country must depend on its climate, food supply and trade demands. More attention must therefore be given to the types best suited to western conditions. Hitherto a wide distinction has been drawn between the wool and mutton types and throughout a long period of years some kinds were grown for wool only, regardless of mutton-producing qualities. Until recently the west was not thought to have any possibilities other than those of grazing. The conditions have changed so that thousands of sheep and lambs are now fed for market in the rich alfalfa valleys. Nor is this food only available, for grains are being grown with which a good finish can be secured. We therefore require a combination wool and mutton sheep, or in other words a general-purpose animal.

Though many tests have been made in our own and foreign countries regarding the relative merits of the various mutton breeds we have not fully determined what blood must be used to produce this special type for the west. Nor can this work be done elsewhere than in the arid west, our conditions being of such peculiar nature. The type desired is one of medium size which can produce a close, heavy fleece of medium length with fibers strong and of good quality and a body possessing good form. They must also be characterized by longevity, ability to thrive on only moderately luxuriant pastures, withstand severe climatic conditions and respond freely to management in the feed lot. While as heretofore stated it has not been conclusively proven as to what blood must be used to bring about the desired type, still results already secured tend to show that such breeds as the Rambouillet or Delaines, when used in upgrading the common stocks, produce a good combination sheep for the range. The former being the larger-framed are to be preferred where the ranges are not too scanty.

The Rambouillet, which has been improved by careful breeding for more than a century, has these characteristics so firmly stamped that when used on common stocks the improvement is very rapid. There is less difference in the performance of the dual-purpose and mutton types in the feed lot than is generally supposed. Recent experiments showed that where the mutton type lambs produced a hundred pounds increase in live weight at a cost of $4.39 requiring 8.74 pounds of food to produce a pound of gain, those of the dual-purpose type produced a hundred pounds increase at a cost of $4.52 requiring 9.07 pounds of food for a pound gain. These figures show that the improved type of dual-purpose sheep does not fall far behind the special mutton type in meat production and they are known to excel in wool production under arid range conditions.—B. S. Shaw in Field and Farm.

The Dual Purpose Cow.

Though many attempts have been made to develop a breed of cattle profitable for both beef and milk, success in that direction has not yet been reached, and it seems more than probable that such a breed will never be secured. It is the natural tendency of every cow to use her surplus food either in growth and the accumulation of fat or in the production of milk. Either of these tendencies may be greatly strengthened by intelligent breeding and selection, but no breed has ever been developed which excels in both beef and butter making qualities, and improvement in either direction has usually been accompanied by a corresponding loss in the other. It is true that there are some breeds which make animals of fair size and which are also fair dairy animals, but they are only fair as either. The best beef animals and the best milking animals have never been found in the same individuals or even in the same breed, and the cattle raiser who attempts to raise beef for a living and at the same time to make money by using his cows in a dairy is almost sure to find one branch of his business unprofitable. A profitable beef animal is one thing, while a profitable dairy cow is something quite different. The man who expects to make his living from a dairy should select the breed which will give him the greatest amount of butter and milk from the smallest number of animals at the least cost.—H. E. Alvord.

Hog Feeding Experiments.

Hog feeding experiments everywhere have brought out the same conclusion—that the feeding of corn alone does not give the most desirable results. Australian investigations showed that while hogs fed on corn alone produces very soft, fat pork, hogs fed with corn and a judicious mixture of other grains, or corn-fed hogs on pasture, produced pork of a very desirable quality. In Germany barley and rye are much used in connection with corn for hog feeding. Canadian experiments show that the excessive use of corn lowers the price of bacon on the British markets. Throughout the dairy region skim milk, which is rich in proteids, the element which makes lean meat, has been found to produce pork at a low cost and of the very highest quality when fed in connection with a corn ration.

GIBBS' CELEBRATED PROCESS OF RAPID TAXIDERMY

In Practical Use Over Twenty-Five Years.

Used Everywhere in America. Hundreds of Testimonials. Try and Be Convinced.
Start a Class. Money in It. Be Your Own Taxidermist.

Naturalists, Collectors, Gunners, Anglers, Outers, Boys, Girls, and all others interested in nature and anxious to preserve the specimens taken in wood and field, have all felt the need of a simple method of preservation, which is free from intricacies and inexpensive.

There is a method of rapid taxidermy now in extensive use, which meets the requirements of all amateurs who wish a practical and inexpensive method of preserving the trophies of the outing and collecting trip. This is not the old system of so-called stuffing, so expensive, laborious and disappointing, but is a rapid system, which anyone can learn at once and which is guaranteed to give satisfaction.

By this process you may preserve the beautiful plumage of the grouse and woodcock, or the pike's or buck's head, or the showy feathers of the tanager. Boys, girls and all others can do good work and may make money, as mounted heads and birds find a ready sale, and besides you may teach your friends and decorate the school-room, office and dining-room with native birds and other attractions. If you are in doubt, then get your friends to go in with you and start a class, for when several work together there is an advantage and the expense is next to nothing.

On the receipt of $1, cash or stamps, I will send full printed instructions for mounting birds, heads, mammals, etc., and all materials for mounting and preserving specimens—including prepared compound, together with full directions for dressing skins with the hair on for rugs and robes, so that you will not be to the expense of one cent.

Remember, I Guarantee Satisfaction or Money Refunded.

Milking Machine Test.

One or two of our exchanges have referred to the fact that the United States Agricultural Department is experimenting with reference to a practical milking machine. The matter is in charge of Major Alvord, who is now arranging to make a test of a Scotch machine which will milk six or eight cows at a time. The operation of this milker is said to be superior in several respects to hand milking. The action on the cow's teats is the nearest possible to the sucking of the calf, the motion having a pulsating effect. The operation is performed by means of a pump attached to the milker, which sucks the milk from the cow's udder, in a very natural manner. One man attends the apparatus to six or eight cows and then sets the pump in operation, which requires about one-half horse-power to run. By this means six cows, it is claimed, can be milked in about twelve minutes.

The Department proposes to make a test on some good herd of milkers—possibly the herd at St. Elizabeth's Insane Asylum, near Washington, selecting twelve uniform milch cows and on six of them using the milking machine for a period of weeks, while the other six are milked in the usual way. This will give some idea of the practical value of the machine.

The use of tubes, which has been somewhat in vogue, is for the most part discarded. It was not a natural method and tended to leakage of the milk and in the long run would diminish the quantity of the milk.

Major Alvord refers to the economy in labor if the machine under examination will do the work. He has estimated that the labor required to milk the cows of the United States is represented by the work of about 35,000 men working ten hours a day the year round. He says there are no effective milking machines in operation in this country, though he knows of a few in Iowa, which milk one cow at a time.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

The cost of feeding a cow on alfalfa hay at $10.50 a ton, the price in San Francisco, is only 15 cents a day, says the Dairy Review, since she eats on an average thirty pounds of hay a day as an exclusive diet, but a cow likes a variety of foods as well as her owner, and with linseed meal at $25 a ton it is not adding practically anything to the expense to give her all the variety she needs. Of course, roots and squashes are always acceptable to a cow, and she will show her appreciation of them clearly enough in the liberal flow of milk.

ENTRANCE and PAYMENTS—$3 to nominate mare on December 1, 1902, when name, color, description of mare and stallion bred to must be given. $5 April 1, 1903. $5 October 1, 1903. $10 on yearlings April 1, 1904. $10 on two year olds April 1, 1905. $10 on three year olds April 1, 1906

STARTING PAYMENTS—$25 to start in the two year old pace. $35 to start in the two year old trot. $35 to start in the three year old pace. $50 to start in the three year old trot. All starting payments to be made in ten days before the first day of the meeting at which the race is to take place.

Nominators must designate when making payments to start whether the horse entered is a trotter or pacer.

Colts that start at two years old are not barred from starting again in the Three Year Old Divisions.

CONDITIONS.

The races for two year olds will be mile heats (2 in 3) and for three year olds mile heats (3 in 5). Distance for two year olds, 150 yards; for three year olds, 100 yards.

If a mare proves barren, or slips, or has a dead foal or twins, or if either the mare or foal dies before April 1, 1904, her nominator may transfer his nomination or substitute another mare and foal regardless of ownership; but there will be no return of a payment, nor will any entry be liable for more than amount paid in or contracted for. In entries the name, color and pedigree of mare must be given, also the name of the horse to which she was bred in 1902.

Entries must be accompanied by the entrance fee. Should the amount of entrance money received be in excess of the amount of the stakes, the excess will be added, less the cost of advertising, to the stakes for the three year old divisions in proportion to the amount offered for each division.

Nominators liable only for amounts paid in. Failure to make any payment forfeits all previous payments. Hoppies will not be barred in pacing races.

Right reserved to declare off or reopen these stakes in case the number of entries received is not satisfactory to the Board of Directors.

Money divided in each division of the stake 50, 25, 15 and 10 per cent.

There will be no more moneys in any division than there are starters.

ENTRIES OPEN TO THE WORLD; MEMBERSHIP IN THE ASSOCIATION NOT REQUIRED TO ENTER, but no horse owned in the State of California will be allowed to start until the owner has become a member. Horses owned outside of the State of California are eligible to start regardless of membership.

"SAVE-THE-HORSE" SPAVIN CURE

MORE CONVINCING THAN STATEMENTS ARE THE ACTUAL EXPERIENCES of those who have tried 'Save-The-Horse' Spavin Cure. Such results as the following are carrying 'Save-The-Horse' over skepticism, prejudice and uncertainty. No man will see his horse suffer and become incapacitated when such facts prove convincingly the possibilities of this remedy:

1752 END STREET, WASHINGTON, D. C.
Gentlemen—In the case of my horse I can say I was not sanguine when three veterinary surgeons after examining the horse said he could not be cured. All agreed that he would be lame probably for the rest of his life. It was a bone spavin of two years' standing, and the horse was twelve or thirteen years old, and they said it was almost impossible to cure such a case. I had him blistered several times without relief. I paid $10 for two applications for a wonderful cure, and I sent him into the country the early part of summer for pasture, and while there tried a bottle of —, but he came back to me on three legs as it were, with an awfully blistered leg. I sent for your medicine, and after the sore healed my groom applied the remedy as directed. I did not use him for a week or two, but as he grew better I used him frequently. His lameness gradually left him, and to-day he seems as well as ever, so that the horse which three months ago would not have brought $5 at auction is worth all of $300 to me, and I have never ceased to be grateful to the "Save-the-Horse" remedy, and have recommended it without hesitation, and you deserve all success. With sincere thanks,
W. H. BURNETT.

BICKNELL, IND.
Gentlemen—I had a three-year-old filly with bone spavin which had been lame for fifteen months or more. I used "Save-the-Horse" as directed, and the spavin left at once and I didn't use quite half the bottle. I then had a mule which had thoroughpin bad on both legs. I used the rest of the bottle on them; they are not entirely gone, but I think if I had used the whole of the bottle on them they would be. I have used many spavin cures, but regard yours the best I ever had.
R. T. COX, Breeder of High Class Jersey Swine.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
Gentlemen—I used two bottles of "Save-the-Horse" as a last resort, not having very much faith in advertised preparations. The horse treated was a very valuable bay, tandem leader. He had a bone spavin, deep seated, and at the time I started in to use "Save-the-Horse" had been laid up about eight months. He had been blistered and had been fired once and was just as lame as before. My coachman applied your remedy as directed, and I am glad to say that the horse is absolutely sound to-day and has been so for several months. I used the horse during treatment for light driving only. I consider your remedy one of the most wonderful things on the market to-day and I am very glad indeed to be able to state the facts in the case.
EDWARD H. HAWKE, JR.,
Law offices, Manhattan Life Insurance Building, 66 Broadway.

MIDDLE GRANVILLE, N. Y.
Gentlemen—Some three years ago my horse, Clyde Wilkes 2:21½, brother of Earl Wilkes 2:17½, met with an accident which brought on a bone spavin. After applying several highly recommended cures in vain, I had him fired. He went lame and I had him fired the second time, but it did not help him and he was laid up about a year again. In July last I procured a bottle of your "Save-the-Horse," and began driving him while treating him, and he is as limber and strong on the leg as he ever was. It took two months' treatment and I consider "Save-the-Horse" the greatest cure I ever saw, and I honestly recommend it to all horsemen.
JOHN REIL,
Proprietor Central House.

FORT PLAIN, N. Y.
Gentlemen—I wish to add my testimony to the value of "Save-the-Horse." My valuable chestnut mare threw a bad bone spavin several months ago, and for some time I could not move her out of the stable. Noting your ad I bought one bottle of "Save-the-Horse" and in three days could use the mare and did so every day afterwards and followed the directions carefully, and the one bottle I bought completely cured the horse, so that to-day she has no sign of the spavin and is as well as ever. You have a wonderful remedy and I am very much pleased with the result and have recommended it to all my friends. Wishing you all success.

C. S. CLEAVER,
R. R. Contractor.

GRASS VALLEY, CAL.
Gentlemen—Our horse was lame in the ankle caused from continually knocking with the other foot and he was lame on it for about one year and when I started to train him it came on again. He was so lame he could not even jog so I blistered him and did most everything to get him well, but I never fired it and it looked as though he would not be able to race again so I concluded to try one bottle of "Save-the-Horse" and it did save my horse for I used it three days and then worked him two slow heats and he did not show lame so I used the whole bottle and he is as sound to-day as he was the day he was foaled. I trained him and got him ready for his races and the lameness has not come back on him yet. The ankle is getting stronger all the time and the first race out this year he won easy in three straight heats at Colusa, trotting one heat in 2:20½ and the first half in 1:07 and is ready to-day to trot the best race of his life. Whenever I have a horse that is affected in any shape with weak tendons or weak ankles I shall use "Save-the-Horse" as I think it is a God-Send to the Horsemen and Horses. Hoping this will reach you all right, I am, very truly,
JNO D. BLAMEY.

CHELSEA-ON-HUDSON, N. Y.
Gentlemen—"Save-the-Horse" is the greatest remedy of the age. Spavins are chronic in my business, and all remedies tried before this left the horse with a big scar and as lame as before. The horse I tried your remedy on had about the worst spavin I ever saw, he could not get his heel on the ground when in motion, and less than half the bottle fixed him up as good as ever. With your remedy I would not hesitate to buy a horse with a spavin at a reasonable price, although I dread the disease. Wishing you success,
JOHN PINCKNEY, Coal, Ice and Teaming.

BLAUVELT, N. Y.
Gentlemen—As you will see by the enclosed card, our business is boarding and caring for horses. We have many sent here to be treated for various afflictions, among them, and on which our first trial of "Save-the-Horse" was used, was a valuable mare with a pair of bog spavins. We do not know definitely of how long standing, but she had been treated by a Veterinarian and pronounced incurable. Having noticed your advertisement, we concluded to give it a trial. We began treating her about the middle of June; at that time she was very lame, but we allowed her to run in pasture all the time we were using "Save-the-Horse" (of which we used not quite one bottle), and to-day she is as sound as ever. We will soon begin treating one with bone spavin that has been fired, but not cured. Our faith in it is so strong that we are almost willing to guarantee its cure.
Yours very truly,
W. H. BURR.

PARK RIDGE, N. J.
Gentlemen—My mare had bog spavin on both legs, and I treated them with "Save-the-Horse" for three months, using one bottle, and she never stopped a day while treatment was going on. I have spent considerable time and money on Veterinarians and quacks, but was never satisfied until I used "Save-the-Horse," and which I am satisfied will cure any case in existence.
Very truly yours,
J. S. MITTAG,
Mittag & Vogler, Carbon Papers & Ribbons, Branches, New York Chicago and San Francisco.

HEDRICK, IA.
Gentlemen—On July 21 last, Mr. A. M. Utterback of this place put his horse in my hands. He was at that time very lame from a ruptured tendon close to his near front ankle, and I thought the horse worthless as a race horse, but as I knew he had lots of speed and was dead game, I took charge of him, and seeing your ad, I had Mr. U.

send for a bottle, as you are aware, and it worked like a miracle. On the 21st of July, when I got him, he was a very lame horse, and on the 9th of September we gave him four heats, all around 2:30, and the next day we gave him five heats, from 2:36 to 2:24½, which was a severe test, but he never flinched. He is as sound as ever a horse was, but the ankle is enlarged some yet. Will it remain so? My idea in having Mr. Utterback send for the second bottle was to try to take the enlargement down, and at the same time continue the treatment a little longer. Perhaps I used the remedy too liberally, but I thought if a little was good, a good deal was better. Please answer, stating what you think of the case.
Respectfully yours,
ALEX PATTERSON

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
I treated my horse, which had a bad spavin, with your remedy "Save-the-Horse" and it thoroughly removed the blemish. I never saw anything to equal it. Mr. Chas Welby and several horsemen, who are friends of mine, tell me that they have had equally as good results as myself.
JOHN NOWLAN,
Wholesale and retail dealer in meat, 487 Haight street.

PITTSBURG, PA.
Gentlemen—I had a young horse that had a small splint in front leg. He went lame shortly after I got him. He was treated with another liniment with no improvement. I turned him out to pasture and used in five weeks about half a bottle of your "Save-the-Horse." At the end of five weeks the lameness was entirely gone. The horse has been used constantly since bringing him in from the pasture, now eight weeks ago, and since that time has not been lame.
EDWARD JOHNSTON,
Pittsburg Steel Foundry.

CHICOPEE FALLS, MASS.
Gentlemen—I had a horse with a bad ankle, which the Veterinary Surgeon claimed would never be right again. I saw your ad and thought I would try "Save-the-Horse," and I am pleased to say the horse recovered from the lameness and I sold him for $350 within six weeks of first application. I think it a wonderful remedy.
GEORGE T. MOSHER.

QUOQUE, L. I., N. Y.
Gentlemen—"Save-the-Horse," which I purchased from you, will do all you recommend it to do. The two horses I used it on were both laid up, one for six weeks or more and the other for ten weeks. The first one had a large splint running from ankle joint to knee, also enlarged tendons on same leg. I used your liniment on this horse about two weeks according to directions, then commenced to drive him and have worked him hard on a butcher wagon ever since. He is now sound. The other horse belonged to a friend of mine that has a cottage here for the summer; his mare made a misstep and injured her ankle. It became large and calloused and she could not go. He employed two Veterinary Surgeons, then he got another to fire the ankle at once and kept doing so for awhile, still his mare could not go and was no use to him. I told him when he got through doctoring her to send her to my stable and that my man would cure her with "Save-the-Horse." He did so. She was kept still for two weeks, then I told him he could drive her moderately, but that she was to stay at my stable until my man got through applying "Save-the-Horse." I sent her back to the livery stable last week, and she can go as far and as fast and quick as any horse on earth now, and go sound. The result of the firing shows and always will, otherwise she is perfect. He drove her to Eastport last week in thirty-eight minutes, which is ten miles. I consider "Save-the-Horse" will do more than you recommend it to do, and will do more than any liniment I ever used. I enclose check for $5 for another bottle. I did not expect to give you a detail report of the horses, but could not do otherwise after seeing how the horses came out.
WILLIAM H. CAMERDEN, Real Estate Agent.

$5.00 PER BOTTLE.

Written guarantee with every bottle, constructed solely to convince, satisfy and protect you fully. We know positively "Save-the-Horse" will absolutely and permanently cure, and for that reason guarantee is made all your way.

Need of second bottle is almost improbable except in rare cases. Guarantee covers effectiveness of one bottle.

IF YOU ARE IN DOUBT WRITE US

As we do not put the preparation out on speculation, we will advise you frankly as to the possibility of the remedy effecting a cure. Give explicit particulars. Give the veterinarian's diagnosis, if you know he is competent. Inform us fully as to the age, development, location of swelling, lameness, action and previous treatment. Copy of Guarantee sent upon application.

Investigation brings manifold satisfaction. Learn of the penetrating, soothing, antiseptic and marvelous healing power of

Veterinary Pixine

I had a horse in my stable that had an aggravated case of cracked heels. Had used many different remedies; some would heal the surface, but after driving the parts would crack again. I used Veterinary Pixine according to directions and soon had it healed from the bottom, and the parts kept sound although the horse was out in all kinds of traveling. I like it and recommend it. There are parties who wish me to keep it and I also want more myself. How can I get it to sell again? Please quote price.
J. M. TERRILL,
Dealer in Horses, Bridgeport, Conn.

I have used nearly every preparation on the market and several private formulas, but during my experience I have never used anything equal to Veterinary Pixine for speed cracks and scratches.
A. L. THOMAS,
Parkville Farm, Parkville, L. I.

Enclosed $1 for two 8-oz. packages of Veterinary Pixine. It is the best thing I have ever used for sore shoulders on horses and mules. I work forty head and have tried nearly everything, but Veterinary Pixine is the best so far. Shall want more later when we start up spring work.
W. H. FRAZINE, Montpelier, Cal.

You have the best thing on earth for sores. Do you want to give me the agency for county? Think I can sell some.
T. E. LINDLEY,
Oak Grove Farm, Eastville Va.

Veterinary Pixine cured a galled shoulder on my horse that had been there for a year, and I had tried everything that I could hear of to heal it. I can recommend it for all sores.
S. C. GODDARD, Petersham, Mass.

I have used Veterinary Pixine on scratches, sore teats and cracked udder with perfect satisfaction. I never saw anything like it. It cures sure and quick. I recommend it to my friends and neighbors, and to every man who owns a horse or cow.
C. P. DAVIS, Hartford Mills, N. Y.

I have never used your spavin cure, so cannot tell anything about that, but your Veterinary Pixine is a grand remedy. Do not think I have ever had any remedy that compares with it for the treatment of galls. Enclosed find 50c for another box.
E. W. MASON, Owosso, Mich.

Enclosed find 50c in stamps for which please send us an 8-oz. box of Veterinary Pixine. We purchased an 8-oz. box some time ago and it healed a collar sore in three weeks that had continually grown larger for two months. We also use it for cows' teats and it beats all other salves and ointments we ever used.
R. S. & H. W. DAVIS, Williamstown, Vt.

I used Veterinary Pixine at Danbury Fair on my mare foal's hock chafes, and I found it to be the best thing I ever used and the only thing I got to cure her and keep on working her. I cannot say too much for it.
A. T. MILLER, Mt. Kisco, N. Y.

Being in the ice business I have from 15 to 20 horses. The box of Veterinary Pixine proved more than satisfactory. I always keep some in the stables, as it is the best thing out for wounds and gall sores on horses.
LAWRENCE M. LYONS, Binghamton, N. Y.

I am much pleased with the results obtained with Veterinary Pixine. The case of speed cracks of which I wrote is cured and the horse goes sound, but I don't want to be without it. Please find enclosure for ¼-lb. box.
M. B. SULLIVAN, M. D., Dover, N. H.

I have used Veterinary Pixine for the last year for scratches, galls, and especially for cracked teats on cows, and can recommend it as one of the best applications for all sores and abrasions that I have ever used.
JAS. A. PENDGAST, V. S.,
316 Willow St., Syracuse, N. Y.

I have used Veterinary Pixine in my practice and have had the best results in diseased udders in cows and all kinds of skin diseases in horses and dogs.
HARRY A. TURNER, V. S.,
435 S. Salina St., Syracuse, N. Y.

I have used your Veterinary Pixine in my livery and am very much pleased with the result in every case. Please send me a 5-lb. pail at once.
SEYMOUR G. CAMP,
Livery & Exchange Stables, Oneonta, N. Y.

I have used Veterinary Pixine on very bad cracked heels and I have never found anything to equal it.
MERT F. FULTON,
Trainer & Driver, Hartford, Conn.

We have one customer who says a 50c box of Veterinary Pixine increased the value of his horse $25.
R. J. PLEAS, Spiceland, Ind.

Stinging, burning sores, chronic scratches, grease heel, mud fever, hock chafes, speed cracks, abscesses, inflammatory swellings, hoof rot, mange, and all sores and skin diseases absolutely and permanently cured. NEVER IN THE HISTORY

Of achievements in scientific and physiological chemistry has anything been discovered capable of producing such wonderful results as "Save-the-Horse" Spavin Cure.

In the face of deep seated prejudice and skepticism, at first considered an improbable and expensive experiment, no preparation ever made so marvelous a record in such short time.

The fire iron is uncertain at the best and invariably only aggravates the disease or injury; blistering is less effective than the fire iron and both necessitate laying up the horse from four weeks to two months; arsenic, mercurial and poisonous compounds produce irreparable injury.

"Save-the-Horse" eliminates all these factors.

Horse can be worked continuously.

It can be applied at any time, anywhere, any place and in all conditions and extremes of weather—hot or cold. And no matter what the age, condition or development of the case or previous failures in treating, the concentrated, penetrating, absorbing power of "Save-the-Horse" is unfailing and no case can withstand the force of its action, whether a

BONE OR BOG SPAVIN, RINGBONE, CURB, THOROUGHPIN, SPLINT, CAPPED HOCK, SHOE BOIL, WIND PUFF, WEAK OR STRAINED TENDONS OR LAMENESS.

It cures without scar, blemish or loss of hair.

ZAMBRA 2:16 1-2
World's Champion Five-Mile Trotter—Record 12:24.
OWNED BY L. J. ROSE JR., LOS ANGELES.

JOTTINGS.

ZAMBRA, a McKinney gelding, driven by Walter Maben, bred by Mr. A. G. Gurnett at Sulphur Spring Farm, Contra Costa county, California, and now owned by L. J. Rose, Jr., of Los Angeles, reduced the world's five mile trotting record six and three quarters seconds last Saturday at the Los Angeles race track, a performance that is a supreme test of speed and gameness. It was on the 14th of October, 1893, at the Oakland track, that the old roan champion, Bishop Hero, driven by John Green, trotted five miles in 12:30 $\frac{3}{4}$, defeating the trotters Robert L. and Little Witch and the pacer Antaire, being the first horse to trot that distance below 13:00, a record established by the mare Lady Mac in 1874. When Bishop Hero made his record, the miles were as follows: 2:32, 2:32 $\frac{1}{2}$, 2:26 $\frac{1}{2}$, 2:27 $\frac{1}{2}$, 2:32 $\frac{1}{4}$. The last mile of Zambra's race was slower than either of these, but the fourth mile was faster than either. The time by miles of the race last Saturday was 2:30, 2:26 $\frac{1}{2}$, 2:26 $\frac{1}{2}$, 2:25, 2:36. The race is described in the dispatches as follows:

"They were sent away for the long journey at 4 o'clock, Briney K. taking the lead, Zambra second, Hopper third and McKenna fourth. In this order they went the first mile, which was stepped in 2:30. The second mile did not change their positions, Briney K. leading Zambra to the wire by a length in 2:26 $\frac{1}{2}$. On the third circuit Zambra took command and Hopper moved up to second place, Briney K. third and McKenna fourth. The time was the same as the second heat, 2:26 $\frac{1}{2}$.

Hopper showed a world of speed on the next round and set a merry clip for the favorite, Zambra. The mile was caught at 2:25, the fastest of the race. Rounding the first turn on the fifth mile, Zambra moved up on even terms with Hopper and the two trotted like a team until well into the stretch. When straightened out for the finish Maben called on Zambra and he moved up to the front, but was unable to increase his lead more than a length until fifty yards was all that remained of the race. At this point Bunch put the whip to Hopper and he went off his feet and fell back beaten. Zambra came on strong and steady, finishing the fifth mile in 2:36 and the five miles in 12:24. Briney K. and McKenna fell out of it on the fifth mile. The winner was given an ovation by the big crowd."

I don't believe many admirers of the trotting horse, or of the runner, enjoy seeing these long distance races, although they always have a very high regard and admiration for the winners thereof. An eye witness of the race at Los Angeles tells me that all the horses participating in it were very tired and all out at the finish. I do not doubt it. I saw Bishop Hero get his five-mile record at Oakland, and have since heard men say that "he had plenty left at the end of the race," and could have beaten the time several seconds. Perhaps he might, but I know he looked like an exhausted horse when he returned to his stall.

The wonderful part of Zambra's performance lies in the fact that neither he nor any of the other starters had been trained for a long distance race and the further fact that he trotted the entire distance at least twenty feet from the pole, the track being cut up very deep for that width for the runners. Taking these things into consideration, Zambra's record breaking performance is a wonderful one. I wonder what that small crowd of knockers we have here in California, and who are always claiming that the McKinneys are "quitters," will say now?

Zambra was bred, as before stated, by Mr. A. G. Gurnett. His dam is Nellie Fairmont a filly bred by the late James G. Fair. She is by Fairmont, a son of Piedmont, and her dam is a mare said to be by Hambletonian 725. Nellie Fairmont is a comparatively young mare, having been foaled in 1891. She was bred to McKinney in 1896, and Zambra was foaled the following year. As a three year old he took a record of 2:23 at Santa Rosa, and reduced it this year to 2:16 $\frac{1}{2}$ in the seventh heat of a race at Fresno. He has taken part in many split heat races this year and has established a reputation as one of the gamest trotters ever seen on the circuit.

Of all the performances accomplished by the modern trotting horse, I think the two miles in 4:17, made by the champion Cresceus at Memphis last week, is the most wonderful. We had only just put on our hats after taking them off to Onward Silver 2:08 for reducing the world's record at two miles to 4:28 $\frac{1}{2}$, when along comes Mr. Ketcham with his great stallion and knocks eleven and a half seconds from this record. He trotted the first mile in 2:10 $\frac{1}{2}$ and the last in 2:06 $\frac{1}{2}$. There are but very few horses in the world that have ever been able to trot one mile in 2:06 $\frac{1}{2}$, even after the most elaborate preparation for a flight against time, but here is an equine Hercules that does it after covering a mile in 2:10 $\frac{1}{2}$ —in itself a wonderful performance. And still more wonderful was his last quarter, which was covered in 32 seconds after such a tremendous clip for two miles. Is it any wonder that many of the professional trainers believe they can drive Cresceus a mile in two minutes, if he could be put in their hands for training. It is well known that Cresceus made quite a heavy season in the stud this year and was not put to work on the track until June. Most of the leading trainers say that any horse that reaches the two minute mark will have to have at least nine months preparation for the effort.

There will be no more heat racing at Memphis. Secretary Murray Howe so announced at the close of the meeting last week, to the great astonishment of the horsemen. I, for one, will be glad to see the new plan tried, although I have little faith in its success. However, energetic, live men, with capital behind them and rustling business men to aid them, can command success where others fail and the Memphis association has all these. It will surprise horsemen in California to learn that there were no less than thirteen books doing business at the Memphis meeting this year in addition to the regular auction pools. Thirteen books means a big revenue to an association, and as the bookmakers prefer dash to heat races, there will very likely be a still larger number to cut in next year under the new system. It may be that the Memphis people will devise some plan by which they can compel the horsemen to act honestly in every race, but I think it will require a tremendous lot of hard work and watchfulness. There is a temptation to cheat where dash races are trotted and booking is done, that does not exist under the old plan. There has been more comment in the Eastern papers about the alleged pulling of Sir Albert S. at Memphis this year than over any other case of laying up this season. The story told is that several of the drivers in this race, in which Sir Albert S. was favorite, played Nervolo heavily in the books at 4 to 1 and then "shooed" him in. A local paper says they cleaned up $7000 on this heat, and that the fine of $250 inflicted on Millard Sanders for laying up Sir Albert S. was a mere bagatelle and most cheerfully paid. There may be little argument on which to base the conclusion, but I cannot help but think that had there been no books, this alleged scheme of the drivers would not have been attempted.

The wonderful success, especially in a financial way, of the meetings conducted by the running associations during recent years, has led many managers and others connected with the harness racing organizations to believe that the methods which prevail on the modern running tracks will, if adopted, bring as great success to the harness meetings. There are two features of the running meetings which it is claimed the trotting association that commands success in the future, will be compelled to adopt. These are book-making and dash races. Of course these two must necessarily go together, as heat racing with book betting will kill harness racing in a very short time on any track that tries to run a meeting on that plan with auction pools barred. By confining the races to dashes it will be much easier to uncover crookedness, but it need not be expected that the most watchful officials can detect each and every job that is put up. Whenever a line of bookmakers put up odds against every horse in the race, there will be found a desire on the part of some to combine and win the bookies money. And where bookmakers can make themselves certain winners by inducing a driver to lay up a heat, it will be found that there will be some bookmakers offering inducements and some drivers accepting them. The drivers of harness horses are men, not small boys, and here is where the greater danger lies.

The dash system is very successfully conducted in Europe, but there the horses are handicapped and races are at many distances over a mile. Dash racing has been tried in California, but books and overnight entries caused it to make a very bad showing. In class races at a mile large entry lists will in all probability be very difficult to obtain. Owners of harness horses will be a little chary about putting up entrance money where they have but one chance to win. Large fields mean two and sometimes three tiers of horses at the start of a race, and a poor position, combined with a break or two and many other things that are liable to happen during the progress of a single heat, often destroys all the chances of the best horse to win. It is different with runners. An average start and a fair ride is all that is demanded by the owner of a thoroughbred, and then by the systems of handicapping and selling races all classes of horses may be brought together so that it is a very hard thing to guess the winner.

The size of purses cuts a very large figure with harness horse owners—much more so than with runners. I believe it will be found that a vast majority of harness horse owners would rather enter in a three in five race for a purse of \$1000 than in three dash races in which the purses are \$333 $\frac{1}{3}$. Now, four purses of \$1000 each makes a good day's program on any track on the Grand Circuit. With two of them on the three in five plan and the other two on the two in three system, at least ten heats will result at a cost of \$4000, less the entrance paid in. Allowing \$500 for dash races, \$4000 would pay for eight heats, but the entrance money would be much less, and experience shows that there will not be near the money played on the dashes as goes through the box on heat races, especially if the heats are split.

To my mind the dash system is an ideal one for harness, just as it is for running racing, but under the present conditions on our tracks I cannot see how it can be made popular unless the European system of handicapping is adopted and races held at distances over a mile. If the stretches of our circular tracks were wide enough to allow all the horses to be lined up in one tier, and they were started far enough up the track to permit them to get going and strung out before the first turn is reached, there would be two serious objections to dash racing removed. A second tier position and getting cut off at the first turn, causes many a trotter to lose the first heat of a race. If Secretary Murray Howe and Mr. Billings and their associates of the Memphis Club can arrange a program of dash races for next season and carry it through to a successful conclusion, they will deserve the thanks of every trotting horse breeder, but in my opinion they will have an almost Herculean labor to perform.

Pleasanton, the Horse Centre.

It begins to look as if the horse centre of California will be again located at Pleasanton during the coming winter and spring. Superintendent Sutherland received a letter from Myron McHenry the other day, in which he requested that ten stalls be fitted up for him as he would arrive very shortly with the champion pacer, Dan Patch 1:59 $\frac{1}{2}$, and several other horses to be wintered at the famous track.

Mr. C. L. Crellin is also in receipt of a letter from the East, the owner of the famous stallion Searchlight 2:03 $\frac{1}{2}$ being the writer. He asked that stalls be reserved for his great stallion, and added that he would bring a trotting stallion with a low record along with him. Searchlight will be warmly welcomed by the breeders here in California who own colts and fillies by him, and many will breed to him again.

There are at least fifty horses now being worked at Pleasanton, the latest to arrive being a carload of nine head owned by Mr. Thomas Ronan of Dayton, Washington, the breeder of Anzella 2:06 $\frac{1}{2}$.

The Aberdeens.

Much attention has been attracted to the Aberdeen tribe this season, mainly through the racing of Anzella 2:06 $\frac{1}{2}$ and the get of Wiggins.

Aberdeen was a bay horse, foaled in 1866, by Hambletonian 10, dam Widow Machree 2:29, by American Star; second dam Duryea Mare by Bolivar. Aberdeen trotted to a record of 2:46. He died in 1892. He sired among others Bessie Owens 2:13 $\frac{1}{2}$, Abbie V. 2:16 $\frac{1}{2}$, Alabaster 2:15, Godella 2:16 $\frac{1}{2}$, Hattie Woodward 2:15 $\frac{1}{2}$, Kentucky Union 2:07 $\frac{1}{2}$, Lewellyn 2:16 $\frac{1}{2}$, Lycurgus 2:15 $\frac{1}{2}$, Wiggins 2:19 $\frac{1}{2}$, Bessie D. 2:20.

Aberdeen sired the dams of Celerrima 2:14 $\frac{1}{2}$, Edith R. 2:17 $\frac{1}{2}$, Minting 2:17 $\frac{1}{2}$, Phanton Peallas 2:19 $\frac{1}{2}$, John Audubon 2:16 $\frac{1}{2}$, Minota 2:18 $\frac{1}{2}$, Miss Conley 2:18 $\frac{1}{2}$, National 2:17 $\frac{1}{2}$, Nigger Jack 2:14 $\frac{1}{2}$, Onward Silver 2:08, Red of Waranoke 2:14 $\frac{1}{2}$, Union Bell 2:19 $\frac{1}{2}$, Wilhelm Meister 2:19 $\frac{1}{2}$.

Antrim sired Anzella 2:06 $\frac{1}{2}$, Antrima 2:15 $\frac{1}{2}$ and Sunrise 2:19 $\frac{1}{2}$.

Wiggins 2:19 $\frac{1}{2}$ sired Rena Wise 2:16 $\frac{1}{2}$, Katherine A. (2) 2:14, Hilgar (2) 2:16, Miss Wiggins (2) 2:23 $\frac{1}{2}$, Wig-wag (3) 2:16 $\frac{1}{2}$.

Sir Walter sired Cleveland 2:20, Sir Walter Jr. 2:18 $\frac{1}{2}$, Walter Herr 2:19 $\frac{1}{2}$, William M. Hill 2:20. He also sired the dams of Ernsie 2:14 $\frac{1}{2}$, Quartermarch 2:11 $\frac{1}{2}$.

Elial G. sired Elial T. 2:19 $\frac{1}{2}$, Judge Swift 2:19 $\frac{1}{2}$, Bunnie G. 2:18 $\frac{1}{2}$, The Raven 2:19 $\frac{1}{2}$. He also sired the dams of Alcy 2:13 $\frac{1}{2}$, Canton 2:19 $\frac{1}{2}$ and Wilkes Pointer 2:19 $\frac{1}{2}$.

McKinney has a yearling great-grandson up in Washington that is about as well bred as any yearling that has been heard from up to date. He is called Citizen Bird and has been registered, his number being 36106. He was sired by Gry Falcon 30478, a son of Zombro 2:11. Gry Falcon's dam is Lyla 2:27 by Altamont out of Tecora (the dam of Chehalis 2:04 $\frac{1}{2}$, etc.) by Almont. Citizen Bird's dam is Coqueta 2:30, a full sister to Lyla, the dam of his sire. Citizen Bird won first prize for yearlings at the Spokane Fair recently.

Notes and News.

Major Delmar 1:01 for half-mile. A new world's trotting record.

Edith W. is now the champion pacing mare to wagon with a record of 2:05½ to that hitch.

The Wilkes family has furnished four winners of the Transylvania, and the Electioneer family three.

Director H. 2:27½ took first premium as best standard stallion at the Nevada County Fair this year.

Frank 2:10½ by Secretary is apparently invincible in the free for alls over the Pennsylvania half-mile tracks this fall.

Kavall 2:07½ is the fastest four-year-old pacer of the year. He is by Kremlin 2:07½, out of Almera (dam of five in 2:30) by Kentucky Prince.

Pacific Breeders Futurity Stake No. 3 for foals of mares bred in 1902 will close December 1st. See that your mare is nominated. It only costs $3.

McHenry tried to induce Devereux to allow him to match John A. McKerron against Lord Derby for $5000 a side, but the Cleveland amateur refused.

Peko 2:11½ is said to be safely in foal to John A. McKerron 2:05½. The produce should be a 2:10 trotter if there is anything in the "developed ancestor" theory.

Governor Sprague, sire of the dam of McKinney, is also sire of the dams of those two fast trotters, Feren 2:07½ and Ozanam 2:08, both new comers to the 2:10 list of 1902.

A sound level headed trotter, good enough to take over east to race, will command a good price. There is a gentleman here looking for a horse of this description.

Cresceus has improved wonderfully in looks. As he grows older he improves, and today one would hardly recognize in the handsome horse the plain colt of a few years ago.

Baron Wilkes 2:18 is now the sire of nine 2:10 performers, thus dividing honors with the recently deceased Onward who has had the same number to his credit since last year.

The inbred Baron Wilkes three year old filly, Gail Hamilton by Oakland Baron 2:09½ out of Jennie Hulse by Baron Wilkes, lowered her record to 2:11½ in a winning race at Memphis.

Cresceus 2:02½ is still the champion stallion, and the honors for second place are divided between the two California bred stallions, Directum and John A. McKerron with records of 2:05½.

Chase 2:07½, the fastest green trotter of the year, is by Keeler 2:13½ out of Enola D. by Axtell 2:12; second dam Anna Thomas by Cyclone 2:23½, third dam by Strathmore, son of Hambletonian.

Rena B. by Cyclone is the dam of three 2:15 trotters, viz: Rena Wise 2:15, Dentine 2:13½ and Bessie Owens 2:13½. She is also the dam of Rena Bailey 2:19½ and of Ellen Tucker, the dam of Hilgar (3) 2:15½.

At the Chicago Horse Show, Heatherbloom, the jumping horse, broke the world's record of seven feet, six and three-quarter inches, last Saturday night, by clearing the bar at seven feet, eight inches.

There is nothing else that will so quickly and so effectively put a trotting horse breeding farm, or a trotting horse breeder, out of business as an inferior, or even ordinary, stallion at the head of the stud.

Minna Wilkes by George Wilkes 2:22 is now a double 2:10 producer, being the dam of Mustard, that got a record of 2:08 at Lexington, and of Refina 2:08½, who was raced by Jack Bowen for a number of seasons in years past.

Stallion owners should induce every person that bred mares to their stallions this year to nominate them in the Pacific Breeders Futurity for foals of 1903. Nothing so booms a stallion as the winning of stakes by his get.

The starting of horses for records is a source of quite a revenue for the Lexington association. An entry fee of $10 is charged for each horse; and as some seventy-five tried during the meeting $750 good soft money was picked up.

The match between Prince Alert and Sir Albert S. was for $500 a side. The story about it being for $10,000 which came across the wires is printed in the Eastern horse journals in conjunction with the modifying clause, "It is also stated."

Col. W. W. Turner of Spokane will winter in Los Angeles and will drive on the roads there his favorite horse, Blondie by Lemont, with a record of 2:15 pacing and 2:19 trotting. Blondie once held the world's two-mile trotting race record of 4:48, made in 1893. But two horses have beaten this time in a race—Monette, that won at the distance in 1894 in 4:45, and Ethel Downs, that trotted a two-mile heat in 4:47½ in 1895.

$6000 is the sum guaranteed for the Pacific Breeders Futurity Stake for foals of 1902. Name your mare bred this year and try to win it.

Budd Doble has recovered his health and now looks like a thirty-year old grown prematurely gray worrying over theological theories.—Am. Sportsman.

One quite remarkable thing about the list of Grand Circuit money winners is that three of the profitable campaigners never won a heat. These are the trotters Lady Thisbe, with $690; Patchen Maid, with $4025, and the pacer Tertimen, with $3400.

Baron D. 2:10, and the latest 2:10 performer to the credit of Baron Wilkes 2:18, is a full brother to Bumps 2:03½. His dam was by Strathmore, second dam by Volunteer, third dam Black Bess, dam of the famous old-time trotter Gloster 2:17 by Stockbridge Chief.

Myron McHenry will bring Dan Patch 1:59½ to Pleasanton for the winter. Mr. McHenry has wintered at this great track before and that he has again selected it as a training ground for the greatest pacer in the world speaks volumes for its many advantages.

Richard Ables, formerly trainer for the Santa Rosa Stock Farm, returned from the East a couple of weeks ago. Dick says the harness horse business is good across the mountains, but to one who has lived in California, the long cold winters over there have no charms.

Old Hal Pointer 2:04½ suffers so much from the heaves that he will probably be chloroformed before winter sets in. The once famous pacer has lived a life of ease at Village Farm for several years, but it now seems to be an act of mercy to put him painlessly out of the way.

The owner of the great pacing stallion Searchlight 2:03½ intends bringing him back to California for the season of 1903, and will keep him at Pleasanton, his old stamping ground. There are quite a number of Searchlight's get in this State and the owners think very highly of them.

A number of breeders of standard stock who live near Davisville, Yolo county, contemplate getting up a stake for foals of 1902 to trot in 1905. It is thought that ten or twelve entries can be secured at an entrance of $50 each, payable in installments, which will result in quite a valuable stake.

The young stallion by McKinney out of the $10,000 mare By By by Nutwood that Santa Rosa Stock Farm sold to J. Le Baron Smith, of this city last spring, will probably be registered under the very appropriate combination name of "By Me," a selection made by Mr. Henry Pierce, of the Santa Rosa farm.

Dr. Madara, which finished second to the sensational Direct Hal in the 2:20 pace at Lexington, is a great prospect for next year, as he has no mark and was a good second to Geers' wonderful race winner in 2:07 and 2:07½. This was the second race Dr. Madara ever paced. He is by Simmons, out of a mare by Red Wilkes.

The premium list of the eighteenth exhibition of the National Horse Show Association, at Madison Square Garden, November 17-22, reveals a well maintained recognition of the trotting and roadster classes, which will be appreciated by admirers of those types. The aggregate value of the prizes allotted to these classes is almost $5000.

Barondale foals will be quite numerous in California in 1904. Tom James has already booked a large number of very fine mares to this grandly bred son of Baron Wilkes. No less than six of the mares sold from the Palo Alto farm at the recent sale have been booked to Barondale for the season of 1903. Three of the number are by Electioneer.

At the Highland Farm clearance sale held at Lexington, Kentucky, October 4th, the Anteo stallion Alfred G. 2:19½, sire of Charley Herr 2:07, was sold for $1000. He is seventeen years of age. A large number of his get were sold, yearlings and two and three year olds, and they brought from $100 to $1350. The latter price was paid for a filly two years old out of Spanish Maiden (the dam of Cuban 2:23½ and Margrave 2:15½) by Happy Medium.

The old pacer, Monroe S. 2:20, that was bred by Edward Newlands of Oakland and made his record when a six-year-old at Chico in 1891, has been racing up in Washington and Idaho this summer and at Boise City, October 21st, won a heat and reduced his record to 2:16. The race was a six-heat affair and Monroe S. was in it until the finish, being a good second in the fifth and sixth heats. Pretty good for a sixteen-year-old horse.

The campaign of Cresceus will not extend to foreign countries this year. George Ketcham has abandoned the proposed trip through England, France and Russia and has also cancelled the champion trotter's trip to Havana. Ketcham has outlined a circuit on the ice tracks of the North, and the king of trotters will be called on for a dozen miles over courses in Canada and the Northern States. The Canadian campaign will start at Ottawa on February 9th.

The dispatches sent out from Memphis stated that when Nervolo paced in 4:24½ he established a new two-mile record for pacing stallions. This, however, is incorrect. The two-mile pacing record, for stallions not only, but all sexes, is held by Cheballs 2:04½, who, at the Oregon State Fair, at Salem, October 7, 1897, started to beat the two-mile record at 4:22½, made by W. W. P., at Lincoln, Neb., and paced in 4:19½, the first mile in 2:09 and the second in 2:10½.

In their efforts against time at Memphis last Saturday Prince Alert paced in 2:00 thus lowering his record. Dan Patch failed in his attempt and could do no better than 2:00½.

Five sires are represented by five or more new 2:20 performers each, so far, and they are as follows: McKinney 2:11½ with nine, Ashland Wilkes 2:17½ with six, Allerton 2:09½ with five, Online 2:04 with five, Simmons 2:28 with five. Two of these sires, it will be noticed, have records below 2:20 and the remaining one has a record below 2:30. All five are direct descendants of George Wilkes, one being a son, three grandsons and one a great grandson of that horse.

Dr. G. E. McConnell of this city was the purchaser of Phoenix 2:15½, the black gelding by Direct 2:05½, dam Nola by Nutwood, at the Griffith sale Thursday. Phoenix was formerly known as Sharkey, and is one of the fastest pacers in the State for three-quarters of a mile. He has a thickening of the throat that chokes him up when sent a mile at speed and but for this he would be equal to a record well below 2:10. He is a good looking horse and a splendid roadster. A half in 1:05 is easy for him.

At a trotting meeting under the auspices of the Parkway Driving Club, at the half-mile track, in Brooklyn, E. T. Bedford drove his well known road team, York Boy 2:08½ and Bemay 2:13½, a mile to wagon in 2:12½, equaling the world's record made by Honest George and Belle Hamlin at Providence, in 1892. The performance was a technical record. The Parkway Club having offered a prize in the shape of a silver cup for the teams to beat the best time ever made by trotters to pole on a half-mile track.

Thos. Charlton of Uiah attended the Griffith sale this week and took home with him a three year old filly Lady Petrina by the ex-champion trotting stallion Directum 2:05½, dam the handsome mare Petrina by Piedmont 2:17½; second dam the thoroughbred mare Miss Peyton by imported Glengarry. Lady Petrina is a good looking filly and trotted a quarter last spring in 35½ seconds. She is good gaited and should make a fast trotter. Mr. Charlton got her at the ridiculously low price of $110. He will breed her to his young stallion Dumont S. in the spring.

Harry Darlington, who bought the fast trotting mare Louise Mac 2:09½ from A. B. Gwathmey at the Empire track last month, is highly elated with his purchase. He bought the mare for the special purpose of winning the free-for-all trot of the Pittsburg Driving Club, of which he is a prominent member. The mare was shipped to Pittsburg two days after she changed owners in the care of W. S. Steele, who drove her in the race on the Brunot Island track. She won in straight heats and lowered the track record to wagon (held by Josephine Dixon) from 2:12½ to 2:12½, in the face of a cold gale.

Edward Benyon's record as a driver this season is simply amazing. He has placed Feren 2:07½, Ozanam 2:08 and Walnut Hall 2:09½ in the 2:10 list, and a fourth trotter, Moko-2:10½; is just outside. All have made their records in winning races. As the quartette are all owned at L. V. Harkness' Walnut Hall farm and all but Walnut Hall were bred there, it is a wonderful showing for the establishment. Besides these four horses Benyon has marked another Walnut farm product, Anna Held, in 2:12½, trotting, and Sufreet in 2:08½, pacing, and also the three year old colt Chesco, in 2:19½.

The old stallion Altamont, sire of eight 2:10 performers, is now at J. W. Marshall's farm at Binghamton, Solano county, where he is in such an enfeebled condition that Mr. Marshall says he should be chloroformed. Altamont was sent up to Mr. Marshall's farm last spring by his owner J. M. Nelson on the latter's departure for the east with his string of trotters. Mr. Marshall has been unable to hear from Nelson in regard to the old stallion, and does not feel authorized to put him to death, although he believes it should be done, as the old fellow is slowly dying from old age and general debility.

J. W. Marshall, an intelligent and prosperous farmer of Binghamton, Solano county, who breeds a few standard trotters every year and is getting together a small but very choice collection of mares and fillies for breeding purposes, attended the Griffith sale here Thursday and bought the mare Sophia by Robert McGregor, sire of the champion Cresceus. Sophia is registered in Volume 8 of the American Trotting Register, and is out of Ora Wood by Wildwood 2:30, son of Blackwood 74. The dam of Ora Wood was Lady Utterback by Mambrino Patchen Jr. Sophia is heavy in foal to the grandly bred stallion Bonnie Direct 2:05½ and the prospective foal will be worth much more money when it appears than Mr. Marshall paid for the mare.

Mr. Martin Carter, of the Nutwood Stock Farm, got "the gem of the sale" at the closing out of the Griffith mares and geldings at the Occidental Horse Exchange last Thursday. He made the high bid, $235, and got Bonnie Derby, a four year old mare by Charles Derby 2:20 out of the great broodmare Bon Bon 2:26 (dam of Bonnie Direct 2:05½ and Bonsilene 2:14½) by Simmons. Bonnie Derby is a racy looking mare and has great speed, having worked quarters at the pace at Pleasanton in 33 seconds. She was bred to McKinney last year, but it is doubtful whether she is with foal. Mr. Carter purchased her to breed to his great stallion Nutwood Wilkes 2:16½ and the resultant foal will have as many high class speed producers in its pedigree as almost any horse. It is also Mr. Carter's intention to give this mare a record next year. The Nutwood Stock Farm is getting a collection of some of the grandest bred mares in America, and all the champion families are represented.

Dumont S., 36,675.

On the title page of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN to-day is a picture of a two year old colt that is not only one of the best bred youngsters in California, but one of splendid proportions, fine size and disposition and as promising a young trotter as can be found anywhere. He is owned by Thos. Charlton & Son, of Ukiah, Cal., and has been registered with the American Trotting Register Association as Dumont S., 36,675.

His sire is the stallion Lynwood W., 32,853, better known to most California horsemen as Lynwood Wilkes 2:20. Lynwood W. was sired by Guy Wilkes 2:15½ and his dam was Lindale, a daughter of Sultan Jr., 12,771, second dam Flora Pierson by Gen. McClellan 144. Lynwood W. was a very fast horse and but for an accident would have had a much lower record. He has trotted quarters in 31 seconds even in his present crippled condition and is one of the handsomest stallions living. The dam of Dumont S. is the very handsome and fast trotting mare, Maud Fowler 2:21½, a daughter of the great producing sire, Anteeo 2:16½, son of the mighty Electioneer and Columbine, one of the greatest of broodmares. The second dam of Dumont S. is Eveline, a daughter of the champion of all sires, Nutwood 2:18½. Eveline is, without doubt, one of the greatest broodmares in California, being the dam of Maud Fowler 2:21½, Roblet 2:12, Tietam 2:19, Nick Russell 2:18, Ole 2:20 and the three year old colt McPherson that worked several heats below 2:20 this year.

Dumont S. is one of the best proportioned two year olds in California and will be a large horse as well as a fast one, and he shows fast at the trotting gait. Messrs. Charlton & Son have a prize in him and there was no question when he was awarded the blue ribbon at the Mendocino fair this year but he was entitled to it. If he is placed in the stud there he will do much to improve the stock of that county.

Last Three Days at Los Angeles.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 30.

Trot, 2:15 class, three in five.

Arketa, gr m by McKinney.....	(Green)	1	4	1	1

Knee-Knockers.

Frederick Watson, in the American Horse Breeder: The main thing in attempting to cure a knee-hitter is to study out the reason why the horse paddles, why, instead of carrying his foot straight, he gives that annoying little twist to it that carries it in against his other knee; having figured out just what causes that faulty action, study out how to stop it, and make the horse carry his leg and foot straight, but don't expect to accomplish a cure in a few days. You are lucky if you are successful at the finish without being in too much of a hurry about it. If you have a horse that toes out and hits his knees, and your horsemen friends tell you that it is impossible to alter the "shape of his legs," and "that he was foaled that way," don't be discouraged. Agree with them that the horse may have been foaled that way, for such is often the case, but the malformation is by no means incurable, and the younger the attempt is made to cure them the easier the job is and the quicker it can be accomplished. The very worst case can be cured, and this is no longer a matter of guesswork. It has been done, not by a lucky experiment, but by carefully studied-over methods, so the terrors of the knee-knockers are no longer classified among the incurable diseases. A careful study of cause and effect will enable an expert to effect a cure. Try it, but don't be in a hurry or expect to catch on to the system first crack out of the box. It's like all other puzzles, very different to look at until you know the trick, then how easy it seems.

Very much can be done toward straightening a foot at one shoeing sometimes when there is no serious contraction and the toe is not "dished" badly. These two faults combined mean growing a new foot (hoof) entirely before a cure can be accomplished. In a well-grown hoof the edge of a rule placed on the front of the hoof at the coronet and the point of the toe will touch the hoof itself all the way up. If there is daylight between the rule and the hoof the foot is "dished," and more or less distinctly visible rings are seen on the foot where the dish is, and these must be grown "off" the foot before it becomes perfect again. In the same manner if the hoof bulges at the center so that it is rounding outwards from coronet to shoe it is wrongly grown, the ground surface of the foot is smaller around than it should be. Sometimes quite a lot of the incorrectly grown hoof can be removed with the rasp, but more often than otherwise it is necessary to grow the deficient side or section of the foot out to equal its corresponding side or section. Some cases are so simple that it is really astonishing they are allowed to continue to be "all wrong," but others are so complicated that the slowness in any visible improvement taxes the patience of the most long-suffering owner to the limit.

Take, for instance, a knee-hitting pacer that requires along toe to balance him. It is next to an impossibility to grow out one of his contracted heels (for he has one on each foot to a moral certainty, go and look at his foot and judge for yourself) and yet preserve the long toe. The very length of that toe throws the foot at an angle that prevents the heel growing down in the right direction, because it throws the pressure of the horse's weight on the horn of the hoof in the wrong place. During the early winter months, when the long toe is not needed for racing purposes, it can be removed, partly at any rate, and the heel given a chance to grow out correctly. This will be accomplished in about three months, and then the toe can be allowed to grow long again, so the horse will be balanced all right and yet the crooked foot cured. To try to cure such a horse while he was racing would be to throw him out of balance almost to a certainty, but it can be done during the winter months when it is not necessary to rig him for extreme speed.

Sometimes lowering one heel will do the trick, sometimes lowering the other is the winning move. Occasionally a little extra weight on one side will make all the difference, but not one time in ten will weight on the outside help a horse that toes out. As a rule extension toes (on the outside), while causing a horse to break over differently, will make his leg swing back so much more that he will hit even worse than before, and sometimes develop him into that worst of all knee-bangers that hit the back of their legs at the knee and actually in reality knock their legs from under themselves.

In many cases a toe weight will help a knee-knocker a great deal. It is not because the extra weight causes him to go any straighter, but because it makes him go higher. Four inches above the knee there is six inches more space for the paddling foot to pass through than there is "at the knee," so if the weight carries the foot above the knee it gives it a better chance to get through without hitting.

As long as a horse stands crooked in front, either toes in or toes out, just so long will he pick up his feet wrong and swing them wrong, paddle and curl his feet and hit more or less severely in accordance with how badly his feet and legs are out of plumb and balance. The fault can be corrected, and I am one of those who have seen it done within the last twelve months, and, furthermore, the horse in question, formerly a very bad knee-banger, did not hit any more. The change of action in this case was in accordance with the change of the position of the feet. When the horse stood toeing out he swung his feet in and hit his knees hard; after his feet were made to stand straight, he picked them up straight, carried them straight, and, although a narrow chested horse, did not bang his knees at all, and only just brushed his knee-boots very lightly, which, considering that when he stood still his knee-boots touched each other, so closely did he stand in front, was a great improvement, and shows how true he must have carried his legs to keep from hitting, for his action carried his feet exactly to his knees.

There were three or four horses out racing during the past season that wore the knee spreaders, and every one of them were fast, but more or less unreliable. An extra twist of the pastern joint, perhaps a little inward inclination of the knee as well, would carry the foot too far towards the other leg for the outward pulling effect of the spreader to counteract, and a hit was the first result and a bad break the next, and perhaps the flag the next. One of these knee-spreader pacers would be a wonder if he could go his limit without the rigging, for he has wonderful speed. He can be cured no doubt if the right man gets hold of him; it may take time, but it would be worth the trouble, and the winter season is a good time to experiment, for if one system does not seem to work another can be tried without losing any time from the races. It is sometimes necessary to grow practically an entirely new hoof on him in order to straighten the foot.

If you chance to know of any bad knee-hitter, particularly of one that toes out badly, take the first opportunity of carefully examining his feet and you will find some, if not all, of these faults. Looked at from the bottom of his foot, one side of the foot is wider than the other, the frog is not in the center, one heel is more curled in than the other, that portion of the hoof at the heel that touches the ground is "in under" the foot too much, and one or both heels touch the ground too far under (too far in front of) that point on the coronet farthest from the front, which makes the foot, the hoof itself, too far in front of the leg; the hoof at the heel on one side is pretty nearly straight up and down from the coronet to the ground surface, while on the other side it has a decided slope. Pick up the front foot and draw a line through the center of the frog to the edge of the toe, then continue this mark around the edge just enough to show on the front of the foot when it is on the ground, drop the foot down and go and look at it, and you will find it is away around on one side.

Some horses grow horn much faster than others, and the worse deformed the hoof is the slower it grows (in the right place), as a rule. Once fairly started the hoof will grow out in any direction that the manipulator arranges for, but as it takes about six to eight months to grow out an entire foot a good deal of patience is required. The hoof is like anything else that grows that is soft at its commencement and hardens as it becomes older, it can be guided to grow in any desired direction just like a young tree can.

Palo Alto Belle 2:22½, died at Galesburg, Ill., October 9 of acute indigestion. She was the property of C. W. Williams, who purchased her of Lewis & Albaugh, Circleville, O., about three years ago. Her only living produce is Echo Belle by Allerton 2:09½, that Mr. Williams sold to Secretary Smolinger, of Galesburg, for $2000 when a weanling. Palo Alto Belle was 14 years old and is the sixth of the produce of Beautiful Bells to die suddenly and untimely. She was sold by Senator Stanford to Miller & Sibley, of Franklin, Pa., when a two year old, for $8000. Afterward for a reported large price she was purchased by J. C. Linne-man, of the Lima, O., Stock Farm. From thence she went to Cloverdell Farm of the unfortunate A. H. Moore, and from thence to Lewis & Albaugh, of Circleville. She was bred to Wilton 2:19½ and produced twins that died. After that she failed to get in foal to Wilton. Except Echo Belle, that is said to show extreme speed, Palo Alto Belle showed a fateful list of disappointments.

After having vainly endeavored to arrange a match between Lord Derby and John A. McKerron, E. E. Smathers made a final effort last week at Memphis to get a match for Lord Derby with Cresceus. He sent George Spear to George Ketcham, with a proposition to race for fun or half a million, and offered, it is said, $10,000 bonus to make the match. Secretary Howe offered to hang up a $5000 purse for the match, but Ketcham stated that he would ignore the challenge. Failing to get any satisfaction from Ketcham, Smathers tried to make a match for Prince Alert against Dan Patch for $20,000, having already secured the consent of James Hanley, owner of Prince Alert. McHenry refused to entertain any offer.

Feet and Action.

If wrong treatment gets in its work at the right time, no set of feet can grow into their full usefulness, says the Horseman. It matters little how perfect in form and texture they may have been when the colt was foaled, since neglect and bad handling can at any time easily paralyze nature's best efforts towards the right kind of leg foundation.

So it is with gait and action. While there is no real uniformity of breeding to this end, there would be no gain if there were, unless people knew how to keep the action in good working order after it had come into the world with the foal. The same ignorance and carelessness that can so soon spoil a set of feet may also be depended upon to ruin a gait.

The tie that binds the care and forming of the feet to the preserving of properly steered action could hardly be closer. Many a foal is not more than well on its feet before the need of hoof leveling is very evident. This is a strong argument in favor of the earliest reasonable halter breaking. Give the mare barely time to get over the uneasiness of the first anxious day or two, and then accustom the foal to the handling that will make quiet and comfortable hoof shaping possible.

The first leveling work had better be done under veterinary supervision, as the new feet must not be handled recklessly. If the feet and pasterns are reasonably straight, with the sides of the hoofs of equal height, it will be better to leave well enough alone until shaping is plainly needed. This does not lessen the importance of the haltering and handling, which may be needed at any minute, and it is as easy to look after the feet of a tractable youngster as it is hard to do anything with one that is unhaltered and frightened.

Greater wear and strain on the outside of a hoof would be looked for in the going and climbing of the natural life of a horse. It is accordingly found that the outer wall of the hoof is usually thicker and harder than the inner, and frequently grows faster. Many colts show the effects of this in a few weeks or even days; and the right kind of a light touch with leveling rasp will greatly help in the keeping of the legs in proper shape, for uneven muscular development is sure to follow the side placing of the weight of the hoof; and if this is not corrected at the start, it may take months of weighting to overcome what could have been fixed in as many minutes.

This extra outer growth would be worn off in a state of barefooted nature, but when the shoe prevents the wearing it becomes necessary to keep a close watch on the comparative growths of the two sides of a hoof. It isn't always the outside that grows the faster; broad-chested paddlers often make so much use of the inner half of the hoof that the ordinary conditions are reversed, and the outside becomes the part that must be kept growing.

While the position of the feet has much to do with the making of steering muscle, it is also true that the muscular variations strongly influence the position and the swing of the feet. The strain put on the machinery of the lower leg by long toes must be particularly guarded against, and this extra toe length is responsible for a large part of the slanting and contracted heels that are such a general nuisance.

The only safe plan is to keep the feet right from the start, and that will reduce the steering work that will have to be done to the lowest possible limits.

As explained before, keeping the inner wall higher than the outer helps in the straightening out of an out-turned foot, and building up the outer wall has a similar effect on a foot that turns in. This works well with youngsters, but the scheme must be used homeopathically with developed horses, and only in connection with the necessary muscle-evening weighting. There was a good young pacer in two or three races of the Grand Circuit last season that hit one arm badly. They tried to stop the in-swinging of the hitting foot by leaving the inside toe and bulge high and full. His very next start cooked him for the season, if not for all time. The early haltering and gentling has another great advantage in the ease and quickness with which the feet can be cleaned. In addition to the regular daily foot overhauling that should be given all stabled colts and horses, the clefts of the frogs and the commissures should be frequently washed out with any disinfecting fluid. One genuine case of thrush in the growing time will often ruin a foot for life, for the disease rots the fibers of the supporting tissues of the heels, and in so doing weakens the resistance to the contraction that is always waiting for a chance to make trouble. It is plenty hard enough to keep heels in shape when they have had a sound growth, let alone when they haven't.

There should be a mud stall in every stable; wet earth is nature's remedy for overdried feet. In an ordinary single stall put a box of the full length and width of the stall and deep enough to hold three or four inches of blue clay or other soil that may be adapted to the purpose. Wet it down thoroughly. Give each horse, young and old, its turn in this for an hour or two a day. It will keep the feet cool and help the natural growth of the horn amazingly. The standing on straw and stable floors is hard on the best of feet. When possible use peat moss.

Soundness of a Horse.

An interesting address, on the examination of a horse as to his soundness, was recently given by Dr. F. Torrence, D. V. S., of Winnipeg, Man., which was reported for the Live Stock Journal, and it will be read with interest. He said: "A sound horse is one that has no disease and no alteration of structure that impairs, or is likely to impair, his usefulness. An unsound horse is one which is suffering from disease or has some alteration of structure. It was demonstrated that in order to properly examine a horse it is necessary to have the animal free from harness. It is well to take the horse from different points of view. First observe the horse from the front. Take the head; note the eyes, any difference between the two eyes is a mark of unsoundness. Notice from this point of view any abnormal swellings upon head or legs. Then place yourself opposite the horse's shoulder and note the outline of body and legs. Do the same from behind the horse, noticing especially the outline of the coup, as from this point of view it is easy to detect the want of symmetry caused by the horse having a 'hip down' the result of a fractured bone. The next step is to examine the horse's teeth in order to ascertain the age, and the molars to detect decayed or missing teeth.

By turning the face of the horse to the light we are enabled to test and trace any symptoms of blindness. In blind horses, or those likely to be so affected, there is in some cases a cloud in the eye; in others the lower portion contains a muddy looking sediment. Paralysis of the optic nerve is detected in horses commonly known as star gazers. Horses with this disease show no appearance whatever of the disease in the eye, but the animal is totally blind. In order to detect it we can either expose the animal to some slight action by which his infirmity would be revealed, or we can see whether the eye loses its natural sensitiveness to the light. If the pupil of the eye changes in size when the eye is covered and uncovered the fact proves the vision all right; if the pupil shows no difference by being covered or uncovered, the horse is blind. Poll evil, located behind the poll, is detected by the presence of a swelling, or a running sore or a scar in this situation. A horse that has once contracted this disease is more likely to again suffer from it than one that never had it. Taking the lower section of the head, we examine the pulse. In testing the pulsation be sure that the animal is not excited, as that is likely to cause the pulse to beat quicker than is natural; 45 to the minute is the average beat of a horse's pulse.

We next examine the glands beneath the jaw for enlargement, a symptom of possible glanders, and the throat for evidence of the disease causing the condition known as "roaring." Pass the hand along the larynx and feel the cartilages and make sure that there is no depression on either side, as any depression will indicate disease. Next put a little pressure on the jugular vein, which sometimes becomes diseased on account of the animal having been bled with a dirty instrument. Passing the hand over the shoulder, we next ascertain abnormalities that might have arisen from the pressure of the collar.

Broken knees are not always from accident, and it is necessary to find out if the horse is a habitual stumbler. Examine the cannon bone for evidence of splint, which is a common ailment of horses, and also very often we find an abnormality between the carpal and meta-carpal bones, the fetlock and the pastern. Any enlargement of the pastern constitutes an unsoundness, as probably the result of ringbone. Pass the hand down the back of the leg, and first examine the elbow for capped elbow; then observe the back tendons, noting especially the one next the bone. This ligament supports the greater part of the horse's weight, and prevents displacement of the fetlock. If there is an enlargement it may be the result of some strain to the tendons and this may be considered an unsoundness. In order to carefully examine the foot, it is necessary to remove the shoe, and find out if there is a bad smelling discharge from the frog. This is called thrush. Corns are a source of unsoundness; notice, when paring the horn, and if there is a blood stain in the heel it is an indication of corns. Also notice if the foot is normal in size and shape. By the term "side-bone" is understood that the cartilage has turned into bone, a condition often found in old horses. In a young and sound horse it should be gristly or elastic. This side-bone is to be found just above the heel of the hoof. It causes lameness, and is an unsoundness.

Some horses have contracted feet or a contracted foot. This can be distinguished by noting the size of the horse's foot in proportion to its body, and should a foot appear to be small in proportion to the size of the animal we may have a contracted foot. The disease known as navicular disease cannot be detected unless the animal is being exercised, when the peculiar stilty gait reveals its presence. The best way of examining the hock is to take the animal from different standpoints and compare the two hocks to see that there is no difference. Then feel for enlargements. The experience of the observer is important here, and some spavins are only to be detected by a very careful touch. After examining with the fingers, we pass on to examine the cannon bone, the fetlock and the pastern just in the same manner as in the foreleg. An injured or bruised hock will at once indicate an injury, very often done by the horse itself, thus proving it to be a kicker. It is an unsightly blemish. Examine the hind foot for evidences of "thrush," which is more common in the hind than the fore foot, and the pastern for "scratches." Sidebone is unknown in the hind foot.

In order to ascertain the condition of the wind of the horse, the best way would be to put him to a gallop, but that is sometimes impossible; threaten him with a whip, and if he grunts it is a sign that his wind is not sound. To examine the heart and the lungs apply the ear to the side and listen to the sounds produced by the heart beating and the respiration. Draw the left foreleg forward when examining the heart.

On being questioned as to the disease known as "bog spavin," the doctor replied that it was caused by there being a great quantity of joint oil in the bursa, which made a bulging out in the part where the tissues permitted it to swell. More common in heavy breeds of horses. When the swelling is very large it may be a sign of disease. In reply to questions, the doctor said: By "sweeney" one means a wasting away of the muscles, usually of the shoulder, but sometimes used indiscriminately to apply to other parts of the body, the hip, for example. When a horse is walking or trotting, observe the gait to see if there is a well-balanced motion. If there is an unevenness in the gait, or limping, some lameness can be detected. Navicular disease is generally seen in contracted feet. Put the horse with contracted feet in motion and we observe the peculiar way in which it moves, as if they were tender. This is an indication of sore feet. By turning a horse round quickly and backing it, we can tell whether the horse has spinal trouble. With some horses it is impossible to back up. If in turning a horse around, we notice an uncertainty of movement, the horse may have "swamp fever." Take the temperature by the use of the thermometer, and in any case where the temperature is one or two degrees above the normal, the horse is unsound, and no certificate should be given as to its health. Examine the joints if they are of a normal size, as "knuckling" is another ailment in horses. This, however, is more due to hard work than unsoundness. Some horses are born this way. "Cribbing" is sometimes given in the English bench as an unsoundness, but the American very often attributes it to imitation of a bad habit in another horse. The line of distinction between soundness and serviceable soundness—Examine whether the ailment is a blemish or due to the kind of work the horse has had to do. A horse can be used on a farm with a blemish or even unsoundness which would render it useless as a driver, and while the horse would be serviceably sound to the farmer it would not in the latter case be sound at all. A horse's pulse can be as low as 135. In heavy breeds the pulse is lower than in the lighter breeds. When a horse has one hip lower than the other it is not always an unsoundness, as in many cases it does not interfere with his usefulness. Interfering is not an unsoundness, but a defect in the gait.

Greater Call for Ponies.

Ponies, Shetland and otherwise, according to the Breeders' Gazette, are in great demand. In fact those in the best position to know say that never in America have the calls made on the breeders and dealers been so insistent. Prices are, naturally, very much higher than they were a few years ago, and instances have of late been recorded when pater-familias was dumb-founded when he learned what he was expected to pay, and would have to pay for a pony for his little ones. Nevertheless few importations are being made, and one result of the shortage is that ponies of all sorts of breeding so long as they are small are going as Shetlands. There is no charge made that the representative breeders are mixing alien blood into their herds—the men in the business are far too sensible for that; but it is a well known fact that when a demand arises in this United States some one will see to it that it is satisfied. Very many people who do not see their way clear to keeping one or more ponies regularly are endeavoring to hire them for their children to ride and drive, and in the parks in the big cities where ponies are kept for hire the numbers in use and the call for their services are greater than ever before. There is no nicer business in the world than the breeding of ponies of the smallest breeds, or indeed of any breed, and no mean amount of skill is required to preserve the requisite measure of smallness, so different are the fat conditions here to those obtaining in the native habitats of all the small sorts. There is nothing better in the way of a plaything for children than a good pony, nothing that stimulates to activity of both body and mind so well. It is pleasant to know that the pony fares so bravely forth in these flush times.

San Francisco, Saturday, November 8, 1902.

DURING THE WEEK there has been sent to stallion owners all over the Coast a request from Secretary Kelley of the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association that they lend their aid to secure the nomination of all the mares bred to their stallions, in the Pacific Breeders Futurity $6000 Stake for the foals of mares bred in 1902. It is to be hoped that every man who owns a stallion will respond to this request and secure as large a representation of his horse's produce as possible. The stakes for foals of 1901 and 1902 filled remarkably well and are successful in every particular up to date. Stake No. 3 should exceed both its predecessors in the number of entries and be worth more than the guaranteed value, and it will if stallion owners will get a move on and aid in securing the entries as requested.

THE WINTER RACING SEASON of 1902-1903 will open at Ingleside Track next Saturday with a splendid program of racing, the feature of which is The Opening Handicap, for three year olds and upwards at a mile, with $1500 added money. This race will have a large field of starters in all probability. The fact that Ingleside track will be opened then for the first time in three years, will in itself be sufficient to draw a large crowd to this beautiful racing ground, as it is popular with the public and with horsemen as well. The California Jockey Club has made many improvements since coming into possession of the property, and now that the Board of Supervisors of this city and county has removed the ban from racing there, the chances are that the forty days racing to be held will draw still larger crowds and be more popular than ever.

THE CONEY ISLAND JOCKEY CLUB, which annually holds one of the greatest race meetings of America at the celebrated race course at Sheephead Bay, advertises in this paper a list of rich stakes to be run at its meetings of 1903, 1904 and 1905. For the meeting of 1903, are two stakes for two year olds, foals of 1901. These are The Foam and The Surf, each having an estimated value of $6000. For the June meeting of 1904, are The Tidal, a $20,000 stake for three year olds, The Mermaid, a $7000 stake for three year old fillies, and the Lawrence Realization, a $40,000 stake for three year olds. For the autumn meeting of 1904 are The Great Filly Stakes, which have an estimated value of $20,000, and The Century, for three year olds and upwards, with a guaranteed value of $20,000. For the autumn meeting of 1905 The Annual Champion, $25,000, is the big feature. Besides these is the Lawrence Realization of 1905, which will be worth at least $40,000. Next Monday, November 17th, is the date on which entries and payments on these stakes are due, and the owners of thoroughbred colts and fillies should not permit the date to pass without filling out the necessary entry blanks and mailing the same to the Clerk of the Course, Coney Island Jockey Club, Windsor Arcade, New York.

A DEMAND WILL EXIST next spring in many interior counties of this State for good draft stallions, and it would be well for the owners of draft mares to be on the lookout for the best individuals with which to mate their mares. There is a great shortage of the heavy breeds for truck work in the city and farm work in the country, and it will be several years before this demand can be supplied. This being the case, many breeders will be induced to send their mares to almost any sort of a stallion, that is, by the draft order, paying little attention to his breeding, and patronizing poor grades as well as full bloods. This will be a great mistake as by the time the foals that result from next year's matings are matured enough to sell, the demand may fall off, and only the best bring prices that will pay a profit. There is nothing made nowadays by patronizing grade males of any breed. A full blooded mare, or other farm animal should only be bred to a pure blooded male of the same breed. If grade females are owned they should always be mated with sires of pure blood, and the same course pursued with their female produce. This is the only way to improve ones stock. By sending his large, heavy mares of draft stock to a pure bred stallion of the Percheron, Clyde or other draft breed, the stock is almost certain to improve, and if this course is pursued every year, and good stallions of the same breed used, a breeder will soon establish a type of animal that will always be in demand. We wish to particularly impress upon the minds of our readers at the present time, that the only course to pursue hereafter is to breed up. It is the only way to make the business profitable.

SANTA ROSA STOCK FARM'S string of campaigners arrived home yesterday in charge of Millard Sanders from a victorious trip through the Grand Circuit, although of the $27,000 won in stakes and purses over $20,000 is to the credit of the great mare Anzella 2:06½. Dolly Dillon 2:07 and Bonsilene 2:14½, of which great things were expected when the horses left Pleasanton, went wrong and made poor showings, but were bred to the champion Cresceus 2:02½ and should foal future champion trotters for the Santa Rosa Stock Farm. Sir Albert S. comes home with a new mark opposite his name and is now one of four California-bred pacers that have records below 2:04. Had he not been off badly during nearly the entire season, he would have been among the heaviest winners of the year. The mare Lou Dillon, that was taken along for educational purposes only and was not started in a race, created a sensation every time Mr. Sanders gave her her head in a workout. At Memphis one morning she came the last half of the mile with The Abbot driven by Geers on one side, and Cresceus driven by Ketcham on the other, and trotted the distance without a skip and as if she liked the clip in 1:01½. She worked a mile in 2:08½ at Baltimore and beat that time a second at Lexington. The Santa Rosa Stock Farm has been the only breeding farm in California that has had a string of trotters on the Grand Circuit this year, and the fact that the string has returned home with a good amount of winnings to its credit is a matter of congratulation for every person who is interested in California as a breeding place for trotters and pacers.

When in Los Angeles, stop at the Hotel Rosslyn.

The Griffith Sale.

From a breeder's standpoint the prices obtained for the standard bred mares and geldings at the dispersal sale of horses belonging to Mr. Chas Griffith, of this city, held at the Occidental Horse Exchange, on Thursday of this week, were ridiculously low, but from the view of the practical horse dealer, they were very good. There are very few buyers in California who want broodmares at the present time and none that will pay the high prices which prevailed ten or twelve years ago. Everything considered, Mr. Layng held a very successful sale of the Griffith horses. The prices obtained were as follows:

Sophia, b m, foaled 1887, by Robert McGregor 2:17½, dam Orawood by Wildwood 144; $185.
Nola, ch m, 1886, by Nutwood, dam Belle Byron by Bowman's Clark Chief; $170.

Vida Wilkes 2:18½ by Guy Wilkes, dam Vixen by Nutwood; $235.

Alta Nola, blk m, 1898, by Altamont, dam Nola by Nutwood; $115.

Bonnie Derby, b m, 1898, by Chas. Derby, dam Bon Bon by Simmons; $235.

Petrina, ch m, 1889, by Piedmont, dam Miss Peyton by imp. Glengarry; $100.

Lady Petrina, b m, 1899, by Directum 2:05½, dam Petrina by Piedmont; $110.

Sain Filly, b m, 1897, by imp. Sain, dam Morgiana by Gen. Benton; $325.

Nettie O. gr m, about fifteen years old, by Lakeland Pilot, dam Alice Grey by King West; $185.

Phoenix 2:15½, blk g by Direct 2:05½, dam Nola by Nutwood; $415.

Bay gelding, 1897, by Waldstein, dam Sophia by Robert McGregor; $65.

At the close of the sale of the Griffith horses, a number of roadsters, work horses and teams, the property of various owners, were disposed of at fair prices.

On a hot day drink Jackson's Napa Soda lemonade and be refreshed.

Five trotters entered the 2:10 list at Memphis.

The Year's Records.

The best records for the year are as follows:

TROTTERS.

Stallion—Cresceus by Robert McGregor 2:17½, dam Mabel by Mambrino Howard 2:04
Mare—Susie J. by Jay Hawker 2:14½, dam Mil-lonaire by Norwood 2:06½
Gelding—Major Delmar by Delmar, dam Expectation by Autograph 2:05½
Four-year-old Colt—Directum Spier by Directum
2:05½, dam Lulu Campau by Axtell 2:11½
Four-year-old Filly—Zephyr by Zombro 2:11, dam Gazelle 2:11½ by Gossiper 2:11
Three-year-old Colt—Pat Henry by John G.
Carlisle 2:20, dam Pattie Patterson by Grand Sultan 2:14
Three-year-old Filly—Gail Hamilton by Oakland
Baron 2:09½, dam Jennie Hulse by Baron
Wilkes 2:11½
Three-year-old Gelding—The Rajah by Prince of India 2:13½, dam Buffalo Maiden by Jerome
Eddy 2:14½
Two-year-old Colt—The Pacolet by Pactolus
2:12½, dam May Bell Chimes by Chimes 2:18½
Two-year-old Gelding—Hilgar by Wiggins 2:19½, dam Ellen Tucker by Aberdeen 2:15½
Two-year-old Filly—Katherine A. by Wiggins
2:19½, dam Zoraya by Guy Wilkes 2:14
New Performer—Chase by Keeler 2:13½, dam
Enola D. by Axtell 2:07½
Two Miles—Cresceus by Robert McGregor 2:17½,
dam Mabel by Mambrino Howard 4:17
Five Miles—Zambra by McKinney 2:11½, dam
Nellie Fairmont by Fairmont 12:24

Los Angeles Racing Association.

A dispatch from Los Angeles under date of November 2d, says: "James W. Brooks, manager of the new Los Angeles Racing Association, which has just finished a twenty-one days' successful race meeting, announces that on January 31, 1903, racing will begin here and continue for forty days. The opening handicap will be worth $1000, added money to the winner, and it is the intention of the Association to give no less than five purses of this amount during the meeting. Besides there will be several stakes to be contested for. Brooks states that the minimum purse will be $300, and for handicaps $500 purses will be hung up.

The grounds, buildings and track of Agricultural Park will be put in first-class condition and everything made ready for a first-class race meeting. The management expects to attract a large number of good horses from New Orleans and the East. The new association is backed by a number of well known and wealthy business men of this city."

Major Delmar's Great Race.

Major Delmar won one of those peculiar races known as the "Memphis System," being a race of three heats, one of which is one mile, one mile and an eighth and one half a mile, and in doing so trotted the fastest race mile of the year. The time of the three heats was as follows: One mile, 2:05½; mile and an eighth, 2:22½; half mile, 1:01. Monte Carlo was second in each heat. Chase was third in two heats and fourth in one, and Nutbearer fourth in two heats and third in one. The showing made by Monroe Salisbury's gelding Monte Carlo by Mendocino in this race stamps him as one of the greatest trotters this State has ever produced. It is a pleasure to know that he closed the season sound and all right and that he won quite a comfortable sum for the King maker.

Thirty trotters and sixty-five pacers have entered the 2:10 list this year.

The Champion's Breeding.

Cresceus is not a Wilkes, nor an Electioneer, nor yet a Nutwood, but he is, nevertheless, a trotting-bred trotter, and is the most convincing living argument that trotting blood does not necessarily have to come through certain individual channels in order to do its "telling." He is a living demonstration of the fact that it is blood, and not individualism, that does the "telling" in line characteristic production and reproduction. His full breeding is well known to horsemen, but like the Ten Commandments, it loses nothing by repetition. His sire is Robert McGregor 2:17½, the most talked about trotter of his day, and who was by Major Edsall 211; dam Nancy Whitman (also dam of Madeline 2:23½), by American Star 14; second dam Nance (dam of Lady Whitman, 2:30), by Young Messenger, who was strongly inbred to Imported Messenger.

Major Edsall was by Alexander's Abdallah 15 (son of Hambletonian 10), dam by Hambletonian 2, another strongly inbred Messenger. Major Edsall was foaled in 1859, obtained a trotting record of 2:29, sired Robert McGregor 2:17½ and Clayton Edsall 2:22½ and is the grandsire of the pacer, Major Wonder 2:09½. Six of his sons have sired standard speed and three standard performers are out of his daughters. Hambletonian 2, foaled in 1823, sired three standard performers, six standard performers are out of his daughters, and one of his daughters, Grey Rose, produced the great trotting speed sire and progenitor, Cuyler, and also Stillson 670. Every horseman knows what Abdallah 15 has done in various directions, and hence it is plain that on his sire's side Cresceus is orthodox trotting-bred.

Mabel, the dam of Cresceus, is by Mambrino Howard, a stallion who never accomplished a great deal beyond siring the dam of the world's champion trotter, but he was a son of Mambrino Chief 11. He does not appear in the great table as a speed sire, and this emphasizes the fact that "blood tells," and though it may be dormant in one generation, it will manifest itself in subsequent ones, for though Mambrino Howard did not sire standard speed, his daughter, Mabel, possessed the prepotency of her grand sire, Mabino Chief, and gave to the world its greatest trotter, and also produced Nightingale 2:10½; Miss Mary 2:24½, and Sadie Hasson 2:26½. Contention, the second dam of Cresceus, was by Allie West 2:25, son of Almont 33, and here another rich vein of orthodox trotting blood is tapped.

The dam of Allie West was Fanny by Mambrino Chief, and Almont's dam was also by Mambrino Chief—more inbreeding to both the same blood and the same individual. Contention neither performed in standard time nor produced a standard performer, but her trotting blood asserted itself through her daughter, Mabel, and manifested itself in her grandchildren, Cresceus 2:02½, Nightingale 2:10½, Miss Mary 2:24½ and Sadie Hasson 2:26½ and her great-grandchildren, Katrina 2:25 and Gale 2:30. In many of his remote crosses Cresceus takes on mixtures of thoroughbred and pacing blood, the cornerstone of the trotting structure, but his various top crosses are trotting crosses pure and simple, and he is a sure trotter. His trotting blood, though not ultra-fashionable as to individual derivatives, is of the same orthodox kind which has given us practically all of the great harness speed breadwinners during the last half century.—Western Horseman.

John A. McKerron's New Record.

When John A. McKerron defeated Lord Derby 2:05½ and The Monk 2:05½ for the Boston Challenge Cup at Cleveland, without having to step within any near margin of the records of the two defeated trotters, the friends of the New York horses began to fill the air with the usual extracts from the excuse column, and pointed with an air of indisputable authority to the difference between the figures behind the names of The Monk and Lord Derby and those attached to John A. McKerron. They "explained" that the longshipment from New York had taken the edge off their champions, and when owner Harry Devereux refused to send John A. McKerron to New York to give the defeated ones "satisfaction," there was quite a bit of talk about "lucky win" and "dares'nt risk it again," etc. John A. McKerron was shipped to Memphis and sent for a record, and trotted in 2:06½. October 25th he was started to beat 2:06½, and trotted in 2:05½, a half-second faster than either Lord Derby or The Monk's record, and enough to beat them twenty-one feet, over two good lengths. The last half of John A. McKerron's mile was in 1:02, with the third quarter at a 2:03 gait.

Horses of the Year.

If ever there was a puzzle worthy of solution, it is the question of what horses during 1902 stand out as the peer of their several divisions. Take the two year olds. As the year rolled along Mizzen, Dalesman, Irish Lad, Acefull, Savable, Eugenia Burch, Grey Friar and Meltonian all claimed the public eye, and if they met at even weights (forsex, etc.) at six furlongs, what would be the choice to-day? As the official handicapper placed Savable the top youngster of the season with 126 pounds in the White Plains Handicap, it is an index to his ideas. The Futurity winner has done nothing in this part of the world except to win the Futurity, and that brilliant accomplishment bore the penalty. Within one pound of him came Acefull. The place of filly honor went to Eugenia Burch with 123 pounds; Judith Campbell, 113; Onatas, 120, and Grey Friar, 120, River Pirate, 118, a full measure, and then Dick Welles, the Western crack, capable, they say, of beating Savable at even weights, 118. Irish Lad is out of it, so the problem remained up to the White Plains event. This was won by Merry Acrobat, who had earned the title of "the costly disappointment," and this still further increased the tangle.

As regards the three year olds there is no shadow of a doubt that Hermis would be named by 90 per cent of any gathering. He is a grand animal, showing all the qualities of a great race horse, and by the results endorsing theories. He can probably give twenty pounds to any three year old in training.

Of the older horses one must go to Gold Heels. Great and popular as Advance Guard is, and without in any way attempting to deprecate his wonderful work, there is very little doubt in the writer's mind that Gold Heels at his best would have beaten him. Blues at his best would make things lively for the pair, so far as ability alone goes, but either could and have beaten him simply by racing up to him and breaking his heart.

So it seems to stand, a great tangle among the two year olds, with Irish Lad, Acefull and Eugenia Burch at the top; Hermis as a three year old and Gold Heels and Advance Guard in the older division. Self Protection stands by himself among the cross-country performers.—Spirit of the Times.

Headed for the Championship.

Major Delmar added the culminating triumph to a series of great achievements at Memphis last week by trotting a mile in 2:05½, and is now generally hailed as the successor to Cresceus. It does not seem remotely probable that he may attain to this distinction. He is only five years old, and has not a single infirmity. That his mile in 2:05½ was not a mere chance performance is shown by the fact that he trotted the next heat, a mile and an eighth, at a 2:06½ clip, and came back in the third, a half mile, in 1:01. This is as consistent as it is brilliant, and points to greater feats next season if no misfortune intervenes. His record is now faster than that of any other trotter in training except Cresceus 2:02½ and John A. McKerron 2:05½, both of which made their records against time. Major Delmar was got by Del Mar 2:16½ out of Expectation by Autograph 2:16½. Del Mar was by Electioneer out of Sontag Dixie, dam of five, by Toronto Sontag, son of Toronto Chief, he by Royal George, all registered trotting stallions. Autograph was by Alcantara 2:23, son of George Wilkes 2:22 out of Flaxy, dam of four, by Kentucky Clay, son of Cassius M. Clay Jr. 22. Flaxy's dam was Young Flaxy by Telegraph. Major Delmar is bred in ideal lines for a champion. There is not enough near thoroughbred blood in him to even found a presumption on. He is intensely trotting bred, and another illustration of the efficacy of cross piled upon cross of the blood that trots.—Trotter and Pacer.

The Team Record.

The Year Book shows that there have been but eleven trotting team time records in the history of the American light-harness horse. In 1883 Cleora and Independence established the team record against time at 2:16½. The next year Edward and Dick Swiveller reduced it by a quarter of a second, and the same year Maxie Cobb and Neta Medium reduced it to 2:15½. This record remained until 1890, when Belle Hamlin and Justina placed it at 2:13, and here it remained for two years, when Belle Hamlin and Honest George still further reduced it to 2:12½, which is the present record. These records were all made over mile tracks, and with one exception the drivers were professionals. The most remarkable performance ever witnessed in the attempts to reduce this record occurred at the half-mile track of the Parkway Driving Club in the suburbs of Brooklyn on October 25, when Mr. E. T. Bedford, an amateur weighing fully two hundred pounds, drove his pair York Boy and Bemay to a road wagon a mile in 2:12½. While this time only equals the world's record in a technical sense, yet the fact that it was made over a half-mile track by an amateur weighing fifty pounds over the regulation weight makes the performance in fact at least two seconds better than the world's record, and it is hoped that at some time in the future Mr. Bedford will try his hand with his great pair over one of the best mile tracks where it will receive the credit to which it is justly entitled.

Cresceus Trots Two Miles in 4:17.

MEMPHIS, October 31—Although the meeting of the Memphis Trotting Association closed yesterday there was a program of record breaking arranged for to-day that attracted a great crowd to the track. Cresceus was sent against the world's two-mile trotting record of 4:28½, held by Onward Silver, and without apparent effort completed the circuit twice without a break in 4:17 flat, chipping 11½ seconds off the former record. Both the horse and Mr. Ketcham, who drove him, received an ovation from the large crowd present.

Cresceus appeared shortly after 3 o'clock, and, after scoring twice, Ketcham nodded for the word. Accompanied by a runner Cresceus went to the quarter in 0:33. At the half the timers hung out 1:05½; the three-quarter pole was passed in 1:39. Straightening out for the wire, Ketcham sent him along at a lively clip, the mile being reeled off in 2:10½. At the mile and a quarter Cresceus seemed to increase his speed. The pole was passed in 2:41½, and the mile and a half in 3:13. The last three-quarter pole was passed in 3:45 and the two miles was covered in 4:17. Cresceus trotted the last mile faster than the first.

Another brilliant performance was that of Prince Alert, who went against the pacing record for geldings of 2:00½. Driven by Demarest, the horse moved away like clockwork, reaching the quarter in 0:29½, the half in 0:59, the three quarters in 1:29½, and beating the former record by three-quarters of a second, the time for the mile being 2:00 flat.

Cresceus will be shipped to Atlanta in a few days, where he has engagements. To-day's racing closed the meeting. Summary:

Trotting, half mile heats, to wagon, amateur drivers—Invader won two straight heats in 1:04½, 1:03½. Battleton and Dr. Book also started.

Match race, trotting—Verville won the first and third heats in 2:20½, 2:22½. Edgewood Belle won the second heat in 2:24.

Pacing, to wagon, 2:10 class, amateur drivers—Dr. Monical beat Captain Potter. Time, 2:09½.

Cresceus to beat world's two mile trotting record of 4:28½ (Ketcham)—Time—0:33, 1:06½, 1:39, 2:10½, 2:41½, 3:13, 3:45, 4:17.

Prince Alert to beat world's pacing record for geldings of 2:00½ (Demarest)—Time, by quarters—0:29½, 0:59, 1:29½, 2:00.

Cresceus not in Condition.

After Cresceus trotted in 2:04 at Memphis several leading trainers were asked why the stallion did not succeed in going a faster mile. There was but practically one opinion expressed. "Ed. Geers: He has been in the stud too long and has not had the training sufficient for the track. I believe he is the two-minute horse but he cannot do it with less than nine months training."

Budd Doble: "Wonderful performances are accomplished only after months of continuous and careful training. I am of the opinion Cresceus will lower his record, and regard him as the most wonderful trotter that ever lived, but I predict he will not lower his mark this season."

John Splan: "Lack of condition, that is all. With proper conditions he will trot in two minutes."

Scott Hudson: "I would like to train Cresceus for twelve months and I would drive him in 2:00 sure."

Oddities in Patents for Sporting Goods.

Many curious inventions in the line of varied articles used by sportsmen have been patented in recent years, among them some of the freak devices are interesting as well as amusing. The following paper by W. F. Woolard, Examiner U. S. Patent office, Washington, is devoted to a brief description of a number of articles that are mostly creditable in objective design but practically worthless.

The Constitution of the United States has been in force for more than 110 years, and in every year of that period events have transpired, which have borne testimony as to the wisdom of some of its most simple provisions. Not the least meritorious of these simple provisions, is that authorizing Congress to pass laws to promote the progress of science and the useful arts by securing to inventors for a limited number of years the exclusive right to their inventions and discoveries. The monopoly thus provided for has proven a great stimulus to many thousands of Americans. Without it there would have been little or no incentive to effort, for the inventor would not have troubled himself with the thought of changing the form of the crude devices and methods at hand and which had been brought down to him from the ages before. But little progress in the industries was made before the inauguration of the patent system.

The inventor's reward is that which comes to him from royalties on his invention during the life of his patent, and the people through the Government grant him this monopoly for a few years in order that the benefits which flow from the new device may inure to the people at the expiration of the patent, the public then being free to use the patented device without hindrance. An inconsiderable number of patents were issued during the first decade, but within the century just closed, the number exceeded 670,000. No single factor has been so powerful in our unrivaled industrial progress and marvelous development as the patent system.

Under certain conditions the Government grants a patent for 17 years to any person who has invented any new and useful improvement in any art, machine, article of manufacture or composition of matter. The application making the disclosure of the invention is lodged in the patent office and an examination as to the novelty of the invention is made. The office does not concern itself with the question of utility, and consequently there are issued from time to time patents for strange devices. These "freak patents" are not often found in the more practical arts, and the sporting goods class is quite free from them. The class referred to has, however, a number of patents for oddities of an interesting nature. Some of the more recent ones are herewith illustrated and described.

A fisherman with a desire to utilize the time between strikes, has devised an audible signal, to notify him that his line needed attention. A stake is driven into the ground and a line is attached to the end of an arm hinged to the stake. A pull on the line causes the hammer to strike a bell and in that manner sound the alarm to call the fisherman from his book or nap, or other diversion. It has been proposed also by an arrangement of electrical devices to rouse the drowsy fisherman, the pull on the line effecting a closing of the circuit to ring a bell.

Another proposes by an automatic device, to hook and play the fish. The usual rod is held in a frame and has a self-winding reel with a tripping mechanism, which is released by a pull on the line. The spring causes the reel to take in the slack and yet will allow the fish all the line he can take, playing him until exhausted or until taken in by the person in charge of the device. The slight pull necessary to release the mechanism is followed instantly with a jerk which will hook the fish.

In fishing with live bait, it has been the practice to pass the hook through the body of the minnow, thereby inflicting painful injuries which soon brought about the death of the bait and necessitated frequent renewal thereof. In order to remove this objection, the bait is enclosed in a glass case or guard, enabling the minnow to have considerable freedom of movement and thus present an attractive appearance. The guard serves the further purpose of protecting the bait from being mutilated by the fish to be caught, and the bait can be kept alive for any length of time.

With a view to facilitating the capture of salmon and other large game fish, an electric circuit embracing the hook is provided and when a fish is hooked, the person holding the rod presses a button near at hand, thus closing the circuit and sending a strong current through the fish, which may be continued until the fish is electrocuted and may be landed without further difficulty.

Another inventor actuated by the wish to spare the bait the injury caused by impalement, has provided his hook with two spring actuated clips, by means of which the minnow is held by the dorsal fin and tail, leaving it free for a limited movement, sufficient to enable the minnow to move at will and carry the hook with it.

Fish are intrinsically selfish, like many of the "genus homo," and this characteristic is utilized to bring about their capture. Behind the hook and acting as a sinker, is suspended a small mirror, in which the fish will see his reflection. The supposed companionship will be assuring and he will snap the bait recklessly, rushing up before his seeming competitor can deprive him of it, and thus will be more securely hooked. The reflection of light from the mirror in the water will serve to attract the fish to the bait.

In fishing with frogs, it has been found that the legs are often seized and torn away in the efforts to land the fish, rendering the bait useless and permitting the fish to escape. This difficulty is to be avoided by combining three hooks, the two extra ones being passed through the legs of the frog, so that it will be impossible to get more than a small portion of the bait, without encountering a hook.

A trolling hook having a small incandescent electric light under the spoon was recently patented, and as there would appear to be little difficulty in maintaining the electric circuit, this device seems efficacious.

There have been many kinds of artificial bait devised. One man patented a mixture composed of anise, assafoetida, cardamon seed and buzzard meat, to be used to add flavor to the ordinary bait.

A recent patent covers a mechanical device, constructed in imitation of a frog and intended to be used as artificial bait. It is a well organized machine, constituted with a shaft, cranks and levers to give movement to the arms and legs of the frog, a small wheel supplying power, as the device is drawn through the water. It would seem that a fish must be very hungry indeed, to take this bait.

A diving decoy for ducks, operated by the hunter from concealment on shore is manipulated by means of a line from the decoy to the shooter, passing around a weight submerged near the decoy, so that the latter may be made to dive when desired. Another inventor proposes to utilize the chemical force of the evaporation of camphor as a means to propel a decoy, a spring-clip at the rear under side of the decoy holding a piece of camphor, which evaporates when the decoy is placed in the water, and the vapors thus developed, exert a pressure upon the water sufficient to propel the decoy.

A hunting decoy in the form of a huge cow has been made the subject of another patent, the skeleton frame-work being covered and appropriately finished to resemble the animal imitated. Two hunters conceal themselves within the structure and, furnishing the motive power, may roam the country at will. Look-outs and port holes are provided, though which the game may be detected and fired upon when a range is attained. The gunners occupy at all times their normal upright position.

An early type of magazine gun was provided with a plurality of locks alongside the barrel of the gun, in which was placed a charge for each lock. Connections were made with the trigger, so that the charges could be fired successively, commencing with the one last put in.

A pistol of the same nature was constructed so that to fire the leading charge, you would pull one trigger and then push the other trigger to fire the next charge. Guns have also been provided with two triggers, one some distance in advance of the other, so that the single lock could be operated from whatever might be the most convenient position.

To lessen the liability of accidental discharge, a gun-stock has been provided with safety devices, which will prevent the gun from being fired when in any but the shooting position. Positioning the gun against the shoulder serves to operate a mechanism to release a trigger lock, but it is further necessary that a part be moved by hand before the trigger will yield to the pressure of the finger. Two distinct operations are therefore necessary before the trigger can be drawn to fire the gun.

The electric gun has recently appeared, its inventor seeking to dispense with the complicated structure of the old forms. The stock is hollowed out and in the space so formed is placed an electric battery. The shell or cartridge used does not differ materially from the old ones, and is provided with a fulminating compound, the igniter being a platinum wire passing through the fulminate. The terminals from the battery, are, by pressing the trigger, carried into contact with the igniter and the circuit is closed.

Electricity has also been used for the purpose of illuminating the gun sight, a small incandescent lamp being thus arranged, and connected with the battery in the stock.

Many persons can not close one eye while keeping the other open and consequently, it is difficult for such persons to sight a gun accurately. The arrangement of a small screen on the side of the gun stock in position to intercept the vision of one eye, leaves the other eye free to be concentrated on the object without confusion, thus effecting a correct sighting of the gun. To enable one to determine correct range a graduated spirit level has been applied to the stock of a gun. This probably suggested the spirit level sight now in use.

A gun provided with a small lamp at one side and an adjustable reflector—mirror—at the other, has been devised to illuminate the object to be fired at and at the same time aid the marksman in testing and securing steadiness in his aim. It is suggested that the lamp can be omitted and the reflector adjusted, so as to reflect the rays of the sun, if the condition be favorable for out-door shooting.

An Iowa man discovered that the sights of an ordinary double-barreled gun could not be arranged so as to insure accuracy of aim, and proposed to make a reversible gun having one barrel above the other. Instead of rotating the barrel, as has been done in such guns, he hinged the stock by means of a rule joint, so that the stock could swing up and down. By turning the gun over and adjusting the stock the gun was converted from a shot-gun into a rifle, and vice versa.

One sportsman complains that he has at times been greatly embarrassed upon finding that the shot, or load number, which was stamped on the closing wad, had been entirely obliterated and that it was necessary to extract the wadding in order to ascertain the size of the shot contained in the shell. He overcomes the difficulty, by using a transparent wad of celluloid or similar material whereby a glance at the shot within the cartridge affords the desired knowledge. Another one uses a conical wad, inserted vertex first in the shell, to effect a scattering of the shot, thus enabling the shooter to get 'em a coming and a going.

To secure a more perfect combustion of the powder within the cartridge, a small perforated tube is used to convey the fire from the fulminate into the axis of the cartridge, the charge being thus ignited simultaneously in numerous places, and an increased velocity being imparted to the ball, it being asserted that such velocity is greater than can be obtained from a like quantity of powder, in the old type of cartridge.

Gun-stocks have been made hollow for a variety of purposes. One inventor proposes to sheath his hunting knife in the hollow of his gun-stock, where the same may be readily accessible, and as a modification of his invention, proposes to care for his bayonet in the same manner in warfare. It is rather odd that a receptacle for a flask was not also provided. A true sportsman would appreciate such a convenience.

The inventor, Mr. Samuel Colt, of Hartford, Conn., who constructed his gun-stock so as to form a canteen, gave the world an invention of great utility.

To lessen the shock of the recoil of a gun upon being fired, another inventor has, with a saw, made curved slits lengthwise of his gun-stock, the stock having, as a result a desirable degree of resiliency.

A gun-stock formed as a spade might prove a desirable possession under certain circumstances. A removable butt, or shoulder-piece is applied to complete the gun when it is desired to use the same as such, and the whole enclosed by a cover, the hollow space in the spade being used as a receptacle for small articles.

An arm rest or supporter to enable riflemen to keep the arm steady when shooting without a fixed rest and thus attain the desired degree of accuracy, was invented in 1865, and was primarily designed for the use of sharpshooters. In 1898, a similar device for the use of one-armed persons was patented, enabling such persons to handle a gun with some facility. Rifles have also been provided with chin rests to be used while firing.

Following the introduction of the Bogardus glass ball several years ago, there appeared many kinds of flying targets. Some were filled with feathers, which would be liberated upon breakage of the glass ball containing them and would float through the air to indicate a successful shot. Others were coated so that ignition occurred when the ball was struck by the shot. Another patented a bell target composed of two hemispheres cast as an integral structure. Another applied a circumferential flange so that the ball would take a direct course through the air and rotate only on its vertical axis. A jack-in-the-box flying target was devised by one who did not find the targets of that day sufficiently amusing. But the novelty of the target line is one to which a sky rocket is attached.

It sometimes happens that pigeons will not leave the trap when it is sprung and have to be frightened out by a scare rope, or other means, which tends to make the shooter nervous and often causes him to lose his shot. Nor do the pigeons always rise from the ground immediately. A pigeon starter in the form of a mechanical cat has been constructed and it is adapted to be placed near the trap and released from crouching position as the trap is sprung, thereby frightening the pigeons and causing them to rise at once. The shooter who has the services of the mechanical cat to aid him can count on quick action of the released pigeon in its efforts to escape its feline foe and be prepared to stop its flight as soon as it leaves the trap.

One bicyclist possessed of martial spirit has mounted a carbine on the head of his bicycle and asserts that the same may be successfully fired without in any way interfering with the movements or speed of the rider, the discharge being brought about by pressing a part mounted like the brake lever.

Another bicyclist down in the Indian Territory has attached sails to the rear fork of the bicycle frame, the sails being mounted on spring-rollers and may be quickly furled and unfurled.

A man in West Virginia, has patented a folding screen which is attached to each side of the head and front of a drop frame bicycle and extends past the pedals, to enable the rider to use the bicycle "without danger of exposing the ankles to prying eyes," to use the language of the specifications. An ascetic in a newspaper article soon after the patent was issued, suggested that the screen be transferred to the ball room and worn just below the chin.

The patents for bicycles number thousands, but there is an absence of the "freaks" which might reasonably be expected to be found in a class of machines capable of so great a variety of construction. Inventive genius would appear to have exhausted the field relating to bicycle tires, which are truly mechanical wonders. Likewise, the class of bells and other forms of alarms is a field in which odd construction appear. Self-inflating tires are numerous, and while the idea is good, is not always practicable.

It might not be inappropriate to refer in this article to the "Defence," patented by James Puckle, in England in 1718. It was a breech-loading magazine machine gun, the chambers of which were detachable, two being supplied with each gun. One of these was arranged to shoot round bullets against Christians, and the other square bullets against the Turks, the desire seeming to deal less mercifully with the Turks than the Christians in battle. It is a fact, however, that the round bullet is the more effective of the two forms, it traveling farther than the other under the same conditions and with a greater degree of accuracy.

It is a coincidence that patents should have issued to George P. Gunn, of Ilion, New York, for certain improvements in guns. Such coincidences are infrequent in the Patent Office.

Colin, Partridge, Quail.

[MORRIS GIBBS, M. D., SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT]

Of the so-called quails there is no end; in fact, the birds are almost cosmopolitan. However, though so well and generally known, north, south, east and west—just remember this truth: there are no quail in North America, and neither are there any hedgehogs, polecats, buffaloes, antelopes nor brown bears within our confines, unless imported. For our buffalo is a bison; the antilocapra is not a true antelope; the porcupine is in no sense a hedgehog, etc., etc., to the end of the chapter. A long list of misapplied names in America might be given, but these are enough. Common names go for nothing, and yet, when we consider, local names are everything, and when we take into account that they will stick to the last, the names might as well be accepted. As the traveler said upon being invited to a repast in the country: "It matters little to me whether you call it a repast, dinner, supper, lunch or tiffin; whether I eat on a farm, plantation, hacienda or ranch; whether I eat in a house, adobe, bungalow, villa or at table d'hôte, it's all the same to me—if the provender is good." To which we might add: "What's in a name?"

Let us consider the quails of the world, in a general way; both as to where they belong in classification, as well as their merit as regards a factor in the economy of the lands where found.

In history we find that quails are referred to at a very early date, and these notes undoubtedly have reference to both the quail and partridge indiscriminately, but in translation to English any old name has been used. Herodotus speaks of the quail, but then he is called "the father of lies" and we must take his word cum grano. In the Bible we find references to the quail and partridge in many places, among which the following are offered: Ex. 16:13; Num. 11:31; Psa. 78:27; Sam. 26:20 and Jer. 17:11. It is extremely probable that the quail referred to at the time of the exodus of the Israelites, and when the hungry followers of Moses were miraculously fed, was the same as the Oriental quail (coturnix communis) which is a bird of passage and in its annual migrations, north and south, frequently appears in immense flocks in Arabia and to the north. Diodorus says that it is caught in great numbers at Rhinocolura at the southwest corner of Palestine. Many other writers testify that the birds are frequently found in great quantities, so that the story as to the flocks of quails appearing among the children of Israel is entirely plausible.

Of course all students know that the so-called partridge or pheasant of this country is in reality a grouse; the common species is the "ruffed," but there are many that do not know that the bird which is called (improperly) quail, and which is best named "Bob White" from its notes, belongs to the Perdix sub-family of partridges, and that it is a true colin, as its present scientific name—Colinus virginianus indicates. However, there are fourteen birds in North America at the present time which are called quail, and always will be. There is the regular "Bob White," who is quite generally known throughout its range, and which is extending its range to the north. Then there is the darker colored Florida "Bob White" of the south and along the gulf, and Atlantic to the 32nd parallel; Cuban "Bob White"; Texan "Bob White," larger than the Florida and found in the Lone Star State and thereabouts, as its name would indicate. All of these last three birds are merely varieties of the common quail, as is also another—the masked "Bob White," an unknown bird to me.

Then we have the mountain partridge, a well marked species, and the plumed San Pedro, scaled, and chestnut-bellied scaled partridges, all three of which are varieties of the mountain, and the varietal differences of which are not recognized by the common hunter and hardly understood by the observer in many instances. Next we come to the California partridge and its variety, the valley partridge (the bird commonly known as the valley quail), and also the Gambell's and Massena partridges, the last two being well marked species. All of these species or some of the varieties are found from the Rockies and west to the Pacific; some being quite restricted in range and others quite well distributed to north and south, but none found to the east and some being confined to the Cascades. These are all called quail in the mountains, and are usually spoken of as mountain and valley quail. All of these so-called quail are prolific breeders and lay a large number of eggs. The common "Bob White" has been credited with thirty-two eggs in one nest, but I feel satisfied that two hens had deposited in the same nest. However, sets of eighteen eggs have been recorded. It is claimed that the "Bob White" rears two and three broods in a season. It may be true that two broods are occasionally hatched in a good year but I doubt it as a rule. When we consider that it must take all of two weeks to deposit the eggs; probably nearly three weeks for incubation and then all of six weeks to bring the young to an age to care for themselves, it does not seem probable that the old bird often succeeds. I am well satisfied that the late nestings are the result generally of disturbances to earlier efforts, for the quail is a persistent layer.

The common quail of Europe is about two-thirds the size of our "Bob White," and it has been proven that the male is polygamous. It is migratory and crosses the Mediterranean in April and again in autumn, flying mostly at night, as does also the Andalusian quail, which is found in Spain. The fighting quail of Java is trained like the cock for the pit and is very pugnacious in its battles. There are many other quails but these will answer for the nonce.

Feather and Fin.

Nearly every lover of the gun and rifle has a choice of the game he will pursue at various times during the year. This one is never so happy as when marking down a covey of quail. To another the prairie chicken, or, if he be Eastern bred, the ruffed grouse furnishes the keenest sport. In a third the flight of wild fowl alone has power to snap the chains of business and send him forth into the marshes. With others it is squirrel shooting, the pursuit of rabbit with beagles, riding to hounds in the chase of Sir Reynard, while the lover of the rifle and the eternal mystery of the deep woods finds no such pleasure as in the pursuit of big game—moose, bear and deer. Many there are to cry down the hunt as catering to barbaric and the least human of the instincts which are the endowment from our forefathers. Therein do they do grave injustice to a class wherein are found some of the truest gentlemen and noblest natures whom we delight to honor. They do gravely mistake the motive which sends the true sportsman afield when he hears the challenge of the quail. It is not the mere desire to kill; in truth, that were butchery. But, rather, it is the longing to match skill and slowly acquire knowledge of the ways and habits of the little brown birds against their swift wings and inherent cunning which for lack of a better term we call instinct. And beyond even this, it is for the pleasure of being afield, for the surroundings, the setting of the favorite sport, for the bracing air and for the knowledge of the great outdoor world which every tramp with dog and gun increases. So the true sportsman takes an honest pride in his skill, so be it his eye has been true and his hand steady while he gave his bird every chance of a fair flush. But, so be it that he misses, his chagrin is tempered with respect for and a certain satisfaction in the escape of the little wild life which has proved more than his match. And though his bag be light he will return home in the gloaming contented in mind and once more a simple child of nature.

After seeing a fisherman land a good sized bass one day recently at the Alameda mole we continued our saunter and noticed further along the line of fishing operations there were strung out at least thirty "dagos," all using the heaviest kind of lines and sinkers, before the tide had gone half out it was very apparent that they understood their business and had fished there before. The tide swept along with terrific force and the tackle used by them was the only kind that could withstand the strong current. The few anglers who were there were simply not in it with their fine tackle and cast as they might it was an utter impossibility to keep their bait out. The orthodox methods of the Waltonian school were relegated to calmer waters.

Fishing with lighter tackle, however, can be accomplished in the estuary canal from the mole up to the shipyards. Here there is no difficulty encountered in keeping the bait well out. There is also a strong possibility of hooking on to a large sized bass.

The close season on trout commenced on the 1st inst. The law does not effect the sport of taking steelhead in tide water, however. It were better for the propagation of the fish if the close season embraced this particular variety also, the open season in tide water is only of particular benefit to the net fishermen. None but the most enthusiastic and inveterate brother of the angle would begrudge cutting out the bad weather fishing season and giving the fish the benefit of the extra time. The provisions of the statute in this respect are as follows:

Sec. 632. Every person who, between the first day of November in any year and the first day of April of the year following, buys, sells, takes, catches, kills, or has in his possession, any variety of trout, except steelhead trout (Salmo gairdneri); or who, between the first day of February and the first day of April, buys, sells, takes, catches, or has in his possession, any steelhead trout (Salmo gairdneri); or who, between the first day of November and the first day of April of the year following, takes, kills or catches any steelhead trout above tide water; or who, at any time, buys, sells, or offers for sale, any trout of less than one-half pound weight, or takes or catches any trout except with hook and line, is guilty of a misdemeanor; provided, however, that steelhead trout (Salmo gairdneri) may be taken in tidewater between the first day of April and the first day of February of the following year, with lawful nets; and a lawful net is a net that when placed in the water is unsecured and free to drift with the current or tide, and the meshes of which are, when drawn closely together and measured inside the knot, not less than seven and one-half inches in length. Every person found guilty of any violation of any of the provisions of this section must be fined in a sum not less than twenty dollars or be imprisoned in the county jail in the county not less than ten days, or be punished by both such fine and imprisonment, and all fines collected for any violation of any of the provisions of this section must be paid into the "Fish Commission Fund." Nothing in this section prohibits the United States Fish Commission, and the Fish Commission of this State from taking at all times such trout as they deem necessary for the purpose of propagation.

In the Santa Clara valley and vicinity San Jose sportsmen have enjoyed usually good shooting conditions recently. Devotees of both marshes and the uplands have been having excellent sport during the past week. Shooting in all its branches has never been better. The improved conditions are due to the rain during the latter part of last week. Many northern bred ducks were driven south and these have scattered among the marshes. The storm also had a tendency to bring the quail together in large beavies and they have remained together since the storm. They are not so wild as they were a couple of weeks ago. One thing in particular is being noticed and commented upon by local sportsmen and that is the great number of English snipe which are to be found. In the fields south of Alviso around the artesian wells and along the streams they abound in great numbers.

Ducks are very plentiful in the vicinity of Mount Eden and Newark on the eastern side of the bay. This is due to the fact that all the marshes have been taken up by gun clubs from San Francisco and no one other than a member of the club is allowed to hunt on these preserves, says the San Jose Mercury. They construct ponds and scatter grain around. "This attracts thousands of ducks and they are shot at from behind blinds and great numbers of them are slaughtered. This method of killing ducks is meeting with a storm of disapproval from different game associations throughout the State and many true sportsmen. All the tracts of land where a hunter might get a few ducks are taken up by these gun clubs and their baiting method attracts ducks from far and near. The numbers which are slaughtered in this manner every winter are diminishing the game birds in this section of the country and there is much comment against the method. This has been prevalent on the Suisun marshes for years, but it is now spreading and bids fair in time to extend the entire circumference of the bay."

That ducks will frequent a spot where they can find food cannot be disputed. It is not going too far on the lines of the above argument to make the contra statement, that were it not for the efforts of the club men the ducks in the localities referred to would be comparatively few. This section has been in the past a famous shooting ground for ducks, rail and a variety of shore birds. The gradual reclamation of big tracts and cultivation of contiguous agricultural lands has, barring the baited ponds, driven the ducks away to seek other feeding grounds. There is still in the immense marsh district of the southern and eastern shores of the bay plenty of good open shooting ground. Sloughs and creeks innumerable are favorable now as of yore for "sculling." To the hunter who knows the marsh, he can, with the aid of a boat, biding the tides, reach good hunting ground. He will not find many opportunities for "blind" shooting unless he baits his ground beforehand. Then he runs the chance of finding another and observing shooter in his stand when he goes forth to reap the reward of his preparation. Aside from blind shooting a hunter, with his dog, can still obtain a good day's sport working the marsh and "jumping" birds. He will not get a limit bag, nor would he find it very comfortable carrying many birds along on his tramp. Weather, tide and wind being right, he will have had a good tramp and a day's lusty sport. Many of our sportsmen do not fancy this style of gunning. A comfortable seat in a blind over decoys for a few hours, a lively fusillade and a limit bag is the desideratum nowadays.

The wail of the San Jose sportsmen is amusing to us. We cannot recall for a decade where they ever were over-reached before. Possibly the attractions of the Alameda marshes for the duck family has caused the sport of sneak boat shooting in the Alviso sloughs to become seriously impaired.

The satisfactory completion of the fish ladder around the Pitt river falls recently is a matter of pleasing importance to the people of northeastern California. This new fishway will allow salmon to reach the spawning grounds at the headwaters of Fall river. The work was accepted from the contractors last week by Chief Deputy Fish Commissioner Vogel-sang and W. H. Shebler, of the Sissons hatchery, who had direction of the work. Under the orders of these officials the wing dams were opened and the water was turned into the fishway for the first time. The way is about 300 feet long and averages ten feet in width. It is constructed in the shape of a succession of rapids, the highest of which is only thirty-four inches, and as the salmon frequently cover many feet in a leap they will have no difficulty in passing through the ladder, which overcomes a rise of forty-one feet.

People living in Lassen and Modoc counties along the Pitt river need not expect salmon in any number to enter that stream, since the Fall river furnishes seventy-five per cent of the water of the falls and is cold and clear, while the Pitt is a sluggish stream. The total cost of the new fish way is $2000, leaving a surplus of $1000 from the $3000 appropriated by the last Legislature for the work.

Quail hunters who have visited the foothills back of Berkeley recently, have come across and destroyed a number of quail traps. The birds are very scarce over there this season, due principally, it is claimed, to the contemptible and unlawful practice of trapping. This section of country is mainly occupied by a class of foreign ranchers notorious for their intolerance and slaughter of every feathered creature of the wild wood and also for their persistent cutting down and destruction of trees. These clannish and unassimilating people, as a rule, are as utterly indifferent to the fish and game laws as they are inhospitable and jealous of the sportsman who has the temerity to visit districts peopled by them.

The H. E. Skinner Company, successors to E. T. Allen & Company, for many years located at 416 Market street, will remove about December 1st to the new and commodious quarters now being fitted up on the southwest corner of Fourth and Market streets.

A portable house has been the pleasing contemplation of many sportsmen. The idea has been frequently patented and many devices of this character have been presented for use time and again. The Burnham-Standeford Company have been making portable houses for fifteen years past and have the enjoyable reputation of putting out what has for a long time past been recognized as a popular line of hunters' and miners' cabins, small stores, summer resort cottages, bunkhouses, children's playhouses, etc. The folding bunk stacks—made for one or two beds, is just the article for the hunter's shack. These are arranged with a single wire mattress and when not in use can be folded up against the wall and out of the way, thus enabling one to utilize an appreciated amount of space in the not too roomy cabin. Catalogues are furnished on application. See "ad" on page 15.

Salmon fishing on Eel river is now in full swing, as will be seen from the story of a lady angler, Mrs. B. O. Hart, given in a letter to Prof. John Butler of this city. The fair devotee of the rod says: "I am sure you left Ferndale too soon, as we are catching some very fine fish. Of course, it rains some and that prevents us going as much as we would like to. Last Sunday (October 26th), which was the day you left Eureka, Ben Smith and myself went down to the mouth of the river and found the water very dirty in the main channel, so we went up in the 'north bay' where the water was quite clear. We had only rowed a short distance when I felt something take my hook. Immediately my reel commenced to sing and the line kept going out until I had scarcely ten feet of it left on the spool. I yelled to the boat-puller, Smith, who had the oars and his own rod out as well. He dropped his rod and 'backed water' towards the running fish for about twenty feet. This gave me sufficient line to go on a little. Just then the monster fish started for the boat as rapidly as he ran away from us, and for a few seconds I thought I had lost him, when he suddenly commenced going in another direction again. Then it was a fight for fully half an hour before we saw as much as a fin belonging to him. When we finally did get a sight of him he boiled over and came his full length out of the water. Then the sport commenced in earnest, for it was then a battle royal as to who the winner should be, the fish or myself. Ben, of course, thought I would give up the rod after so long a struggle; but I was determined to land him and stayed with it all this time. I must tell you I kept my rod well up in the air; there was not even a drop of water on the tip. I put a kink in the rod that I am sure will not get out this season. I was getting awfully nervous and tired, when I was suddenly overjoyed to find the fish commenced to lead. Prior to this he had led us all over the bay. So we then went ashore and with a great deal of caution (and I want you also to know, with a great deal of skill) I got my fish into the shallow water. Then Ben made a strike with that gaff that never fails and up came the lordly salmon high and dry. I was by this time 'all to pieces.' The fish weighed forty pounds and measured three feet and nine inches in length. There has been only one other larger fish caught here than mine, and this one weighed forty-two pounds. I am ambitious to go out again beat the record. Ben is home now, hurrying me up, as we are going fishing again this afternoon."

Canvasback ducks, it has been demonstrated, have an innate curiosity that often is taken advantage of by the hunter who understands the habits of the birds. The most common method of inducing the bird to come within range is by the use of wooden decoys. Various other devices have been successfully used to achieve this end, the work of a trained dog which will work round and about the weeds or banks is not an unusual way of decoying "cans" in some places. But for originality and resource we must give credit to an unknown genius located on a ranch near Collinsville. On that tract is situated some good duck shooting ponds, the right to shoot thereon being leased by several local sportsmen, among them being W. S. Wattles, a popular and well known attaché of the U. M. C. branch in this city.

Mr. Wattles visited the preserve two weeks ago for a duck shoot. The weather and other conditions were most favorable for a good shoot, which was more than pleasantly anticipated because canvasback were frequently seen in small bunches and there was every indication of getting a number of the royal birds. To Wattles' chagrin, there was one element lacking in his outfit that seemed to lessen the chances for getting a few "cans." Of decoys he had every variety but the imitations of canvasback ducks, which were deemed absolutely essential. At this stage the genius aforesaid volunteered the information that he had some decoys that ought to do the work. Investigation proved that the decoys (?) were nothing more or less than a number of claret bottles corked and with a white band painted around them, to the necks of the bottles were attached long strings and weights such as are used with wooden decoys. Wattles did not know whether to be mad or laugh at what he first thought was a practical joke. On short reflection the idea struck him as being worth a trial as a makeshift anyhow. Forthwith the bottles were taken and placed in front of his blind, within which he ensconced himself, dubious, but curious, as to results. He did not have long to wait, the birds decoyed to the bottles almost as well as to the painted wooden counterfeits. He shot a limit bag of fifty by nine o'clock that morning; among the birds killed were eighteen fat canvasbacks; this variety seemed to take to the bottles with avidity. Wattles claims that it would have been more appropriate had the bottles used been empty champagne magnums instead of claret ordinaries—there would have been a more reasonable connection as it were.

It is a fact, however, although rather amusing, that ducks can be decoyed by empty bottles. We hope this story will not hurt our good friends in the trade, who get from $6 to $12 a dozen for wooden birds and also sell other styles of decoys, by inducing shooters to make a dollar or two investment in several dozen empty bottles and then boast of their choice collection of hand painted decoys. By the way, we know of a number of club houses, shacks and arks, whose habitues would not have to buy any empty bottles, there being nearly in every case a stack of empty "bots" larger than the ordinary wood pile. It has been rumored a glass factory is to be erected near the ruins of Blackjackville.

Striped bass are being caught daily in the "straits" and vicinity and along the Alameda mole and in the estuary waters. A number of fair sized fish have been taken; James Watt landed a 17-pound fish at the mole.

Last Sunday quite a fleet of boats were out from Tiburon. The catch was fair; most of the fish were caught near the end of Belvedere island. Among those out were James Turner, whose largest fish weighed 11 pounds. Fred Daverkosen hooked two running over 8 and 7 pounds respectively. J. Lynch and L. Rondeau, Al Wilson and J. Christianson, "Parson" Jackson and Prof. McFarland, G. Luttrell and Mr. Carroll, Theo. Rothschild and Chas. H. Kewell were also there in boats.

If the words of the old song are a true prediction surely yesterday was a splendid day for the hunters—"A southerly wind and a cloudy sky proclaimed a hunting day." And such it was; many local sportsmen took themselves away to favorite grounds early and no doubt had good sport; the main body of shooters consoled themselves with the hope that the weather would continue favorable for twenty-four hours longer.

Quinnat salmon are running in Paper Mill creek and the tide waters near Point Reyes Station. Last Sunday George Banker caught in the "white house" pool on a spoon one salmon weighing 35 pounds, two others scaled 25 and 17 pounds. The big one fought for over an hour. "Del" Cooper landed a 15 pounder and also hooked a dozen small steelheads in the Paper Mill.

The weather conditions are most agreeable now for the quail hunters. Good sport has been had in Marin, San Mateo and Santa Clara counties recently, the birds being plentiful.

Duck hunting in the Suisun has been first class and limit bags have been the rule. At the Canvasback Club four shooters, C. A. Haight, Jos. J. Sweeney, Ed Wands and a guest shot the limit on widgeon, sprig and teal by 8:30 A. M. last Sunday.

DOINGS IN DOGDOM.

The grounds for the Pacific Coast field trials in January near Bakersfield have been selected. Birds are very plentiful; the cover, now somewhat thick, will be in proper shape and well beaten down after the winter storms and rain and should be in good shape for the January meet. The grounds are posted and will be patrolled. It is believed the club will hold one of the most successful trials run off for some years, both in the large number of entries, attendance of sportsmen and favorable grounds for the running.

Mr. George W. Thomas is entitled to the International Trophy won at the S. F. K. C. show here. So decides the A. K. C. Executive Board which has reversed the verdict of the Pacific Advisory Board.

W. H. Deming's Bostons Bunny and Endcliffe Lita are both heavy in whelp. Mr. Deming has now the largest and best kennel of Bostons west of Chicago.

St. Bernards, Great Danes, Cocker, Irish Terriers, etc., are offered by various kennels and breeders in our classified "ads," page 15 this week.

Rumors of a bench show this fall in San Francisco or Oakland have taken definite shape. This week arrangements were made by several fanciers and it is now about certain that the show will be held in Oakland on or about December 17, 18, 19 and 20.

Although the time is rather short, we have no doubt but that an exhibit will be given fully as good as any held across the bay for years past. A canvass among doggy circles has shown a surprising amount of enthusiasm, and what is more important, many assurances of support in entries, prizes and substantial assistance; this has placed the proposed enterprise on a footing that will insure a successful show. The more shows we have, the better will it be for the interests of Coast fanciers; this Oakland show should be a healthy appetizer for our big spring show.

C. Steinbach had the ill luck to lose a litter of Bull Terriers whelped by Bloomsbury Queen (Bloomsbury Baron-Woodcote Queen) to Dr. Burnell's Mose.

In the award of prizes at Los Angeles the Pacific Fox Terrier special for best bitch was mentioned as given to W. W. Moore's Vina Belle. The award was taken by us for granted in going over the awards noted in our marked catalogue. As a matter of fact, Vina Belle and Maggie the Maid did not come before the judge and the award was not made at all. If the handlers of the two dogs had followed events the pair would have come together in the ring as was expected.

For the L. K. A. $100 team prize, the teams which entered the ring were Mr. G. Horace Gooderham's smooth Fox Terriers; Mr. G. C. Thomas, Jr.'s English Setters; Mr. H. T. Peters' Beagles; Mrs. "Jack" Brazier's Scottish Terriers, Mrs. James L. Kernochan's Irish Terriers, Dr. C. A. Lougest's Bloodhounds and the same owner's Mastiffs, Walter Johnston's St. Bernards, Mrs. R. H. Hunt's French Bulldogs, Miss Alger's two teams of Poodles, the Montebello Kennels' Great Danes, Mrs. M. Johnson's French Bulldogs, Mrs. H. T. Foote's Black and Tan Terriers, Howard Gould's Old English Sheepdogs, Walter Stone's Boston Terriers and Mrs. J. A. Keller's Dachshunds.

Many were quickly given the "gate," until the struggle resolved itself into a contest between the Fox Terriers, beagles, English Setters and Scotch Terriers. Eventually the ribbon was handed the Fox Terriers, a decision which was endorsed by the crowd around the ring. The winning team consisted of Norfolk True Blue, deemed one of the best of her breed ever shown, Norfolk Huntsman, reserve to his kennel companion, True Blue, for the best Fox Terrier in the show; Norfolk Laurel Leaf, a big winner in England, and Norfolk True Girl.

The Beagle pack prize went to Windholme Kennels.

Following this came the contests for the cups offered by the Westminster Kennel Club. That for the best sporting dog, except Pointer and Setter, resolved itself into a struggle between Mr. H. T. Peters' Beagle, Champion Bangle, and Mr. Gooderham's Fox Terrier, Norfolk True Blue. The first named, which had won a similar trophy at last year's show, was in the pink of condition, while the Fox Terrier was, in the vernacular, "dead out of coat." This settled the question, and for the second time Bangle was adjudged the best. The first to congratulate her owner on the victory was Mr. Gooderham.

This show was not a sales show, buyers were few and the Boston Terriers were in the doldrums, few sales being made, the best being Little Dan Patch, which Mr. Simpson stated had been sold to a Mr. Rose, of Roslyn, L. I. Several odd ones were sold at commercial figures.

Iroquois Kennels sold Iroquois Mixer and I. Irish Girl to J. P. Graves, of Spokane, Washington, both now dead.

Two German Collies recently brought to New York are of special interest, as they represent the efforts of the German Collie Club to improve the breed. Collies in Germany had become lazy and pampered and shepherds were unable to get dogs which were alert and active. The Collie Club was founded four years ago. The best dogs in the country were collected and bred with wolves brought from the mountains of Ardenness. The result has been the strengthening of the race of sheep dogs.

The two specimens which have been brought to this country are much like the wolf in their appearance. They have the pointed ear, the keen eye and the restless ways of their wild ancestors. The elder of the two, Stella, is two years old and is of a tawny yellow color. Wolf is well named, for he has all the characteristics of his grandmother, a she wolf. He is nine months old. Both of the dogs have been trained to take care of sheep, and they round up a flock with dispatch. Like the wolf, they prefer to sleep in the daytime and are never so happy as when circling around their charges at night.

The bringing of the specimens to this country was attended with difficulty. They were purchased from shepherds in the neighborhood of Mannheim, who were not inclined to part with them until a large sum had been offered, as they said that animals of any real value were scarce.

The above pair has been going the rounds of the daily press and has also been given publicity by some of the fanciers' journals. The Collie must have become sadly degenerate in Germany and the resources of the German breeder had possibly been meager in the extreme when his frugal ingenuity prompted the breeding of a mongrel hybrid to take the place of a most intelligent and handsome animal. It would have been very easy for the Germans to have procured new and excellent strains from Great Britain.

It is to be hoped that the new Collie strain will be further improved by a diet of wiener wurst and Bock beer mit some black radditches and pumpernickel brodt on der side.

Going back to the original source after all these years of breeding and developing is not only a useless expedient, but a laughable instance of careless ignorance.

THE FARM.

The Presence of Bots in Horses.

The horse probably harbors no parasite about which there is so much discussion as about the bot-fly, some contending that the presence of a few bots in the stomach can not possibly be injurious, while others regard them as being very dangerous and lay all digestive troubles to their presence. Every one who handles horses is familiar with a small yellow nit or egg found attached to the hair in the region of the leg, shoulder or jaw. The eggs are deposited by the bot-fly, or as more commonly called the nit-fly, on the regions of the body where the horse can by biting and licking the skin convey them as eggs into the mouth and stomach.

It is probable that the animals in licking themselves open the greater number of eggs by removing the cap and they are then carried to the mouth by the tongue. They pass from the mouth to the stomach, where the larvæ attach themselves to the walls of this organ and in this position are familiarly known as bots. Almost every animal that runs in pastures and the greater number of driving horses are infected each season with the bots. In some cases where postmortems gave opportunities for examination only a few larvæ are found, but occasionally cases are seen where the greater portion of the walls of the stomach are covered with the larvæ. When present in such large numbers they necessarily interfere with the normal function of the stomach.

The very nature of the case prevents absolute determination as to whether they are injurious or not. The possibilities of injuring the horse are by interfering with the digestive functions of the stomach, by the irritation caused by the presence of bots, or when present in such large numbers they may obstruct the passage from the stomach. In any case the possibility of injury would depend on the number of bots present, it being very probable that the presence of only a few may result in no injury. When the larvæ are developed they pass from the body, after which they bury themselves in the dirt, where they continue development and finally emerge as the fully developed bot-fly.

The veterinarian at the Oklahoma station says there is no surer remedy than thoroughly rubbing the body occasionally with a brush or rag wet with kerosene. The oil will prevent the eggs from hatching and it soon evaporates, leaving the skin free from grease. It is difficult to remove bots from the stomach, as they withstand severe remedies. Good results have followed the use of full doses of anæsthetics, as chloroform or ether. Carbon bisulphide is probably the best remedy that can be given. This drug is very volatile and is best given in large gelatin capsules or it may be given in ice water. Fast the animal for a day and then give four drams of the carbon bisulphide every two hours until three doses have been given. This treatment should be followed with a physic of oil or salts.

A Good Dairy Cow.

A good dairy cow will be wedge-shaped, horizontally and vertically, have wide hips, big stomach, large udder, be spare, rough and inclined to be thin when giving milk. She must have large digestive power, large udder well developed forward and aft, and one that collapses after milking and that spreads the legs where full. The under surface should be flat. The milk veins should be prominent and very winding, with large openings when they pass through the wall of the stomach. The neck should be long and thin, thighs thin and no beef down to the hock, as in cows of the beef breed. The eyes should be large, mild and prominent and far apart, and face inclined to be dishd. No one point will determine the value of a cow.

Pigs Yield a Large Profit.

H. V. Whitney, a farmer of Manning, Washington county, Or., on the 7th inst. took to the Portland stock yards six of the finest shoats, all things considered, that have been seen there for a long time. They were a few days less than five months old, and the whole bunch tipped the scale at exactly 1080 pounds, or 180 pounds to the pig. Mr. Whitney estimates the cost of producing the animals, including all labor and materials, at $4.40 each. He received for them $10.80 each, or a clear profit of $38.40 on the six hogs.

For the first two months of the life of these pigs they ran with their mother on a rape and pea pasture, with skim milk and shorts morning and evening. For the next two months they lived entirely on the rape pasture. For the four weeks previous to being sold they were kept up in the pen and fed wheat, chop and shorts. This process brought their cost up to 2½ a pound, while they brought readily in the market 6 cents.

The rape plant, which furnished the principal roughness and forage for these hogs, was introduced into Oregon by Dr. James Withycombe, now director of the Oregon agricultural experiment station at Corvallis. On his one-acre plot Mr. Whitney keeps an average of nine adult hogs all the time, and part of the time he turns in eighteen sheep to keep the growth from becoming too rank. The butter fat from the milk he fed to these pigs Mr. Whitney sold to the neighboring creamery. He is so well pleased with his experience this season that he declares his purpose to increase his herd of milch cows, his acreage of rape and his drove of hogs. The pigs marketed are Berkshire and Poland-China all black, and as fine specimens of porcine beauty as ever go to the shambles. They were purchased by the Union Meat Company of Portland.

Competent men who have examined into the conditions for pork raising in the Columbia basin declare that every 160-acre farm ought to turn off every year a carload of 200-pound hogs, while the actual fact is that many of the farmers have no hogs, and the average is only eight to the farm. But the industry is increasing, new farmers continually coming to the same conclusion that Mr. Whitney has reached, says the Oregonian.

The Buyer of Beef.

The buyer occupies a position of consequence in the stockyards community. He is an expert, usually a man of middle age, who has obtained his education and technical ability partly in the packing houses and partly on the ranch. An experience buyer is likely to receive a salary of $4,000 to $5,000 a year, and he is worth all of that, for on his ability to tell by a moment's inspection what quality of beef will be produced by a steer that he never before laid his eyes on depends primarily the excellence of the product issued by his house and hence the increase of its business.

The buyer's work is not arduous, and to all appearance his task is a simple one. He walks along the flat board laid along the top of the fence, glancing keenly at the cattle in the different pens. Some he passes by without a pause, others he stops to inspect more closely, and occasionally he displays his interest in a group by asking a question or two of the man in charge.

Long experience enables him at a glance to distinguish between a grass fed steer and a corn fed steer, to decide whether an animal is entitled to be classed as "fancy," "good" or "common" and to guess within a few pounds of an animal's exact weight by glancing at him. The buyer makes his purchases "on the hoof," paying the market price ruling for the day for the grade in which it is decided each group of cattle belongs. In a few words the transaction is completed, and the buyer's interest in the affair is ended.

Sheep Husbandry.

It is evident from reports we quite often receive that our veterinarians and men of science are more liable to become balked by what may be called the spontaneous breaking out of disease among sheep than those attending any other of our domestic animals, says Wool Markets and Sheep. At present Oregon flocks are suffering from a disease the symptoms of which are an inflammation of the skin, mouth, lips and nose, which causes the animal considerable difficulty in taking food. In Utah similar but more violent species of the trouble seems to attack the flock in certain seasons of the year. The attacked one at first shows symptoms that are very pronounced. They raise their heads high and turn and twist from one side to another as if in horrible distress, and after standing in this attitude for a considerable time will commence to leap in a zigzag way and manner and then making for brush, stand, as if having found relief. Their heads swell to an alarming size, and in some cases their eyes have been known to burst and in many cases to leave the sockets and remain suspended by the ligament of the eye on the animal's cheek. A large percentage usually succumb to the malady. Those that survive the trouble linger along for some considerable time, when a scale forms on the affected parts and, after drying, ultimately falls off. It is generally the fattest ones that fall a victim to the trouble. It seems to us that a thorough investigation by those qualified to investigate should clear up this mysterious matter. The question is, is it a contagious disease or is it one which is brought about by local condition, such as poisoning from partaking of a poisonous weed, etc.? There is a reason for it, and our men of science are the ones upon whom we naturally depend for the solution of the problem.

The end of the first three quarters of the calendar year affords a good point of retrospect from which to compare the volume of commercial movements in the domestic trade of the United States with that of the preceding year. The September Summary of Internal Commerce, issued by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, furnished statistical returns for this purpose. Its reports show that live stock traffic during September was larger than for the corresponding month in either of the two preceding years at the five markets of Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis and St. Joseph taken together. A total of 56,966 carloads of stock were received during September 1902, while 52,614 carloads arrived in September 1901, and 50,716 carloads in September 1900. In two years, therefore, there has been a gain of 6,280 cars, or 12.38%. For the nine months ending with September, 5,284,432 head of cattle reached these markets, compared with 5,236,356 head in 1901, and 4,796,139 head in 1901. Receipts of hogs show a decrease, 11,467,792 having arrived for the first three quarters of this year, 13,413,699 head in 1901, and 12,593,989 head in 1900.

Twenty-five years ago the prize bee animal was a ten or twelve year old ox which had served its day and generation as a beast of burden, doing farm work and then was fed for a year until it made a carcass of 1800 or 1900 pounds. We well remember when the best beef was grown on to the framework of such an aged beast and when what is now called beef was of no account. Times have changed. A steer seldom now lives more than three years, most of them less. The old ox-beef is a thing of the past and the public taste is demanding young meat, even baby beef, which finds a market at a year old. The calf of the beef breeds which is kept fat from the day it is dropped and turns the scales at 1000 or 1100 pounds at fifteen months will bring the top of the market and the most profit to its owner.

Creaming Milk by Gravity.

A bulletin recently published by the Department of Agriculture on the subject of dairying gives some advice on the matter of creaming milk by the gravity system. If the cream is to be gathered by setting the milk and the temperature of the room cannot be kept fairly uniform at about 50 degrees Fahrenheit, it will usually be best to set it in the old-fashioned shallow pans in which it will not be more than two or three inches deep. The room in which it is set should be sweet and pure and free from disagreeable odors. Special care should be taken to avoid all kitchen odors, as this will taint milk very rapidly. If placed in a cellar some means should be adopted to thoroughly ventilate it, otherwise it will impart a musty or earthy flavor to the dairy products. At a temperature of 60 degrees milk will usually keep from twenty-four to thirty-six hours, at which time the creaming will be complete. If the temperature is above this in all probability the milk will sour before this time. In case the room becomes too cold, which often occurs in winter, thorough creaming may be secured by heating the milk to a little above blood heat before setting and allowing the cream additional time to rise while the milk is cold.

When the deep cold setting method is employed the milk should cool just as soon as possible after being drawn. If the temperature can be lowered to 40 Fahrenheit so much the better, although good results will follow setting at 50 or 55 degrees. This will probably necessitate the use of ice water or a free supply from cold springs. Care should be taken to have the water surrounding the cans higher than the milk in the cans so that there will be no layer of warm milk left on the surface. Where one does not have access to ice or a liberal supply of cold spring water it is generally advisable to use the shallow pan system, as creaming will be more perfect than if it is placed in cans twenty or twenty-four inches deep.

Butter That Will Keep.

It may be laid down as a given rule that the longer you churn the more water will be retained in the butter, says L. S. Hardin, in Jersey Bulletin. On this question the Wisconsin station reports that in trials, stopping the churn when the granules were from the size of clover seed to the size of grains of corn, the average water contents of the butter churned to large granules was 13.80 per cent. and of the butter churned to small granules 12.15 per cent.—with, of course, similar working and salting. The old style of churning until all the butter formed into one large lump put the greatest quantity of water in it, which had to be worked out at the imminent peril of its grain. Conclusion: To make dry, long-keeping, well-flavored butter, stop the churn when the butter breaks to the size of clover seeds, and wash the milk out with cold water; then press that water out with as light working as possible.

The test at the Pan-American and other expositions have shown the ability of the Ayrshire to produce 6000 pounds or more of milk in a year, containing about 4 per cent of butter fat, or about 300 pounds of butter in a year, and the cost of feed at Buffalo was but $4.24 per 1000 pounds of milk again $4.18 per 1000 for Holstein and over $5 for Shorthorn, Jersey and Guernsey. But it is as a milk cow that she excels. We do not know that the proportion of solids in her milk is greater than in other breeds, but we think it must be. We do know that after taking off all the cream that would rise the skim milk from the Ayrshire seems better than from any other breed, the Devon ranking next.

Breeding Buffaloes.

Some interesting experiments in breeding buffaloes are being carried on near Monterey. They promise to succeed in spite of the failure of similar experiments elsewhere.

About fifteen years ago it became apparent that the American bison or buffalo, as it is commonly called, was being rapidly exterminated. In consequence every State and territory where the animals were indigenous passed laws prohibiting the killing of them. The alarm was sounded a little late, however, as there were hardly enough buffaloes left to supply the circuses and menageries.

For some unknown reason those running wild on the Government reservations failed to multiply. Young were born, to be sure, but the births did not exceed the deaths from natural causes.

Since that time efforts have been made in different parts of the West to protect the few buffaloes left so that they could breed and perpetuate the species. In Colorado the experiment has been a failure on account of the intensely cold winters, and in Utah the result has been rather dubious, although the promoters of the enterprise think that they are on the right track.

It is likely that the failures so far have been due to lack of understanding of the habits of the buffalo. There is little doubt that the animals are naturally sensitive to changes of climate. In their wild state they used to travel south in the winter and north in the summer, so as to avoid extremes of heat and cold. In the experiments in Colorado and Utah this requirement was hardly complied with.

If the buffalo-breeding experiment is a success in California, the result will be largely due to the mild and equable climate. The experiment in this State has been made by Esteban J. Molera, and after nearly six years of work he is more encouraged than ever. He has studied the buffalo carefully, and in his experiment has endeavored to keep as close to nature as possible.

Mr. Molera began in the autumn of 1890 by purchasing a magnificent bull. He had the animal taken to his Point Sur ranch in Monterey county and turned loose on the range. The buffalo was contented from the start and soon became fat. Seeing that the winter climate agreed with the bull, Mr. Molera sent to Nebraska for a buffalo cow, and he turned her also out on the range.

That was in 1891. In 1892 a fine bull calf was born that has now grown to maturity and is in the best of health. Encouraged by his success Mr. Molera obtained four more cows. All of them gave birth to calves that are now nearing two years old. Some of the cows have given birth to two calves.

Including his purchases, Mr. Molera's herd now numbers fourteen. He has not lost a single full bred calf, and the entire herd is in the best of health and spirits. If the buffaloes multiply in the same ratio in the future as in the past, the herd will increase to more than one hundred in the next seven years.

In addition to his experiment with full-blooded buffaloes, Mr. Molera has also tried the effect of crossing the buffalo with Galloway cows. The result at first was not so encouraging as that with the full breeds. In the first season four calves were born, but three of them died.

The fourth, however, grew up in good health, and Mr. Molera thinks that the loss of the others was due to carelessness on the part of the men who cared for them. Since then other calves have been born and all appear to be in good health.

All of the half-breed calves were females. Some of these calves are now nearly three years old, and an effort has been made to cross them again, and it promises to succeed. To avoid inbreeding, Mr. Molera has put the first bull purchased out in Golden Gate Park and substituted for him on his ranch a famous buffalo bull known as Ben Harrison.

The crossing with the half-breed Galloways will produce animals three-quarters buffalo, and if they prove strong and hardy, Mr. Molera will obtain other buffalo bulls from different parts of the country and conduct his experiments until he has produced an animal fifteen-sixteenths buffalo. He thinks that when that stage has been reached he will have an almost distinct breed of cattle.

The effect of crossing is a much more interesting and important matter than the simple breeding of the full-blooded buffaloes, which is, after all, more a matter of science and sentiment than anything else. In the case of the buffalo only a small part of the animal makes good food, and the skin can be used only for robes. On the other hand, all of the half-breeds' flesh makes good meat. The skin makes fine leather, and has a finer and thicker growth of hair than the full bred buffalo. Some of the crossed cattle, in fact, have fur almost as fine as sealskin, only the hairs are much longer.

Mr. Molera has made a special effort to keep all his buffaloes contented. As soon as he detects any sign of restlessness, he has the herd moved to another ranch. The animals have passed their time between Point Sur ranch below Monterey and Moro Ojo ranch near Castroville. All show the need of change at the same time. They are driven the entire distance between the two places. After they have made the trip they are quiet and contented for a few months.

Part of the time they are kept on wild land and have to get their living off the natural vegetation, and then they are kept in alfalfa fields for a few days. The idea has been to let them do as they choose, but no effort is made to house them.

It is to this method that Mr. Molera thinks his success is due as much as to any thing else, because when an animal becomes restless it loses its appetite and soon grows thin.

"The obstacles encountered in breeding and cross-breeding buffaloes at the Point Sur ranch would fill a book," said a man connected with the experiment. "The foremost is disposition, which is ferocious and vindictive. The first bull brought here was a mountain buffalo, and was so docile that he was led around by a rope tied to his horns. The other bull buffalo, Ben Harrison, is of a different disposition, though everywhere recognized as the biggest and handsomest buffalo in existence.

"No fence is sufficient to restrain him. When he arrived he tossed the fence posts about like so many tennins, and rolled in tarbed wire with glee, snapping it into fragments, which he bore around in his curly hair like so many bristling bayonets, making him a formidable object to approach. Don Vicente, another buffalo on the Sur ranch, has already killed two buffalo bulls, and is now incarcerated behind another stout stockade. Unlike the bulls, the cows and heifers are inoffensive, and roam their pastures, giving no more trouble than any breed of domestic cattle."

How Lockjaw is Produced.

A writer on lockjaw in American Medicine says: The etiologic factor in producing this malady is a small bacillus which exists in barnyard soil and dust, and which gains entrance into the human economy by an open wound, often so small as not to have attracted attention. It does not produce pus, cannot proliferate without oxygen, produces little or no irritation in the wound, and probably does not invade the blood nor lymph channels.

The period of incubation in the acute form is usually from four to ten days, while in the chronic form it is longer. The mortality in the latter form is variously estimated, but in the former all agree that it is exceedingly high, ranging from 80 to 95 per cent.

The fact that the germ cannot proliferate in the presence of oxygen gives a clue to the class of wounds in which it is likely to exist and their proper local treatment. Punctures or small closed wounds form its favorite nest.

The inference to open up and permit free bleeding from such suspected wounds is plain, for here the germ proliferates and elaborates a most powerful toxin, which, once in the circulating fluids, has peculiar affinity for the cells of the nervous system.

The almost hopeless condition of the patient when the cardinal symptoms of tetanus once arises is evinced by the numerous methods of treatment advocated. The hope of the profession in combating the acute form of this disease appears to rest upon the early frequent and liberal injection of properly prepared antitetanic serum in the subdural spaces of either the cranium or the spinal canal. Recent reports of the results of this method are sufficiently encouraging to fully warrant such radical procedure.

Jackson's Napa Soda untangles the feet

We have in this country more than 18,000,000 cows, the average return from which is equal to only 125 pounds of butter each. This is a ridiculously small return in view of what may be produced with good care. Of course, there are millions of cows that produce more than 125 pounds of butter annually, but for every cow that yields 250 pounds of butter in a year there must be three that produce only eighty-three and one-third pounds in order to bring the score down to the general average. A butter yield of 250 pounds, while not common, is a long way inside the possible limit of production and this yield can be produced at a very slight increase in expense for feed of achievements in physiological and scientific chemistry has anything been discovered capable of producing such wonderful results as "Save-the-Horse" Spavin Cure.

SPAVIN CURE

NEVER IN THE HISTORY

In the face of deep-seated prejudice and scepticism, at first considered an improbable and expensive experiment, no preparation ever made so marvelous a record in such a short time.

The fire iron is uncertain at the best, and invariably only aggravates the disease or injury; blistering is less effective than the fire iron, and both necessitate laying up the horse from four weeks to two months; arsenic, mercurial and poisonous compounds produce irreparable injury.

"Save-the-Horse" eliminates all these factors.

Horse can be worked continuously. It can be applied at any time, anywhere, any place, and in all conditions and extremes of weather—hot or cold. And no matter what the age, condition or development of the case or previous failures in treating, the concentrated, penetrating absorbing power of this remedy is unfailing.

ing, and no case can withstand the force of its action, whether a BONE OR BOG SPAVIN, RINGBONE, CURB THOROUGHPIN, SPLINT, CAPPED HOCK, SHOE BOIL, WIND PUFF, WEAK OR STRAINED TENDONS OR LAMENESS.

It cures without scar, blemish or loss of hair.

GIBBS' CELEBRATED PROCESS OF RAPID TAXIDERMY

In Practical Use Over Twenty-Five Years.

Used Everywhere in America. Hundreds of Testimonials. Try and Be Convinced.
Start a Class. Money in It. Be Your Own Taxidermist.

Naturalists, Collectors, Gunners, Anglers, Outers, Boys, Girls, and all others interested in nature and anxious to preserve the specimens taken in wood and field, have all felt the need of a simple method of preservation, which is free from intricacies and inexpensive.

There is a method of rapid taxidermy now in extensive use, which meets the requirements of all amateurs who wish a practical and inexpensive method of preserving the trophies of the outing and collecting trip. This is not the old system of so-called stuffing, so expensive, laborious and disappointing, but is a rapid system, which anyone can learn at once and which is guaranteed to give satisfaction.

By this process you may preserve the beautiful plumage of the grouse and woodcock, or the pike's or buck's head, or the showy feathers of the tanager. Boys, girls and all others can do good work and may make money, as mounted heads and birds find a ready sale, and besides you may teach your friends and decorate the school-room, office and dining-room with native birds and other attractions. If you are in doubt, then get your friends to go in with you and start a class, for when several work together there is an advantage and the expense is next to nothing.

On the receipt of $1, cash or stamps, I will send full printed instructions for mounting birds, heads, mammals, etc., and all materials for mounting and preserving specimens—including prepared compound, together with full directions for dressing skins with the hair on for rugs and robes, so that you will not be to the expense of one cent.

Remember, I Guarantee Satisfaction or Money Refunded.

SUBSCRIPTION

JOTTINGS.

AN INNOVATION IN TURF RULING was made by the judges at the Memphis meeting this year which has caused considerable discussion among horsemen. In the free-for-all trot for which a purse of $1500 was offered, but two horses came to the post—Chain Shot and The Abbot. The latter was favorite, presumably as he had much the lowest record and was reported a few days previous to the race to be in good condition and working well. Before a quarter of a mile of the first heat had been trotted, however, it was plain that the champion gelding was not himself by any means and Chain Shot won in straight heats in slow time for that class of horses—2:08½ and 2:10½. The judges called Driver Ed Geers to the stand and asked why The Abbot could make no better showing. His explanation was that the gelding was not in his best form, but he was certain he could escape the distance flag and win second money and consequently started him, as he claimed he had a perfect right to do. There was evidently no attempt at fraud on the part of Geers and the judges had no reason for punishing him, but they considered that the public must be protected and thereupon declared all bets off, which is a new as well as a remarkable ruling. That there is any authority for such action to be found in the rules of the National or American trotting associations no one will claim, but several newspapers justify it on the ground of common sense. There has been no claim in any of the reports of the meeting that Geers or anyone else used their knowledge of The Abbot's condition to win money on Chain Shot, and for the judges to throw their protecting arms around a crowd of bettors who simply had their money down on a slow horse is certainly new law of the most modern type and entirely without precedent.

There are two rules among those laid down for the government of harness races which relate to declaring bets off. One is in section 2 of rule 7, and states that if the judges are not satisfied in regard to the identity and eligibility of a horse all bets on him may be declared off. The other is in section 1 of rule 25, which reads, "they may declare pools and bets off in case of fraud, no appeal to be allowed from their decision in that respect, but * * * when pools and bets are declared off for fraud, the guilty party shall be fined, suspended or expelled." According to the action of the Memphis judges in this case they had no question of the identity of The Abbot, and did not believe that Mr. Geers was guilty of fraud as they did not punish him. The protection of the people who had bet on The Abbot was therefore the only cause of their action in the matter.

Now there is not a particle of doubt in my mind but the eminent gentlemen who occupied the judges stand at Memphis were acting for what they considered the very best interests of clean and honest harness racing, but where will such rulings end? Let us suppose that The Abbot had been in perfect condition and Chain Shot was the one that was "off." Would the judges have taken the same stand and declared all bets off, or would they have permitted the wagers to follow the race? It is more than likely they would have pursued the latter course, but why should the majority who play a favorite be protected any more than the minority who play the other end?

If the condition of a horse is to be taken into consideration in a two horse race, should it not be considered when a field of a dozen start, and what phases of condition are to be regarded? Dan Patch has been unable to pace in 1:59½ every time he has started for the world's record because he has not always been in perfect condition for the effort, but it would not be claimed even by the Memphis judges that all bets made on his breaking the record should be declared off because he was not in condition, and yet such a ruling would be, as the lawyers say, on all fours with the one made in the Chain Shot-The Abbot race.

The managers of the running tracks found out long ago that the less note was taken of the betting, the better for clean racing. There is hardly a week passes but someone is suspended, fined, warned or ruled off by a running association for failing to win with his horses when the judges were of the opinion that he should, and yet the wagers are permitted to stand for the reason that the jockey clubs have learned that more harm than good generally results from "declaring off." The way to "protect the public" is to use every diligence to secure honest racing, and to punish fraud whenever it is discovered. But where there is no fraud, as was clearly admitted by the Memphis judges when they refused to fine Mr. Geers, declaring bets off because his horse was not in condition is just as absurd as would be the case had they been declared off because he had trotted the first heat in two minutes and distanced Chain Shot. The man who wagers his money on a horse race takes all the chances that go with the game—sickness, lameness, loss of condition and lack of speed in his choice—and judges are only appointed to see that the races on which money is wagered are honestly conducted.

At the risk of having the chestnut bell rung on me at a lively rate, I cannot help once more suggesting to the directors of the different district agricultural associations that they try once again to see if a convention of their representatives cannot be held that some united action can be taken in regard to organizing a circuit of California fairs and race meetings for 1903. While it is true that but little has come from these conventions in late years, perhaps the prevailing desire in all circles, from labor to capital, to form trusts, may induce the aforesaid directors to get together and do something. There should be at least two circuits in California each year—one of associations giving purses of $500 and upwards, the other of those that can only afford to give less money. The fact that the purses and stakes offered on the Grand and other circuits over East are growing larger and more numerous every year, is bound to lead California owners and breeders to train for and enter largely in these Eastern races, but there will be many that will be compelled through force of circumstances to race at home, and consequently will be willing to start for smaller purses.

There is not a particle of doubt but many district associations come out on the losing side financially because they try to give too much money in purses. Gate receipts and resources for privileges are limited here in California even under the most favorable conditions, owing to the small population and high rates of transportation within the area from which the patronage must be drawn. The average district fair is conducted in a happy-go-lucky sort of way, little work being done or little interest taken in the event except for a few weeks prior to the meeting. But if representatives of the associations can be induced to come together and discuss the situation, compare notes and agree on things that will be to the interests of all they can make the California circuit of 1903 a red letter one in the history of our fairs and race meetings. The month of January would be a good time for such a convention. Why cannot one be held?

Charley Owens, of Clovis, Fresno county, who is one of the best known of the smaller breeders who race at the local tracks every winter and generally has a few starters at the State Fair every year, breeds and races a few trotters and pacers as well as runners and has owned some good harness horses. He has ridden at least one heat inside of 2:08 behind a pacer, as the race record of Joe Wheeler 2:07½ proves. He tells me that his broodmare, Zadio McGregor by Robert McGregor, is in foal this year to Strathway, sire of Toggles. Zadio is nineteen years old, but looks as if she is good for three or four foals more at least. She is already the dam of three in the list, two trotters and a pacer. The trotters are Nellie Bly 2:20½ and Carrie C. 2:21½. The pacer is Daken D. 2:16½. Mr. Owens says that Zadio's two year old by Dexterwood (son of Dexter Prince and Jollivette by Nutwood) is in his opinion the best foal the mare has ever had. He is a big fellow, gentle as a kitten and not afraid of anything from a steam engine to a piece of flying paper on the road. This two year old did not require breaking, and Mr. Owens says if he had not bred and raised the colt, it would have been hard to make him believe, the first time he hooked him up, that he had not been driven before. After a few trials in double harness, Mr. Owens hooked him to a cart and it was the same thing—he went off like an old horse and acted as if he were a veteran. Given his head on a poor track he trotted a quarter in 45 seconds and an eighth in 21 seconds, which Mr. Owens said was good enough for a big gawky two year old and he took the harness off him right there and turned him out. This colt is entered in the Stanford Stake for next year.

That Secretary Murray Howe "built better than he knew" when he invented the now famous Memphis system of harness racing, is very evident. In this system there are but three heats to a race, the first at a mile, the second at a mile and an eighth and the third at a half mile. The Diamond Handicap, won by Major Delmar at the recent Memphis meeting was according to this plan, and will always be looked upon as the greatest race on the Grand Circuit of 1902. I find the following description of this race in the last issue of the Kentucky Stock Farm:

"The contest for the purse of $6000 for trotters of the 2:15 class, and called the Diamond Handicap, was the feature of the meeting. It was one of the greatest races ever trotted. It brought out close finishes, the time was the fastest of the year, and the big audience, that came out to see Cresceus try for a record forgot the object of its mission and cheered and cheered again as it watched the three lightning fast heats of a harness race that was not a Chinese puzzle, and that everybody could understand and appreciate. The winner, Major Delmar, came very close to setting three new world's records. As it was he did set two and tie the third, a great day's work over any track. The record of 2:05½ for a trotting gelding in a race, held so long by Azote, was equaled in the first heat. The record for a mile and an eighth was set at 2:22½, the rate for the mile 2:06½, and the half-mile record was set at 1:01. Nor at any time in any heat did the winner have a chance to catch his breath. Monroe Salisbury's extra good gelding Monte Carlo was after him every inch of the route in all three heats, losing the mile dash by four inches and the mile and an eighth by a short neck. Chase was second in the half-mile, and, beaten by a head, was separately timed in 0:59½ seconds. Nutbearer was at no time a factor, and but for the bad break by Chase in the first heat, would have won no part of the money. Monte Carlo was overlooked in nearly all the betting. Major Delmar was always favorite, but an hour before post time Hudson sent a heavy commission into the ring to play on Chase at 4 to 1 and that carried the Keeler gelding up to 3 to 2 in a jiffy and finally to even money. After the first heat Delmar had all the call, but the wise men got lost on the half-mile dash and landed on the losing side, for they figured that the military gentleman would be outsprinted in the short route. Like a true stake horse he sprinted home at a runaway gait with Monte Carlo hanging to his saddle. Chase, a length back at the word, fairly flew through the stretch and was beaten a head. The race proves conclusively that Murray Howe's "patent" system of racing is the best thing ever devised for the harness game. All the regulars, all the horsemen, and what is more to the point, all the people who saw the Diamond Handicap say it will be the making of the sport everywhere. In this connection it may be stated that Mr. Howe himself was never, until now, real sure that he had invented a good thing. With four dash races and one Memphis system event for every day's card harness meetings are certain to become immensely popular. This victory puts Major Delmar's winnings for the season at $24,500, the best of the year and probably the best on record for any trotter any year, in strictly class races."

Answers to Correspondents.

C. S.—Please state if Hilda Rose is registered and give breeding.

Answer—There are two mares registered by that name.

Hilda Rose, bay mare, foaled 1884 by Dictator, dam Fannie Patchen by Mambrino Patchen second dam by Mambrino Walebone is registered on page 261, volume 6 of the American Trotting Register.

Hilda Rose, chestnut mare foaled 1888, by Sterling, dam Sproul mare by The Moor, second dam said to be by Williamson's Belmont is registered on page 493, volume 11 of the A. T. R.

A. G.—Please give breeding of the stallion Cyclone 2:23½, sire of the great broodmare Rena Wisc, dam of three 2:15 trotters.

Answer—Cyclone was a black horse, foaled 1876, by Caliban 394, he by Mambrino Pilot, son of Mambrino Chief. Cyclone's dam was Camlet (dam also of Cubit 2:27½) by Hamlet 160, son of Volunteer 55. The second dam of Cyclone was Favorita by Abdallah 15, third dam by Mambrino Chief 11, fourth dam by Tom Crowder and fifth dam by Grey Eagle.

Washington is to have a speedway similar to that along the Harlem River in New York. The drive will be built of telford and macadam and will extend for a mile through Potomac Park, west of the new structure that is to take the place, so far as the greater volume of traffic is concerned, of the long bridge across the Potomac. The speedway will run through the grounds of the Washington Monument, along the river, passing through the former site of the bathing beach and ending at the approach to the proposed Highway bridge. It will cost $50,000.

The three-year-old filly Gail Hamilton 2:11½ has started just five times this season, and four times has she reduced her record. She made a record of 2:15½ in her first race, at Hartford; in the Kentucky Stock Farm Purse, at Indianapolis, she reduced it to 2:15; in the Kentucky Futurity she reduced it to 2:14½; in the Kentucky Stake she reduced it to 2:12½, and in the De Soto Stake, at Memphis, she won the final heat of her race in 2:11½.

Walnut Hall 2:09½ is the fastest four year old trotting stallion, and Maxine 2:08½ the fastest four year old trotting mare of the season.

Millard Sanders Crosses the Great Divide with the Santa Rosa Stock Farm String.

The above original cartoon was sent us last week by the well known artist, Robert Dickey of La Grange, Illinois, and very effectively shows the Santa Rosa Stock Farm horses returning home from the Grand Circuit led by their trainer, Mr. Millard Sanders. The great mare Anzella 2:06½, winner of $22,000, is in the lead, followed by Sir Albert S. 2:03½ winner of $2000, Dolly Dillon 2:07 winner of $1800 and the green mare Lou Dillon that has never started in a race, but has worked a mile in public in 2:08½, last half in 1:01. It is a great string of horses, and Messrs. Pierce Brothers, proprietors of the only first class breeding farm in California that is now sending a stable East every year to race on the Grand Circuit, are to be congratulated on owning such a quartette of good ones.

Mr. Sanders tells us that the attendance at the meetings on the Grand Circuit this year exceeded all former years, and that harness racing was never in as good shape as now, nor the demand for good one greater. "At least a dozen men came to me before I left and asked me to get them a good fast prospect for 1903 if such could be found in California. I could sell twenty good, sound, fast trotters now at big prices if I had them. There were many big offers made for Anzella, Sir Albert S. and Lou Dillon before I left but they were not for sale. I look for the Grand Circuit to be greater than ever next season as so many wealthy men are going into the business and taking the keenest interest in the sport."

Mr. Sanders is a little disappointed over the weather conditions here in California and is afraid we will have one of our long rainy winters, and the horses will be kept back in their training. Santa Rosa Stock Farm has some of the greatest prospects in America now at the farm, and the campaigning string for next year will contain several of the youngsters bred there that will without doubt be among the sensational performers of 1903.

New Memphis Records.

Never in the history of harness racing has such a wonderful record-breaking meeting been held as that of Memphis, Tenn., this year. Cresceus, the champion trotter, cut the two-mile trotting record to 2:17, beating not only the American, but Caid's European record as well. The time by quarters was: 0:33, 1:06½, 1:39, 2:10, 2:41½, 3:13, 3:45, 4:17. Onward Silver by Onward twice trotted two miles in 4:28½. The fractional part of the miles were: First trial—0:34½, 1:08½, 1:41½, 2:14½, 2:48½, 3:21½, 3:45½, 4:28½. Second trial—0:33½, 1:07½, 1:40, 2:13½, 2:46½, 3:20, 2:53, 4:28½.

The double team pacing record against time of 2:08, made by John R. Gentry and Robert J. at Glens Falls, October 8, 1897, was placed by Direct Hal and Prince Direct at what appears to be an impossible-to-beat mark of 2:05½. The mile by quarters was 0:33½, 1:04, 1:34½, 2:05½, showing the last half mile to have been paced in 1:01½.

Prince Alert by Crown Prince cut the world's record for pacing geldings—his own—2:00½ to 2 minutes flat.

Daniel by Alcander paced a mile in 2:04½, the fastest for a mare during the season and only half a second slower than the world's record—2:04½—held by Lady of the Manor and Mazette.

Nervolo, by Colbert, paced two creditable trials against the two-mile record of 4:19½, held by Chehalis. His first trial was in 4:25½, and the second in 4:24½, the time of the best mile by quarters being 0:33½, 1:05½, 1:40, 2:13, 2:45½, 3:19, 3:51½, 4:24½.

A new world's record for two consecutive heats for a mare pacing to wagon was made by Edith W., by Ben Lomond, who won a race in 2:05½, 2:05½, beating Fred S. Wedgewood. The world's record to harness is 2:04½, 2:04½, made by Mazette at Memphis last season.

Prince Alert 2:00 by Crown Prince, beat Sir Albert S. 2:03½, by Diablo, in a half-mile dash, setting a new world's record of 57½ seconds. The fastest half, 57½ seconds, was made in a mile exhibition against time by Star Pointer at Belmont track, Sept. 17, 1898.

Major Delmar 2:05½, by Delmar, equaled the best record ever made by a gelding in a race, with his mile in 2:05½, the first heat in the Diamond Handicap. Azote, by Whips, had held the honors since 1895.

Fast miles were trotted by Cresceus, who went in 2:04, 2:06½; John A. McKerron, 2:05½, 2:07; The Monk, in 2:07, and Lord Derby 2:06½. Dan Patch paced in 2:00½, 2:01, 2:01½, and Prince Alert in 2:00, 2:00½ and 2:01½.

Twenty-five mile heats were paced in 12 classes, 82 horses starting, average 2:06-85. Carl Wilkes paced one and one-eighth miles in 2:20 and a half in 1:00½, the average being a world's record.

Twenty events were on the program, trotting; 36 heats at a mile were contested, with 95 horses after the money. The average trotting was 2:12-29. Major Delmar trotted one and one-eighth miles in 2:22½ and a half in 1:01. The grand average, trotting and pacing, is 2:09-5-7.

The winning drivers and amounts at the meeting were: Demarest, including match race between Prince Alert and Sir Albert S., $7150; Hudson, $5050; Geers, $4955; A. P. McDonald, $4350; L. McDonald, $3100; Benyon, $2500; Marvin, $2250; Snow, $1600; Curry, $1500; M. Sanders, $1370; Lyons, $1200; Walker, $1000; Shank, $1000; B. Kinney, $950; Chandler, $925; Swearing, $750; Milan, $700; Greer, $550; Miller, $500; Raybould, $500; Benedict, $450; Devereux, $400; L. Turner, $400; Maxfield, $350; McCarthy, $325; Carnathan, $300; Dickinson, $300; Loomis, $300; Dean, $250; Nuckols, $250; McEwen, $250; Foote, $300; McCoy, $200; McHenry, $200; Tesson, $50.

Eighteen heats were trotted to wagon. Lord Derby going the fastest in 2:08½, 2:07½; Imogene trotted five heats in 2:11½, 2:12½, 2:11½, 2:13½, 2:12, the five averaging 2:12-10. Louis Jegerson won a heat in 2:10; Ida Highwood, two heats in 2:10½, 2:13; Marique, four, in 2:13, 2:12½, 2:12½, 2:16; McKinley, two heats, in 2:11½, 2:10½.

The pacers that went to wagon were: Edith W., 2:05½, 2:05½, 2:07, 2:08½; Fred S. Wedgewood, 2:07½; Dr. Monical, 2:09½, 2:09½; Gold Brick, 2:10½, 2:10½, and Daisy Fields, 2:17½, 2:13½.

Quite a Difference.

The difference between a fifth of a second and a quarter of a second seems at first sound to be so small as to be unimportant, or, at least, too short a space of time to make any very visible difference in the performance of horses, but small as it is, the difference between a mile in 1:59 1-5 and a mile in 1:59½ is so great that even those people who call every heat that is very close a dead heat could easily see the difference. When Star Pointer made his record of 1:59½ at Readville he stepped 2 feet 2 30 53 inches every twentieth of a second. The difference between 1:59 1-5 and 1:59½ is one-twentieth part of a second, so that, if Star Pointer's mile in 1:59½ was correctly timed—that is, if the watches were exactly at 1:59½ when he reached the wire—he would have been 2 feet 2 30-53 inches from the wire if the watches had been stopped at 1:59 1-5; in other words, he would have been beaten by Dan Patch by 2 feet 2 inches and a fraction over a half an inch. Measure off twenty-six inches, and you will see by how indisputable a margin the son of Joe Patchen would be champion, if modern methods in timing were in force in place of ancient customs.

A letter has been received at this office from Hanford, California, containing inquiries in regard to registering a foal by imp. San Jacinto. The writer neglected to sign his letter. If he will send in his name to this office we will supply him with the information desired.

Major Delmar and Azote, which are tied at 2:05½ for the fastest mile in a race by a trotting gelding, are both by sons of Electioneer.

Sober up on Jackson's Napa Soda.

Monte Carlo 2:09 1-4.

The Eastern papers that gave an account of the great race won by Major Delmar at Memphis, when he won the first heat of the novelty race and trotted the mile in 2:05½, agree that the heat was so close between the winner and Monroe Salisbury's trotter, Monte Carlo, that the California horse was not beaten more than a neck, and some say but a few inches separated their heads at the wire. The next heat was at a mile and an eighth and the same two horses were the contestants. The mile was in 2:06½ and the heat in 2:22½, Major Delmar winning by a length this time. The third heat, a half mile, was won by Major Delmar in the record time of 1:01, the fastest half mile ever trotted in a race. Monte Carlo led at the quarter pole in 30½ seconds, and was in the lead half way through the stretch, but was third at the wire, although but a length and a half behind Delmar.

Monte Carlo returns to California with a record of 2:09½ and will doubtless go East again next year and race on the Grand Circuit in the 2:10 and faster classes. When Monroe Salisbury secured possession of this horse early in the summer this year and took him to Pleasanton, few horsemen could be made to believe but the kingmaker was wasting time on a "has been." The fact that Monte Carlo looked sound and trotted like a sound horse, however, soon made many of them remember that Salisbury took Azote when his legs and feet were bad and fixed him up so that he won race after race over East, beat nearly all the fastest and gained the world's record for geldings. The outcome is that Monte Carlo is now considered one of the greatest trotters that ever left California and Mr. Salisbury refused $12,500 for him while at Memphis.

Monte Carlo was sired by the Palo Alto stallion Mendocino 2:19½, son of Electioneer and Mano by Piedmont. The dam of Monte Carlo is Maud Merrill 2:18 by Antevolo 2:19½, and his grandam Belle A. 2:29 (dam of Clarence Wilkes 2:28½ by Tilton Almont). Monte Carlo was a great trotter in his three-year-old form, but was not started as he was considered too good a colt to mark in small purses. As a five-year-old in 1900 he started twice at the State Fair at Sacramento, winning his first race in straight heats, the time being 2:20, 2:21 and 2:19½. Five days afterward he started on the same track against Janice, Richmond Chief, Dora Doe and other good ones, and was 5-4-1-2-4-4-dis. in the summary, Janice winning the long-drawn-out race. Monte Carlo's time in the third heat was 2:14½, the fastest of the race. He did not start again and last year nothing was done with him, and he was for sale at a very low price. Mr. Salisbury secured him this year and has made a great horse of him.

A Valuable Book.

One feature of the modern advertisement is its urgent request for the reader to "write for booklet." The publishing of books describing the things advertised has become a necessity. Some of these are confined solely to illustration and description. While others, of a more valuable class, give also comprehensive discussions and much valuable information upon general subjects to which the article advertised is suited. Some of these latter have been so impartially written and the subject matter so well digested and arranged as to constitute most valuable ready reference and text books upon the several subjects. Pre eminently among such is the book entitled "A Treatise on the Horse and His Diseases," published by the Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., Enosburg Falls, Vermont. Though within its pages are found reference to Kendall's Spavin Cure, it has greater value by being associated with so good a remedy. The book is concise, yet most comprehensive in its scope. It is profuse in illustrations and describes in plain language the symptoms, causes and best lines of treatment of about every ailment to which the horse is subject. As a ready compendium of practical information, there is probably no book published that could take its place, especially for the farmer or small horseman. Even veterinarians are wont to rely largely upon it. On these accounts, its distribution has been most wide. Any of our readers who do not possess a copy should secure it at once, as we know of no similar work in which will be found so much reliable, unbiased and valuable information upon the horse. The publishers of the book are proprietors of Kendall's Spavin Cure, a remedy which has stood the test of many years and is known and highly regarded all over the world. Most of our readers can attest its value from their own experience, having used it from their boyhood up. It has not been the remedy of a day. It is more widely used to-day than ever before, and having grown out of a thorough study of horse diseases and their cures, bids fair to endure. We have no hesitancy in saying that keeping Kendall's Spavin Cure always in the stable for emergencies is only exercising ordinary prudence. The book is sent free on application, if you mention this paper. It could be studied with great profit and should always be kept at hand for quick reference whenever occasion may require. Write Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., Enosburg Falls, Vermont, for a copy, or ask your druggist.

Cresceus Holds Eleven World's Records.

The champion trotting stallion, Cresceus, son of Robert McGregor, is not only the record holder at a mile, but is the holder of eleven records as follows:

Fastest mile against time, 2:02½.

Fastest mile in a race, 2:03½.

Fastest mile over half-mile track, against time, 2:09½.

Fastest two consecutive heats in a race, 2:03½, 2:06½.

Fastest three consecutive miles by a stallion, 2:03½, 2:06½, 2:05 (last heat against time).

Winner of fastest five-heat race, 2:07½, 2:07½, 2:07½, 2:07½, 2:08½. Won by Cresceus in last three heats.

Fastest two miles, 4:17.

Fastest heat to wagon over half-mile track (against time), 2:12.

Fastest seven year old trotter, 2:02½.

Fastest first heat in a race, 2:03½.

Fastest second heat in a race, 2:05.

Notes and News.

Direct Hal 2:04½ won thirteen straight races this year.

Anaconda 2:01½ is to be sold at the Fasig-Tipton Old Glory sale.

Prince Alert is the third two minute horse, and the first hopped one.

John A. McKerron 2:05½ will winter at Walnut Hall Farm, Lexington.

It looks as if Prince Alert will be the third to cross the two minute line.

Ed Geers still believes that Lord Derby will be the first two-minute trotter.

Nutwood still heads the list of sires of 2:30 performers with 176 to his credit.

There will be a hundred horses at the Pleasanton track by the first of January.

Major Delmar 2:05½ is only five years old and is perfectly sound and faster than his record.

Miss Emma, that holds the record of the half-mile track at Pittsville, Pa., 2:16, is by Ansel 2:20.

They say that the Eastern trotter Tony W. 2:11½ holds the record for trotters that go with hoppers.

Father Time must have thought at the close of the Memphis meeting that he had been "up against it."

R. H. Plant, of Macon, Georgia, offered Monroe Salisbury $12,500 for Monte Carlo 2:09½, but the offer was declined.

Junius, the son of Online that paced to a record of 2:07½ this year, dropped dead in his stall at Goshen, Indiana, last week.

Scott Hudson heads the list of money-winning drivers this season with about $75,000 to his credit, won in stakes and purses.

Ellert 2:11 by Stamboul is one of the best horses on the New York speedway this fall, and has been showing some wonderful bursts of speed.

Hobo, the Arthur Wilkes horse that has a record at the trotting as well as the pacing gait, now holds the Boise track record, which is 2:15.

The Hambletonian-Seely's American Star cross in a trotting pedigree is as popular today as when Dexter 2:17½ was the world's champion trotter.

Director 2:17 sired Directum (4) 2:05½ and the dam of John A. McKerron 2:05½, the two fastest trotting stallions, with the exception of Cresceus 2:02½.

John Kelly has once more canceled his engagement as trainer for James Butler's East View Farm. This seems to be a regular habit with Kelly at the close of the season.

James Dwain, who is a very successful trainer of trotters and pacers, has secured a renewal of his lease of the Monterey Agricultural Association's track at Salinas for another year.

If you own a stallion drop a line to those who bred mares to him this year and induce them to nominate the mare in the Pacific Breeders Futurity No. 3, for the foals of mares bred this year.

The noted stallion Jay Bird 2:31½, now twenty-four years old, brought $1500 on the first day of the Tranter-Kenney Sale at Lexington, Ky. Warren Baker, Paris, Ky., was the purchaser.

At every point on the Grand Circuit this year where good weather prevailed, the meetings were more largely attended than ever before. This shows a healthy condition of affairs in the harness racing line.

Fred Dietz, disappointed because of the declaring off of the last matinee by the Empire City Club, has challenged all owners of pacers in New York to meet Bessie Bonehill 2:05½ in a race to wagon with owners driving.

The Palo Alto bred mare Lauretta by Norris won two races the same afternoon at Memphis. The first was a dash at a mile and an eighth, which she won in 2:31½. Shortly after she won a two in three race and took a record of 2:14½.

At Covington, Ind., six heats were paced in the free for all in 2:09½, 2:09, 2:08½, 2:10½, 2:10, 2:10. This is the fastest six heat race ever paced over a half mile ring. The best previous record was 2:11½, 2:11½, 2:12, 2:10½, 2:11½, 2:11½, made in 1895.

W. G. Nichols, of Sacramento, who owns one of the handsomest and fastest green pacers in California was in the city this week. Mr. Nichols' pacer is a gelding by Tom Benton out of a mare by James Madison and has never been raced. Last Summer Mr. Nichols had Walter Tryon work him a little and he paced a mile in 2:12, last half in 1:04, last quarter in 31 seconds and last eighth in 15 seconds. He is sixteen hands high and a regular whirlwind.

Miss Copeland 2:25½, the dam of Copeland 2:09½ and the grandam of the sensational trotter, Major Delmar 2:05½, was sold for $135 at the closing out of William E. Spier's stud about a year ago. Samuel McMillan, of New York, now owns her.

An Eastern driver makes the excellent suggestion that hoppers be barred in all the slow or green classes. This would work most of the hopped horses out of the game in a few years and not prevent those already in it with records from going on.

It doesn't look so certain now as it did two years ago that C. W. Williams was right when, after selling Axtell (3) 2:12, he stated that he kept the best stallion. Axtell has made a wonderful gain on Allerton this season as a sire of standard performers.

Geo. T. Beckers, who owns a piece of property near the Los Angeles race track, is building ten neat box stalls on the place and making a nice home for his great stallion Zombro 2:11 and a number of young colts and fillies by him that are great prospects.

The picturesque city of Ottawa, Can., the capitol of the Dominion, will be the scene of the prettiest series of ice races in the history of the winter pastime next February. According to present plans there will be three weeks of continuous racing—a regular carnival on the ice.

Thos. Ronan, who reached Pleasanton last week with a car load of horses from his farm at Dayton, Washington, had the misfortune to lose one very valuable mare by Antrim on the way down. She contracted a cold in crossing the mountains and died from pneumonia.

Owyhee 2:11, that was purchased last June from Oakwood Park Stock Farm by Mr. Dugald Taylor of Melbourne, for the Truganina Stock Farm, Australia, is advertised in the Australasian for public service at a fee of 25 guineas, something over $125 of United States money.

A match race for $250 a side will be decided at Honolulu on Thanksgiving Day. The race will be between the pacers Steamplough and Cyclone. The latter is the black pacer that landed in Honolulu last fall without a pedigree, and is supposed to be a ringer, although no one has been able to identify him up to date.

After Millard Sanders had worked Lou Dillon a mile in 2:08½ and a half in 1:01½, he offered to bet Mr. E. E. Smathers of New York $10,000 to $20,000 that she would beat Lord Derby next year. Mr. Smathers was willing to put up $2500 to bind the match, but Sanders demanded that $5000 be put up and the wager was not made.

During the first week of the Memphis meeting forty heats were raced to harness at an average of 2:09, which includes a two year old race in which the winner did not have to go within a dozen seconds of his record. Including the races to wagon, of which there were 14 heats, the average time was 2:09½. This result is unprecedented.

The twelve-year old mare East Morn, by Baron Wilkes 2:18, dam, the great broodmare Kincora, by Mambrino Patchen, brought $1000 under the hammer at the Tranter-Kenney sale, Lexington, Ky., on the 3d inst., and was cheap at twice that. Her dam, Kincora, produced Thorn 2:12½, Constantine 2:12½, Kiowa 2:24½ and Josie King 2:29½.

We understand that Washington McKinney, the big handsome stallion owned by the Rose Dale Stock Farm, Santa Rosa, will be put in training next year and raced with the idea of giving him a low record. Horsemen who have seen him trot say that he will be in McKinney's 2:10 list with reasonable luck as he has already shown a quarter in 31 seconds, and is a good gaited trotter.

Chas. E. Clark, the well known Fresno trainer, has the best gaited and most promising green trotter in California in his stables at Fresno. This fellow is by Junio, and his dam by Whippleton and he is said to be one of the best lookers ever seen on the Fresno track. Mr. Clark is receiving additions to his string every week and will soon have all the horses he can take care of during the winter.

Martin Carter owner of the Nutwood Stock Farm, has a filly by Searchlight 2:03½, dam Zeta Carter (dam of T. C. 2:30) by Director, second dam Lida W. the dam of Nutwood Wilkes, that he will breed to Dan Patch 1:59½ if Mr. McHenry will allow the great pacer to serve any mares while in California. This will be in line with Mr. Carter's idea of getting the very best that's going for his stock farm.

Fidette, the dam of Mary Celeste 2:17½ as a two year old, is by Guy Wilkes out of Fidella by Director. Fidella is the dam of Nushagak, sire of this year's Occident winner, Aristo 2:17½. As Fidette recently trotted to a record of 2:28½ over East, this will give Fidella a place in the Great Brood Mare Table in the coming Year Book as she is the dam of one in the list, and has a producing son and a producing daughter.

Among those who are already figuring on winning the Pacific Breeders Futurity for foals of 1901 is Walter Masten of Woodland, who has entered in this $6000 event a colt that he calls Marvin Wilkes, sired by Don Marvin, dam Nora S. by Sable Wilkes. The speed shown by the youngster when Mr. Masten began giving him the a b c's of the trotting school proves that he is a prodigy, and if he keeps on in "the way he should go" the colt that beats him in Futurity No. 1 will set a mark for the stake that will not be easy to lower in the stakes that follow.

"Farmer" Bunch is now located at Haywards where he has engaged with the Meek Estate for a year to train the trotters and pacers bred on the farm, nearly all the get of the farm's stallions Welcome 2:10½ and William Harold 2:13½. On the first of December Bunch will take a string of twelve to Pleasanton. There are several excellent prospects among them and we expect to see them make a good showing on the circuit next year.

According to a Sacramento paper a movement is on foot among the members of the Sacramento Driving Club to have the name of one of its members stricken from the club roll. The reason given is that at the State Fair this year the member won a race offered for members of the aforesaid club and pocketed first money instead of permitting the club to divide the purse equally among the starters in the race as has been the custom heretofore.

A dispatch from Chicago states that the California trainer J. M. Nelson of Alameda, attended the big sale of trotting stock at the Union Stock Yards, Chicago, last Tuesday and was the successful bidder on the three year old filly Halgretta 2:23½ by Red Heart, dam Pique, dam Chain Shot 2:06½, Brash 2:15½, and Deputize 2:22½, by Kentucky Wilkes, second dam Vexation by Mambrino Dudley. The price paid by Mr. Nelson for this filly was $1000.

At the closing out sale of Chris. Simpson's horses held at Portland, Oregon last week, thirty-five head, including sucklings, brought $2831.50 an average of $80.90. The horses Bonner N. B. and Mack Mack were not sold. They were led into the ring and reserve bids of $1000 made on each. These bids were not raised. The highest price of the sale was $300 paid by editor Wisdom of the Rural Press for Alta Norte 2:16½, brown mare by Del Norte 2:08.

Green Meadow's Stock Farm's handsome pacer Robert I. 2:10 by Hambletonian Wilkes was left in the hands of his trainer, W. G. Durfee, at Los Angeles at the close of the season and will be kept at the track there during the winter. Robert I. is in fine shape and is as certain to lower his record next year as he is to keep in good health. Mr. Morehead, proprietor of Green Meadow Stock Farm, desires to sell Robert I. and will take a very reasonable price for him.

Range horses are being shipped in large numbers from Lake county, Oregon, to Los Angeles and Mexico. Roberts & Hewitt of Los Angeles recently purchased a hundred head, which were driven to Marysville, Cal., and then loaded on the cars for Los Angeles. Senor M. Alvarez, of the city of Mexico, who furnishes many horses to the Mexican government, has recently purchased three hundred head of the Lake county horses and shipped them to his horse range in Mexico via Los Angeles. All these horses are unbroken, but of fair size, 15 hands and upward. The price paid was about $22 per head.

Ed Lafferty, the well-known trainer and driver, presents his card in this issue of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. Mr. Lafferty has located on the corner of Geary street and Central avenue, this city, where he will take horses to board and train for the road or track. Parties desiring to leave the city can place their horses in his care, to be jogged or driven for speed as they may elect. Mr. Lafferty will give his personal attention to each horse sent him, and owners can be assured that their wishes will be carefully carried out. There is no better man in California to teach a horse good manners on the road, or speed on the track, and he has marked several horses in the 2:10 list.

While matters are rather quiet down at Mr. Spreckel's Aptos Farm at the present time, Sandy Smith has eight head in the box stalls that he is working a little every day. Cronje, the young stallion by Cupid 2:18 out of Hulda 2:08½ is stepping as well as anybody's green trotter and looks to be in splendid shape. A yearling by Dexter Prince out of Point Lace by Antevolo stepped a quarter in 40 seconds one day last week and another by the same sire out of Galata by Stamboul is fully as fast. A two year old by Altivo 2:18½ out of Princess Louise by Abbotsford and another two year old also by the brother to Palo Alto 2:08½ but out of an Aptos Wilkes mare are showing trotting speed that makes their trainer very enthusiastic. There is a two year old filly by Cupid dam a McKinney mare that Sandy says is "oil in the can." This McKinney mare was very fast herself, but stepped in a gopher hole and lamed herself so that she was never trained any further. She stepped a quarter in 32 seconds very handily before getting injured.

The breeders of Merced county, who have looked over the two year old colt Alta Vista that Mr. Jeff. Fruit purchased at the recent Palo Alto sale for Messrs. M. M. Vincent and J. A. Olcese of the same county, are carried away with him and will breed some very choice mares to him next spring. This son of McKinney 2:11½ and the great race mare Expressive 2:12½ (three year old record) by Electioneer is rapidly growing into a fine looking stallion and will attract attention among the three year olds of 1903. We understand Alta Vista will be permitted to serve a few mares next year, and will be located at some convenient point in the San Joaquin valley. McKinney, without doubt the greatest sire of his age that ever lived was never bred to a better mare than Expressive, the greatest three year old ever campaigned in the east, and Expressive's dam Esther is one of the few famous thoroughbred mares that are in the great broodmare list, being the dam of four in the list, having one producing son and four producing daughters.

THOROUGHbred DEPARTMENT.

Everything looks bright for the reopening of beautiful Ingleside today. Tracks, grand stand, club house and saddling paddock all appear spick and span, while the recent rains have given to the enclosure a carpet of emerald that will be most pleasing to the eye. This, with the phenomenal popularity this beauty spot is known to possess and the class of racing that will undoubtedly be given, makes unexampled success for the coming meeting a certainty. Quartered at the California Jockey Club's courses are such celebrities as Sombrero, Old England, Homestead, Janice, Autolight, Watercure, Eonic, Vesuvian, Andrisa, Sister Jeanie, San Nicholas, The Pride, The Fretter, Handpress, Forte, Frank Woods, Nonie, Wolhurst, Straggler, Ulba, Lapidus, Golden Light, Flush of Gold, Divina, Meehanus, Artilla, Tower of Candles, Hagerdon, Rio Shannon, Narra G., Byron Rose, Kenilworth, Edinborough, Ilowaho, All Green, Bangor, Position, Bronze Wing, Doublet, Kitty Kelly, E. M. Brattain, Sea Lion, Commissioner Forster, Bon Mot, Prestano, Glendinning, Impromptu, Goldone, Montana Peeress, February, John Boggs, Katie Walcott, Huachuca, Muresca, Matin Bell, Porous, Jarratiere d'Or, Graftor, Sad Sam, Erema, Hainault, Jennie Hughes, Sly Siddons, Larry Wilt, Morinel and Wyoming, of the three year olds and upwards, with Articulate, Ethelyne, Argregor, The Giver, Varro, Fitzkanet, Hermencia, Cruzados, La Goleta and other cracks either on their way or about to start for this, the only real winter racing point in the world. The two year old division is also strong, with Maxnic, Polonius, Oakington, Amoruna, The Fog, St. Winifride, Gaviota, Guida, Isabellita, Fort Wayne, Nervator, Vincitides, Americano, Gold Van, Durazzo, Artvis, W. J. Dickey, Sylvia Talbot, Bell Reed, Lizzie Rice, Organdie, Honiton, Orosius, Thaddeus, Adirondack, The Major, Nabuco, Delsegno, Sultelma and other winners on the list to start. The Opening Handicap, one mile, with $1500 added, brings out a magnificent field, with Cameron and Sombrero the top weights at 122 lbs. Should rainy weather not interfere it will be a hard thing to guess the winner, though Sombrero, 122 lbs. and all, looks the class. There will be a larger number of high-class jockeys here this winter than at any time in the history of racing in California, on the list being the two highest-priced pilots in America, Lucien Lyne (salary $25,000 next year), and W. Redfern, Patsy McCue, John Bullman, Nash Turner, Tommy Burns, Shaw, Jay Ransch (who heads the winning jockeys' list for 1902), "Monk" Coburn, Lee Jackson, Battiste, Minder, R. Sullivan, Prior, Frank Kelly, W. Lee, N. Lewis, J. Daly, Bozeman, "Doc" Turbiville, Harry Stuart, Peter Collis, Hoar, Donnelly, Frawley, Garrigan and Sheehan, while there has never been a year when some good riders did not unexpectedly make their appearance. Winnie O'Connor might decide to come, and, if he did, we would have right here in San Francisco the cream of the far East and the Middle West in the line of jockey talent. It is thought there will be at least sixteen books to "cut in," as Barney Schreiber is to have three and George Rose two, while E. Martin, Caesar Young, John Coleman, Hugh Jones, Bill Jackman, "Doc" Rainey, James Davis, Fred Pesch and perhaps John Humphrey and Gus Bluhm will have stands in the big ring.

The decision of the California Jockey Club to make most of their selling races claiming races will meet with the approbation of all fair minded turfmen, for owners will not now dare to enter a stake horse in a selling purse for a tithe of his true value, as in the past, for such horses could be claimed for the price at which they are entered, plus first money in the race in which they start. Last season horses for which owners had refused $2500 in private were entered to be sold in these non-claiming races for from $400 to $600, making a farce of the race and as a betting proposition rendering the affair disgusting alike to the public and the pencilers. In future we shall therefore see horses raced in their proper class.

The increase in the size of stakes and purses throughout the country is making breeders happy. No longer do they marvel at turfmen paying from $10,000 up for a good-looking, well-bred yearling. The top price of the season, $23,000, was for a bay yearling colt bred at Rancho del Paso, by imp. Watercress-Pensa (dam of Botany), by imp. Sir Modred; second dam, Pansy (dam of Thelma, etc.), by Virgil. The breeders of this State, at the coming sales of youngsters at the Occidental Horse Exchange bid fair to feel the swell of the prosperous wave that has been beating on the Eastern shores. The first on the list (November 25th) is that of the Antrim Stock Farm, where nine sires are represented, viz., Riley, imp. Reggie, Lew Weir, Herald, William O'B., imp. St. Andrew, imp. Bassetlaw, imp. Artillery and Yo El Rey. On December 2d comes the Spreckels Napa Stock Farm yearling sale, with Libertine, Trappean, Eolo, imp. The Judge, Puryear D. and imp. Crighton represented by youngsters. On the 8th of December the first of the horses of the late Charles L. Fair (the weanlings and yearlings) will be disposed of, the get of Sam Lucas, Magnet and imp. Trentola, and on the following evening a number of noted broodmares from the same stud will be sold, also the five-year-old St. Simon horse, St. Avonicus, selected in England for the late Mr. Fair by so good a judge as Ed Corrigan. St. Avonicus' dam is Avonwater by, Prism, a great stake-winner and an excellent sire; his second dam is by Ben Battle, sire of the famous Bendigo.

Within a short time two of the greatest celebrities of the Rancho del Paso stud have passed away, viz., imp. Midlothian and Firenzi. Midlothian sired winners of about $1,000,000, of which Sir Walter, winner of the Brooklyn Handicap, contributed nearly $129,000. Firenzi was the best race mare that ever trod the American turf, in all likelihood, winning forty-seven races and $110,671, while in her first sixty-five starts she was "out of the money" but once. She carried as high as 128 lbs. to victory, and at the longer distances this little mare (she was but about fifteen hands in height) was invincible. During her turf career Firenzi twice won the Champion Stakes at Monmouth Park and ran second in it once, twice won the Monmouth Cup, the Firenze Stakes at Jerome Park and the New York Handicap at Coney Island carrying (126 and 128 lbs.) and the Freehold Stakes, 1½ miles, at Monmouth Park, no less than three times, and in successive years. Her winnings were as follows: $12,710 as a two year-old, $22,630 as a three-year-old, $36,116 as a four-year-old, $19,985 as a five-year-old, $14,470 as a six year-old and $4,760 (ran but three times) as a seven-year-old. Firenzi was brought to Rancho del Paso in the fall of 1891 along with the king of our turf, Salvator, and the pair were mated the following spring, the produce being Firenzeta, who, sent to the stud early, is the mother of the fair turf performer, Bassenzo, a three-year-old this season. Firenzeta's first foal died at foaling time. The second of Firenzi's produce was Pearl V., who shines as the dam of Lapidus, a fast and game little fellow, also a three-year-old. Both were developed by Walter B. Jennings. Firenzi defeated every great race horse of her day save Salvator, who was her stable companion, the scalps of Kingston, Raceland, Riley, Eurus and Elkwood (suburban winners), Exile and The Bard, (Brooklyn Handicap winners) Hanover, Montrose, Connemara, Wary and Terra Cotta having dangled from her little belt. But it was as a racer that she shone brighter than any star in the mare firmament, for when she was sent to the stud, immediately after six years of hard campaigning, Firenzi had not had the time to change from an athlete into a model stud matron, and it will ever be thus when such action is taken with great race mares.

Burns & Waterhouse have a beautiful place just out of Hopland, on the edge of Mendocino county, and recently fitted it up in first class style. They have for stallions Altamax, Mt. McGregor, Eddie Jones, First Tenor, Lovdal, Col. Wheeler and Take Notice, the last named being the only old horse in the collection. Their mares are for the most part noted turf performers, they being Bit of Fashion (winner of the Debutante Stakes at St. Louis) by Forest-Welcome; Berna (dam of Bernota and Oakington) by imp. Cheviot-Sweet Peggy; Cosette (dam of Capt. Coster, Zeta, Candelaria, Cozenza, Corolla and Maxette) by Joe Hooker-Abbie W., therefore a sister to La Scala, dam of the great Sir Walter; Duckling (dam of Adirondack), a stake winner, by imp. Brutus-Decoy Duck; Decoy Duck (dam of Long Lady, Duckling and Duckoy), a stake-winner, by Longfellow-Call Duck; Dulcie Larondie, a winner by Himyar-Lou Pike (dam of the unbeaten French Park); Early Rose (dam of Ebony, Eddie Jones and Temprano) by Duke of Montrose-Talega; Free Love (dam of Lovdal, Norblieh, Midlove, Bee Bee and Dunfree) by Luke Blackburn-Janet Norton; Happy Maiden (dam of Rollick and Torso Maid) by imp. Midlothian-Felicity; Hoolon (dam of Homage) by Joe Hooker-Lou Spencer; Humidity (a stake-winner and sister to Mabel Glenn, Catalpa, Dunganven and Aratar) by Hindoo-imp. Calpurnia; Juanita (winner of thirteen races and dam of Altawan) by imp. Galore-Druidess; Krana (dam of Amoruna) by Plevna-imp. Abrukru; Miss Ban by Major Ban-Louisa D.; Miss Rowena (a stake-winner that won eighteen races as a three year old) by imp. Midlothian-imp. Paloma; Mistletoe (a winner and dam of City Girl, Mistletoe and Mythrox) by Thad Stevens-Mistake; Napamax (a stake-winner that captured seventeen races in three seasons) by imp. Maxim-Napa; Picnic (a stake-winner and dam of Nicnac, Alma, Recreation, Excursion, Galene, Sea Bass and the great Maxnic) by imp. Mr. Pickwick-imp. Countess; Palomacita (a good winner) by Surinam-imp. Paloma (queen of the B. & W. farm and a most phenomenal producer, dam of Palomita, Armitage, Examiner, Palomacita, Don Clarancio, Miss Rowena, Panamint, Yellow Tail and Polonius) by The Drummer-Canary (dam of imp. Candid); Rustrice by Flood-imp. Rosetta; Recreation (a stake-winner that won fifteen races) by the great Morello-Picnic; Shasta Water (a stake-winner which won sixteen races) by imp. Maxim-Tyranny; Sonomis (dam of the phenomenal Alsono) by Joe Hooker-Blizzard; Sweet Faverdale (winner of twelve races, including two stakes) by Faverdale-imp. Sweet Home (a wonderful producer); Sweet Rose (dam of Spainwar) by Flambeau-imp. Fairy Rose (dam of Racine, Flirt, etc.), and last, not least, Talluda (dam of Lord Chesterfield, Bonibel, Lomond, David S., First Love and Thaddeus) by Enquirer-Tallulah (a great producer). Besides, the firm owns the good race mare, High Hoe by Himyar-Janet (best long distance mare of her day, which ran four miles in 7:25½). The success of Burns & Waterhouse as breeders is very distinct, and when one looks over the list of their mares and sees what performers most of them were and that those which did not win were producers of note, their success is easily understood, for they are breeding from stake-winners or producers of stake-winners, while all the sires they are using were stake winners. That is the way to fix a type and blood will tell nearly every time. Nearly all the great race horses of the world were bred to be "phenoms," having many generations of stake horses in unbroken succession on both sides of the house. Altamax, the premier stallion on the farm, is the most phenomenal young sire in the far West, and perhaps no other stallion in America begot three such youngsters in one season as Alsono, Maxnic and Thaddeus. And Altamax will almost surely improve with age, for stallions are seldom at their best until at least fifteen years of age. Norfolk was twenty-six when he begot the unbeaten El Rio Rey, Joe Hooker seventeen when he sired Yo Tambien, Longfellow about eighteen when Longstreet came into the world, imp. Leamington an old horse when the undefeated Sensation saw the light, Musket very ancient when Maxim was begotten, and so we might go on, statistics showing that nine times out of ten a stallion is not at his best until at least fifteen years of age and oftener at the height of his powers when nearer twenty. And speaking of Maxim, Burns & Waterhouse have more of this blood than almost anyone, and it is becoming eagerly sought after.

There is a report abroad that Superintendent John Mackey, of Rancho del Paso (for about thirty years in the employ of J. B. Haggin), intends going into breeding on his own hook, and that with this in view he has leased the Monument ranch just vacated by Ed Corrigan, who had Riley, imp. Artillery and a lot of fine mares on the place until recently, when they were transferred to a farm near Lexington, Ky. Mr. Mackey owns a lot of very excellent mares, and, if he does go in for himself, will doubtless meet with great success. At any rate, he has thousands of good old friends who wish him well. The statement published that Mr. Mackey is to retire from his position as superintendent of Rancho del Paso is not believed, however.

It seems that the Altamax-Recreation yearling colt of Burns & Waterhouse was not injured as badly as at first reported, and those in charge of the firm's Oakland barn have strong hopes that this, the pick of the babies, will live to win many a race.

Barney Schreiber, the Master of Woodlands, will be here in time to "cut in" to-day. The phenomenal success attained by imp. Sain and an unusual run of good luck in the betting ring has put the genial breeder-bookmaker on the sunny side of Easy street. He has added 200 acres to his farm near Bridgeton, Mo., and will soon be about Misouri's biggest breeder.

Thanksgiving on the Speedway

Members of the Golden Gate Park Driving Club are preparing a program of races with which to furnish an afternoon of sport on the speedway in the Park Thanksgiving Day. Trophies will be offered for these contests and if the weather is good there will be many starters and a large crowd to witness the sport.

The project of building a half-mile track, with club house and from 100 to 200 box stalls has not been abandoned by the Golden Gate Park Driving Club, but is being agitated more than ever. There are two or three sites that can be secured, but a selection will not be made until a sufficient sum has been subscribed to enable work being commenced on the proposed enterprise. The club recently opened a subscription list and several thousand dollars have already been subscribed.

San Francisco, Saturday, November 15, 1902.

MANY ENTRIES have already been received for the Pacific Breeders Futurity No. 3 that does not close until December 1st this year. As nearly all our readers must know by this time this stake has a guaranteed value of $6000 and is for the foals of mares bred this year (1902) and the sum required to nominate the mare is but three dollars. Next year, when the two year old divisions of stake number 1 is trotted and paced an interest will be started in these stakes that will beyond a doubt lead to the entries in future stakes growing more numerous every year. The Pacific Breeders Futurity will soon be one of the classics of the trotting turf and it is almost an assured fact that before three years have passed the value of the stake will be doubled. Owners of mares bred this year should not fail to nominate them in this stake as such procedure will enhance the value of both mare and foal. There is probably not a breeder in this country that does not desire to see the animals of his breeding develop into future prize and stake winners, and it is a demonstrated fact that the farms which produce these winners are the ones that get the largest prices for and make the easiest sales of their stock. Colts cannot win stakes in which they are not entered and by starting the foal right, much is gained toward his future earning capacity. Stallion owners, above all others, should be interested in these stakes, and should make it a point to induce every patron to name his mares in them. If there could be a concerted movement on the part of stallion owners in this direction, the Pacific Breeders Futurity No. 3 could be made worth nearer $20,000 than the guaranteed $6000. The last two stakes have averaged 300 entries, and the one which closes December 1st will have as many no doubt. But it should have six hundred, and one thousand would not be an unreasonable number to expect if every stallion owner would make himself a committee of one to solicit nomination of all the mares bred to his horse this year. It should be remembered that this stake is not confined to California owners. It is open to the world and there should be entries received at least from every State and territory west of the Rocky mountains. By referring to the advertising columns of this paper the conditions and all particulars of this stake can be seen. Let every breeder that peruses it resolve to make at least one entry and induce his neighbor to make one also.

SUSPENSION FOR ONE YEAR, which was the punishment meted out to a driver at the Memphis meeting for laying up a heat that the pool box might be beaten, is a much more effective way of stopping this practice than inflicting a fine. It is the plan that has been advocated by this journal for some time and now that the Memphis association has made the start it is likely that other associations will follow suit next year. When drivers lay up a horse for the purpose of beating the bookmakers or the public, they generally know just how the heat is to be trotted by every horse in the race, and having a sure thing, they and their backers play it heavily. It is often the case that several thousand dollars are thus dishonestly won on a heat, and any fine less than the exact amount is not punishment. Men who are in the business of training and driving horses fear suspension, however, worse than anything else, and as the time during which they can be barred can be varied from a week to life, this is a most effective way of making the punishment fit the crime. It is to be hoped that the judges who officiate next season on all the circuits where harness racing is held will adopt the suspension plan for punishing those who lay up heats and violate other rules governing racing.

THE MILE RECORD has not been reached this year by any trotter, but a half-mile has been trotted faster than ever before and the two-mile and five-mile records reduced materially. Can anyone doubt from these performances that the two-minute mark will yet be reached by a trotter? Anyone who has ever seen a horse trot a quarter or even an eighth at a two-minute gait can realize what a tremendous amount of muscle, lung power and grit it will require to keep up this clip for a mile, but we believe the horse is now foaled that will do it, although it is pretty certain that he will have a long and careful preparation by a master hand to be able to accomplish the effort.

THE STANFORD STAKE of 1904 had 85 original entries and there were just 77 of these upon which second payment has just been made. This stake starts out well. On the entries thus far the sum of $810 has been made in two payments and as the State Agricultural Society adds $300 to the stake, it is already worth $1110. The full amount of entrance is $50, so there is every chance of the Stanford Stake of 1904 being worth at least $3000, which will make it a very attractive feature of the State Fair of that year.

TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS was offered by a gentleman the other day for a trotter eligible to the 2:25 class that could step a mile in 2:15. We understand the gentleman found four or five horsemen who owned just such an animal and were willing to take the price, but all wanted the buyer to take their word for the trotter's deed, and consequently no sale has yet been made.

At the New Home of McKinney.

[Am. Horse Breeder, Nov. 4.]

On a recent trip West a member of the Breeder staff stopped off at Bloomington, Ind., and paid a visit to the Gentry Stock Farm, the home of the distinguished sire McKinney 2:11½. Bloomington is the county seat of Monroe county and is located on the line of the Monon route from Chicago to Louisville, and is sixty-five miles from Indianapolis, one hundred miles from Louisville and 225 miles from Chicago. It is a bright, enterprising little town, with a population of about six thousand, and is situated in the heart of a rich agricultural district.

Mr. H. B. Gentry, the owner of McKinney, is the senior member of the firm of Gentry Brothers, of the Gentry Bros.' Trained Animal Show, which has been on the road for the past twenty years, and which is probably the largest aggregation of its kind in the country. This show contains 375 ponies, 400 dogs, 150 monkeys, twenty baby elephants, sixteen baby camels and some zebra, and is divided into four sections, each in charge of one of the brothers.

Mr. Gentry, the owner of McKinney, has bought a 450-acre farm two miles from Bloomington, and he intends in the future to devote a large share of his time to the breeding of trotters, to sell, not to race. With this idea in mind he was determined to have the best that the country could afford. He paid $25,000 for McKinney, and in the judgment of shrewd horsemen the price was reasonable, and Mr. Gentry is bound to get his money back within a short time. He has already booked forty-eight mares to McKinney at a fee of $200.

As an individual, McKinney is one of the most perfect types of the trotter the writer has ever seen. He is a horse of very high finish, very symmetrical in conformation and possessed of great substance. He has a fine, bony head, a nice neck well cut up in the throatle and well set on to the shoulders, strong quarters, short back, round, big barrel and good feet and legs. Some of the photographs that have been published of him have done him rank injustice, for they don't begin to represent him as he appears to the eye. That he is a horse of great substance it is only necessary to say that he stands 15.3 hands high and weighs 1160 pounds. During our travels through the West we met several of the best known horsemen of Kentucky and the Western country who have seen McKinney, and they were all loud in their praise of him. Mr. J. C. Linnehan, the well-known horseman of Ohio, and owner of Norval 2:14½, pronounced him one of the finest specimens of the trotting stallion he had ever seen, and he booked six mares to him.

Mr. Gentry has laid his foundation lines well for success in breeding. His brood mares are choice individually and in blood lines.

He has ten mares, which are bred as follows: Miss Fantastic, bay mare, foaled 1896, by Electric Bell, dam Fantasma by Red Wilkes; second dam Ida by Edwin Forrest 49. Nutrix, chestnut mare, foaled 1896, by Alcatraz, dam Nutula (dam of Maudlin 2:25½) by Belmont 64; second dam the noted broodmare Miss Russell by Pilot Jr. Jaquenta, bay mare, foaled 1896, by Hinder Wilkes, dam Viola (dam of Folsio 2:29½) by King Rene; second dam Sally B. (second dam also of Beuzetta 2:06½, etc.) by Lever. Lizzie Baron, bay mare, foaled 1901, by Oakland Baron, dam Lizzie S by Bow Bells; second dam Young Miss (dam of Bingen 2:06½) by Young Jim. Charming Bunker, bay mare, foaled 1898, by Bonnie McGregor, dam Welcome Bunker by Mambrino King; second dam Lady Bunker (dam of Guy Wilkes 2:15½, etc.) by Mambrino Patchen. Belle Red, bay mare, foaled 1891, by Red Wilkes, dam Emma G. by Almont 33. Anita, brown mare, foaled 1887, by Baron Wilkes, dam Mary F. by Mambrino Boy 844; second dam Adieu by Administrator. Ecreme, bay mare, foaled 1890, by Onward, dam Madge by Petoskey; second dam Daisy Monroe (dam of Pine L. 2:30) by Monroe Chief.

With such a lot of brood mares as these, and others that are of equal breeding which Mr. Gentry contemplates picking up occasionally as the opportunity presents itself, his breeding ventures are sure to be successful.

Mr. Gentry also owns another good horse in Ed Winters 2:12½ by Jay Bird. He is a fine individual and will make a name for himself in the stud, as he is well bred, his dam being Lady Ham, dam also of Hawthorne 2:11½ and Oneida 2:17.

Eastern Hoof Beats.

Gambetta Wilkes 2:19½ now heads the list of 2:30 sires for 1902 with 16 new ones to his credit.

The new performer Indell 2:22½ by Allerton is a sister to Locanda 2:07½ and Junero 2:10½.

The Jay Bird weanlings sold for good prices at the Tranter-Kenney sale. Fourteen of them brought a total of $2740, an average of nearly $200 per head.

The two year old filly Ruby Electrite by Electrite, that paced a mile the other day in 2:15, is out of the dam of Porto Rico, the colt that trotted a quarter over the Denver track recently in 28½ seconds on a wager of $1000.

One day recently James Shevlin drove his team of trotters, Chanty 2:13½ and Fred S. Moody 2:14, a mile in 2:17½ over John H. Shults' mile track at Parkville. Both are California bred.

Dan Patch has paced this season ten miles in 2:01 or better.

At a combination sale at Lexington, Ky., November 3d and 4th, one hundred and twenty-five head of trotting stock were sold for $26,635. Jay Bird by George Wilkes made the highest price—$1500.

The pacing stallion Colonel Loomis by Symboleer 2:09½ stepped into the 2:10 list during the Texas State Fair at Dallas, when he won the $1000 stake for 2:10 pacers in 2:10½, 2:10½, 2:09½.

An offer of $10,000, made by E. E. Smathers of New York, for the six year old bay trotting stallion Reddie Connors by Letcher 2:18½, dam by Nutbreaker 2:24½, was turned down by Dr. J. W. Hurd, Orangeburg, Ky. Hudson & Gatecomb, for a long price, secured a half interest in the racing qualities of the horse in 1903. He is regarded as the most promising green trotter in Kentucky, trotting a trial mile in 2:09.

Alcantara, by George Wilkes, dam Alma Mater, has ten sons who have sired new 2:10 performers in 1902.

The harm which the publication of false prices does in the horse breeding industry is a theme that has often been dwelt upon, but the pernicious practice is difficult to combat. For instance, last week dispatches were sent broadcast over the country stating that Ashland Wilkes 2:17½ had been sold for $50,000 by his owner, Mr. J. D. Creighton, to Mr. W. Harry Orr, of Pennsylvania. Now Ashland Wilkes is one of the most successful sires in the country and a large price was undoubtedly paid for him. But as a matter of fact he is almost twenty-one years old, and that Mr. Orr paid $50,000, or anything like that, for him, is simply preposterous. It is improbable that either Mr. Creighton or Mr. Orr gave out any price for publication. The $50,000 yarn was the invention of some Lexington reporter, anxious to "boost the game," but unaware that his methods can only work it harm. In publishing prices paid for horses at private sale there is only one thing properly to be done: give the correct one or none.

Small Horses for War.

The arguments for small horses in war is one capable of almost mathematical demonstrations. In every campaign horses have necessarily to put up with short rations, often with semi-starvation, and the horse that can do with the least and worst food lasts the longest; and the longest lasting wins. If, then, a small horse can maintain himself where a big one starves, doing equal or nearly equal work, the small horse is demonstrably the better. Apart from artillery and transport, where heavy draught power will always be needed, a pony of 14.2, if properly bred—it has been proved in South Africa—will do all the work of a horse of 16 hands, and on equal rations (where these are scanty) will last twice as long.

The small horse, too, is easier managed, he is less troublesome to mount under fire and to dismount from on the march. This last is no small advantage when men are weary. The Bedouins on their raids are constantly up and down, on and off their mares, running beside them half the night, and so easing and saving them. The small horse, too, is a smaller target to the enemy, is easier hidden in the folds of the ground, and is easier stowed on shipboard. He needs a less stout rope to tether him, a scantier shelter to screen him in rough weather.—Nineteenth Century Review.

From Walnut Grove Stock Farm.

WALNUT GROVE, Nov. 9, 1902.

MR. EDITOR:—Perhaps a few lines from the tulle district may interest some one a little. Hoping that it will, I will try and pass away a long wintry evening endeavoring to send you some news. They have just finished weaning and halter-breaking the sucklings at the Walnut Grove Stock Farm. They are a fine-looking, well-bred lot. Following is a list of them:

Black filly, foaled January 22; sire Nushagak, dam Chamois by Shamrock, second dam by Marion.

Black filly, foaled January 27; sire Nushagak, dam Addie W. by Whips, second dam by Hasbrouck's Hambletonian.

Bay colt, foaled February 1; sire Nushagak, dam Piocha by Dexter Prince, second dam by Electioneer.

Brown filly, foaled April 1; sire Nushagak, dam Bonnie Derby by Charles Derby, second dam by Red Wilkes.

Peter Shields, brown colt, foaled May 5; sire Nushagak, dam Adihala by Dexter Prince, second dam by Whips.

Brown filly, foaled February 28; sire Nushagak, dam Viola by Gen. Benton, second dam by Electioneer.

Brown filly, foaled April 27; sire Nushagak, dam Nosegay by Langton, second dam by Nephew.

Black colt, foaled May 19; sire Nushagak, dam Flora by son of Tilton Almont.

Josie D., chestnut filly, foaled March 20; sire Nutwood Wilkes, dam Everette by Nephew, second dam by Clay.

Bay filly, foaled March 25; sire Prince Ansel, dam Hattie by Robert Steel, second dam by Sargent's Patchen.

Princess Mamie, bay filly, foaled June 19; sire Prince Ansel, dam Mamie Martin by Nushagak, second dam by Almont 33.

Chestnut filly, foaled July —; sire Prince Ansel, dam Francesca by Almont 33, second dam by Grand Sentinel.

Peter Shields, Princess Mamie, the Nushagak-Piocha colt and the sister to Aristo will be entered in the Occident, Stanford and Stallion Stakes. The Nushagak-Piocha colt, the sister to Aristo and Josie D. are entered in the Breeders Futurity. Judge Shields, of Sacramento, made a visit to the farm a short time ago and after seeing a sister to Aristo trot in the paddock, he said, "If I had a colt that could trot like that I would quit practicing law and go out to the ranch and drive it." The Nushagaks are great lot trotters. The trotting instinct seems to be intensely instilled in them, their first impulse seeming to be to square away on a trot. There are several of the weanlings besides Aristo's sister that can trot very fast—the Piocha colt, the Chamois filly, Peter Shields and the filly out of Addie W. in particular. One of the boys at the farm says Mr. Brown has got a whirlwind in this one. Nushagak has only made two regular public seasons, and one of the best recommendations that he could have is the fact that all those who bred to him last season, and bred their mares again this season, bred back to him. There are some very fine weanlings by him owned outside of the farm.

Mr. Robert Thisby has one, a bay colt out of Hilda Rose by Dawn 2:18½, that as an individual would be hard to beat. He is a wonder as a lot trotter, is entered in the Breeders Futurity and will be entered in the Occident, Stanford and Stallion Stakes. Mr. Thisby recently refused $250 for him.

Mr. Brierly has a bay filly out of Hattie W. by Alaska that if individuality and breeding count for anything should develop into a very fast colt trotter. She is entered in the Breeders Futurity and will be entered in the Occident, Stanford and Stallion Stakes.

Our resident physician and enthusiastic trotting horse lover, Dr. Martin, says he has the one that is it, a two tender sure. He is a bay colt out of Boydella by Boydell. He is an extra good individual, and with his breeding should be a colt trotter. He is entered in the Breeders Futurity and will be entered in the Occident, Stanford and Stallion Stakes.

Mr. Durbin has a very fine colt out of Zoe by Eugene Casserly. He intends to enter him in the stakes. He says that he is a sure good one.

Aristo and The Boquet are taking it easy at present. The training operations at present are centred upon the Occident Stake candidates for next season. The half brother to Aristo is quite promising. Mr. Brown has recently booked a couple of the best mares in California to Nushagak: Belle Medium, dam of Stam B. 2:11½, and Bell Bird 2:22, sister to Chimes, St. Bell, Bell Boy, etc.

Grace Kaiser by Kaiser is now the dam of four in the list, three of which have records better than 2:15. Her produce that have records are Coney 2:02, McZeus 2:13, Grace McK. 2:21½ and the black pacer Stipulator that took a record of 2:14½ at Dallas, Texas, last month. The first three are by McKinney and Stipulator is by Titus, own brother to Direct 2:05½.

Jackson's Napa Soda is sold in every city, town and hamlet in the State.

Retrospective.

A glance at the season's results, particularly those on the big tracks, reveals the fact that Chase is the fastest trotter of the year that started the campaign without a record. His record is 2:07½, and with a single exception is the fastest record ever made in a race by a trotter the first season out. Chase is a gelding. The fastest record made in a race by any trotter out this season is to the credit of Major Delmar, that trotted a mile in 2:05½. Like Chase, Major Delmar is also a gelding. His dam and the dam of Chase were both sired by a grandson of George Wilkes. And speaking of that, this Wilkes strain is very pronounced in some of the other great trotters of the year, notably Susie J. 2:06½, the fastest mare of the season; Prince of Orange 2:07½, Fereno 2:07½, Ozanam 2:08, Rhythmic 2:08, Dulce Cor 2:08½, Baron de Shay 2:08½, Walnut Hall 2:09½, John A. McKerron 2:05½ (time record) and others. McKinney 2:11½ has the distinction of having added two trotters to the 2:10 list this season, Charly Mac having reduced his record from 2:11½ to 2:07½ and The Roman from 2:19 to 2:09½ and Moko came very near doing the same thing, Fereno having reduced her record from 2:10½, made in her three year old form, to 2:07½, while Mobil reduced his to 2:10½. Baron Wilkes 2:18, through his sons and himself, has done better still. Prince of Orange 2:07½ by Prince of India 2:13½, Rhythmic 2:08 by Oakland Baron 2:09½, Baron de Shay 2:08½ by Oakland Baron each started the season green and each was sired by a son of Baron Wilkes, while Dulce Cor 2:08½, by Baron Wilkes himself, stepped into the 2:10 circle in the very first public race she ever trotted. Mendocino 2:19½ by Electioneer has made two additions to the 2:10 list this year in Monte Carlo and Idolita. Monte Carlo reduced his record from 2:19½ to 2:09½ and Idolita from 2:12 to 2:09½.

Of the new comers to the 2:10 list Major Delmar 2:05½, Chase 2:07½, Prince of Orange 2:07½, Charley Mac 2:07½, Baron de Shay 2:08½, A. J. D. 2:09½, Dan T. 2:09½, Monte Carlo 2:09½, Waubun 2:09½, Wentworth 2:09½, Wilque 2:09½, The Roman 2:09½ and Nutbearer 2:09½ are geldings.

The mares that have gone into the 2:10 list are Susie J. 2:06½, Anzella 2:06½, Miss Whitney 2:07½, Fereno 2:07½, Ozanam 2:08, Dulce Cor 2:08½, Maxine 2:08½, Alice Carr 2:09½, Beldia 2:09½.

Only have stallions have managed to get into the 2:10 list this season, Rhythmic 2:08, Poindexter 2:09, Idolita 2:09½, Walnut Hall 2:09½ and Hesperus 2:09½.

Of the sixty-eight pacers that have taken records of 2:10 or better this season, twenty-nine are geldings, fourteen are mares, and twenty are stallions.—Kentucky Stock Farm.

Nothing that occurred at Memphis exceeded the great mile to pole by Direct Hal and Prince Direct. The idea of trying them together was quite unpremeditated in a genuine happy thought. The entire rigging for the trial—harness, cart and all—was even borrowed. But the result was amazing. The team record stood at 2:08 (by John R. Gentry and Robert I.) since 1897. At the first attempt the two black stallions stepped to the half in 1:04, and from there home at whirlwind speed, the last half in 1:01½, making the mile in 2:05½, or 2½ seconds better than the record. Prince Direct, better known to residents of this Coast as Freddie C., actually carried Direct Hal off his feet at the end.

Like all good things, Jackson's Napa Soda has a dozen counterfeits. Watch out!

Striped Bass Fishing.

It is a fair November day, yet skies are overcast, Scarce ripple on the wave, scarce whisper in the blast; The tides are flowing in. By Alameda's bay shore, O'er rocky mole and sandy beach tumultuous they pour. Where small fry and crustacea are plentiful in the tides The striped bass gather to the feast that kind nature provides. So, 'tis a day for rod and hook and for the angler's line, Then cast the baited barb, where boils the sparkling brine. O'er some gray impending rock jutting from the land Equip'd with pliant rod, hopeful angler takes his stand. With skillful wield he casts afar, his choice, enticing bait To tempt the striped bass (or sad, the shark and sting-ray) to their fate. The sinker drops—the bait of clam or live smelt sinks down Prone where abyssal mud with old cans is thickly sown— Nor long he waits, for quick a strike, a thrilling strike is there, The reel revolves—and soon a bass ascends to upper air. A "dago" fisher with the hand-line is anchored near the mole, Far reaching is the dark eye that lights his envious soul. A ripple blurs the surface oft covered with an oleaginous smear So, 'tis a royal day for sport—a day to angler dear. Boats three dollars per—and other et ceteras profound— The sardines glitter past, the fiddler crabs crawl around, "Doc," "Jim" and "Ken" fish where striped bass resort, For to lure these noble fish is their supremest sport.

SALES.

Natrod Kennels sold to Mrs. J. A. Drifmel, a black Cocker Spaniel dog puppy by Gablian-Stella Silk, Nov. 7, 1902.

The Yuba river at the present time is reported to be literally alive with steelhead trout; the fish are running up the river to the mountain spawning grounds at the head of the main river and its tributaries. Thousands of the trout have been seen daily; they range in size from a half pound up to ten and fifteen pounds. The close season on trout is now in force luckily. A Colgate citizen, so states the Grass Valley Union, caught a twenty-pound fish by wading into the river and grabbing the trout with his hands and then throwing it out upon the bank one day last week. This fish is claimed to be one of the largest ever taken out of the Yuba at that point.

Why Guns of Standard Makes Are Favorites.

In the selection of a shotgun the veteran sportsman as well as the novice has a wide range in which to indulge his fancy or make an initial choice. In the case of the former the price will not cut so great a figure as it frequently does when the purchase of a gun is contemplated by the amateur. The fact that a good looking breech loading shotgun can be purchased for from $10.00 to $17.50 is sometimes a tempting offer for a youth or inexperienced purchaser. These cheap guns are sold all over the country and while passed by in utter contempt by any one who knows a gun, still they have their uses. It is rather a significant fact that few of these cheap weapons ever come back to the gunsmith or dealer for repairs. They are a valuable factor in rapidly educating a young sportsman or the older beginner up to the proper standard. And that standard is highly exemplified by such leading manufacturers as Parker Bros. of Meriden, Conn., makers of the "Old Reliable"; the Hunter Arms Company of Fulton, N. Y., makers of the L. C. Smith gun; the Remington Arms Company, famous rifle, pistol and shotgun manufacturers of Ilion, N. Y., and J. P. Clabrough and Brother, represented here by Clabrough, Golcher and Company, the factory at which is built their automatic ejector guns being located in Birmingham, Eng.

It is not going out of the way to state that the makers enumerated above control the cream of the demand, as well as the principal output, for shotguns on the Pacific Coast. This situation is supplemented by a large export trade in the same lines of shotguns. The following taken from the Sporting Goods Dealer gives an intelligent review of conditions that enables the output of cheap guns to find a market everywhere and is at the same time, to the intelligent reader, a strong argument in favor of his selecting a gun of standard make.

It has been said that, while foreign competition in the gun trade need not cause our American manufacturers, uneasiness, it is sufficiently strong to bar the formation of a trust to control the price of firearms, and consequently there must continue that healthful rivalry which is as stimulating to the producer as it is advantageous to the consumer. Possibly this is a too roseate view of conditions which some pessimists may deplore, but conditions which do not admit of change must be accepted as we find them. Cheap Belgian guns can not be crowded out of the trade altogether, except by offering better arms at a like price. They are not now, nor have they been for a number of years back, in direct competition with the product of our own factories, because of an appreciable inferiority in material and workmanship, and of the further fact that they are not made especially for the American trade and do not exactly conform to the requirements of American sportsmen. Guns bearing either the Belgian or English proof marks are safe enough with ordinary charging, but experience has shown that a gun made on this side of the Atlantic can generally be accepted without a government endorsement of its maker's guarantee, and will also give better and stand more service than a foreign-made arm of anything near the same price. To an impartial observer it would appear that American methods of manufacture are winning the battle against European cheap labor. Formerly our machine-made guns would not bear comparison with the handwork of our foreign competitors, but the margin of choice has grown smaller year by year, as problems of manufacture have been solved and methods improved, until, today, an American purchaser may leave patriotism out of the question and choose according to his better judgment, and yet come out winner with a gun made in New England or New York. But English gun-makers find more to worry them in this Belgian competition. Both countries provide arms for the open markets of the world, and the rivalry has been keen all along.

Possibly to gain a better understanding of the conditions, a deputation from the National Society of Sporting and Military Gunworkers recently visited Liege, the principal center of the Belgian gunmaking industry, and their report is full of interest, as showing the methods of manufacture followed in that country, that we shall clip from it rather liberally and without farther excuse. It seems that only a small percentage of the workmen are employed in what might be termed the central factory; by far the greater number of them taking their work to their homes and laboring contentedly under their own vine and fig tree. The report says:

"Peasant proprietorship is the order of the day, and instead of one landlord possessing large tracts of land, the country seems to be divided up into small plots for the workers. Hence it is that, as one journeyed from place to place, it was common to find that even if the Belgian earned a smaller income in the shape of wages, that was more than compensated for by the advantages he obtains in lowness on rent and the produce of his plot of land. * * * We frequently found action filers, barrel filers, and stockers working in a little shop at the side of their house, to both of which was attached a large strip of land cultivated in the best possible form. Flower beds neatly arranged and giving off pleasant and refreshing odors were within a few feet of the workshop window, making labor pleasant and comfortable to bear, and in one instance grapes were growing in abundance on the walls of a barrel welder's smithy, and fruit trees were to be seen from the window, in addition to which vegetation of various kinds was growing very plentifully, and sometimes a cow, a sheep, a pig and fowls were kept, all of which, of course, tended to help the family and increase the income, so that whenever the question of wage is touched upon, it must be considered in relation to the small amount earned by the Belgian workmen, as compared with those in this country, that the former's earnings are added to by the better conditions under which most of them live. * * * We waited upon the firm of F. Dumoulin & Co., and upon producing our letter of introduction, consent was readily given for us to go through the premises. Here, however, there was no manufacturing done, as the work was given out in various stages to work people, and upon being brought back was viewed and warehoused. Women and children fetch the work and convey it to the homes of the workers, where it is usually done in small shops connected with the dwellings. Even dogs are harnessed to little carts, which are filled with barrels or guns in every stage, and in this way work is conveyed backwards and forwards; but even in giving out the work and taking it back again, in the viewing of it, and the storage, complete system was everywhere prevalent. It is necessary to point out also that the machining of actions was excellently done, reducing the work to be accomplished by hand to a minimum; in fact, all the hard work is done by machinery, both in barrels, actions and stocks, so that there are no great pieces of metal or wood to remove by file and chisel as there is in Birmingham. There appears to be a system of standards or measures in the machining for the different sized guns, so that the various parts could be finished almost accurately. In the stamping no useless metal is left for machines to cut away, and even the lumps are split in the stamping process, and we could not do other than conclude that all this told largely in favor of the Belgian producer. * * *

The largest factory for sporting work in Liege was next visited, and here we saw some marvelous examples of machining and systematic working out of detail. We saw stocking being done by machinery, and work being turned out at a tremendous rate. Actioning also was being executed on machines, girls being called into requisition. Barrel filing, setting and polishing we also witnessed, and the same order and system was as marked a feature in this place as others. The firm, however, apologized to us that a large number of work people were away from their duties enjoying 'Saint Monday'; but the rapidity with which the guns were turned out at this place, owing to the employment of such a large quantity of machinery, was simply astounding. Even the barrels after brazing together were ground on emery wheels about two feet in diameter by young women, the price for grinding being two-fifths of a penny per pair. It seemed to us to be terribly hard and unhealthy work for women, but must be an important factor in cheap production."

The tenor of the report throughout is much the same. It tells of a combination of the methods of the old world and the new; of machine work conducted on the American plan in great factories, but at a minimum of expense; of the finer processes requiring handwork, the filing and refitting and stocking, farmed out among trained workmen who have been bred in the craft, and who pursue their labors in their own homes, under conditions that cannot be duplicated either in America or England. It should no longer be a matter of surprise that the Belgian manufacturer can compete with us in our home market, in spite of ocean freight and import duties. He has shown a business tact, and an aptness to adopt modern ideas and methods so far as they are preferable to the old, which one might describe as "Yankee-like," in default of a more expressive term."

Cheap grade guns, with their soft metal parts and mechanism, soon shoot loose. Split grips are also not infrequent. The main trouble generally rallies round the breech, we have seen one of these guns so ramshackly at the breech that when a shell loaded with a small load of smokeless powder was fired the brass cap of a Nitro shell was blistered so much that it was a wonder that there was not a "back action" explosion that would have been serious. These guns are safest only when used for ornament. They can be used for hunting to only a certain satisfactory extent when the best shells procurable are loaded with a medium grade of black powder and great care must be taken so that too heavy a charge is not fired.

One individual who knows "what's what" is the man who is always getting a new gun. In the larger cities as well as in every small town, particularly in regions possessed of an abundance of game, you will find the "chronic" gun buyer—some man, old or young, who hunts a great deal, buys a new gun each season or oftener, but yet rarely owns more than one firearm at a time. Frequently he is a market hunter or a guide; more often still, a lover of sport for its own sake, regardless of whether its pursuit brings him pecuniary loss or gain. He is invariably successful in the field, because he knows every foot of country for miles around, has learned the haunts and habits of game, owns a good dog, is an expert shot, and never gets "rattled" when a covey of birds flushes around his ears. He reads sportsmen's papers; or, if these are not obtainable, every gun catalogue that comes in his way is preserved and studied. In consequence, when he buys a gun, it is of proper weight, length and gauge for the character of work that is expected of it; it is "right" in length and drop of stock, and is neither too close nor too open in pattern. The combination of gunner and gun invariably gets the game; but, as invariably, the gun alone is given the credit of such success by rival hunters. "If I could only buy that gun," sighs The-Man-Who-Misses; and for the hundredth time the heart of the chronic gun buyer is moved to pity and he consents to a transaction which yields him a neat profit on the original investment. And so he buys and sells; helping to educate his fellow sportsmen to a better knowledge of arms and ammunition; working up business for the local dealer, and making money for himself.

FEATHER AND FIN.

The article devoted to Russian river in the American Field of the 8th inst., among other interesting data states "that there is an abundance of sturgeon in the river for some distance above the mouth—far above tide water. These are readily caught with a heavy fishhook and cord, some of them weighing as high as two hundred pounds. The flesh is very palatable and finds a ready market. Annually large numbers are captured."

This fish is protected at all times; the statute prohibits taking or having sturgeon in possession. The writer of the article referred to evidently means the illegal Chinese sturgeon gear when he writes of the heavy fishhook and cord. It is possible that some sturgeon are illegally taken from the river and peddled about the country districts, this practice however would bring anyone indulging in it under the ban of the law. We make the correction here so that visiting anglers may not be misled.

In regard to the sturgeon, this fish was very plentiful in San Francisco bay and tributary waters up to about a decade ago. The incessant pursuit of the fish and the taking of it with gear of murderous and deadly design—its use introduced and practiced first by the vandal Chinese fishermen and subsequently adopted by all the market fishermen—has almost exterminated a valuable food fish. The same conditions of pursuit were in vogue in different Coast streams and waters as the supply of fish gave out, locality after locality. An almost abortive attempt to save the fish by legislative action in prohibiting its capture has practically made the few survivors the more sought after. Now and then spasmodic attempts are made to round up a law breaking fisherman but the good work of yanking the few remaining sturgeon from the water still goes on merrily.

The sturgeon as a medium of sport was not to be despised in the past days of its plenitude in our waters. One method of taking the fish was with the harpoon. The sportsmen would proceed in a small sailboat to almost any of the slough interlaced marshlands along the bayshores—those of San Bruno or San Mateo were favorite sturgeon grounds years ago. Awaiting until almost slack water, the boat would be propelled up the shallow muddy slough, the fishermen on the lookout for "sign." The fish had the habit of snouting, to coin a term, up the muddy bottom, similar to the manner in which a hog will root the ground. The sturgeon was not wallowing about and snouting in the mud for fun, it was after food, clams and other mollusca, etc. The commotion created by the fish was the sign for which the boating party were on the qui vive. When a sturgeon was located, one of the party would stand in the boat's bow ready with his harpoon poised for a throw or thrust at the fish, the method employed in striking being contingent upon how close the boat could be propelled to the fish before becoming stranded or the fish would take itself to flight in alarm at the invaders of its dining room.

When the harpoon was sunk into the fish then the fun began, particularly so if a sturgeon weighing anywhere from 200 to 600 pounds was tackled, and these big fellows were not so uncommon either in the old days. At the first prick of the harpoon blade the fish kicked up a rumpus lively in the extreme, splashing muddy water in all directions; flopping, rolling and floundering about in apparently meaningless manner the fish was making for the deepest part of the shallow water with head pointed for the bay. The boatmen had the boat turned and ready for the fish by this time, when Mr. Sturgeon had on a full head of steam down the creek the paid-out line was taken up taut with a jerk and a swish, and away went the boat following in his wake. If the first danger of an upset had been avoided the fishing party were not immune from mishap by any means, for there were generally many tortuous turns in the creek. The fish being yards ahead of the boat, unless the craft was well steered and kept in the channel the fish would at times drag the boat high and dry or spill the fellows out in bringing the boat up with a round turn, bow on to an obstruction. Once out in the bay waters, the smaller coves or large creeks where there was plenty of searoom, an exciting trip was enjoyed by a hilarious and shouting boat's crew. The ride would be of greater or less extent according to the size of the fish struck. In the case of big fish, runs of several hours' duration before the kill were not uncommon. A "pull in" alongside of the exhausted fish, a stout club for small ones, or an ax for the large fellows, and the coup de grace given by blows on the head or the severance of the spinal cord at the neck were the methods employed in making the kill.

Anglers the world over have their troubles. A dispatch from England illustrates an acrimonious situation between the British anglers and William Waldorf Astor, who is in the midst of another fight that will undo whatever popularity he gained by his recent gift of $150,000 for the improvement of rifle shooting. When the expatriated American bought Clevedon, the Duke of Westminster's magnificent mansion on the Thames, he satisfied himself that all the fish that happened to stray into his part of the river were his exclusive property, too. So he put up notices to trespassers all along the banks. The various angling associations which have for years enjoyed the fishing in the upper reaches of the Thames were up in arms at once, and after a series of skirmishes the question is coming into court.

Strengthened by Mr. Astor's example, his neighbor, Sir Peter Palmer, a retired lieutenant-general, has brought the matter to an issue by obtaining an injunction against a professional angler who has used this part of the river undisturbed for thirty years. Piscatorial associations all over the country have joined to defend the angler, and the case will be appealed, if necessary, until it reaches the House of Lords. The associations contend that as they feed the river with spawn at their own expense they have just as much right to the fish as Mr. Astor and his neighbor.

In the meantime anglers are having fun with the notice boards to trespassers. Mr. Astor's keeper rose one morning to find all of his signs replaced by the following:

ONE MILLION POUNDS STERLING
Offered to Any Fisherman Who Can Catch a Title for the Stranger
Living About Here.
Signed: THE DOCK OF PALL MALL

The omission of Mr. Astor's name from the list of coronation honors, despite his big gift to the nation, makes it almost certain now that he will never receive the title he is supposed to covet.

Apparently there are more fatal accidents among hunters nowadays than was the case twenty, ten or even five years ago. Would-be humorists have suggested that there is an excuse for the indiscriminate shooting which leads to this deplorable state of affairs: With more hunters than deer abroad, a center shot either scores success or reduces, by two or more, the bipedal majority. But this is a heartless philosophy. There is no excuse for the shot fired at a target only imperfectly visible, unless its identity is positively known. Men who have not learned the need of caution in handling firearms should be debarred from the woods when other hunters asea broad. In States where hunters are required to pay a license fee, it would be easy to catechise applicants concerning their former experience with deadly weapons, and their idea of "how to hold" when some unknown creature is in breaking brush within easy rifle shot. A competent examiner could easily "tumble" to those without experience in hunting game of any description; and then the remaining applicants, if not suspected of a mental weakness or an inherent tendency toward emotional insanity, could be given clearance papers and set adrift. Common sense should teach anyone that these terrible accidents, all too frequently reported from the hunting fields of the North and West, are directly due to the man behind the gun. But still the daily press persists in decrying the practice of carrying "nitro rifles" into the woods—as though trembling hands and blinking eyes can speed a 30 calibre bullet more accurately than a 45, or a double charge of buckshot. This unreasoning prejudice against modern arms originated in the back counties, and its most ardent exponents are woodsmen, who never saw a higher power rifle, and urban reporters and space writers who are commonly supposed to know everything. In common fairness to manufacturers and dealers, it would be well for those framers of public opinion to invent a firearm that will kill, maim or injure nothing save legitimate game. Failing in this, they should explain why ping pong balls are not suggested as a substitute for metal jacketed bullets, and some inoffensive compound to take the place of the "dynamite" which they fondly imagine to be compressed within the depth of a 30-40 "bottle-nosed" shell.

A problem with striped bass fishermen has arisen in that particular style of bait fishing where they use the float. Just how and when to strike effectively when the fish has introduced itself to the suspended clam or live smelt has been a poser. The float being some distance out in the water gives the dilemma a sort of right angled perplexity, the solution of which has not yet been satisfactorily evolved.

A St. Louis citizen has recently patented a float that is designed for the purpose of settling this particular mental worry of the angling guild. Instead of using one's own judgment in striking at the right time when the fish runs with the bait, the float does its own striking, dispensing with the assistance of walking (or swearing) delegates, Union Labor meetings, or the mandate of President Mitchell. The fish hits the bait and the return blow is instantaneous. That's all there is to it. The fish is hooked or he isn't, in the latter case the angler may cuss, but he is not to blame.

In the practical use of the device, the striking mechanism is located in a small tube running through the float in lieu of the usual feather quill and wooden point projecting from top and bottom of the float. The parts are set by a pull on the pull-wire, which draws down the rocking-trigger and pull-rod within the tube to compress the spring, the trigger catches beneath a shoulder ring in the lower end of the tube, while the trigger is rocked by a setting-wire so it will extend across the tube into position. When a fish becomes hooked the tugging in its efforts to escape releases the trigger and the line is given a short, strong jerk—this is the "egg in the coffee," the back-action kick is for the purpose of striking the hook into the fish so that it cannot get away. The theory works beautifully on paper, but we are inclined to believe the device is only another of those wonderful things, the only success in the use of which is—that they frighten fish.

Harold Williams, a fifteen year old lad of Big Meadows, gave a demonstration of unusual daring and pluck last Saturday while hunting along Benner creek. Coming upon the tracks of what was evidently a huge bear, young Williams followed the trail until he sighted the animal in a thicket. The first shot only stunned the beast, which turned raging upon his assailant. In this critical situation Williams displayed remarkable coolness, standing his ground and firing his rifle until the bear fell writhing in its death agony. The youth then hurried home where he briefly told history and men were dispatched to bring in the carcass. It proved to be that of a cinnamon bear and weighed over 500 pounds. The hide measured 6½ feet.

The third annual convention of the California Game and Fish Protective Association was convened at Monterey yesterday and will continue today. Yesterday was given up to the transaction of business. This morning there will be hunting and fishing and in the afternoon the delegates will be addressed by Mayor Johnson. Some of the delegates are planning to remain over tomorrow, and for these quail shooting and boating will be in order. Special railroad rate have been secured, and it is expected that many delegates from all parts of the State will be present.

Waterloo Cup Coursing Meet at St. Louis.

Roman Athlete, owned by J. H. Rosseter of this city was the winner of the Waterloo Cup run off at Deimar race track St. Louis, on the 8th and 9th insts. John Grace was in the saddle and James Graceclipped, both are well known local leashmen, their selection for the important work at this coursing stake being universally desired by the coursing men.

John Grace judged the same stake several years ago in the East. He has an international reputation as the premier coursing judge and was the unanimous selection of the leashmen who were interested in the meeting. The confidence of the coursing men in Judge Grace was shown by the large number of dogs entered from here. He has probably a greater following among the leashmen than any other official who has been connected with the sport for forty years past.

The abilities of the father are reflected by his son James, who stands equally high as a slipper as the elder Grace does in the saddle.

John Grace is a man of wonderful endurance despite years that with another would long since have relegated a sportsman, however ardent, to the benches. He rides like a Centaur and covers the ground during a course in a manner than is keenly appreciated by devotees of the coursing sword.

Mr. Rosseter has been singularly successful as a leashman. He has shown the indomitable spirit and enthusiasm that has resulted materially in placing the sport at a high standard on the Coast. As an importer and breeder of high-class Greyhounds he stands in the lead. Several trips to England for the purpose of procuring the best available stock has given us such dogs as the great For Freedom; Firm Friend; False Flatterer; a bitch, the litter sister of an English Waterloo Cup winner; and numerous others. Mr. Rosseter bred Emin Pasha, San Jouquin, Way-farer, all stake winners. These dogs were out of imported Daisy by imported Major, two as high-class and finely bred Greyhounds as were ever brought into the United States. Mr. Rosseter procured these dogs from Col. North, the breeder and owner of Fullerton, the sensational winner of three Waterloo cups.

Emin Pasha stands out phenomenally as the leading Greyhound sire of the Coast and without doubt the best ever seen in this country. He has left in Palo Alto, Ireland and several others from the same litter, worthy standard bearers of his fame and dangerous adversaries on the grass. Emin Pasha's get has annexed stakes and prize money that runs up into probably $50,000. This great dog must have been bred on the right lines for it will be remembered that old Gladiator (and rightly named he was), the son of Said Pasha, is full brother to Emin Pasha and out of Mollie H. (dam of the sterling hound Sky Ball, who was a flyer, too swift in fact for an enclosed meeting, and who has gone by Emin Pasha so swiftly that the latter looked as if he were tied up). Gladiator has the record of having made the largest score ever run up in an enclosed meeting, 87 to 6, against Hot Stuff.

Roman Athlete is a four year old dog by the great Emin Pasha out of Fair Helen, and was bred by Mr. Rosseter, who owned the sire. Roman Athlete is a game hound and a clever worker, but lacks any particular speed. He has a number of minor stakes to his credit won at the parks around San Francisco. His sire, Emin Pasha, now dead, divided first money in the Waterloo Cup of 1900, when John Halton took him to Texas. Black Coon, winner of the plate, is also by Emin Pasha, out of that consistent performer, Mamie Pleasant.

The Waterloo cup coursing opened on Friday with the event filled to the limit, sixty-four dogs. Long courses were the rule, and the field was heavy and rough, and it was only possible to run two rounds of the Waterloo cup. The stake was continued on Saturday, and the accompanying stakes, the Plate and the Purse, were also run down.

The victory of Roman Athlete in the Waterloo final was a surprise to the talent. Sacramento Boy was picked all along as the winner of the event, but the upset came when Northern Express, the puppy which won the recent Futurity at Friend, Neb., defeated the California champion in the fourth round of the stake. Roman Athlete was lucky in his courses, as all were short and the element of luck played an important feature. Tiburon, the runner up, was also fortunate in this respect. Northern Express and Barefoot Boy, the third and fourth dogs, ran into hard courses near the close.

The winner of the Waterloo Purse was Lord Butte, owned by L. F. Bartels of Denver. Warburton, a St. Louis hound, was runner up.

The Waterloo Plate went to Black Coon, also entered by J. H. Rosseter, King Cashier being runner up. The weather was warm on Saturday and the jacks were a good lot.

A summary of the stakes is as follows:

Waterloo Cup—First round—George McEwen Malcolm's Aeolus San Francisco, Cal., defeated T. W. Bartel's Best Brand, Denver, 10-4.

Ralph H. Orthwein's Tiburon, St. Louis, defeated E. M. Kellogg's Crawford Belle, Gilmore City, Ia., 17-9.

J. T. Burbank's (ns) Dom Pedro, St. Louis, defeated John S. Bratton's Viking, East St. Louis, 6-0.

Ed Neavy's Talk to Me, Cable, Ill., defeated Ralph Orthwein's Tapioca, St. Louis, 14-0.

T. W. Bartel's Bones defeated M. F. Parker's Little Vixen, St. Louis, 15-19.

J. T. Burbank's Patricia defeated Cecil A. Lyons' Texas Hector, Sherman, Tex., 14-10.

Sam F. Handy's Prairie Bird, Minneapolis, defeated Dr. Van Hummel's Van Nora, Indianapolis, 11-9.

J. D. Deshauser's Society Belle, St. Louis, defeated L. F. Bartel's Lord Butte, Denver, 3-0.

John Charlton & Sons' Cloudburst, Minneapolis, defeated P. Conrad's Conrad's Best, St. Louis, 6-0.

Wilson & Allen's Troublesome, Victor, Ia., defeated John S. Bratton's Minnesota Girl, 26-2.

J. J. Lavin's Lilly Doe, St. Louis, defeated Cecil A. Lyons' Texas Corker, 9-5.

Anheuser, Turner & Lowe's Northern Express, St.

Louis, defeated J. E. Hoskin's The Raider, 17-10.
 L. F. Bartel's Truebeau, Denver, defeated J. D. Deshausey's Mountain Chief, 6-5.
 Ralph H. Orthwein's Sisquoc defeated H. G. Becker's Monsoon, St. Louis, 16-5.
 D. Walsh's Sacramento Boy, Sacramento, Cal., defeated Wilson & Allen's Our Minnie, 12-3.
 J. F. Hoskin's King Cassier defeated J. J. Lavin's Maggie N., 5-2.
 E. M. Kellogg's Joe Pasha defeated L. F. Bartels' Lady Ballets, 7-22.
 Wilson & Allen's Barefoot Boy defeated E. M. Kellogg's (ns) Robert Boy, 4-3.
 F. L. Nicholls' Scotch Reel, Butte, Mont., defeated Anheuser, Turner & Lowe's Whirligig, 8-3.
 B. F. Jackson's (ns) Laughing Water, St. Louis, defeated Cecil A. Lyons' Texas Black Lips, 7-6.
 John Russell's Union Star, Cable, Ill., defeated L. F. Bartel's Lady Bird, 8-4.
 Anheuser, Turner & Lowe's North Pole defeated C. P. Benson's The Rouge, St. Louis, 7-5.
 F. B. Sheridan's Linlithgow Lass, St. Louis, defeated B. F. Jackson's (ns) Warburton, 7-3.
 M. Davy's Dexter B., Butte, Mont., defeated Mosconi Brothers' (ns) J. E. H., 15-2.
 Cecil A. Lyons' Texas Betty defeated John Russell's Sir Magic, 12-6.
 J. J. Lavin's Bright Chain defeated Cecil A. Lyons' Texas Hoo-Hoo, 14-6.
 W. H. Smith's Confidence, Butte, Mont., defeated J. B. Sheridan's Kingstown, St. Louis, 22-12.
 Ben Aldritt's Grace Greenwood, Friend, Neb., defeated C. A. Lyons' Texas Bess, 4-3.
 J. H. Rosseter's (ns) Black Coon, San Francisco, defeated J. H. Rosseter's Rural Artist, 12-5.
 J. H. Rosseter's Roman Athlete defeated George H. McDougal's Chelce, Butte, 5-0.
 B. F. Jackson's (ns) Lord Brazen, St. Louis, defeated John Charlton's Robin Charming Thought, 6-2.
 Q. Van Russell's Redwood Lad, Indianapolis, defeated C. P. Hanson's Herry the Hobo, 4-0.
 Second round—Aeolus defeated Tiburon, 7-4.
 Don Pedro defeated Talk to Me, 4-1.
 Patricia defeated Bunes, 5-3.
 Prairie Bird defeated Society Belle, 28-0.
 Cloudburst defeated Troublesome, 3-1.
 Northern Express defeated Lilly Doe, 16-2.
 Sisquoc defeated Truebeau, 27-8.
 Sacramento Boy defeated King Cassier, 4-2.
 Laughing Water defeated Scotch Reel, 10-2.
 Barefoot Boy ran a bye with Wyvie, Joe Pasha being withdrawn.
 Union Star defeated North Pole, 6-5.
 Linlithgow Lass defeated Dexter B., 12-6.
 Texas Betty defeated Bright Chain, 15-11.
 Grace Greenwood defeated Confidence, 7-2.
 Roman Athlete defeated Black Coon, 2-0.
 Redwood Lad defeated Lord Brazen, 9-6.
 Third round—Tiburon defeated Dom Pedro 8-6, time 0:50.
 Prairie Bird defeated Patricia 16-6, time 1:45.
 Northern Express defeated Cloudburst 6-3, time 0:35.
 Sacramento Boy defeated Sisquoc 11-6, time 1:00.
 Barefoot Boy defeated Laughing Water 4-1, time 0:13.
 Union Star defeated Linlithgow Lass 6-1, time 0:12.
 Grace Greenwood defeated Texas Betty 10-6, time 0:42.
 Roman Athlete defeated Redwood Lad 8-4, time 0:36.
 Fourth round—Tiburon defeated Prairie Bird 5-3, time 0:17.
 Northern Express defeated Sacramento Boy 10-8, time 0:58.
 Barefoot Boy defeated Union Star 21-5, time 2:00.
 Roman Athlete defeated Grace Greenwood 2-0, time 0:10.
 Semi-Final—Tiburon defeated Northern Express 5-3, time 0:18.
 Roman Athlete defeated Barefoot Boy 5-1, time 0:20.
 Final—Roman Athlete, J. H. Rosseter, San Francisco, defeated Tiburon, Ralph Orthwein, St. Louis, 3-1. Time 0:10.
 Waterloo Purse, final—Lord Butte, L. F. Bartels, Denver, defeated Warburton, B. F. Jackson (ns) St. Louis, 11-6. Time 0:56.
 Waterloo Plate, final—Black Coon, J. H. Rosseter, (ns) San Francisco, defeated King Cashier, J. H. Hoskins, 6-0. Time 0:20.

Oakland Dog Show.

A bench show in Oakland under A. K. C. rules and to come off about December 16th is now an assured fixture. The premium list is now in the printer's hands and will be issued the first of next week.

Local judges will be chosen for most of the breeds. Of the fanciers suggested we have heard mentioned for St. Bernards and Mastiffs, Mr. Joseph Cutten, who is at home in the "holy" breed.

For Great Danes, Dr. Musser of Oakland, a leading physician and prominent society man, who, in the East prior to his locating here, was a well-known breeder and enthusiastic Great Dane fancier. The Cocker Club will submit the names of several specialists to pass the ribbons in the Cocker competition. In fact a circular requesting choice of eligibles from individual members will be mailed to the club men.

N. H. Hickman would no doubt handle the Fox Terriers creditably and with satisfaction to exhibitors. Bulldogs would come under a connoisseur in Mr. Fred Clark, of London, Eng. Mr. Clark is sojourning in this city on an extended pleasure trip and has with him one of the best Bull bitches ever brought here. John Bradshaw will do on everything else save Pointers, Setters and all hounds, for the judging of which several competent fanciers are available.

This show will be given for the mutual interest and good fellowship of dogmen, and is now assured of a hearty and extended support. This will be a good feeder for our big spring show.

Several new classes will be arranged in the premium list, among them a class for local dogs, this will allow the Oakland doggy fellows a chance to put their dogs in and win prizes without a fear of being walloped by some of the 'Frisco cracks. The veteran class for dogs and bitches over five years is a good innovation and should draw. There are far too many good old ones about to allow them to go to seed in obscurity away from shows. These old champions and winners have been well represented by their winning sons and daughters and are well worthy to enter the lists again in a contest among themselves. The Irish Setters Barrymore and Finglas Jr., the English Setter Silver Plate, Alec Colvin's Pointer Lady C., J. L. Cunningham's Champion Juanita, C. Dresser's Orchard Trilby, the Fox Terriers Aldon Swagger, Warren Sceptic, Warren Tattle, Eclipse Blanche, Norfolk Queen Dance, Ch. Golden Jewell and a number of other good dogs are not too blasé to bring together. This idea is a feature that would do a lot of livening up.

Pacific Coast Field Trial Derby.

The prospects for a very successful Derby are encouraging. Second forfeits in twenty-eight nominations have been paid in to Secretary Betz. The list of possible starters includes nineteen Setters and nine Pointers, this will be a Setter year it seems.

The grounds selected are about eight miles southwest of Bakersfield and extend a distance of over five miles covering an ample territory for testing and bringing out the young dog's qualities. The Derby purse will probably amount to about $500.

A list of the Derby candidates is the following:

SETTERS.

J. E. Terry's (Sacramento) black and white dog Kilgarif (Orion-Mary Lou), whelped —, 1902. Bred by owner.

Same owner's black and white bitch Lou; same breeding.

Charles W. Coggins' (Igerna) black, white and tan dog Woodbine Pete Jr. (Woodbine Pete-Lady Kingston), whelped September 1, 1901. Bred by Woodbine Kennels' Newaygo, Mich.

Same owner's white, black and tan bitch Mountain Quail (Charm-Jessie Gladstone III.), whelped January 2, 1902. Bred by G. W. Tibbetts, Colusa, Cal.

Clinton E. Worden's (San Francisco) white, black and tan dog Harry H. (Why Not-Sue), whelped February 17, 1901. Bred by P. Lorillard, New York. (Winner of second in Northwestern Derby.)

Same owner's orange and white dog Jay M., formerly named Spotter (Colonel R.-Spot's Girl), whelped March 29, 1901. Bred by Geo. E. Gray, Appleton, Minn.

W. W. Van Arsdale's (McCloud) black, white and tan bitch Shasta (Why Not-Gertrude), whelped March 24, 1891. Bred by Chas. Tucker, Stanton, Tenn.

Same owner's black, white and tan bitch Countess Mark (Count's Mark-Verona School Girl), whelped April 10, 1901. Bred by F. P. Butler, San Francisco.

Same owner's black, white and tan dog Detroit Joe (Joe's Count-Queen of Diamonds), whelped March 10, 1901. Bred by Louis Hillsdegen, Detroit, Mich.

T. J. Watson's (San Francisco) black, white and tan dog Clipper's Kid (Clipper W.-Dixie), whelped July 29, 1901. Bred by Dr. C. E. Wilson, Elko, Nev.

Albert Betz' (San Francisco) white and orange bitch Nita (Cavalier-Loveknot), whelped August 29, 1901. Bred by P. D. Linville, San Francisco.

T. J. A. Tiedeman's (San Francisco) black and white bitch Rhoda Wind'em (Llewellyn's Drake-Zola Montez), whelped April —, 1901. Bred by M. Watson, Victoria, B. C.

Dr. C. E. Wilson's (Elko, Nev.) black, white and tan dog Clipper's Dad (Clipper W.-Dixie Queen), whelped July 28, 1901. Bred by owner.

Same owner's black, white and tan bitch Clipper's Black Marie. Same breeding.

John W. Considine's (Seattle, Wash.) black, white and tan bitch Count's Peg (Lady's Count Gladstone-Jessie Rodsfield), whelped September 26, 1901. Bred by Dr. J. A. Bown, Chardon, Iowa.

Same owner's black, white and tan dog Count's Blackie. Same breeding.

Wm. Dormer's (San Francisco) white and lemon bitch Norine (Cavalier-Loveknot), whelped August 29, 1901. Bred by P. D. Linville, San Francisco.

L. A. Linville's (Santa Clara) white and lemon dog Plumas, (Cavalier-Loveknot), whelped August 29, 1901. Bred by P. D. Linville.

F. P. Butler's (San Francisco) white and orange dog Judge Hunter (Count's Mark-Verona School Girl), whelped April 10, 1901. Bred by owner.

POINTERS

Stockdale Kennels' (Bakersfield, Cal.), R. M. Dodge Manager, black and white bitch Midget (Cuba's Zep-Jingo's Bagpipe), whelped Nov. 1, 1901. Bred by owner.

Same owner's liver and white bitch, Seal, same breeding.

Same owner's black, white and tan bitch Margarette, same breeding.

Same owner's black and white dog Gillie, same breeding.

Same owner's liver and white bitch, unnamed, (Cuba of Kenwood-Petronella), whelped January, 22, 1902. Owner breeder.

J. W. Flynn's (San Francisco) lemon and white bitch Nellie Bang (Senator P.-Lady Belle), whelped July 9, 1901. Bred by owner.

Same owner's black and white dog Bang Up, same breeding.

W. B. Coutt's (Kenwood) liver and white dog Fleetwell (Alec C.-Whisper) whelped July 31, 1901. Bred by Tod Sloan, San Francisco, Cal.

Mt. View Kennels' (J. E. Lucas, Manager), liver and white bitch Jingoanna (Royal Jingo-Indian Girl), whelped Dec. 12, 1901. Bred by Dr. H. P. Loomis, Galena, Ill.

Bench Show Secretaries.

The American Kennel Club, through Secretary Vredenburg, has promulgated some pertinent suggestions to secretaries of clubs holding bench shows.

The announcement is not without material interest to fanciers and exhibitors; the observance of the ideas conveyed in the following paragraphs will go a long way toward avoiding complications and misunderstandings that often arise:

"With the advent of the fall shows, which will this year be more numerous than ever before, a few words of advice and warning to secretaries of shows will be timely.

By secretaries bearing in mind a few rules, which are absolutely necessary to the good government of shows, a great deal of trouble will be saved; and after-consequences disastrous, either to the exhibitor or to the show, will be avoided.

Remember that clubs are given seven full days after the closing of a show to make a report to this office of their listings. A week is considered ample time for them to send a correct and full report of every listing received.

Every club is supposed to do its own bookkeeping, so as to send correctly all entries and fees, and mistakes cannot be rectified.

Secretaries have fallen into a way of discovering that a dog has been listed, after he has been disqualified, through their own failure to send his name to this office. It is then too late. This office will not accept any supplemental report of listings.

Remember that the club secretary is the agent of the exhibitor. He is therefore responsible to the exhibitor; and the exhibitor must abide by the consequences of the act of his agent.

Another matter that is important, and must be remembered by all secretaries of clubs about to hold shows, is the necessity of applying to this office for a list of persons not in good standing.

Secretaries must remember, also, that under all circumstances duplicate galley proofs of classifications for approval must be sent to this office, as one must be kept on file here, and one returned with the certificate of approval appended.

It has been claimed that leniency should be shown to shows that are managed entirely by amateurs with no intent or desire to make money. As this would be discriminating against the regular fixtures, the A. K. C. cannot look upon the matter in this light. All shows coming under the jurisdiction of the A. K. C. must stand on the same footing.

It is well to have a thorough understanding. The rules are made for the benefit of all, and for all alike, and will be enforced without discrimination."

The English Bulldog.

The English Bulldog was the theme treated in a paper read by Mrs. C. W. Sherman before a regular meeting of the members of the Ladies Kennel Association of Massachusetts.

There is probably no dog who boasts a longer pedigree, or of which the breed has been preserved as pure as the Bulldog. The ancient Romans knew and appreciated his dauntless courage. There is little doubt that only one race of "broad mouthed dogs" existed at this time, and that the dog so-called was the progenitor of our Bulldog of to-day. These early Bulldogs, however, were of a somewhat different type, being much larger, broader in the lower jaw and longer in the upper, but always underhung; they had larger ears, lips more pendant and long tails, as they appear in paintings during the 14th, 15th and 16th centuries. Dr. Caius, in 1576, gives an excellent description of these dogs under the name of "Mastyn," or "Bando," and they were so called until bull-baiting came into favor in the reign of James I.; from this brutal sport they derive their name, Bulldog. In 1835 bull-baiting was abolished by act of Parliament, but up to about 1875, when the English Bulldog Club with its standard of points was established, the dogs were mostly owned by sporting men, and weighed from eighty to one hundred pounds, but have been bred down to their present weight, which is forty to fifty pounds. I will give only an outline of his general appearance. He impresses one at first glance with his enormous head and forequarters, short back, small hindquarters, head carried low, and the movement a rolling or slouching gait. As we examine him more closely we find that the underjaw is very broad and heavy, projecting beyond the upper one, showing the small, even lower teeth, lips and nose always black, broad cheek bones, nose rather small, set well back between the eyes and lower jaw. In addition a dog should have a deep indentation between the eyes and nose called the "stop." Eyes very dark, small, sour looking in repose, set wide apart. Ears small, fairly thin, placed well up on side of head with an inward fold and semi-erect, forming the "rose ear." Add to this plenty of wrinkle, a good "lay-back" and a heavy dewlap, and the head is complete. Shoulders and chest broad and massive, forelegs a little bowed and wide apart, big ribs, a short "roach" back, well cut up loin, hind legs apparently longer than the fore ones and medium length tail, crooked for choice, set low and carried downward. The most popular color is a rick, dark reddish brindle, though the lighter brindle, fawn or Dudley colored, or white with brindle markings are all permissible.

A few hints on their care, feeding, etc. The coat requires most attention as it quickly shows the least tendency towards poor condition. It should be short, coarse but smooth; if it begins to fall out or appear dull, the dog's general health requires attention. Eczema is one of the ills they are subject to; likewise cold and lung trouble, being very sensitive to extremes of either heat or cold. They are one of the most difficult of dogs to breed; many bitches die at time of whelping, and even when one is fortunate enough to get some puppies, few reach maturity. Diet simple, grown dogs I feed oatmeal porridge and milk in the morning; dog bread, soft bones, vegetable broth; etc., for the other two meals. Pups when first weaned, or during weaning, I feed clear milk, gradually adding oatmeal well cooked, or rice in hot weather for a change, until at two months they are thoroughly weaned. After this I vary the diet, both with fine cracker or dog bread, mashed vegetables and when I can get it, sour milk, of which all dogs are very fond.

Fre. ch-Canadian Cattle.

Since the entry of the French-Canadian cattle in the dairy tests at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo many inquiries have been made by those who did not know that there was such a breed, or that there was a registry of them. Dr. J. A. Couture, D. V. S., of Quebec, Secretary of the French-Canadian Cattle Breeders' Association, has published a pamphlet, in which he gives the history of the breed, and the claims made for these favorites of Lower Canada.

He says the French settlers who first came to Canada were natives of Brittany and Normandy, France. The first cattle in Quebec, in 1620, or thereabouts, were brought no doubt from those two districts. No importations of other breeds worth mentioning are reported in the history of the Province until about 1800 or a little before. Between 1776 and 1850, a few herds of English cattle, mostly Ayrshires and Shorthorns, were brought into the Province, but they were bought by wealthy Englishmen, residing near Montreal and Quebec, where they are still to be found.

They found but little favor with the French inhabitants in the poorer region, and the remote parts along the Laurentides and the lower part of the St. Lawrence, both north and south, as they were loth to cross their hardy little cows with the larger breeds, fearing, with good reason, that they could not feed sufficiently to keep the larger animals alive, to say nothing of profit during the seven months of the winter. Thus they have been kept nearly distinct for over 250 years, and in-and-in breeding has been resorted to to fix in a sure manner the characteristics of the breed. Thus they have much of the appearance of the Brittany cattle of to-day.

It may be noted here that the French-Canadian, the Jersey, Guernsey, Kerry and Brittany cows are all supposed to come from the same origin, and the Brittany is usually allowed to be the older stock, the different breeds being modified by climate, care and perhaps individual characteristics of animals bred from, until they vary from the 500-pound Kerry to the Guernsey, almost as large as the Shorthorn.

The three qualities claimed for the French-Canadian are hardiness, frugality and richness of milk. As in the early days of the colonies, cattle had but little shelter, they became inured to the cold climate, and the native bred stock has become adapted to it. They are greedy feeders, accepting the poorest of food, even living on poor straw, but they can enjoy better food, and give a profit in return. As they are small, the cows averaging about 700 pounds each, they do not require large amounts of food. In form they are something like the Jersey, but in color most frequently a solid black, or black with brown stripe on the back and around the muzzle, or brown with black points, brown brindle, or even yellowish. The bulls must be black, with or without the yellow stripe, as the desire is to get a uniformly black color as quickly as possible. They are very good-tempered, and while not giving as much milk in a day as a Holstein or Ayrshire, they give a good amount daily from calf to calf, often exceeding heavier milkers in the yearly product. For such small cows they have large udders and teats well apart.

Dr. Couture gives a few instances of their yields. A farmer at St. Denis, Que., who had 24 cows of this breed from May 12, 1892, to May 12, 1893, sold 63,193 pounds of milk to the cheese factory for $531.19; made 1,616 pounds of butter at home, worth $823.20; used at home 9,125 gallons of milk at 12 cents a gallon, $109.50; fattened three calves on milk, $12, and brought up six others on milk, worth $18. This was an income of $993.89, or $41.41 per cow. They ate 4,480 bundles of hay, worth $268.80, 2,240 bundles of straw, $67.20, 4,860 pounds of bran, $40.32, and pasture was called $5 per head, $120; a total expense of $496.32, or $20.68 per head, and a profit of $20.73 per head. Note that they had half as much straw as hay, no ensilage, no grain but the bran, no oil cake, and yet gave a profit greater than the cost of food.

What the cow can do under better feed Dr. Couture tells in the performance of a cow four years old that calved Aug. 23, 1892. She was milked to July 15, 1893 when due to calve again Aug. 31. In this 318 days she gave 11,310 pounds of milk or an average of 55 pounds a day. She weighed about 675 pounds. Her daily food, being kept in the stable all the time, was ten pounds of hay, five pounds of straw, twenty pounds of ensilage, two pounds of bran and two pounds cotton seed meal. This cow was bought when two years old for $15.

The average percentage of whole herds by the Babcock tests is $4\frac{1}{2}$ to $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent butter fat, sometimes running to 7 or $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent in extraordinary cases, seldom going below 4 per cent, though some have gone as low as $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Speaking of the matter in this part of the country, we say: Percentage of fat from Jersey herds, $4\frac{1}{2}$ to 6 per cent; from Ayrshire, $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 4 per cent; from French-Canadian cows, 4 to $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The above is the average percentage of the three breeds from a large number of tests in the various butter and cheese factories in this part of the country.

Dr. Couture gives records of several herds in which tests of each cow show lowest 4.35 per cent, and highest 6.40 per cent, and a herd of these cows in Portlandville, N. Y., of which four gave respectively 9.6, 8.6, 8.2 and 8.2 per cent butter fat. This herd took three medals and $325 in prizes at the Atlanta Exposition.

The registry was begun in 1886, and as they could not go back to the old country for a pedigree, the rules for admission required pure bred stock getters, if well formed and possessing good milking qualities. They are admitted only after a very strict examination. Consequently it will not be sufficient to merely show a fine bull to insure its being registered, but the antecedents of the animal, its origin and qualities must be established to the satisfaction of the commission.

The offspring of sires and dams already registered.

In order to be admitted as original stock, bulls must be at least twelve months old and heifers two years old. However, such admission as regards the latter is allowed only provisionally, and they are finally admitted upon a new examination, made after the first calving, in order to ascertain their milking qualities.

Every animal having well defined characteristic marks of a breed different from the Canadian breed is excluded.

When the Foundation Herd Book was closed, December 31, 1896, they had registered 5307 females and 922 bulls all registered on their merits after careful examination. Since that date none are admitted but animals born of registered stock.

Every hoghouse should contain a box full of charcoal. This may be secured by digging a pit in the ground, starting the fire at the bottom and as it progresses throwing in cobs and wood until it is full. When the fire is well started, cover the whole with a piece of sheet iron. The mass will be thoroughly charred in a day or two and can be taken out and used. Some feeders make a solution of twelve pounds of salt and two pounds of copperas in a pail of water and sprinkle over the charcoal until it is pretty well saturated. Hogs will remain healthy and in good condition if they are given good feed and plenty of charcoal.—American Agriculturist.

Weeding Out Cows.

A cattle buyer looking for "butcher stuff" came along the other day and offered us at the rate of $51.66 per head for three of our poorest milk cows. No sooner said than done, and the Mud Lake farm was minus three of its low-grade milkers. We reasoned out of the dairy philosophy that if it paid to get rid of the low-grade milk cows at any price it surely would pay to get rid of them at $51.66 per head, says D. A. Kent, of the Iowa dairy commission.

This is a great year to weed out the unprofitable milk cow. She is worth more for beef at present than she ever sells for as a milker. The poor milker can be sold for enough money to buy a good one in the fall. Many are taking advantage of the situation, and no doubt many more will do so ere the beef famine is broken. The only danger is that the farmers will sell their cows short and continue the shortage in butter until the good milk cow begins to perform in the price circle. The dairy cow sustains the same relation to the rest of the cattle kind in the fluctuation of prices as does real estate to stocks and bonds—last to rise and last to fall. We would advise weeding out the old dairy maids and all cows that make no profit at the pail, but we would also drop a word of warning against selling the milking herd too close. The present anomalous prices of beef are very tempting, and one is liable to let a pretty good milker go when half a hundred dollars is shaken in his face for just a common cow, in common flesh, weighing about 1,100 pounds. Such usually bring $25 or $30 for beef.

Colorado Steer Won.

One of the most important competitions at all live stock shows is the competition for the best fat steer. At the American Royal Show at Kansas City there was considerable interest over the competition this year, and there were some good steers shown, but George H. Adams won out hands down both in the Hereford class and sweepstakes. The steer with which he won was pronounced by all judges to be the perfection of beef. The steer was a pure bred Hereford, raised by Mr. Adams at his Colorado ranch and fattened at his Kansas ranch near Kansas City. It was not over fattened, but was finished beef. The same steer will be exhibited at the International show at Chicago in December, and will go into the block test there.

Value of Stubble for Feed.

With a view of determining the value of grain, weeds, grass, etc., in stubble fields, the Montana experiment station pastured 11 yearling steers, 8 heifers, 3 colts, 25 pigs and 230 lambs for periods ranging from one to six months on 112 acres which had been planted with wheat and other cereals, potatoes and other roots. During the experiment, in stormy weather the steers were fed some hay, the lambs some clover and the pigs some barley meal. The steers originally weighed 4613 pounds, and at the end of the experiment gained 447 pounds; the lambs made a gain of 2249 pounds, having weighed 11,699 pounds at the beginning of the test; the pigs made a gain of 877 pounds, weighing at first 2731 pounds. No data was kept on the other animals.

Never feed hogs with the idea that they are able to convert any and all kinds of food into good, wholesome pork. To obtain good meat it is necessary to feed those foods that will make it, and in such a manner that it will be clean and wholesome. Do not change the diet too suddenly, and especially from green to dry food. Have a clean feeding place, a tight floor is the best, and no matter what kinds of slops are fed, give daily plenty of pure, fresh water.—Western Swine Breeder.

Sheep Notes.

The ram needs to be changed every two years at least and fresh blood infused into the flock.

Those who say that sheep do not pay, never kept a paying kind or gave them the proper attention.

If you notice that your stud ram does not urinate as freely as he should, put a little rosin in his feed.

If you want good, strong lambs, feed the ewes right. You can't expect strong lambs from weak ewes.

When you buy a sheep for breeding purposes endeavor to get one that is better than the best in your flock.

Wool is a product from feeding, the same as flesh, and a flock must be well fed to produce the most wool.

A lamb that has become chilled is very likely to become constipated, especially after the warm bath treatment.

It is not good policy to feed well and give good shelter and then allow our sheep to drink ice water to cool off.

Water under foot is a great detriment to sheep growing, hence it is best to keep sheep away from low, wet pasture.

No breeder has been able to raise all good sheep even from the most distinguished sires and dams that ever lived.

Burbank's Grafting Wax.

Take one pound of tallow or raw linseed oil, two pounds of beeswax and four pounds of resin. Slowly melt all together, stir well, and when partially cool, pour into pans, which have been moistened or oiled to keep the wax from clinging too tightly to them. When thoroughly cold, break into convenient pieces.

For use it should be melted and applied carefully over all exposed cuts and open cracks around the grafts. A small paint brush is the most convenient for this purpose. It can be applied safely much warmer than can be borne by the hand, but care should be used not to have it very closely approaching the boiling point of water.

The young animal pays more than the adult because it grows and increases rapidly; the younger the animal, the lower the cost of production. A pig farrowed in early spring and marketed late in the fall will give a much larger profit than will one kept through the winter. There is also a great demand, with better prices, for a small carcass, a weight not exceeding 150 pounds being preferred to an animal that is heavier.

The red polls are certainly coming more and more into public favor, and this fact was demonstrated at a big sale in Chicago the other day. The top price for a bull was $1200 for Popular 8561, bred by Lord Amherst of Hackney, England, and imported by Mr. Hiles. J. W. Martin of Richland City, Wisconsin, paid $1075 for the imported cow Peony, bred by Lord Rothschild of England. Another cow named Popsey 3d, bred by Lord Amherst, sold for $1125.

John Sparks, who has just been elected Governor of Nevada, is one of the most extensive cattle breeders in the West. As a breeder of Herefords he has been very successful, and has won more first prizes at the fairs on this Coast than any other breeder.

Don't fail to register all your pure breeds of every breed. It will not cost much and brings big returns.

On a hot day drink Jackson's Napa Soda lemonade and be refreshed.

Light Grain Rations for Steers.

From time to time there makes its appearance a certain form of evidence on the subject of cattle feeding that completely upsets preconceived notions on the subject. Farmers of the Middle West make a practice of feeding from twenty pounds to a half bushel of corn to a fattening steer per day. There has been conducted at the Montana Station an experiment in which various quantities of grain per day were compared when fed to fattening steers. Twenty-two two year old steers were divided into three lots and were fed for a period of eighty-five days. Feeding was done in the open yard, with access to sheds for shelter.

The steers in Lot 1 averaged 978.5 pounds at the beginning of the experiment and were fed five pounds of barley meal per day per head and 15.3 pounds of clover hay; Lot 2 averaged 1034.4 pounds and consumed 6.73 pounds per day of barley meal and 19.4 pounds of clover hay; Lot 3 averaged 1135 pounds and consumed 8.9 pounds per head per day of barley meal and 19.8 pounds of clover hay. It will be seen that the amount of grain fed per day varies from 5 to 8.9 pounds. During the period of eighty-five days Lot 1 gained 2.23 pounds per head per day, Lot 2 gained 2.26 pounds and Lot 3, 2.23 pounds. The amount of food required to produce one pound of increase in the lot that received only 5 pounds of barley meal per day was 10.4 pounds, in the lot that received 6-73 pounds of barley meal per day it required 11.5 pounds of food to produce one pound of increase, while in the last lot receiving 8.9 pounds of barley meal it required 12.9 pounds of food to produce one pound of increase. Reckoning clover hay at $5 a ton and barley at ninety cents per hundred, the cost per pound increase was $4 in Lot 1, $4.81 in Lot 2 and $5.80 in Lot 3.

The above result is to some extent quite incomprehensible. It establishes the fact that clover hay might be used to a much greater advantage than is commonly the case in fattening steers. The division of the steers in this case is said by the author of the bulletin to have been made on the basis of quality rather than weight, but to our mind it almost completely annuls the value of the experiment. It seems singular that a test of this kind would be undertaken with the animals in the different lots varying so much in weight, there being almost 200 pounds difference in the average weight of the animals in Lot 1 and Lot 3. As an illustration of cheap meat production the experiment is a success, but so far as proving that better gains will be obtained from 5 pounds of meal per day than from 8.9 pounds, the results must be accepted with some degree of allowance. The conclusion of the author is that when clover is used as roughage not more than half a pound of grain to the hundred weight of live weight is necessary to produce the most satisfactory results.

The Loss by Holding.

An Ohio man has held his clip of wool for seven years and finally sold considerable of it far below what he was offered for it. Such instances are numerous enough to illustrate the folly of holding products from year to year in hope of securing higher prices for them, remarks National Stockman. Better take a fair price when offered than to hang on for something beyond the market or its immediate probabilities. The man who held his wool seven years lost at least 25 per cent of the selling price on his longest held wool in interest alone. There is a big difference between idle wool and busy money that should not be overlooked when the holding proposition is under advisement.

Those who are opposed to the idea of early breeding of heifers should look at the record of Calamity Jane 3d, which at one year and ten months gave in seven days 294½ pounds of milk, with butter fat equal to ten pounds 4.6 ounces of butter.

A sister, three-years old, Calamity Jane 2d, gave in seven days 441.3 pounds of milk, with butter fat equal to nineteen pounds 5.6 ounces of butter. Still another sister, Calamity Jane's Pauline, at three years old gave 67.45 pounds of milk in one day and 434.35 pounds in seven days, with butter fat equal to 17.35 pounds of butter in a week. These three year old records were made with the second calf, and both were from heifers that dropped their first calves at about two years or less. That does not look as if early breeding had injured them much.

Milking the Cow.

The farm hand who knows how to milk properly is more valuable to the careful dairyman than any other help.

To milk a cow requires time and patience. The milk should be drawn slowly and steadily. Some cows have very tender teats and if you want a well-disposed cow, be gentle in your treatment toward her. A good cow is naturally impatient and does not like rough handling.

With constant irritation any cow will fail in quantity of milk.

As the udder becomes filled with milk she is anxious to be relieved of its contents and will seldom offer resistance without a cause.

When a patient cow becomes fractious we can always trace it to the milker. Make a note of this.

We should not allow them to stand a long time waiting to be milked.

When cows give a large quantity of milk it is very painful when the udder has filled to the utmost, therefore causing them to become very nervous and restless.

To delay milking at the proper time will do more to cause a cow to go dry before her period than anything else. She should be milked to the last drop if possible, for the last portion of the milk is the richest.—Ex.

When breeders of any particular type of cattle are ready to confess that there may be poor and unworthy individuals born into the world in spite of breed or breeding and are ready to consign such animals to slaughter regardless of their pedigree or the eminence of ancestry, then that particular breed will begin to improve in quality and popularity with marvelous rapidity. This is a fact that is now being recognized by all first-class bleeders of cattle in this country and the consequence is an improvement that now makes a show of such cattle in the United States as high in standard in all respects as can be found in the world. Only a few years ago any quantity of pedigreed scrubs could have been found all over the range country, in fact they were in the majority in many if not most herds; but now their number is very much smaller and in many herds can not be found at all. Every breeder who is worthy of the name now mercilessly slaughters in infancy every unworthy son or daughter of illustrious ancestry, or at least sees to it that such animals are not permitted to engage in reproduction.

ANNOUNCING THE RESULT.

From every test and trial by veterinary surgeon alongside of every remedy made, on sores, skin diseases and chronic scratches declared incurable, and as with one voice the verdict comes back.

VETERINARY PIXINE

Cured a galled shoulder on my horse that had been there for a year and I had tried everything that I could hear of to heal it. I can recommend it for all sores.

S. C. CODDARD, Petersham, Mass.

You have the best thing on earth for sores. Do you want to give me the agency for county? Think I can sell some. T. E. LINDLEY, Oak Grove Farm, Eastville, Va.

I have used nearly every preparation on the market and several private formulas, but during my experience I have never used anything equal to Veterinary Pixine for speed cracks and scratches. A. L. THOMAS, Parkville, L. I.

Its penetrating, soothing, antiseptic healing power is unailing and permanent. 2-oz., 25c.; 8-oz., 50c.; 5-lb. pkg., $4. At all Druggists and Dealers, or sent prepaid.

"SAVE-THE-HORSE"

—TRADE MARK—

SPAVIN CURE

NEVER IN THE HISTORY

of achievements in physiological and scientific chemistry has anything been discovered capable of producing such wonderful results as "Save-the-Horse" Spavin Cure.

In the face of deep-seated prejudice and scepticism, at first considered an improbable and expensive experiment, no preparation ever made so marvelous a record in such a short time.

The fire iron is uncertain at the best, and invariably only aggravates the disease or injury; blistering is less effective than the fire iron, and both necessitate laying up the horse from four weeks to two months; arsenic, mercurial and poisonous compounds produce irreparable injury.

"Save-the-Horse" eliminates all these factors. Horse can be worked continuously.

It can be applied at any time, anywhere, any place, and in all conditions and extremes of weather—hot or cold. And no matter what the age, condition or development of the case or previous failures in treating, the concentrated, penetrating absorbing power of this remedy is unfailing, and no case can withstand the force of its action, whether a BONE OR BOG SPAVIN, RINGBONE, CURB THOROUGHPIN, SPLINT, CAPPED HOCK, SHOE BOIL, WIND PUFF, WEAK OR STRAINED TENDONS OR LAMENESS.

It cures without scar, blemish or loss of hair.

$5.00 PER BOTTLE.

Written guarantee with every bottle, constructed solely to convince, satisfy and protect you fully. We know positively "Save-the-Horse" will absolutely and permanently cure, and for that reason guarantee is made all your way.

The need of second bottle is almost improbable except in rarest cases. Guarantee covers effectiveness of one bottle.

IF YOU ARE IN DOUBT WRITE US.

We will advise you frankly as to the possibility of the remedy effecting a cure. Give explicit particulars. Give the veterinarian's diagnosis, if you know he is competent. Inform us fully as to the age, development, location of swelling, lameness, action and previous treatment.

Copy of Guarantee sent upon application.

$5 a bottle at all Dealers' and Druggists', or sent prepaid by the manufacturers.

ENTRANCE and PAYMENTS—$3 to nominate mare on December 1, 1902, when name, color, description of mare and stallion bred to must be given. $5 April 1, 1903. $5 October 1, 1903. $10 on yearlings April 1, 1904. $10 on two year olds April 1, 1905. $10 on three year olds April 1, 1906.

STARTING PAYMENTS—$25 to start in the two year old pace. $35 to start in the two year old trot. $35 to start in the three year old pace. $50 to start in the three year old trot. All starting payments to be made in ten days before the first day of the meeting at which the race is to take place.

Nominators must designate when making payments to start whether the horse entered is a trotter or pacer.

Colts that start at two years old are not barred from starting again in the Three Year Old Divisions.

CONDITIONS.

The races for two year olds will be mile heats (2 in 3) and for three year olds mile heats (3 in 5). Distance for two year olds, 150 yards; for three year olds, 100 yards.

If a mare proves barren, or slips, or has a dead foal or twins, or if either the mare or foal dies before April 1, 1904, her nominator may transfer his nomination or substitute another mare and foal regardless of ownership; but there will be no return of a payment, nor will any entry be liable for more than amount paid in or contracted for. In entries the name, color and pedigree of mare must be given, also the name of the horse to which she was bred in 1902.

Entries must be accompanied by the entrance fee.

Should the amount of entrance money received be in excess of the amount of the stakes, the excess will be added, less the cost of advertising, to the stakes for the three year old divisions in proportion to the amount offered for each division.

Nominators liable only for amounts paid in. Failure to make any payment forfeits all previous payments. Hopples will not be barred in pacing races.

Right reserved to declare off or reopen these stakes in case the number of entries received is not satisfactory to the Board of Directors.

Money divided in each division of the stake 50, 25, 15 and 10 per cent.

There will be no more moneys in any division than there are starters.

ENTRIES OPEN TO THE WORLD; MEMBERSHIP IN THE ASSOCIATION NOT REQUIRED TO ENTER, but no horse owned in the State of California will be allowed to start until the owner has become a member. Horses owned outside of the State of California are eligible to start regardless of membership.

Start a Class. Money in It. Be Your Own Taxidermist.

Naturalists, Collectors, Gunners, Anglers, Outers, Boys, Girls, and all others interested in nature and anxious to preserve the specimens taken in wood and field, have all felt the need of a simple method of preservation, which is free from intricacies and inexpensive.

There is a method of rapid taxidermy now in extensive use, which meets the requirements of all amateurs who wish a practical and inexpensive method of preserving the trophies of the outing and collecting trip. This is not the old system of so-called stuffing, so expensive, laborious and disappointing, but is a rapid system, which anyone can learn at once and which is guaranteed to give satisfaction.

By this process you may preserve the beautiful plumage of the grouse and woodcock, or the pike's or buck's head, or the showy feathers of the tanager. Boys, girls and all others can do good work and may make money, as mounted heads and birds find a ready sale, and besides you may teach your friends and decorate the school-room, office and dining-room with native birds and other attractions. If you are in doubt, then get your friends to go in with you and start a class, for when several work together there is an advantage and the expense is next to nothing. Instructions for mounting birds, heads, mammals, etc., and all materials for mounting and preserving specimens—including prepared compound, together with full directions for dressing skins with the hair on for rugs and robes, so that you will not be to the expense of one cent.

Remember, I Guarantee Satisfaction or Money Refunded.

Altamont is Dead.

A letter from J. W. Marshall to the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, dated Binghamton, Cal., November 13th, brings the news of the death that morning of old Altamont 3600, one of the greatest sires of speed, according to his opportunities, that ever lived. He died from old age, having been foaled in 1875. It was in the spring of 1877 that Mr. Jay Beach, of Fort Klamath, Oregon, desirous of securing a good stallion for his farm, journeyed to Lexington, Kentucky, and purchased from Gen. Withers, of the famous Fairlawn Stock Farm, a two year old bay colt by Almont 33, and brought him home. The trip from Kentucky required twenty-one days, and the colt stood on his feet in his car all that time until he reached the then terminus of the road which was at Redding, Cal., but his iron legs showed no sign of the test to which they had been put. Taken from the cars he was only rested a day or two and then taken over 250 miles of rough road to Fort Klamath, where he was pretty nearly buried, so far as opportunity at the stud was concerned, but he rose above his surroundings and soon established a family that is one of the great ones among standard bred horses. He was broken as a three year old and could trot in about 2:40. That year he was bred to Minnie Rife that was by a Canadian horse called Lion Heart, and the next year she foaled the colt Moorokus, that afterwards became the sire of Klamath 2:07½.

Altamont was first started in a race at Yreka, Cal., when five years old, winning his race and getting a record of 2:44. In March, 1885, he made his present record of 2:26½, to a wagon weighing 115 pounds. He had then trotted twenty races, winning seventeen of them and getting second place in the others. He trotted some other races that season when out of condition without adding to his credit as a trotter. He was always a remarkably level-headed horse, and while trotting in California during the one winter that he was kept here, earned the sobriquet of the "bull dog" from his endurance and determination. Many competent men, the late John Goldsmith among the number, have expressed the opinion that with professional training Altamont would have made a very great trotter.

In the fall of 1883 Mr. Beach moved to Dilly, Or., and three years later to Vancouver, Wash., where Altamont's career may be said to have really begun with the season of 1887.

His name first appeared in the Great Table in the Year Book of 1888, when two trotters with records of 2:29½ were credited to him. His list gradually grew, however, and at present he is credited with fifty standard performers, of which seven are in the 2:10 list. He also has about a dozen producing sons and nearly as many producing daughters. During the past few years he has been kept in California and mated with quite a number of choice mares, although his increasing age necessitated the number of mares being quite limited. Altamont's get are noted for their handsome racy appearance, attributable no doubt to the very strong infusion of thoroughbred blood in his veins. His dam Sue Ford, that has a place in the table of Great Brood Mares by reason of her being the dam of three producing sons, was by Brown Chief out of a thoroughbred mare by imported Hooton.

The most noted of Altamont's get are Chehalis 2:04½, holder of the world's champion two mile record for pacers of 4:19½, Del Norte 2:08, Ella T. 2:08½, Doc Sperry 2:09, Pathmont 2:09½, and the trotters Alameda 2:09½ and Atlas 2:09½.

Altamont died the property of J. M. Nelson, the Alameda trainer who is now east, he having purchased him from Mr. Jay Beach a few years ago. On Mr. Nelson's departure he sent Altamont to Mr. J. W. Marshall's farm at Binghamton to be cared for, and the old horse looked then as if he might live through another season. We understand that several mares bred to him last spring are known to be with foal.

The Westchester Racing Association advertises the closing of entries for the Seventh National Stallion Race to which $5000 is added, and the Seventh Matron to which $10,000 is added. The first named is to be run for by then two year olds in the spring of 1904, and the Matron Stake will be run for by then two year olds during the autumn of 1905. Entries will close for both events at midnight, Tuesday, December 9, 1902. Read the conditions of these two great stakes and make entries in both.

Direct Sal.

The comedy feature of the great Memphis meeting each year is the Transylvania, a mule race in which the mules are driven by professional drivers. It was won this year by Ed Giers whose candidate was called Direct Sal and this is the way "Trotwood" of the Horse Review makes "Old Wash" tell the story of the race:

Dar, nigger, jes' look at me; does you see yo' Uncle Wash? He's been down to de Memphis track an' foct 'em home, b'gosh—Er plug hat an' er razzar an' er pocket full er plunks. An' he won 'em by abackin' of a mule dat never flunks. Dar was Sister Dooley, Smooth Goods, an' Willie Will You Pace The Bazoo, Cousin Mud an' good ole Afterdavit Face, But I trained de muel dat trimmed 'em, for her dam she was a Hal; Marse Ed he dun de drivin' an' I named her Direct Sal! I got 'er down in Maugy an' her nat'ul gate was pace, (When she wasn't kickin' kindlin' from de rafters on the place!) I had a time er swadin' her to trot—I tell you straight—I had to break her hin' legs, boss, 'fore I cu'd break her gait! I trained her in de moonlight, an' I timed her by de stars—De Process-shun ob de Equinox, de Dipper an' de B'ars—I tuck her dar an' backed her from my coon dorg to my gal—I might nigh busted Bittin's when we won wid Direct Sal!

How did I do it? Dar now—dar am tricks in eb'ry trade. (It takes a sucker all his life to larn a spade's a spade.) Er muel is mighty cu'is—jes' lak sum fo'ks I know—Ef dey heah a jackass brayin' dey gwine stop an' answer, sho! So I stuffed her years wid cotton an' I sealed 'em up wid wax; An' when dey rounded in de stretch I brayed lak forty jacks. T'wus all ober but de shoutin'—Marse Ed he was my pal. Eb'ry muel he stopped an' answered—all 'ceptin' Direct Sal! So nigger, jes' look at me—does you see yo' Uncle Wash? He's been down to de Memphis track an' foct 'em home, b'gosh! Er plug hat an' er razzar an' er nuff fur winter fuel, An' he won it jes' fur knowin' 'bout de wuckin's of a muel!

Another Monroe S.

The statement was recently made in this and other journals that the sixteen year old pacer Monroe S. 2:20 by Monroe Chief had reduced his record to 2:16½, up at Boise, Idaho, this year in a race. By a letter from Mr. J. A. Richardson, of Boise, we now learn that a mistake has been made and that the horse Monroe S. that raced up north this year is not the old bay son of Monroe Chief, but is the chestnut gelding by Dictator Wilkes that Monroe Salisbury sold to Mr. C. J. Crabtree of Salt Lake last spring. The horse was one of the lot raised by Mr. Shippee of this state and taken to Salt Lake by Mr. Salisbury. Mr. Crabtree, doubtless unaware that there was another pacer with a record, that was known as Monroe S. named this chestnut fellow in compliment to "the kingmaker," raced him and afterwards sold him to Mr. Richardson. The breeding of this gelding is as follows: Sire, Dictator Wilkes, dam Hezzie T. by Hawthorne, second dam by Daniel Lambert, third dam by Tie Boy son of Blackhawk 5. This horse is a dark chestnut gelding with white strip in his face, left hind foot white. He weighs about 1000 pounds.

Mr. Richardson need have no fear that Mr. Crabtree has sold him a horse that has been started out of his class. The gelding Monroe S. 2:16½ by Dictator Wilkes is an entirely different horse from the bay stallion Monroe S. 2:20, and it is only another case where a similarity of names has led to a misunderstanding as to the identity of a horse.

The Horse's Ears.

Our experience in judging horses has led us to regard the ear with much care, as its attitude and movements indicate quite a variety of conditions. Horses whose ears are ever restless, without apparent cause, are frequently ultra-nervous creatures, well worth watching. Again, the restless ear will sometimes point to defective eyesight, which may be accompanied with partial or total loss of vision, while animals which throw them closely back upon the poll are often inclined to nip or bite. Indeed, this very attitude is frequently a signal for combat.

On the other hand, horses whose ears are kept nearly in the same position most of the time are more than likely to be dull, stupid creatures, if they are not totally deaf. Deafness in horses is not a common thing, though we occasionally meet with cases in which the animal's attention cannot be attracted by sound.

The ear of the horse is not only a partial index to the animal's character as far as vice and docility are concerned, but its movements will at times sound the keynote of danger, and warn us to be on the alert.

It may be well to say at this point that the part we call the ear has nothing to do with the function of hearing; it is simply an appendage, one of the duties of which is to collect waves of sound as they pass through the air, and direct them to the internal ear, where the essential organs of hearing are to be found; hence its mobility.—W. M. T. in the Agricultural World.

Dan Patch is a tremendously long striding horse. Actual measurement at Memphis showed his stride at top speed to be 20 feet 9 inches.

Small Stallions for the Philippines.

FORESTRY BUREAU, MANILA, P. I., Oct. 8, 1902.

BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN—Will you be kind enough to publish the following for the undersigned subscriber who is desirous of securing reliable information concerning the breeding of pony mares to stallions from about 14½ hands up. The six years of war and pestilence in these islands has left us with very few native ponies and the number is decreasing.

No regular breeding has been carried on during this period, nor at any time in the history of these islands, and the colts are as a rule catch colts. Owing to the scarcity of native ponies people are driving and using two and three year old colts and fillies. The result of this is easily foreseen.

I wish to introduce during the coming year some American blood that will build up the breed to a more useful size. The native pony, for his size, is a marvel of grit and endurance, his shape is often very fine and on the race track he can reel off a half mile close to one minute. Some day we hope to raise a half breed pony that will surprise the sports at the track by a half mile performance in say 55 seconds and also raise a pony that can trot better than 2:50.

After following in the newspapers the fortunes of that game little gelding "Little Tobe" (by Pamlico out of a pony mare) I feel certain that a very lucrative business and much sport will be open to the man who begins the business of raising a better stock of horses for these islands. The American horse seems too big for the tropics; the ideal size seems nearer 13½ to 14 hands. The Filipino pony averages a little less than 12 hands in height. We have many mares 12½ hands in height, and my question for your readers experienced in pony breeding is what size stallion would be safe to use with mares 12 to 12½ hands in height? My own belief is that anything over 15 hands is risky and that a better size would be nearer 14 hands, if such a stallion can be secured. I wish to begin with a trotting stallion and felt that on many stock farms in the United States colts by fine sires were born which for some reason fail to grow to much size; such colts are not kept for breeding purposes and would be exactly what we need here.

Up to the present it has been impossible to secure transportation for horses to Manila on a government transport. However, this permission is looked for in the near future. Mr. Chris Hilbert at No. 213 Market street, San Francisco, has kindly interested himself in this matter and when possible will ship a desirable horse to me.

The Filipinos love a horse race, are willing to pay handsomely for a pair of fast roadsters, and I will state without any hesitation that the first team of native horses that can show a three minute gait will sell for a very fancy figure. Native mares can be bought from $30 to $50 gold. There are several good mares now in town that ran well on the track but have been retired and will make good broodmares.

The homestead law will give to each resident the right to locate about forty acres of public land.

There are some fine tracts of grazing land in the islands and on some small islands almost ideal conditions for a stock farm are found. Plenty of water, grass and fine soil capable of raising anything are to be had.

Hoping that some of your readers may throw some light on the question of breeding mentioned above, believe me,

Very respectfully,

GEORGE P. AHERN,
Captain 9th U. S. Infantry, Chief of Forestry Bureau.

A Business Proposition.

The statement was made in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN last week that a gentleman here was looking for a trotter eligible to the 2:25 class that could step a mile in 2:15, and was willing to pay $2000 for one of that kind, but that owners wanted him to take their word for the trotter's deed.

Mr. John A. Cole, of Victor, San Bernardino county, after reading the above statement, wrote to this paper and made the following proposition:

"I have a mare, five years old, well bred, that I will undertake to show a full mile with in 2:15 or 2:16, for a person who will put up $2500 for her if she makes the performance as indicated above. If she goes in 2:12 or 2:13 the price to be $3000. She is a square trotter and has no record."

Now, this is a square business proposition made in a business way, and we do not doubt in the least but Mr. Cole will be able to sell his mare within a short time to some horseman who is looking for just such a trotter. Nearly every buyer now wants to be shown the speed and this Mr. Cole unhesitatingly proposes to do.

Anaconda is to be sold at the Old Glory sale next week.

What Is a Good Stallion?

Mr. Carruthers, owner of Advance Guard, is reported as having said that his horse might be valuable in the stud, though not of the blood most fashionable at this time. That, in my opinion, is where he does himself and his horse an injustice, writes T. C. P. in Rider and Driver. I have no doubt it is all due to the excellent modesty which the author of "The Unspeakable Scot" attributes to men born north of the Tweed! The fact is that Advance Guard does represent the fashionable blood of the day, the blood which is in the make-up of St. Simon, the premier sire of the world. His sire, Great Tom, was got by King Tom, son of the indomitable Irish horse Harkaway, and of Pocahontas, than whom is no better ancestress in the stud book. Great Tom, from a breeder's point of view, was exactly the horse to bring over to America. Of commanding size and of the very stoutest lineage, tracing in direct male line to Eclipse, uniting with his sire's blood first a strain of Voltigeur (Derby and Leger), then of Venison (sire of Kingston) and next of Camel (sire of Touchstone), it was gilding refined gold to have as his fifth dam Manuella, the famous daughter of the famous Mandane. There is no tap-root of purer and more undeniable excellence. The dam of the big white-legged chestnut who has come so triumphantly through a season's campaigning that has been fatal to some of his most dangerous rivals, is Nellie Van, once known as Edgefield, and it is from her, no doubt, that he gets a set of wear-and-tear legs, that it is most desirable for any modern studmaster to see perpetuated and imparted to his young stock. Fast horses that do not stand up may transmit speed, but with greater certainty their get will inherit the tendency to break down.

Campaigners like Barnum, Logan and Nellie Van must have had the right sort of tendons, and if such tendons can only be transmitted no sensible man will throw away the chance. Speed, with the probability that a horse's three-year-old career is his best, with the certainty of anxious days for the owner and sleepless nights for the trainer, is sometimes a vexatious boon. Legs are too seldom considered; and the right to inherit wear-and-tear legs is a most useful additional encouragement to the expert buyer of yearlings, who can see with his eyes no sign of weakness or malformation in the colt he fancies. The best-looking legs fail, and the worst-looking sometimes keep going. A colt's claim by right of parentage to stand up till the letter "a" stands against his name on the correct card should be 30 per cent added to his apparent value. Therefore I would prefer yearlings got by an iron horse, out of an iron mare; for it seems to me only common sense to do so. Yet, look at the flash yearlings got by so-called fashionable stallions, and note the very small percentage of them that reach the post as four-year-olds. My recommendation to any young man is to study legs and know what he is at before he bids thousands at the ring side. He should judge action as well as legs, but the buyer has no chance to see that at ordinary auction sales; yet any old racegoer who has studied the game and learned his lesson by experience is aware that buying a colt that you have never seen gallop is—provided you are a judge—a wilful case of "buying a pig in a poke." As things are done, the buyer buys on size, condition and pedigree; he has no chance to see the colt's action, and very little chance to judge his legs. Therefore would I bid on the get of a horse like Advance Guard, rather than on the get of the most brilliant meteor that has dazzled the turf for a season and then disappeared into the stud. If his pedigree is as good as his performances, then we have the ne plus ultra.

I am making Advance Guard—a horse I have only seen once in his life, and then he was beaten by Gold Heels in the worst-riden finish I ever saw on a race course—the text for a general preachment and by no means wishing to advertise him in a commercial sense. His performances are before the public. His owner has rather belittled his pedigree. A word more on that, then. As I have said, he shares with St. Simon, through his sire, near relationship to King Tom, Voltigeur and Irish Birdcatcher, the principal factors in the English stallion's make-up. In America it ranks as an item in his favor that Great Tom's fifth dam is Manuella, that wonderful mare who contributed fifteen foals to the then comparatively small family of Anglo-Arab thoroughbreds. She was the dam of imp. Belshazzar and of Panthea, the dam of imp. Albion; while her dam Mandane produced Brutandorf, who in his turn got Hetman Platoff; and these are all names figuring in the very highest circles of turf society. In fact, if Advance Guard fails on his iron dam's side to show a very extended genealogy, he is able to bank on the fact that no horse in the world has a longer pedigree table than Great Tom, who won as a three year old and four year old, and of whom it is told that when he came snorting and prancing down the gang-plank from the vessel in which he came out, an Irishman working at the dock cried out: "Begorra, he reminds me of old Harkaway, and many's the race I saw him win in Ireland!" More conclusive testimony of the horse's likeness to his celebrated grandsire could not be adduced.

Coming to the dam of Advance Guard (who started 45 times in 1886) over and above her campaigning qualities, she has a right to boast of her lineage, be it long or short by the book. Her sire, Enquirer, was the best race horse of his day and equally successful at the stud. He was a son of imp. Leamington, a double winner of the Chester Cup and of other races and no doubt the most important of all stallions brought to America. Leamington was by Faugh-a-ballagh (St. Leger), own brother to Irish Birdcatcher, and therefore Advance Guard can claim the three great Irish horses, Harkaway, Birdcatcher and Faugh-a-ballagh for ancestors.

A cross of Lexington comes with Enquirer, and a second through Nellie Van's dam, Orphan Girl, who was by Muggins, a grandson of imp. Glencoe. Orphan Girl's dam was by Wagner, a great race horse and sire; her grandam was the Stockholder mare, and her great grandam was Black Sophia, of whom Colonel Bruce says, "She was one of the best broodmares in America." It is useless to enter into the disputes over her pedigree. She may be admitted "short" or it may be conceded that she runs "to the woods." But we here in Canada have to be thankful to her for producing Birmingham, whose daughter Country-maid was a very tower of strength on our early race courses and whose sons and daughters were among the toughest and most enduring progenitors of the ordinary Canadian saddle horse.

No horse's success in the stud can be assured; but Advance Guard's is as probable as that of any horse I have known in the last half century.

Breeding of Monte Carlo.

CHICO, Nov. 16, 1902.

ED. BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN—Dear Sir: As I was looking over your last paper to which I am a subscriber, I noticed you gave the breeding of Monte Carlo 2:09½ as being by Mendocino which is correct, but as I bred, raised and trained him until he was 3 years old and past, also his dam for F. C. Lusk of Chico, Cal., I thought I would send you the correct breeding of his dam which is now dead.

She was a black mare called Jane, bred by John Boggs of Colusa, she was by Tilton Almont, her first dam was Kate Fisher (2 year old record of 2:56) by Norwood, second dam Ema Turner by Geo. M. Patchen, Jr., third dam Kate Hayes 2:36, by Blood's Blackhawk. The Norwood which I mention as being the sire of his grandam was by Speedwell Hambletonian, first dam Lady Wells by Gen. Knox, second dam Lady Harding a Morgan mare. Speedwell Hambletonian was by Rysdyk's Hambletonian, Gen. Knox by Vermont Hero. We have now at our ranch two half sisters of Monte Carlo one by Monroe Chief the other by Kentucky Baron by Baron Wilkes which are both in foal. Hoping this may interest some of your readers I remain,

Yours sincerely,

L. B. DANIELS.

[The breeding we gave of Monte Carlo is just as it is given in volume 16 of Wallace's Year Book and it is there recorded on page 356, that his dam is "Maud Merrill 2:18 by Antevolo 7648; grandam Belle A. 2:29 (dam of Clarence Wilkes 2:28½) by Tilton Almont 1583." If Mr. Daniels or Mr. Lusk bred this mare, they should lose no time in sending the necessary affidavits on to Mr. J. H. Steiner, Secretary of the American Trotting Register Association that the statement in volume 16 may be corrected in volume 18 which will be published early in the new year.—ED. BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.]

Answers to Correspondents.

G. S., Oakland—Please let me know through your paper the breeding of Princewood on the dam's side. He is the horse that died at Woodland, I believe, some years ago during the races. I think he had trotted in about 2:16.

Answer—Princewood 2:16 was a black gelding by Dexter Prince, dam Clyde (dam also of Chloe 2:19½ and Dexter Thorne 2:23) by Hawthorne, second dam by Chieftain 721, third dam by Odd Fellow. Clyde is registered in volume 13 of the American Trotting Register.

One of the most interesting features in a bill introduced in the Georgia Legislature recently is the taxing of pool-sellers and of midways to an extent which, if approved by the Legislature and made a law, will probably do away with both of these attractions at State and Interstate fairs. The bill puts a special tax of $1,000 a year on all pool-sellers, whether on horse races or bicycle races or races between bicycle riders and horses. As pool-selling is regarded as an essential feature of horse races, the passage of such a law might seriously interfere with horse racing at fairs or otherwise in Georgia.

Something About Lord Derby.

It seems to be an impossibility to write anything about the doings of the amateurs and their horses without offering a few words concerning Lord Derby, winner of the first race for the Memphis gold cup, the most costly and handsomest trophy yet offered for amateur drivers. Every now and then Lord Derby does something that causes all the tongues in the horse world to wig-wag with a vengeance for days. Then he will about face and do something to make the tongue-waggers think he is as cheap as a tin medal. To-day he is the coming champion trotter. To-morrow he is a 2:06 trotter and nothing more. Based on his recent performances, the truth about him is that he is a two-minute trotter for three-quarters of a mile. Carried along to the quarter at a 2:16 gait, he can make Prince Alert or Dan Patch tired before the wire is reached. Hurried along from the word to the wire, he will put in heat after heat in 2:06 or thereabouts. In his race for the gold cup he had the pole for the second heat, and went to a break a few yards from the wire. When he settled The Monk was over a dozen lengths in the lead and going good. Derby settled at the eighth and trotted the first quarter in 35 seconds. As he won the heat in 2:07½, no ability at figures is required to ascertain the rate of speed at which he traveled the last three-quarters. He fairly flew, and that is all there is to it. But if the horse in front of him had been Cresceus there would have been no opportunity for that phenomenal burst of speed to get the best of the argument. Later in the week Spear drove the horse twice in one day to beat 2:02½ and each time the best he could do was 2:06½. Geers, who drove the pacemaker, says that Derby tried all the way.

And that brings up the interesting question that has been discussed so much this year: "Can any other person get within seconds of as much speed out of the horse as can his owner?" Spear is a most excellent trainer and a good race driver. But Mr. Smathers can take Lord Derby and make George look like an apprentice. He can not do it with any other horse in the stable, though, which only serves to prove that Derby and his owner hook up well together, and that he will, and does, trot better and try harder for his owner. Be that as it may, it will be hard to convince scores of capable judges that Derby has a remote chance to defeat Cresceus, both right. They will never meet, of course, for it is a safe guess that this will be the last year on the turf for the champion. Nature can stand about so much, and when you hear that Ketcham's mighty trotter, the greatest the world has ever seen, has come to the end of his trotting days—well, you will hear it before another season opens. It is to be regretted that he and Derby were not matched this year. There would, there could, have been but one result—a victory for the stallion—but it would have convinced at least a few people that the vast majority is right in its belief that Cresceus is in a class by himself, and that Lord Derby, great as he is, can only be classed as a 2:06 trotter, and that he can come as near trotting to his best record with a break in the mile as with none. A more peculiar trotter was never developed, and that he should become one of the very best of "fun" horses almost passes understanding.—Coast and Saddle.

Wild Horses of Thibet.

Captain Heber Percy gives the following account of the Kyang, or wild horses of Thibet: "The Kyang was doubtless originally intended by Providence to fulfill some good purpose, but having turned out a failure was located in Thibet, where it was probably considered it would not be much in the way.

"The Kyang has nothing to excuse or recommend it; it is an ugly, donkeyfied, fiddle headed brute with straight shoulders; in color it is a mealy bay with a dark brown hog mane, dorsal stripe and tail. Its head and ears are coarse and large, and its screeching bray is as unpleasant as its general appearance. Being absolutely worthless to shoot it is always trading upon that fact, and on the utterly false pretense that it is deeply interested in human beings, particularly Europeans, it is forever thrusting itself into society where it is not welcome, thereby spoiling the sportsman's chance of shooting the animal he wants, the shapoo or wild sheep.

"As soon as it thinks it has got a sportsman's temper thoroughly roused, it will scour the country round for all its friends and relations and assemble them to enjoy together the interesting spectacle of an angry man armed with a rifle which he dare not discharge at them for fear of alarming something worth firing at (the wild sheep)."

A lot of McMurray carts just received. You need one right now to work your colts in this winter. Call at the Kenney Manufacturing Company, 531 Valencia street and take a look at these carts and other first-class vehicles they have for sale.

Notes and News.

John A. McKerron 2:05½ is the fastest trotter of the Wilkes family.

Orrin Hickok is failing fast and is not expected to live through the winter.

Baron Wilkes is the greatest living sire of 2:10 performers. He has nine in that exclusive list.

Eighty-five per cent of the mares sent to the court of Directum 2:05½ this year are surely in foal.

Carl Wilkes now carries a record of 2:04½ as a result of winning that mile and an eighth heat at Memphis.

Scott Hudson says that if Chase does not equal the championship record next season he will set the son of Keeler to pacing.

During the past season 146 horses have made new trotting records of 2:15 or better. The fastest of these is John A. McKerron.

The pacing game is not an easy one. At Memphis Prince Direct went a mile in 2:05½ and then four horses finished ahead of him.

Andy McDowell is now training the stable of Mrs. Polly McPhee-Seager, in Vienna, and threatens to stay in Austria indefinitely.

Dr. C. Masoero claims the name "Rubina" for his bay filly foaled April 17, 1902, by McKinney 2:11½, dam La Moscovita by Guy Wilkes.

A good timer caught Prince Alert in 13 seconds from the three-quarter to the seven-furlong post in his dash against Sir Albert S. at Memphis.

It is doubtful if Dan Patch, the champion pacer, will come to Pleasanton after all. Rumor has it that he will be wintered with Dick Benson at Kansas City.

Ten important buyers being interviewed at the Union Stock Yards, Chicago, all agreed that draft horses with weight and quality never were as scarce nor as high in price as now.

Twenty head of aged horses and youngsters have been sent from the Village Farm to Geers to be wintered at Memphis. James Butler, of East View Farm, has also sent Mr. Geers ten head, all by Direct 2:05½.

Henry Titer, trainer for J. Malcolm Forbes, of Boston, says the youngsters by Arion 2:07½, in Kentucky, are about the finest in the land. An offer of $2,000 has been refused for one of them, a weanling.

Mattie H. 2:21½, the filly that was only beaten a head in 2:18 in the two year old pacing futurity at Lexington, is out of Mattie Marco 2:25, by Monaco 2:29½; grandam, the old-time pacing queen Mattie Hunter 2:12½.

Monroe Salisbury has returned from his trip East with his fast gelding, Monte Carlo 2:09½. This son of Mendocino was one of the best trotters seen over East this year, and Mr. Salisbury was offered $12,500 for him at Memphis.

The stallion Keeler 2:13½ by King Rene, a son of Belmont is not only the sire of Chase 2:07½, the champion green trotter, but also sired Onoqua 2:08½, Nelly Brace 2:19½, and the pacer Tonita F. 2:11½, McClenahan 2:16½, and Dan Sapp 2:24½.

Those who have recently seen Dan Patch, 1:59½, state that he shows less wear and tear than any other of the great harness performers that has been continually tilting against the record and going extraordinarily fast miles.

J. D. ("Lafe") Shaffer, who has trained the Terrace Farm horses of J. C. McKinney, Titusville, Pa., for several seasons past, including Terrace Queen 2:06, Zephyr (4) 2:11½, Beauseant 2:12½, will be E. F. Geers' second trainer next season.

Alta McDonald tried to match Major Delmar 2:05½ against E. E. Smathers' Lord Derby 2:05½ at Memphis, but the latter gentleman declined. McDonald proposed to make the sum per side suitable to Mr. Smathers, also the time of race and the conditions.

Czarina 2:13½ by Dexter Prince, and Venus 2d 2:11½ by Cupid, arrived home at Mr. Spreckels' Aptos Farm this week, having come through safely from George Ketcham's farm, at Toledo, Ohio, where both were bred to Cresceus 2:02½ in the spring. They are both certainly with foal.

Geo. A. Bain, the Kentucky auctioneer who has officiated at so many of the big auction sales at New York and elsewhere, has kept a careful record of the horses sold by him from November 1, 1901, to November 1, 1902, and finds that the sum total received for 3437 horses is $1,079,630, an average of $314 per head.

Nutwood still heads the list of sires of 2:30 performers with 176 to his credit. Onward comes next with 173, followed by Red Wilkes with 170, and after him Electioneer with 167. There are 165 trotters among Electioneer's list, 133 in Onward's, 132 in Nutwood's, 119 in Red Wilkes' and 108 in Alcantara's.

Trilby P. 2:13½ by Tipton Nutwood dropped dead, October 19th, at Denver, Colo., from rupture of the stomach. Trilby P. was owned by J. Fred Roberts, of Denver, and in the first two years she was owned by him won eighteen ribbons in horse shows. For a long time she held the City Park record for a half-mile of 1:07.

Harold H. 2:04 has been turned over to Geers and will be wintered at Memphis. Geers will try to race the Canadian without the straps. Bob Carnathan demonstrated the fact that Harold H. could race without hoppers in his race at Lexington. The horse goes into Geers' hands in superb condition, and his chances of proving a strapless crack are good.

We learn that orders have come from Mr. J. B. Haggin to have all the trotting bred horses at Rancho del Paso taken up and worked. For several years past but very few of the standard bred horses at this famous farm have been worked or trained, but have been sold at auction or private sale undeveloped, as it were. There are some of the greatest prospects in California at the Haggin farm.

Down at Atlanta, Georgia, the champion Cresceus trotted an exhibition on the 7th, going against a bicycle rider. A very heavy rain had made the track so muddy that it was impossible for either the horse or the cyclist to show any speed, but they went a mile rather than disappoint the crowd. Cresceus' mile was in 2:32 and the bicyclist went in 2:22½. The exhibition was very disappointing.

We understand that Tom James of San Jose has been importuned by many breeders in Iowa to bring his great stallion Barondale 2:11½ back there for the season of 1903. We hope for the sake of the breeding interests of California that Mr. James will decide to remain here, as the return of Barondale to Iowa would be a great loss to this State. He is one of the best bred and finest individuals that ever crossed the Rockies.

J. M. Nelson is now at Wheaton, Illinois, and writes that he is now the owner of Solo 2:14½ and China Maid, both by McKinney, and both formerly owned by the late Chinese Consul Ho Yow, who sent them East in care of Mr. Nelson. The mares were entered in races there under the name of Mr. Thos. McAnan, who was Ho Yow's secretary. Ho Yow is no longer the Consul, and departed for China on the last steamer, disposing of the mares to Mr. Nelson before his departure.

In a recent conversation in New York John J. Scannell stated that he was willing to match The Abbot against Lord Derby or Cresceus for any sum up to $50,000 a side, the race to occur next season. Mr. Scannell is felicitating himself upon the fact that while he paid $26,500 for The Abbot and the horse has not won a race since he has owned him his earnings have been $29,500. The Abbot will be sent to Kentucky and wintered at Patchen Wilkes Farm.

What a change there has been in Prince Alert since James Hanley, of Providence, turned him over to Mart Demarest. When Mart took the hopple king he carried his head to one side, would not score and when he did get the word would rush away so fast that he was tuckered before he had gone half the distance, and so earned a reputation of being soft. He has been in Mart's hands two seasons, has been raced wherever he could get in and has lost only two races. He goes with his head straight, scores perfectly, is a game race horse and any one can drive him.

There is every prospect that one of the got of the great Cresceus 2:02½ will be one of the contestants for the money in the Breeders Futurity No. 3 for the foals of mares bred this year. Mr. J. W. Gardner, of this city, has named in this $6000 stake his mare Miracle, that is by the champion sire McKinney 2:11½ out of Grace Kaiser, therefore a full sister to Coney 2:02, MeZeus 2:13 and Grace McK 2:21½. Miracle was bred to Cresceus this year and is thought to be certainly in foal to the champion. As far as breeding is concerned there will be none better entered in this stake.

Electioneer blood gets to the front in races that require great speed to win. Azote trotted a heat in a race in 1895 in the fast time of 2:05½. This remains the race record for a gelding to this day, and has only been equalled once and that was at the Memphis meeting this year when Major Delmar tied it by winning the first heat of the Diamond Handicap in the same time. Azote and Major Delmar are grandsons of Electioneer. When Major Delmar trotted that heat he only beat Monroe Salisbury's trotter, Monte Carlo, a head, and Monte Carlo is also a grandson of the dead hero of Palo Alto.

Maud Newman and Neerbell, the fast pair of roan mares owned by Chas. Newman, formerly of the Richelieu, but now proprietor of the Russ House hotel in this city, that were taken East by Budd Doble last spring, have been running on the blue grass at the celebrated Walnut Hall Farm for some weeks. They will be sent to John Splan's big sale at Chicago in January. San Franciscans who know these mares and how perfectly their owner Mr. Newman had them trained to do all sorts of tricks, will read the following from the Kentucky Stock Farm with some degree of humor: "Doble was a visitor at the farm a few days ago. He had not seen his mares for some time. He found them grazing in a paddock, and when he spoke to them, calling each by name, they left the succulent grass and hastened to greet their master. And such a greeting! Each one kissed him again and again, and otherwise demonstrated their affectionate regard for him. The secret of Budd Doble's success with horses is at last revealed."

D. S. Matthews, whose postoffice address is Ryde, California, a small hamlet on Grand Island on the Sacramento river, dropped in to pay his respects to the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN one day this week. Mr. Matthews breeds a number of horses every year and has several good young horses for sale that are fit for driving in the park or on the roads. The pride of his farm at the present time is a two year old colt by Stam B. 2:11½ out of a mare by Dexter Prince, and he is one of the most promising youngsters in the State at the present time. Mr. Matthews tells us that the prospects for good crops next year in his section are most excellent.

Al McDonald took up his residence at Pleasanton this week, where he has opened a public training stable. He has three McKinneys and a Direct to start on and will have several more before the first of the year. Dr. Masoero, the well known and popular veterinary surgeon, has sent two McKinneys to McDonald, which is about as good a recommendation as any trainer could ask. Mac is an excellent caretaker and knows how to teach the youngsters to go fast. He developed the famous Who Is It 2:10½ and the good winner this year, Forrest W. 2:14½; besides many others that have taken low records and won money in California.

The pacer Monroe S. that took a record of 2:16½ at Boise, Idaho, recently and was thought to be the old horse by that name by Monroe Chief, turns out to be the sorrel gelding by Dictator Wilkes that Monroe Salisbury took to Salt Lake last spring and sold. The gelding was bred by W. A. Shippee of Avon in this State and is out of a Hawthorne mare. He is said to be good gaited and to have the best of racing manners. Mr. J. C. Richardson of Boise, who now owns him, has also recently purchased the good two year old Swift B. by Stam B. 2:11½ out of Swiftbird by Waldstein, which is one of the most promising young trotters in the country.

W. G. Durfee, who was the Scott Hudson of California this year, has about twenty-five head in his stables at Los Angeles that he is jogging and getting ready to begin training in the spring. Mr. Durfee is quite enthusiastic over the prospects of eight two year olds he has, the bright particular star of the lot being a brown colt by McKinney, first dam by Electricity, second dam the dam of two in the list and third dam Mayflower, the dam of Manzanita 2:16 and Wildflower 2:21. He also has a green McKinney mare that looks good and trotted a mile in 2:18½ recently quite easy. Petigru, Coronado, Silver Coin and Robert I. all finished their campaign sound and in good condition.

Budd Doble has left Douglas Cone's stallion Kinney Lou at Walnut Hall Stock Farm, near Lexington, for the winter, and will return to California some time in January. While at Memphis he worked this son of McKinney 2:11½ and old Mary Lou 2:17, a mile in 2:09½. It was the fourth heat of a workout and the watches were held by Ed Geers, Murray Howe, E. E. Ecker and William Byington. The quarters were in 0:32½, 1:05, 1:37½, 2:09½. A few days previous Mr. Doble drove the horse a mile in 2:10½ over the same track. The Kentucky Stock Farm says that such good judges as Ed Geers and John Splan agree that Kinney Lou is likely to prove one of the very greatest trotters ever trained, as he is so perfectly gaited and endowed with such great speed and other racing qualities.

Commenting on the remarkable performances made by the trotters and pacers at Lexington and Memphis, the well known trainer, E. R. Bowne, said the other day: "I attribute the wonderful form shown by many of the horses to the cool summer. Ordinarily a considerable proportion of the fastest trotters and pacers fade away after a few races in July and August, but there was no hot weather worth talking about this year. The most delicate horses thrived and held their flesh right through the summer in a manner that I never saw equaled. Instead of wasting away and dropping out of sight at midsummer, they improved right along until the campaign ended, going faster at Lexington and Memphis than anywhere else. This was particularly true of horses that would be classed among the soft ones."

The handsome and fast little trotting mare Algonetta 2:14 by Eros, which Mr. R. E. Mulcahy sent East and sold last year, has been distinguishing herself on the New York speedway recently, as well as at the matinee races on the Empire City track. She is now owned by the well known millionaire road driver of New York, Mr. Ed de Cernea, who has entered her in quite a number of club races this fall, and had the satisfaction of seeing her win in fast time. After having won three races for the team championship of the club, driven with her mate, a mare with a record of 2:23½, the pair were started last week in a race for a silver cup offered by Mr. Arthur Lape. This race was two best heats in three, and after losing the first heat through Algonetta's mate breaking, they landed the next two in handy fashion.

"Trotwood," who conducts one of the most interesting departments in the Horse Review, writes as follows of Dan Patch: "I must confess that I was disappointed in Dan Patch. Not in his form—that is most graceful and beautiful and blood-like—nothing could be handsomer than Dan Patch, except old Joe, and the horse doesn't live that is better looking than old Joe. Every way I think the father is a higher classed horse than his son. But Dan is all right in form, though I do not like his head. Dan's gait is far from perfect. He sprawls behind and he wastes a lot of energy in body motion, especially behind. But his stride is terrific and makes up for it. Still, I believe all of that counts a great deal when it comes to a two-minute clip. I believe that sprawling gait behind has kept him from breaking the record."

THOROUGHBRED DEPARTMENT.

Ingleside's reopening was a most auspicious one. The day was sunny and so appeared the 7000 people that thronged the grand stand, betting ring and paddock. Everything was in shipshape, and the racing went on with a smoothness remarkable for a first day. E. C. Hopper was the presiding judge and C. H. Pettigill his associate, and they had to decide two of the closest finishes ever seen over a local course, viz.: the one between Arabo and Gravina and that between Ilo waho and Artilla, while Horton just did down Dunblane by a good head. Burns & Waterhouse won the Opening Handicap, $1500 added, one mile, with their Missouri-bred Sain colt, Corrigan, who forged to the fore at the quarter, made his lead four lengths at the half-mile ground, held his advantage at the three-quarters and won smiling by three good lengths in 1:42½, the track being perhaps 1½ seconds slow. In this race the favorite, Sombrero, was almost left, and the field was a dozen lengths away before he got going. His rider, Kelly, put the spurs deep into his sides, however, and at the quarter he had joined the bunch. The early extreme effort told, however, for at the finish he was fifth, beaten over ten lengths by the winner. The stake was worth $2100 to California's largest racing firm, and many think the best horse won, anyhow. Corrigan was carrying 113 pounds; Sombrero, also a three-year-old, 122. The Fretter (114) was second, with Flush of Gold (110) at his saddle. Many of the "star" horse-pilots appeared in silk on the opening day, among the number Coburn and McCue (who won with their first mounts), Jay Ransch (who will head the winning jockeys' list in 1902), R. Sullivan, Lee Jackson, Tuberville, Donnelly, See, Kelly and Collis. Ransch and Jackson divided the honors, with two wins each. The work of Starter Jake Holtman, except in the stake event, was gilt-edged and he dispatched his fields very quickly in nearly every instance. Many tally-ho parties were in evidence, and President Williams, who headed one himself, must have been pleased down to the ground at the enthusiasm displayed and at the large attendance. In the betting ring twenty books transacted business and it was a large one. They reported a loss of about $30,000 on the day's play, in consequence of which the gentlemen were happy and the gamblers sad. On Monday and Tuesday there came barrels of rain, making the track heavy for several days, but the racing is now fairly under way and from the fields that are contending it looks as if the season just inaugurated was to be a banner one in local racing annals.

Sombrero showed that he would have won the opening handicap on Saturday had he been more fortunate at the start, by winning the mile handicap on Wednesday, defeating Corrigan with utmost ease in faster time than the Sain colt won when running over a much "faster" track. It is true that Corrigan picked up four pounds and Sombrero got three off on Wednesday, but Sombrero showed at all stages of the race that he was Corrigan's master, and, outside of Articulate, it does not look as if there is a horse of any age in training hereabouts capable of giving Sombrero an argument at weight for age, be the track heavy or dry. A special at weight for age, at about a mile and a sixteenth, between Sombrero and Articulate would be a great drawing card for the rear future.

Burns & Waterhouse have eight stallions and forty-three mares safely installed on their Hopland ranch, and in addition to the list we gave last week there are several young mares, including Early Star, a two year old by Mt. McGregor—Early Rose, that will be sent to the stud next spring; Mortgage, the good daughter of Montana and Lottery; Madrina, own sister to Miss Rowena (by imp. Midlothian—imp. Paloma); Princess Zeika by Rey del Sierras—Countess Zeika; Rosewar by imp. Artillery—Sweet Rose; Sea Bass, a very fast filly that had her shoulder broken at Emeryville when a two year old, and High Hoe, a splendid campaigner, by Himyar, dam Janet (the best long-distance mare of her day). Ella Boland and Southern Girl, which have been bred to David Tenny, are at Adams Bros.' ranch near Woodland, and Southern Girl has been sold to the gentleman that bred her in Tennessee. Ella Boland has a fine weanling colt by David Tenny.

There is likely to be some very lively bidding amongst the breeders of this State when St. Avonicus is put up at auction on the 15th of next month at the closing out sale of the Fair horses. Those who have seen the horse pronounce him a model of a big English type of race horse. He is a bay, standing 16 hands 1½ inches in height, and but five years of age, and was selected for the late Charles L. Fair by such a good judge of a thoroughbred as Ed Corrigan, and the sum stated to have been paid for the young stallion was $15,000, though it is stated that that sum covered the transportation of horse and groom from England to California. St. Avonicus is by the unbeaten St. Simon out of Avonwater by Prism; second dam, Avondale by Ben Battle; third dam, Inamorata by Lothario (son of King Tom); fourth dam, Claret Cup by Claret (he by Touchstone); fifth dam, Gramachree (sister to Faugh-a-Ballagh and Irish Birdcatcher) by Sir Hercules; sixth dam, the famous racer and producer, Guiccioli by Bob Booty, and on to the sixteenth dam, a Sedbury Royal mare, No. 11 on the Bruce Lowe Figure System. St. Simon has now eclipsed the supposed impregnable position attained by Stockwell as a sire, having headed the winning stallions' list of England about eight times and siring eleven winners of the three "classics," Derby, Oaks and St. Leger—to Stockwell's ten, and he will almost surely head the list again this season. Prism, sire of St. Avonicus' dam, stands well toward the top of the stallions' list, and he was a very high classed racer, winning the Stockton Steward's Cup twice, the Cleveland Handicap at Doncaster, the Bunbury Handicap at Newmarket, the Leicester Cup at Leicester and the Chesterfield Cup (123 lbs. up) at Goodwood. In the last named race Prism defeated Geheimniss (winner of the Oaks, etc.), Quicklime (second in the Derby and 2000 of 1882 and winner of the City and Suburban Handicap, Epsom Grand Prize and Prince of Wales' Stake with 127 lbs.), Thebais (winner of the Oaks, 1000 Guineas, dead heat in Champion Stakes with Tristan Doncaster Cup with 123 lbs., Ascot Gold Vase with 125 lbs. and Liverpool Autumn Cup with 130 lbs. up), Royal Stag and Hauteur (1000 Guineas, etc.). The second dam, Avondale, was by Ben Battle (son of old Rataplan and Young Alice by Young Melbourne, and sire of the great Bendigo, who won the Jubilee, Eclipse and Champion Stakes under big weights, his winnings footing up $100,525). Inamorata, the third dam, was by the grand race horse Lothario, son of King Tom; the fourth dam by Claret, a cross that figures in the breeding of Marvel, the best mile horse that ever ran in the Colonies, one that took up 142 pounds and did his mile in 1:40 flat, if memory serves. The fifth dam, Gramachree, was an own sister to the famous race horses and sires, Irish Birdcatcher and Faugh-a-Ballagh, the latter winner of the St. Leger and several of the Cups and sire of the wonderful Leamington, who, mated to Lexington mares, produced Enquirer, Onondaga, the unbeaten Sensation and a host of other track and stud celebrities. Guiccioli, the sixth dam, won thirteen races in her day, nearly all stakes, and was the best mare of her time in Ireland. St. Avonicus traces no less than four times to Pocahontas, the greatest broodmare ever known—twice through King Tom, once each through Rataplan and Stockwell, while other noted mares in his pedigree are Martha Lynn, Blue Bonnet, Cobweb (Oaks winner), the phenomenal Alice Hawthorne (winner of 50 races) and Beeswing (dam of Newminster and four times winner of the Doncaster Cup—a record to this day). That St. Avonicus should prove a valuable addition to the list of highly bred stallions in California goes without saying.

Seattle is quite likely to be an important racing point next season. Charles Clancy, who is interested in the new course near the Sound metropolis, says it is the intention to have a thirty-day meeting there next spring, and another one of the same duration in the fall, and it is quite among the possibilities that Joseph A. Murphy, who presided in the judges' stand at Emeryville and Ingleside for several years past, will have entire charge of the meeting and be the presiding official at the coming meets. If the Judge accepts the proposition made to him there will be a well-managed, up-to-date lot of racing in Seattle, for he is a thoroughly good man to handle such an affair. Mr. Clancy thinks that if the Portland (Or.) track passes into good hands there could be a successful meeting or two held there next year, and these cities, with perhaps one or two more points, would form a circuit where excellent racing could be had to fill in the seven months that they do not race in San Francisco. We agree with him.

The California Jockey Club now issues apprentice licenses good for their meetings, and horses carrying such boys are granted a five-pound allowance, all of which encourages the incoming generation of embryo Tod Sloans and results in much development of riding talent.

Barney Schrieber, who owns the now celebrated stallion Sain, is getting to be one of the big breeders of America, for he has no less than 108 mares on his Woodlands farm, near St. Louis. Sain is the sire of Otis, winner of the $12,000 St. Louis Derby this season; Corrigan, winner of the Opening Handicap, etc.; Schwalbe, winner of seventeen races this year; Geheimniss, the best two-year-old filly racing around

St. Louis; Zirl, and other fine performers. The black horse, who is an inbred Galopin and the most fashionably-bred stallion in this country, in all probability, went begging around Pleasanton for about a year, and finally a well-known student of the breeding problem who had catalogued the horse to be sold by public auction called the attention of Schrieber to the magnificent breeding of Sain, with the result that he was never led into the sales-ring, the genial German breeder securing a lease for a year on the horse, with the option of buying at the end of that time. When the lease was about to expire A. B. Spreckels, who had been doing a little pedigree searching himself, came to think well enough of Sain for a sire to offer $2,500 for him, for that was the price in Schrieber's option, including the use of the horse for a year. In the very first crop of Sain's was Zirl and Corrigan, both "clinkers," and Schrieber could have sold the horse (that nobody seemed to want at one time) for $30,000 in 1901. Such are the vicissitudes sometimes observed in the life of a thoroughbred horse. Sain's first crop of youngsters was surely a record bunch, and it's no sure thing that he won't out-breed every horse on this glorious continent. He is bred to do it, and blood will tell nearly every time. St. Serf, best son of the unbeaten race horse and sire, St. Simon, begot Sain, and St. Simon was by the Derby-winner, Galopin, he by Vedette (winner of the Goodwood Cup, etc.), he in turn by the Derby and St. Leger winner, Voltigeur, he by the great racer and good sire, Voltaire, son of Blacklock, then there comes Whitelock, Hambletonian, King Fergus and the mighty, unbeaten Eclipse—eleven generations of phenomenal success as sires! On the dam's side the success line is even more marked, if that were possible, it being: Imp. The Task (winner of the Devonshire Nursery Stakes, etc.), by the unbeaten Irish horse, Barcaldine; second dam, Satchel (winner of the Molyneux Cup, etc., and dam of three stake-winners), by Galopin, winner of the Derby, third dam, the great race mare Quiver (winner of the Levant Stakes and dam of the great celebrities Memoir and La Fleche, two of the most wonderful race mares of which England can boast, the one winning, among other stakes, the Oaks, St. Leger and July cup, the other the Oaks, 1,000 Guineas, Lancashire Plate Autumn Cup), by Toxophilite (a great Cup horse and sire of Musket); fourth dam, the dam of Reprieve, by Young Melbourne; fifth dam, Brown Bess (a winner, dam of Minie, Fright, Bessus and two producers and granddam of Musket), by Camel (sire of Touchstone); seventh dam, Mrs. Cruickshanks (a noted producer), by Welbeck; eighth dam, Tramp's dam, by Gohanna; ninth dam, Fraxinella (a great stud matron), by Trentham; tenth dam (a producer), by Woodpecker; eleventh dam the renowned stud queen, Everlasting, by Eclipse, and on through the dam of the two True Blues to the sixteenth generation, Mr. Bowes' Byerly Turk mare. If there was ever a better illustration of blood telling in a horse than this, we would like to see it. Sain has the blood of more really great racers, sires and producing mares in his veins than any stallion we can call to mind, and we predict, like his grandsire and great grandsire, viz: St. Simon and Galopin, he will, gain a reputation greater and greater as the years roll around.

Redfern Will Ride for W. C. Whitney.

Jockey Arthur Redfern will ride for William C. Whitney next season. Mr. Whitney, it is understood, has paid $20,000 bonus to Col. James E. Pepper for Redfern's services, and has also contracted to pay him a salary of $9000 until the end of next season. It is also believed that Sidney Paget, who will have a stable of his own next season, and who will also manage the stable of J. B. Haggin, will have second and third calls on Redfern's services. In this way it will be possible for the jockey to earn close to $40,000 in the next twelve months.

The amount paid by Mr. Whitney to Col. Pepper for Redfern's release is the largest ever given for a jockey's services. Redfern is only 17 years old and came here from the Canadian tracks little more than a year ago, practically unknown. He lost no time in displaying skillful horsemanship and before the season of 1901 was over his services were in demand. Redfern's father, after John E. Madden had declined to pay the boy a salary of $9000 a year for two seasons, signed a contract with Col. Pepper for this amount and the jockey has been riding all of the Pepper horses this year. But his work in the saddle has been so extremely good that other owners have been clamoring for his services all along. As a result Redfern has been able to pick his mounts and has made a notable record for himself.

Redfern can ride at 90 pounds and is considered by good judges to be the best lightweight jockey in the country. He is a fine judge of pace, possesses fine hands and can put up a wonderful finish. His rival, Lucien Lyne, who recently signed with James R. Keene for $20,000 a year, has in many instances been outridden by Redfern, who, on these occasions, has taken particular pleasure in gloating over the Kentucky rider. Col. Pepper recently decided to retire from the turf and that is the reason why Redfern's services have been turned over to Mr. Whitney, who is generally congratulated for making the deal.

San Francisco, Saturday, November 22, 1902.

A DEMAND EXISTS in California for more associations that will give harness race meetings each year, at which the programs will be made up exclusively for trotters and pacers, and the track prepared especially for this class of sport. These associations need not be formed with the idea of giving large purses and stakes or extensive programs, but may be district and county organizations that provide for three or four days' racing for purses ranging from $500 down. In every locality where the breeding of harness horses is carried on to any extent, the breeders should take interest enough to see that meetings are given each year that will aid in giving trotting and pacing horses an opportunity to earn race records and some money at least for their owners. It is being more clearly demonstrated every year that running and harness events do not make up a satisfactory program at the same meeting. If the tracks are in condition for the trotters, there is loud complaint from the owners of runners, and vice versa, while the differences which arise over many other matters show that the two methods of racing are becoming as widely separated as golf and baseball. There should be an organization in every town where a track is situated, which is composed of breeders and admirers of the harness horse. Such an organization can give a profitable meeting every year, provided a secretary who knows his business can be secured. These meetings would not only do much to benefit the breeding interests of the locality, but they would greatly benefit the town financially. One thing that directors of such organizations must remember is that a small town cannot support a six day meeting, nor can a big program of large purses be given. It takes intelligent and energetic work to make any meeting pay, but even these qualities combined will not enable an organization to break even if they contract to pay out more than they can possibly take in. There is a splendid future for harness racing in California if the sport is properly sustained by the breeders and owners next year and an effort made to hold meetings generally throughout the State at which the harness horse races will be the main feature of the programs.

SAN FRANCISCO is not to be the only city on the Pacific Coast where long-continued race meetings are held, if the rumors floating around are not greatly exaggerated. A forty days' meeting is to begin at Los Angeles February 1st of next year, and there are hints that it will last longer if profitable. Seattle will break into the game next spring without a doubt, and there have been negotiations already begun for a lease of the Portland, Oregon, track for a running meeting to last at least a month. There are rumors that a syndicate of bookmakers are contemplating securing a one-week's lease of nearly every important track in California for next summer, that a circuit of running races may be arranged for and given. Butte and Anaconda in Montana, Denver in Colorado, and Boise City in Idaho will all give meetings, so that there may be a possibility of a summer Coast Circuit of running meetings, which will begin as soon as racing closes in San Francisco and continue until it opens in the late fall. Race track gambling has secured such a hold on the people that running meetings pay a big profit in the large cities, and also where syndicate books are made in the smaller towns. The breeders and owners of harness horses may well view with alarm this monopolizing of the race tracks of the coast by the running horse followers, and unless some united effort is made to keep our district fair grounds free from the control of the gamblers, there will soon be no harness racing circuit in California worth training horses for.

THE FIRST SALE of thoroughbred yearlings for the season will be held next Tuesday evening at the popular sales mart, the Occidental Horse Exchange, by William G. Layng, the well known live stock auctioneer. The yearlings are from the Antrim Stock Farm of Chas. Kerr, Esq., and comprise twenty-four head of as big, handsome, stout looking youngsters as were ever brought to the San Francisco market. They are the get of Maxio, Yo El Rey, Herald, Lew Weir, imp. Reggie, imp. Artillery, Riley, Montana, imp. Bassetlaw, William O'B. and imp. St. Andrew, and their dams are for the most part producers of note, there being in this sale a half-sister to Antrim, Jockey Bill, Rill and Tamm; a half-sister to Aborigine and Bill Bohmanson, a half-sister to Herald and Miss Madeline, a half-sister to Annie F., a half-sister to Rose of Hilo, a half-sister to Ned Dennis, Uncle True and Flo Culver; a half-brother to Tacoma, Native Son and Castake; a half-brother to Edra, a half-brother to Coupon and Free Pass, a half-sister to Rasp and Tyrone, a half-sister to Crossmolina and Kitty Kelly, a half-brother to Lena, Lorena II., Rillito and Dora Weir; a half-sister to the grand race horse, San Nicholas, and a half-sister to the speedy Florimel. Remember that this sale begins at 8 o'clock sharp, next Tuesday evening, November 25th, at 246 Third street.

The next sale will be held on the following Tuesday evening, December 2d, when thirty-one yearlings from Mr. A. B. Spreckels' Napa Stock Farm are to be sold. This is also a grand lot of colts and fillies and those who have visited the farm recently say that Superintendent Geo. W. Berry has undoubtedly the handsomest lot ever consigned to a salesing in California.

Further particulars in regard to them will appear next week. See Mr. Layng's big ad in this issue of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

EVERY SIGN POINTS to a very large list of entries for the Pacific Breeders Futurity No. 3, which is guaranteed by the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association to be worth $6000. It is for the produce of mares bred this year and although the date of closing is December 1st, the Secretary of the P. C. T. H. B. A. has already received over fifty nominations for the stake, which is more than was received up to the same time for either of its predecessors. There is no reason why this stake should not develop into one of the leading colt races of America, and if breeders continue to maintain the interest aroused by the first stake inaugurated in 1900, the value will increase materially every year. We would again appeal to stallion owners to make a special effort to have the get of their horses well represented. A larger representation of a stallion's get means increased chances of one of them winning, and no owner can afford to miss the opportunity of having his horse included among the list of sires of winners of this great event. Owners of mares bred this year should also remember that a colt well staked has a much greater value than one with no engagements, other things being equal. The stake closes for the nomination of mares on Monday, December 1st. Be sure and have your entry mailed in time.

THE SUGGESTION is offered track managers throughout the country districts in California, that if any portion of the tracks are left untouched this winter and during the early spring it be the inside half of the course. It is the constant harrowing and digging up of the soil that wears a track out and takes the "life" out of it. As is well known, a track left to grow up to weeds for a year or two is fast when work is resumed on it, as the life of the soil has become renewed, as it were. The suggestion is therefore offered that the outside half of tracks be kept in shape for training purposes rather than the inside half. This will do the trainers just as well, and while the circuit will be a long mile, that is no great disadvantage. In the late spring, when work begins on the track to put it in shape for racing, the inside half will be better and faster for having had a rest during the winter, and the result will be faster time at the meetings.

THE BIG STOCK SHOW which has just been held at Kansas City shows plainly the value of these great expositions. Stock breeders were in attendance from all parts of the United States and sales were very numerous. Several California breeders were present and secured choice animals with which to replenish and strengthen their herds.

THE CATALOGUE issued for the Old Glory sale at New York is the largest and most complete catalogue ever printed for a sale of standard bred stock. No less than 1068 horses are described and pedigrees tabulated. The sale opens next Monday, November 24th.

CALIFORNIA BREEDERS have much interest in the two prominent fixtures known as the National Stallion Race and The Matron, the seventh renewals of which are advertised in our business columns this week, and entries for which close Tuesday, December 9th. The names of the stallions named whose produce, foals of 1902, are eligible, will be found in the advertisement. There are fifty-six of the best bred stallions in the country and this State has many of their foals that are eligible. The Matron is for the foals of mares bred this year, and the mares must be named December 9th. It is recognized by all breeders that colts eligible to these two great stakes are eagerly sought by the buyers of yearlings and those entered will command good prices where colts and fillies not entered may go begging for buyers.

THE CHAMPION YEARLING TROTTERS, Adbell 2:23 and Pansy McGregor 2:23½, are both producers of speed. Adbell met an untimely death a few weeks ago, but he already has to his credit Rowellan 2:15½ and Adabella 2:25½, while there are at least a dozen of his get that are expected to enter the standard list within the next two or three years. Pansy McGregor, whose record is still the fastest for trotting yearling fillies, and who afterwards reduced her mark to 2:17½, is the dam of Maxine, that this year took a four year old record of 2:08½. Adbell and Pansy McGregor have furnished additional evidence to prove that the ability to show speed in early youth is a pretty safe guide that the animal possessing it will be able to transmit the same to its produce.

A HORSE WAS DISTANCED by the judges at an eastern meeting this year that fell twenty yards from the wire just as the winning horse went under it. The driver mounted his sulky after getting his horse on his feet and drove under the wire. He protested the decision of the judges and the case will come up before the Board of Review this winter. If this horse was inside the distance flag when the winner crossed the wire, he was certainly not distanced. Perhaps the judges may claim the horse was not "driven to the finish," as is required by section 5 of rule 27, but the protestant might also claim that this rule applies to "laying up" and not to falling down. Such accidents as the one in question often occur on trotting tracks and the decision in the matter will be looked for with much interest.

OWNERS OF DRAFT MARES, grade or full blood, will make a mistake next spring if they do not select the best draft stallions in the country to breed their mares to as the supply of draft stock is very small and there will not be enough to meet the demand for years to come. The Breeders Gazette of Chicago, a paper that is thoroughly posted and closely in touch with the conditions in the draft horse market said in its last issue:

"And still the demand for drafters continues larger than the supply in all the great American markets. The larger cities in the East send forth their buyers with apparently limitless orders. Nowhere in the Atlantic coast country does there seem to be anything like an adequate supply of heavy drafters. Merchants are increasing stocks of horses. Brewers are horsing more wagons than ever before. The coal companies find that they must have horseflesh at any cost in order to fill up the depleted bins and basements of their customers. So much so, indeed, is the demand superior to the supply that blemishes and defects that years ago would not have been looked at the second time are now passed over and round prices paid. Northern lumber operators have ransacked the markets of New England for oxen, buying up every steer they could find with weight enough to do the heavy logging work. This supply was quickly exhausted and recourse must then perforce be had again to the horse marts, with the result that heavy loggers are now higher than they have been in years and apparently still going up. The cut of lumber must be heavy somewhere this year. Operations will be begun just as soon as the weather will permit. Therefore the horses must be bought. These factors in the trade are causing buyers to pay more for plain horses with weight than they otherwise would and such a condition invariably has a tendency to suggest to some breeders the use of a lower grade of stallion. No mistake should be made in this particular. The best draft geldings will remain high in price long after the values of the plain and blemished lots have declined. Blemished horses will materialize do the best we can. Let the effort then be spared to breed the kind that always command a paying price, not the kind on which there is a chance to take."

Gambetta Wilkes has seventeen new standard performers this year, five of his get reduced their records to below 2:15, and two went into the 2:10 list.

Getting Ready for Thanksgiving.

[Los Angeles Herald, Nov. 18.]

If earnest, hard work will accomplish anything, the first Driving Club meeting to be given under President Shankland's supervision will be one of the most successful amateur harness events ever given on the Pacific Coast.

With a splendid field of performers to draw from and a keen rivalry among the gentlemen drivers, all the necessary factors are at hand, and the only difficulty has been to combine them in such a manner as to get the best results. Dr. Ralph Hagan and Mrs. Chandler have put in many an hour of hard work, and entries are already coming in very freely though they do not close until Thursday, and the horsemen usually wait until the last minute.

Present plans call for a 2:20 pacing event that is to be about the hottest thing in the shape of a "hoss race" that was ever seen in "these hyar parts." Robert I., Elizabeth G., Hanford Medium, Sweetheart and Proctor, many of them performers at the late fall meeting, will be starters, and their previous showing will help greatly to create a lively interest in what the respective merits of the animals may prove to be under honest driving. There is chance for a wide diversity of opinion and that is what makes any game good.

There will be a handicap trot in which Sweet Marie will concede to Briney K. and El Moro, both very respectable performers, and other good races will fill out the afternoon's program. There will be no difficulty in working off the aftermath of the Thanksgiving turkey with the Driving Club's matinee in full swing. An enormous crowd is expected.

The original intention was to make the 2:20 pace an eight-horse race, but Montecito Boy and Cœur de Lion cannot well afford to start. The first is not yet in shape and the lion-hearted one has a touch of rheumatism that demands careful attention.

Nat Myrick's Polo, Godfrey Fritz's The Rover, Dr. Hagan's Mamie B. and other talent of the speedier variety will get a chance to show their speed during the afternoon. Considerable speculation doubtless will develop in the capabilities of Robert I. and Hanford Medium, which will be compelled to do their pacing without hobbles.

There was a big turnout of drivers Sunday afternoon and some very respectable workouts were done. Dr. M. L. Moore, N. M. Melrose, E. J. Delorey with El Moro, R. E. Moorehead with Robert I., Godfrey Fritz with The Rover, J. H. Reynolds with Galette, R. E. Muncey with George, and C. A. Harrison did some good breezing stunts.

Saturday Dr. Bryson had his new colt, Teddy, out and is very well pleased with the youngster, which certainly moves like a coming race horse. Sweetheart reeled off a mile in 2:21 flat, and Sweet Marie pulled up for her mile with two seconds better than 2:20 to her credit. Mosher sent Prince Howard around at about 2:25 clip, and he did it handily enough. Mosher's bay mare showed about the same speed.

The other day Dr. Hagan took Mamie B. out for a mile over the course and did it in 2:20 with ease, though she had not been worked out for two weeks previous. J. W. Spooner had done better than 2:20 with Would Be. Briney K. is in good shape from the fall meeting and has done enough work right along to keep on edge.

A new member from Pasadena with two fast horses will probably be taken in before the next meeting occurs. The clubhouse is being refitted in very good style. The roof has been repaired and new paper hung on the walls. It will be opened Thanksgiving day. The club is thinking quite seriously of serving meals to members in addition to liquid refreshments. There are very respectable sleeping accommodations at the clubhouse, but they are not used much. A dozen good rooms are available for any who cares to watch the sun rise between a fast trotter's ears some cool, crisp morning.

Paid Poll in Horseshoes.

The shire hall in the town of Oakham, Rutlandshire, England, was, and is probably now, embellished with a great number of horseshoes which had been levied from travelers. "If any nobleman enter precinct or lordship as an homage he is to forfeit one of his horse's shoes, unless he redeem it with money." For centuries these shoes have been accumulating, so that the walls of the building were at one time covered with them. They were varied in shape and size, and many were gilt, some of them having been given by monarchs and princes; in fact, it is stated that a duke of York once paid a silver shoe, such an impost being due from every scion of royalty who rides across that country.

Vane Nuckols, the well known and successful young Glenville trainer, and Miss Nettie Pennock, daughter of A. C. Pennock, a prominent member of the Glenville colony of trainers, were married last week.

Stick to the Law

In the course of some excellent remarks anent the declaring off of bets at Memphis on the Chain Shot-The Abbot race, in which the editor holds correctly that "there was no authority whatever for the action," the following paragraph appeared:

"Not long ago the editor of the Turf, Field and Farm was invited to a seat in the judges' stand on a prominent track in a Southern State where both running and trotting races were held. In the first heat of a trotting race two of the judges insisted on placing a horse which had not run less than a quarter of a mile. The explanation made to the dissenting judge was that the offending horse was the favorite, and if he were ruled out there would be a vigorous kick on the part of spectators. The further explanation was offered that if the rules were strictly enforced there could be no racing in that community—hat horses would not be entered and that betting privileges could not be sold at a reasonable figure. The third judge was out-voted, and he politely stated that while he had no desire to break up racing on that track he could not afford to officiate in the stand. He declined to again act as a judge. This little incident shows how easy it is, when a break is once made, to drift from a high standard of racing to a low standard. The way to preserve the integrity of sport is to treat all men alike under the rules formulated for the protection of all."

Is Dandy Hal a Ringer?

A pacing gelding that has been racing and winning over East this year under the name of Dandy Hal is thought to be a ringer, and although many complaints have been lodged against him, no one has been able to positively identify the horse. Secretary Gocher of the National Trotting Association has secured the following accurate description of the horse and we publish it with the request that if any of our readers can recall a horse that fits the description they will confer a favor by corresponding with us in regard to the same. The descriptions and pictures published in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN led to the identification of the noted ringer Walter K. alias Perhaps when he was brought to California. The description of Dandy Hal is as follows:

Bright bay pacing gelding, very breezy looking; fine head and neck, veins stand out very much when warmed up; prominent eye; heavy pair of shoulders; about 16 hands high, weighs about 1050 pounds. Mane a little light, tail very thin, hair in tail very straight; no white about him any place; fine set legs and feet, except left front ankle which is a little enlarged, and looks as if it had been pin fired; bay color runs down very low on all his legs; high headed and carries his tail out straight when jogging; is very uneasy and has to be held by the head whilst being hitched or unhitched; is very much inclined to kick during hitching; looks as if he is a stag; is about 15 years old and a little parrot mouthed.

Harvey Boone, the leading merchant of Bodie, Cal. has an entry in the Breeders Futurity for foals of 1901, that has begun to show speed enough as a yearling to warrant great expectations from her when she grows up. She is by Dagon, the son of Sable Wilkes formerly owned by H. S. Hogoboom, and her dam is the fast mare Swiftbird by Waldstein. Mr. Boone had the filly driven a half in 1:23 recently, but as the snow now covers the Bodie track and will remain for the next six months, she will not have much of a chance to show her speed again until next summer.

Horsemen who have watched the career of the sensational blind trotter, Rythmic 2:08, this season, will be glad to learn that the injury which necessitated his withdrawal from the Transylvania Stake at Lexington, is not serious, although it was necessary to declare him out of his Memphis engagements. The cut he received at Lexington was a clean flesh wound and had an artery not been severed he would have continued in the race.

W. J. Andrews will take possession in a few days of the most expensive stable ever occupied by a public trainer. This is the stable built last year by E. H. Harriman, near the entrance to the New York Speedway.

Lafe Shaffer, who has trained the Terrace Farm horses of J. C. McKinney, Titusville, Pa., for several seasons past, including Terrace Queen 2:06, Zephyr (4) 2:11, Beauseant 2:12, etc., will be Ed Geers' second trainer next season.

John Splan will hold a sale at the Union Stock Yards, Chicago, January 5 to 10.

There is some talk of a new half-mile track being built at Detroit next year.

A recent report from Marysville states that Frank Moody, a former resident of that place had a thrilling experience with a big cinnamon bear on Friday. Discovering a captive cub in one of his traps on a steep mountain side, he knocked it in the head, and was preparing to take it away when the old mother bear rushed furiously upon him. The force of the impact proved his salvation, as he was hurled down a precipitous grade and was able to recover himself at the bottom before his assailant could overtake him. Moody hastened to his cabin for a rifle, but on returning to the mountain was unable to find either the bear or the cub.

The St. Louis Coursing Meeting.

The American Waterloo Cup meeting run at St. Louis recently under the auspices of the Pastime Coursing Club was the national event of the year among the leashmen. Among the local Greyhound men present were John and James Grace, George McEwen Malcolm, keeper of the stud book, Vic Noble, James Sweeney, representing J. H. Rosseter, Dan and Ed Walsh of Sacramento, owners of Sacramento Boy, twice a winner of the John Grace Cup. Messrs. Crawford, Annheuser, Bratton and Orthwein, of St. Louis, prominent business men and nominators of the stake were untiring in their efforts to make the coursing men's attendance pleasant. Mr. Orthwein is now the owner of a string of high class dogs which he purchased of D. Healy of Petaluma.

Among the leading lights of the coursing sward also in attendance were Bartel Brothers of Denver, Col., Cecil Lyons of Sherman, Texas, J. Blake, W. H. Smith and F. L. Nichols of Butte, Mont., Wilson and Allen of Victor, Ia., John Russell, Ben Aldritt of Friend, Neb., Chappie Hartgrave, S. F. Handy, E. M. Kellogg, Dr. Van Hummel of Indianapolis, H. C. Lowe of Lawrence, Kan., owner of Northern Express, Pascal Poe of Peubla, Col., Mayor Burke of Friend, Neb., and many others.

The stake purse, with $1200 added money, was contested for by some of the greatest Greyhounds in the world. One ugly feature of the coursing was the "bad hole," a bog just in front of the slipper's box. A number of good dogs went into this place and took a fall that ruined their chances for the stake.

The hares averaged a strong lot; now and then a weak one provided a fluky course. Some of the "jacks" were demons for speed, and had they been familiar with the grounds would have out-footed the dogs to the escapes repeatedly. Part of the rabbits coursed were from Texas and Kansas, and quite a lot from this State. Our "jacks" have longer ears and were smaller than the other varieties, but when in good condition they can "fairly make monkeys of the best pair of Greyhounds which ever went out of slips." The escapes were not as favorable to the hares as could have been wished; a few low bushes were planted in the ground near the holes in the fence. Boys stationed in the field would jump over the brush and close the drops from the outside of the fence. The hares had not been properly educated in the bearings and would often stop at the escapes, turn and sprint down the field with the dogs after them again on another killing course. Relief dogs were put in repeatedly, after a two-minute course, from one to four relief dogs would be in demand; even then it frequently took nearly a minute or more for the kill. Several dogs were run to a standstill. One advantage of the soft track was seen in that, not a single dog had injured pads or had a toe-nail pulled out.

The dogs were high class throughout, rarely a second rater in the bunch. With but very few exceptions every dog entered had a fighting chance for the cup. The winner, Roman Athlete, a white and black dog, has already been described in these columns. His victory is due to the efforts of trainer Sweeney. Athlete is not an extra fast dog; he weighs sixty-three pounds and is a good worker, the further he goes the better does he run up. Tiburon, the runner-up, is owned by Ralph Orthwein, of St. Louis, and is well known to California leashmen. Lord Butte, winner of the Purse, is a black and white of fair appearance, but a worker from the start. He is by Barrister out of Rash Adventure—he traces to Boomerang and Buenitero on one side and to Voltaire-Raven on the other, and is owned by L. F. Bartels, of Denver; he weighs about fifty-six pounds.

Warburton, runner-up of the Purse, is a big, rangy black with lots of speed and a good worker. He is an imported dog by Epicharmus out of Elaine and is owned by H. Lacy Crawford, of St. Louis. He was nominated by trainer Frank Jackson and will now be retired from the sward.

J. H. Rosseter's nomination, Black Coon, annexed the Plate. He was in Sweeney's hands and is owned by James Mularkey. He is a black dog, weight about forty-nine pounds, by Emin Pasha out of Mamie Pleasant and is two years old. He has his sire's foot and was considered a dangerous adversary in the Cup Stake. He was runner-up to Palo Alta and was about the fastest dog in the John Grace Cup event. A hard gruelling course was his unlucky fortune in the second round of the Cup stake. Rural Artist was looked upon as the speediest dog at St. Louis in the Cup stake.

King Cashier, runner-up in the Plate, is owned by J. E. Haskins. He is a strong, reliable looking black, weighing about sixty-two pounds and a speedy one. He has stamina as was shown by two hard run courses, he is by Battle Royal out of Brunette.

The Derby and All-Age Stakes followed on the 15th and 16th insts., a report of which will appear in next week's issue.

The work of the Graces, father and son, in saddle and with the slips, won golden opinions from the leashmen present at the meeting. They rank as premiers in their respective duties as judge and slipper on the coursing field. John Grace has announced that this meeting will be the last time he will undertake an Eastern trip, his age makes the journey arduous much as he loves the sport.

At a meeting of the American Coursing Board special action was taken in the matter of using dope and other stimulants. A penalty will be imposed for the use of other than the stimulants sanctioned by the stewards of a meet. Clubs wishing to hold a coursing meet must first apply to the board committee for such privilege, this action will not apply to clubs holding weekly meets. It was also agreed that the board's sanction must be obtained for all judges officiating at meetings.

The following description of the courses in the Cup Stake will be of particular interest to California leashmen in giving some idea how our dogs worked in the company of the best Eastern dogs:

American Waterloo Cup, 64 entries. Deimar race track, St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 8, 9, 1902—First Round:

Aeolus 10, Best Brand 4—Aeolus was three lengths faster and led on a short slip and outworked Brand on a dodging hare. Time, :30.

Tiburon 17, Crawford Belle 9—Tiburon led by two lengths, and in a working course was always a bit in front of and inside the bitch. Time, 1:20.

Dom Pedro 6, Viking 0—Pedro was fortunate, in that Viking stumbled in the bad "hole." This mishap gave the red dog a comfortable lead to the hare, and he made the most of it, turned and whipped up a weak hare before Viking had a chance to get in. Time, :25.

Talk to Me 14, Tapioca 0—Talk to Me led by four lengths on a long slip, and, acting very cleverly, swamped the white dog in a rasping course, in which the winner scored very fast. Time, :30.

T Bone 19, Little Vixen 15—Bone was slow out of slips, but closed and was leading when he fell. Vixen then got the turn and worked a nice sequence, the big dog going out badly on his turns. Vixen failed to persevere, however, and Bone scored three go-bys and several wrenches before the relief dog came in. Time, 2:00 (2:30).

Patricia 14, Texas Hector 10—Hector led two lengths and scored smartly before the bitch got in. She stayed better and scored rapidly, but the hare outstayed both and the relief dog wound up a trying course and pumping both out completely. Time, 2:00 (3:00).

Prairie Bird 11, Van Nora 9—Nora was unfortunate. She was leading by three lengths and going away when she fell in the bad spot. This gave Bird the turn and a nice sequence. Nora had the foot at all stages, but luck was sheer against her. Time, :50.

Society Belle 3, Lord Butte 0—Butte led from slips, but Belle shot past for the turn, swept around and pulled off a brilliant kill. Time, :10½.

Cloud Burst 6, Conrad's Best 0—Burst led by ten lengths, wrenched thrice, pulled off a smooth kill and won a one-sided victory. Time, :25. In the next round she defeated Troublesome, after he had shown a length of speed. In the third round she was beaten by Northern Express, who reached his hare two lengths in front and proved a trifle the better on a good working jack.

Troublesome 26, Minnesota Girl 2—Troublesome led by five lengths on a long slip, handled his hare well and was always inside the hard-trying bitch. The hare was a terror, and as the bitch did not stay, he had his troubles until the relief dog ended it. Troublesome ran, worked and stayed well. Time, 2:05.

Lily Doe 9, Texas Corker 5—Lily led by four lengths, but worked wide. Her speed saved her. Hector was slow and worked poorly. Time, 1:10.

Northern Express 17, The Raider 10—Express led four lengths on a long slip and worked a long sequence before the other got placed. Raider worked closely, but lacked pace and the puppy had the course in hand at all stages. The relief dog was loose when they killed. Time, 1:30.

True Beau 6, Mountain Chief 5—Beau led by one length and was inside at all stages and won a fluky course by the kill. Time, :30.

Sisquoc 16, Monsoon 5—Last year's cup winner Monsoon led until they struck the hole. He took the mud and Sisquoc the turf. This let Sisquoc up in front. He outworked Monsoon, who lay off. Sisquoc was very clever. Time, 1:05. Sisquoc had the foot, but it was a give and take course that followed, and he just managed to win on a long jack. He then met True Beau and had the course all his own way. In the next round he was drawn against his old-time conqueror, Sacramento Boy. It was a beautiful run to the hare, the Boy just managing to secure the turn, and in the mixed up course that followed the Boy always held the score in hand.

Sacramento Boy 12, Our Minnie 3—Boy led by five lengths and always outworked the puppy at every stage of it. Boy went very fast and snappy. Time, 1:05. He led and beat Our Minnie with ease and was two lengths faster than King Cashier, and had no trouble in beating the Montana dog. He defeated Sisquoc as above described. His next course was the most exciting one as he met the Mississippi Valley Futurity winner, Northern Express. It was a close run up the field, Sacramento Boy forging ahead a good length for the turn and he went right on in possession for a sequence of six. After this Express drew past and showed wonderful determination, only allowing Sacramento Boy to kill.

King Cashier 5, Maggie N. 2—King Cashier just got the turn coming in for the next, when Maggie N. took possession for a couple of points, when King Cashier killed and won. Time, :30.

Joe Pasha 27, Lady Bullett 22—Joe led by three lengths from a slow beginning. He outworked the bitch for several points. She then fell and hurt her shoulder and Joe had a long single course. Time, 2:00 (3:50).

Barefoot Boy 4, Robert Roy 3—Boy led five lengths; came around and turned to Robert, who killed. Time, :15.

Whirligig 8, Scotch Reel 3—Scotch Reel led all the way and always the course in hand. Time, :30.

Laughing Water 7, Texas Black Lips 6—Water led by three lengths, but went wide on the turn. Lips then got inside and clearly outworked the St. Louis bitch in a give-and-take course, which Lips wound up with a dashing kill. Water was lucky to win. Time, :39.

Union Star 8, Lady Bird 4—Star shifted the race on a close thing. He got inside the bitch and outworked her on a circling hare. Time, :35.

North Pole 12, The Rogue 1—Pole led by seven lengths and ran a single-handed course. Time, 0:46.

Linlithgow Lass 7, Warburton 3—Lass led out of slips, but lost sight and the dog pulled away six lengths. The bitch closed when sighted and got busy after the turn, worked in front of the big dog and killed. Time, :31.

Dexter B. 15, J. E. H. 2—Dexter B. was last out of slip, but went by and got the turn by two lengths. He completely outworked and outstayed the puppy, who displayed slight speed, cleverness or stamina. Time, 1:25.

Texas Bet'y 12, Sir Magic 6—Magic led on a close thing. It was give and take for awhile, the bitch outpointing him. Sir Magic tired and chucked it up at the end, the bitch going by several times. The hare then tired out a brace of relief dogs and a fifth dog had to be slipped before a great hare died. Time, 2:00 (4:00).

Bright Chain 17, Texas Hoo Hoo 12—Hoo showed in front from slips, but Chain dashed past for the turn. Both worked wide and loosely, but Chain outgamed and outstayed the Texan and won. Time, 2:30.

Confidence 22, Kingstown 12—Kingstown won by two lengths on a strong outside, but Confidence clearly outworked him on a twisting hare. The entire course was run on fifty square yards of ground. They killed together. Time, 1:21.

Grace Greenwood 4, Texas Bess 3—Bess led by three lengths and went wide. Grace worked very close and won by a good kill. Time, :20.

There was a long delay after this slip owing to running down loose hares.

Black Coon 12, Rural Artist 5—Artist led by a length. The Coon then got in and acted cleverest all through. He was going best. Time, 1:32. Rural Artist was unfortunate in drawing against Black Coon. To the surprise of all Artist secured the turn a length in front, but Black Coon was always the better in the work, and won an easy victory. Artist drawn. In the second round Black Coon met the winner, Roman Athlete. This was a neck and neck course to the hare, Athlete driving for a beautiful kill. Black Coon was then retired to the plate, in which he won all his courses in clever style, showing speed and stamina in each course.

Roman Athlete 5, Chilco 0—Athlete led, turned and picked up a weak hare. Time, :10½. Roman Athlete had no trouble in leading and beating Chilco in this round, and Black Coon as above described in the third round. He was always the better for the early points, Redwood Lad getting two turns and a kill at the finish. In the fourth round he had hard work to secure the turn from Grace Greenwood, but succeeded in shutting her out pointlessly in a short course.

Lord Brazen 6, Charming Thought 2—Brazen led by five lengths and had it all his own way to the kill. Time, :23½.

Redwood Lad 4, Harry the Hobo 0—After a short undecided, in which Lad led, he led again, turned to Harry, who failed to make any use of him. Lad then killed brilliantly. Time, :17.

Second round—Tiburon 7, Aeolus 4—Tiburon led by a scant length and worked inside Aeolus in a short course. Time, 0:22½. Tiburon immediately showed in front of Aeolus in the run-up, but when the hare was reached the For Freedom puppy just drew by for the turn, after this it was all Tiburon. Aeolus was then retired to the Plate and was beaten by Talk To Me, after he had secured the turn by four lengths.

Dom Pedro 5, Talk To Me 1—Dom Pedro led by three lengths in the undecided, and there was a smart series of exchanges on a racing hare, which Talk To Me killed. In the runner Dom led by the same margin as in his previous course, swept around with his hare and killed, after Talk To Me served him on his only point. Time, :17.

Prairie Bird 28, Society Belle 0—This was the flukiest and most surprising course of the day. Belle was leading by four lengths and going away, when she struck the "hole" and came a complete "copper." Recovering, she rushed to get in and overran her game and again tumbled over and over. Bird now had undisputed possession, and Belle seemed dazed and hurt. Bird ran up the largest score of the day before the relief dog interfered. Time, 2:00.

Cloudburst 3, Troublesome 1. Time, :25.

Northern Express 16, Lily Doe 2—The Futurity winner led by three lengths, and as Lily went very wide on the turns Express had no trouble winning. He went fast, worked close and stuck to it pluckily. Time, :50.

Sisquoc 27, True Beau 8—It was a working hare. Sisquoc led by three lengths and outworked the other on a hare that was made to order for him. Beau was right there at all stages and put up a fine struggle. The hare had them dead beat at the end. Time, 2:00 (2:15).

Sacramento Boy 5, King Cashier 3—Boy led by two lengths, but went wide on his turn and lost the location of his hare. King evened up the score when Boy made the kill. Time, :23.

Barefoot Boy got a bye—Barefoot Boy then ran the bye with Wyrs, Joe Pasha being drawn.

Laughing Water 10, Scotch Reel 2—Laughing Water led by four lengths, always kept the hare in front of her and won decisively. Time, :30.

Union Star 6, North Pole 5—Star led by four lengths, Pole acting as if unsighted. In a sharp mix-up Star had the foot and won. Time, :55.

Linlithgow Lass 12, Dexter B. 6—Lass led by three lengths, and outscored the black in a give-and-take course. Time, 1:01.

Texas Betty 15, Bright Chain 11—Betty led four lengths on the longest slip of the day and had all the best of the early part of the long course, but Chain outstayed him at the end. The relief dog saved Betty. Time, 2:00. (2:10).

Grace Greenwood 7, Confidence 3—Grace led by four lengths and outworked the dog at every part of a short smart course. Time, :33.

Roman Athlete 2, Black Coon 0—Athlete was lucky. They both got there at the same time, getting the hare in the "hole," Athlete snatched her away from the other. Time, :10.

Redwood Lad 9 Lord Brazen 6—After a short undecided, in which Brazen led by four lengths, they went back to slips. Brazen led again and had the best of the early exchanges, but was clearly outscored and outstayed in the finishing work. Time, 1:30.

Third round—Tiburon 8, Dom Pedro 4—Dom led two lengths, turned and wrenched twice before placing Tiburon. The latter was very clever and scored rapidly. Dom then came in, ran up a smart series of wrenches before the hare escaped. Time, :50.

Prairie Bird 16, Patricia 6—Patricia led to the hare by two lengths and held her for a short series of wrenches. Prairie Bird then got in and had the rest of it her own way. Time, 1:45.

Northern Express 7, Cloudburst 4—There was nothing in the lead, both getting there together. The puppy had the luck of a smart course and won a very close thing. Time, :35.

Sacramento Boy 11, Sisquoc 6—Boy led out of slips, but Sisquoc drew even and had his shoulders ahead as they reached the hare, which came around to him. He was not keen on his nare, and allowed the Boy to get possession. Sisquoc, apparently, had the escape in mind just now, and stopped, evidently expecting puss to go home. She went the other way, and the Boy wrenched rapidly, showing splendid form. Sisquoc got in at the end for a couple of wrenches and a kill. Sisquoc was evidently off edge, and ran dully after the run-up. Time, 1:00.

Barefoot Boy 4, Laughing Water 1—Boy led by four lengths and turned to the bitch, who turned the hare into his mouth. Time, 0:15.

Union Star 6, Linlithgow Lass 1—Star led by three lengths and turned. He fell and the Lass had undisputed possession, but turned back to him for the kill. Time, 0:12.

Grace Greenwood 10, Texas Betty 6—Betty led by a scant margin and more than held her own in a smart series of exchanges. Grace then got possession of a twisting hare and had the rest of it her way. Time, 0:42.

Roman Athlete 8, Redwood Lad 4—Athlete led from slips by two lengths, and as Lad fell in the miry hole in center field, went up ten lengths to the good. Lad did nice work after he nicked in, but Athlete was also very clever and won. Time, 0:30.

Fourth round—Tiburon 5, Prairie Bird 3—Tiburon led by a length on a short slip and to a weak hare. It was nip and tuck until the bitch pecked trying to kill. Tiburon dashed in, wrenched and picked up. He had the foot of the bitch and worked inside her, but the slip was short and the trial unsatisfactory for a Waterloo Cup. Time, 0:13.

Northern Express 10, Sacramento Boy 8—Boy, favored, led by an open length and the hare came around to him. He was going well at this time and was outfooting and outworking the puppy. He scored six points before he placed the youngster. Once in possession, Express worked with a will now and wrenched rapidly. Boy plainly let up in his energy and did not try hard. Express worked game and true. Sacramento Boy killed.

Barefoot Boy 28, Union Star 15—In a limit course the Boy showed superiority throughout.

Roman Athlete 2, Grace Greenwood 0—Roman Athlete led and picked up his hare on the straight run, winning impressively.

Semi-final—Tiburon 5, Northern Express 3—There was a tremendously rapid exchange on a weak hare. Puss shifted with the utmost rapidity. Tiburon turned to the puppy, who wrenched twice and killed. To a person who had not scored the course it looked as if the puppy won. Time, :18.

Roman Athlete 5, Barefoot Boy 1—Athlete led by a scant half length to a weak hare. He turned and wrenched and served the Boy, who turned to him. Athlete wrenched and killed, winning an easy victory. Time, :20.

Final—Roman Athlete 3, Tiburon 1—Tiburon raced up three lengths in front on a long slip, and tripped his hare. It seemed all over, but the dog fell and puss got away. Athlete wrenched twice and killed. The hat came off for an undecided course. Trying it over, they went to the hare as a team. It looked as if Athlete had her neck in front when the hare shifted. The hare shifted away from him, and Tiburon wrenched twice. Athlete then wrenched twice, drove up for a good kill and won the great Waterloo Cup. Time, 1:10.

Waterloo Purse—First Round—Best Brand defeated Crawford Belle, 6 to 5. Time, 0:35.

Viking defeated Tapoca, 10 to 6. Time, 1:45.

Texas Hector defeated Little Vixen, 6-1. Time, 0:30.

Lord Butte defeated Van Nora, 9 to 7. Time, 0:15.

Minnesota Girl defeated Conrad's Best, 14 to 6. Time, 1:20.

The Raider defeated Texas Corker, 11 to 6. Time, 1:05.

Monsoon defeated Mountain Chief, 12 to 2. Time, 2:05.

Our Minnie defeated Maggie N, 4 to 2. Time, 0:10.

Robert Roy, a bye, Lady Bullett being drawn. Time, 0:45.

Whirligig defeated Texas Black Lips, 7 to 5. Time, 2:05.

Lady Bird, a bye, The Rouge being drawn. Time, 0:40.

Warburton defeated J. E. H., 11 to 4. Time, 0:45.

Texas Hoo-Hoo defeated Sir Magic, 11 to 9. Time, 2:15.

Kingstown defeated Texas Bess, 4 to 2. Time, 0:35.

Chelco defeated Rural Artist, 6 to 3. Time, 0:35.

Charming Thought defeated Harry the Hobo, 15 to 1.

Second Round—Best Brand defeated Viking 26 to 8. Time, 2:08.

Lord Butte defeated Texas Hector, 8 to 2. Time, 0:53.

Minnesota Girl defeated The Raider, 7 to 2. Time, 0:30.

Our Minnie defeated Monsoon, 6 to 2. Time, 0:41.

Robert Roy defeated Whirligig, 6 to 4. Time, 0:33.

Warburton defeated Lady Bird, 4 to 2. Time, 0:28.

Texas Hoo-Hoo defeated Kingstown, 5 to 3. Time, 0:34.

Charming Thought defeated Chelco, 8 to 3. Time, 0:54.

Third Round—Lord Butte, a bye, Best Brand being drawn. Time, 0:15.

Minnesota Girl defeated Our Minnie, 8 to 5. Time, 0:42.

Warburton defeated Robert Roy, 6 to 3. Time, 0:24.

Texas Hoo-Hoo defeated Charming Thought, 11-9. Time, 1:20.

Semi-final—Lord Butte defeated Minnesota Girl, 8 to 5. Time, 0:42.

Warburton defeated Texas Hoo-Hoo, 8 to 4. Time, 0:53.

Final—Lord Butte (Barrister-Rash Adventure), L. F. Bartels, Deaver, Colo., defeated Warburton (Epicharmus-Elaine), B. F. Jackson, (n s) St. Louis, 11 to 6.

Waterloo Plate—First Round—Talk to Me defeated Aeolus, 5 to 3. Time, 0:20.

Society Belle defeated T. Bone, 5 to 4. Time, 0:30.

Troublesome defeated Lilly Doe, 3 to 2. Time, 0:08.

King Cashier defeated True Beau, 8 to 2. Time, 0:32.

Scotch Reel, a bye, Joe Pasha being drawn. Time, 0:15.

Dexter B, defeated North Pole, 3 to 0. Time, 0:08.

Confidence, a bye, Bright Chain drawn. Time, 0:20.

Black Coon defeated Lord Brazen, 6 to 1. Time, 0:23.

Second Round—Talk to Me defeated Society Belle, 8 to 6. Time, 0:45.

King Cashier defeated Troublesome, 15 to 9. Time, 2:08.

Dexter B defeated Scotch Reel, 15 to 8. Time, 1:32.

Black Coon defeated Confidence, 6 to 0. Time, 0:20.

Semi final—King Cashier defeated Talk to Me, 16 to 9. Time, 1:20.

Black Coon defeated Dexter B, 15 to 13. Time, 1:27.

Final—Black Coon (Emin Pasha-Mamie Pleasant), J. H. Rosseter, (n s) San Francisco, defeated King Cashier (Battle Royal-Burnette), J. H. Haskins, 6 to 0. Time, 0:20.

Annual Meeting of the State Game and Fish Protective Association.

The annual convention of the California Fish and Game Protective Association was held in Monterey on November 14th and 15th. The attendance of delegates was not as large as had been anticipated.

The Monterey Fish and Game Protective Association under the leadership of its able President, H. A. Green, received the members as they arrived at the depot, and after seeing to their housing introduced them to the Old Capital Club, the rooms and comforts of which were placed at the disposal of the convention. All business meetings were held at the rooms of the club.

The division of the State into Game Districts under the constitutional amendment carried at the last election was the subject that occupied the greatest part of the several meetings. After carefully going over the ground and listening to the views of several sportsmen of the State, lines for districting were readily agreed upon, but it was thought best for the time being, at least, not to press the matter to an issue before the next Legislature.

Such is the impression given out by several garbled press reports of the meeting. As a matter of fact a committee of twelve was appointed to take up the work of districting the State into fish and game zones. When the committee reported on Saturday evening, on final vote the committee's report was refused adoption by a slight majority. It was then too late to do other work on these lines, and therefore the convention failed to accomplish the main thing for which it was assembled. This action may be considered a significant rebuke to the coast "oracle" who has been working for years to accomplish something that is antagonistic to the wishes of the majority of sportsmen and not in the interest of true fish and game protection. Instead, the agitation has been fomented principally that interested parties may be benefited thereby.

The adoption of this constitutional amendment means a radical departure and a distinct step backward in the history of game legislation in California. The arguments in its favor may be summed up in the contention that in so large a State climatic conditions require different game laws in different sections. While this may be true to a certain extent in the case of open seasons, it is not so in matters affecting sale, shipment and the protection of birds that are not game, in all of which it is of the utmost importance that the law should be uniform throughout the State.

Experience has shown that county game legislation is almost sure to be a failure. Local game laws were formerly quite common, but have now been abandoned in all except a half dozen States. In Maryland, North Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia, where such legislation still prevails, the game laws are in an almost hopeless state of confusion. Nearly every county has its own law, and it is practically impossible to secure adequate enforcement of such divers and conflicting regulations. California has fifty-seven counties, and might have fifty-seven different local game laws.

This entanglement is exactly what the "oracle" has been working for. It will be necessary that State and county officials be appointed and who would be the paid guardians of the fish and game interests?

This subject has already, it is claimed, been thoroughly threshed out by the "apostle of game protection" and his chief satellites and will be presented for the action of the State Legislature in due time in the form of a cut and dried bill. Much preliminary work in this respect has been accomplished, it is believed, by one of the deputies of the Commission, who has ample time at his disposal to canvass the State (at the expense of the commonwealth) for the ostensible purpose of fish and game protection on organized lines.

It is also possible that the contemplated legislation to be brought about will be the appointment of a Fish and Game Warden and the necessary officers to make such an office effective. This has been a pet scheme of one of the principal advocates of game protection for some time past. The identity of the most strenuous candidate for the office (and its emoluments) under existing conditions would not be hard to guess. This annual meeting and the organization work in various cities and towns—and the most important of much of it has been fulsome and padded reports furnished the country press, has given much prestige to a campaign on fish and game protection that will doubtless be opened up at the coming session of our Legislature.

Deputy Fish Commissioner C. Vogelsang, the attorney of the Fish Commission, W. H. Cook and several of the deputies of the Commission were in attendance and took part in the deliberations.

On Saturday afternoon a public meeting was held in the Opera House, the object being to explain to the citizens the workings and the benefits of the present game law. A very large attendance was promised and expected, but failed to materialize, as the attractions of a bull-fight gotten up partially for the benefit of the visiting members of the convention proved too great an attraction for the citizens of the old Spanish town. But the meeting was held nevertheless. It opened by a speech of welcome by Mayor Johnson, of Monterey, followed by a paper on the necessities and benefits of game and fish protection by the same gentleman.

An answer followed by President H. T. Payre, of the State Association, in which he thanked the Mayor and the citizens for the kindly reception accorded the convention.

The reading of the programmed papers and the speeches then followed.

W. H. Cook, the attorney of the Fish Commission and official prosecutor of breaches against the present law, gave a very interesting dissertation on the difficulties of the Commission in catching and convicting the offenders, and the wonderful and dark ways by which the latter sought to circumvent the vigilance of the officers.

He was followed by Dr. A. M. Barker of San Jose with a very interesting paper on organization of clubs and sportsmen in general to encompass the aims of the present law, and the actual preservation and increase of game and fish.

After him A. T. Herrmann of San Jose read a paper on "Game Slaughter and Game Protection as Exemplified by the History of Our Continent," and Deputy Fish Commissioner W. R. Welsh of San Francisco closed with a paper on the best and most practical manner of enforcing the present law, and thus get the most satisfactory results for the State at large.

The documents, as well as the oral delivery of W. H. Cook, were well received and generously applauded.

At the final business meeting on last Saturday night the following officers of the association were elected for the coming year: President, H. T. Payne of San Francisco; Vice-Presidents—Dr. A. M. Barker of San Jose, H. A. Green of Monterey, H. W. Keller of Santa Monica, P. S. Kellet of San Diego and — Armstrong of Paso Robles; Secretary, W. W. Richards of San Francisco.

A handsomely gotten up invitation was handed to all delegates, signed by the Board of City Trustees of Paso Robles, the Paso Robles Improvement Club, the Paso Robles Gun Club and the Paso Robles Game Protective Association, inviting the convention to meet on November 14, 1903, in Paso Robles. The invitation being put to a vote was unanimously accepted.

A vote of thanks and appreciation was tendered to the Big Basin Commission and to the Sempervirens Club for the accomplished purchase of that most magnificent of all public parks.

A vote of thanks was also tendered to the Old Capital Club, H. A. Green, the Monterey Game and Fish Protective Association and Romie Jacks for the hospitality and attention shown to the convention.

After adjournment a feast prepared by the club's especial cook in the highest degree of the Spanish kitchen and served in the dining-rooms of the club, accompanied by the best of California claret, closed the festivities and the convention.

A number of the delegates stayed over Sunday to try their luck on Monterey quail, and from last accounts met with much success.

FEATHER AND FIN.

A strange and novel fight in midair between two large eagles was witnessed by Grove de Zaldo and Samuel Pickett while hunting on the Webber ranch, twenty-five miles southeast of San Jose last Sunday. The enraged cries of the birds first attracted the attention of the hunters. For some minutes they circled about each other and then one swooped down upon its rival. For ten minutes the birds were clasped in a death struggle.

Flapping their wings and screeching, they would drop nearly to the ground and then rise hundreds of feet into the air. Finally one of the eagles, stunned by its antagonist's claw or beak, fell to the ground, nearly dead. The hunters were obliged to kill it in order to save a valuable pointer which had rushed upon the bird and would have been torn to pieces.

The eagle was an immense one, measuring ten feet ten inches from tip to tip. Its claws were larger than a man's hand, each talon measuring more than two inches in length.

An English contemporary, the Shooting Times and British Sportsman, says that at a rough calculation not less than 18,000 grouse were killed this year on the Scotch moors, on August 12, the opening day of the season. There is record of 9300 of the above number.

The Japanese have found out how to make lengths of gut for fishing. The strands are six feet long, and the gut appears to be of very fair quality. By the way it seems strange that nowadays people ask for catgut in the fishing-tackle stores. Catgut is made from the gut of animals, while fishing and surgical gut is made from the intestines of the silkworm.

Recent reports from San Jose states that the weather has been very favorable to hunters, both on the marshes and among the hills. Duck hunters perhaps had the better success. There were but few ducks in the fresh water sloughs and along the streams, but hunters who went out in boats from Alviso found game plentiful in the deeper water. Widgeon, sprig, teal and rail were included in the different bags, while a few secured mallard and canvasback. Snipe is perhaps the most plentiful game bird on the local marshes at the present time and in places they are to be found in great abundance.

Quail hunting continues good, especially in the foothills to the east of the valley. A few hunters, however, have their favorite hunting grounds in the range west of the valley and they invariably return with the bag limit. The bright, sunny weather has improved the quail hunting considerably during the past week, as the quail will fly more readily than when the weather is damp.

Thousands of Big Game Hunters in Maine.

Deer and moose continue to be plentiful in the Maine woods, and the visiting hunters continue to break records in the number killed. Last year's great deer record is exceeded by over 500 thus far, and with the moose shipped up to November 8th the season's moose record is better than that of last year. The first week of this month there were taken out of Bangor 646 deer and 30 moose.

The question has arisen prominently with many sportsmen recently regarding the future of Maine's game preserves. Are the hunters killing off the deer faster than they will naturally increase? The Hon. L. T. Carleton says that the number of deer killed legally will have no effect on the number in the woods, but that the illegal killing is the danger which menaces the future of Maine's big game animals.

Fully two thousand hunters were in the Maine woods, with guides and equipments, ready to shoot at the first deer that showed its head on the dawn of the first "open" day, and until December 15th life will be full of peril for the noble buck and the gentle doe, for the Maine game law does not prohibit the killing of does. It is not often that so many sportsmen are on hand at the opening of the season, but it is becoming a custom of men of leisure to go into Maine for fishing, or simply for a rest, early in the summer and remain over for the big game season, and thus the advance guard of gunners was numerous this year.

In addition to the visitors, hundreds of natives were out looking for deer, and the number of men in the woods will constantly increase, reaching probably from 8000 to 10,000 at the height of the season, 5000 being from out of the State. The visitors are going and coming all through the season, and it is estimated that about 10,000 persons go to Maine for the shooting every fall.

If one has the means he may make a luxurious as well as an exciting pastime of moose and deer hunting in Maine, while no man need suffer the hardships incident to a forest journey twenty years ago.

Deer are to be found in most of Maine's sixteen counties, moose only in the northern and eastern parts of the State. The Rangeley lake region abounds in deer, with some moose, and the eastern counties of Hancock and Washington offer fine opportunities for sport, but the great hunting ground is in the vast forest region to the north and east of Bangor, along the line of the railroads to Moosehead lake and Aroostook county, and on the east and west branches of the Penobscot river. Some idea of the amount of game shot in that section may be had from the records of moose and deer shipped over the Bangor & Aroostook railroad. Here are the figures for the last eight years:

Year.	Moose.	Deer
1895	112	1,581
1896	133	2,245
1897	139	2,510
1898	202	3,377
1899	166	3,756
1900	210	3,379
1901	259	3,888

This gives a total for eight years of 1266 moose and 22,161 deer—an average of 153 moose and 2770 deer annually. The figures represent merely the game shipped by rail from the section north and east of Bangor by hunters, chiefly out of the State sportsmen, not including game killed for food purposes in camp or merely for the beads, or the vast number of animals slaughtered by poachers at all seasons, or by sportsmen of the careless class—the "game hogs," who kill wantonly, or "just for the fun of it."

The honors of the chase are not all annexed by hunters of the sterner sex as the following recent hunting notes taken from an exchange show:

Of the party of six Massachusetts people who have been successful in shooting deer in the Dead River region recently two were women. The party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stevens and Henry Livingston of Worcester, and Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Stevens of Boston. Mrs. Stevens has the honor, accorded to few women, of having killed a moose.

Mrs. W. H. Hatch of Cornish returning from a hunting trip in the Moosehead region, brought with her, as trophies of her skill, a black bear and two good sized deer.

N. C. Whittaker of Boston was in Bangor recently on his way home from a hunting trip in the Lobster lake region. He brought down a big buck deer, with the finest head and antlers seen in Bangor this year.

The largest bull moose shot in Maine this season was killed by Walter Young of Cedarville. It weighed a little over 1000 pounds.

Four splendid moose passed through Bangor early this month, all killed in the Washington county region, and all killed by Boston men. It was the best collection of big game seen at the Bangor station at one time this year. The moose were shot by Clarence Worcester, Walter Tracey, Aaron Worcester and Herman Tracey of Boston.

Reports from the Rangeley lake district are that most of the hunters are now wearing happy faces as they come out of the woods. Deer are plentiful, and many good specimens are brought to earth by the sportsmen. Bears are much sought after, even more than the moose. Their natural shyness makes them especially hard to get.

The report of a white moose on the slopes of Mount Bigelow has set all the local hunters wild, and visitors are joining the numbers that are after this unique specimen.

It is estimated by good judges that about 10,000 deer are killed in Maine every year. As to the number of deer in the State estimates vary, but old hunters who have spent their lives in the woods say that the deer population is not far from 100,000, so that a kill of 10,000 annually would take ten per cent from the supply—a drain which should be fully made up by the natural increase of the animals.

The moose, which is the grandest game found in America, is more numerous in Maine than in any other part of the United States, and it is for moose that the veteran and skilled sportsmen go a hunting. Almost any man who knows how to handle a rifle can shoot a deer, especially when he has a good guide to start out the game for him, but it requires steady nerve, courage, skill and patience to get a moose.

Deer are to be found almost anywhere, at almost any time and are frequently seen in droves of twenty to thirty, but the moose generally "flocks by himself," or each pair or family by itself, and he is wary, speedy and pugnacious. In the rutting season a bull moose is about as dangerous a customer as one would care to meet, and it frequently happens that he turns the tables and hunts the hunters.

A few years ago it looked as if the moose species would be exterminated in Maine, but since then, under the protection of wise laws, the animals have somewhat increased in numbers. Chairman Carleton of the State Fish and Game Commission thinks that there has been no great increase of either deer or moose since last year, but there are plenty of deer, and the moose, for some reason unknown, have spread out over a wider territory than for many years.

Sportsmen stopping at licensed sporting camps are not obliged to employ guides, but generally they do so, for it is the guide who does all the hard work and pilots the hunters to success in the quest for game. The Maine game laws may be briefly summarized as follows:

Deer shooting season, October 1st to December 15th, inclusive; legal allowance, two deer to a hunter. Deer or portions of a deer may be shipped out of the State when officially tagged; cost of tag, $2. No tag is required when game is accompanied by owner. Penalty for illegal killing of deer, $40 fine and costs and four months' imprisonment for each offense.

Moose season, October 15th to December 1st. A sportsman may kill one bull moose, which must be at least a year old and have at least two prongs to its horns. One bull moose or parts thereof may be shipped out of the State, when officially tagged; cost of tag, $5. No tag required when game is accompanied by owner. Penalty for illegal killing of moose, fine of $500 and four months' imprisonment. The imprisonment clause is seldom enforced in the case of either deer or moose when the fine is paid.

Cow moose and calf moose are protected by a perpetual close time and caribou by a close time of six years from October 15, 1899.

Contrary to a statement recently published Maine has no hunters' license law. A license law is proposed and may be passed by the Legislature next winter, imposing a tax upon each non-resident who hunts big game in the State. This revenue would provide money enough to maintain a warden service, would prevent the illegal killing of deer and would preserve the game for those men who are content to seek it in a legitimate manner. The amount of the individual tax proposed is $10 per annum for hunting deer and $20 per annum for hunting deer and moose.

Some statisticians have estimated that the ten thousand sportsmen who visit Maine in a season have behind them in the hands of various persons who serve them two and a half million dollars. That is a probably an exaggeration, but at the rate of $100 from each visitor Maine would get a general revenue of one million dollars a year from her big game.

A strange freak of nature was brought into Norway, Me, on Oct. 6, by F. J. Cornish of Bowdoinham. It was an apparent cross between the moose and a Jersey cow, and was perfectly blind. Mr. Cornish, stated the mother of the calf had been running wild in the woods during the summer, and soon after being placed in the barn gave birth to the calf. The animal is somewhat wild, being restless when in the vicinity of dogs or men, and it prefers to browse on shrubs and young tree shoots. It is about the color of a moose, has a hump on its back, but has no tail. It is believed by Mr. Cornish that the animal was sired by a bull moose.

Mrs. W. W. Sweeney writes that her pretty Jap, Inglenook Zaza, has a litter to Jap H. of three dog puppies beautifully marked, strong and vigorous and showing not the least indication of the weakness attributed usually to Japanese Spaniels.

Like all good things, Jackson's Napa Soda has a dozen counterfeits. Watch out!

Oakland Show.

The premium list for the Oakland show is out and judging from the demand for it there will be a good entry across the bay. Among the judges announced is Mrs. W. C. Ralston for Cockers. This, we believe, is the initial appearance of a lady in any judging ring on the Coast. Mrs. Ralston is a prominent Cocker fancier and knows the breed thoroughly. The management is to be congratulated upon its enterprise in securing the services of so prominent a leader among the fancy. Great Danes will be passed upon by Dr. Musser, of Oakland. St. Bernards and Mastiffs will be looked after by Mr. Jos. Cutten, a well known breeder and fancier. N. W. Hickman will find a pretty hot class of Fox Terriers among which to distribute the ribbons. Mr. Fred. Clark, of London, Eng., has agreed to judge Bulldogs. Pointers, Setters and all hounds will be judged by J. X. De Witt. John Bradshaw will judge the other breeds.

This being the first show held here where all of the judges were practically local selections, the function is regarded by some in the nature of an experiment. In this respect we are sanguine that the judging will be a successful feature of the show. Why a small show out here should always be handicapped by the heavy expense of bringing a judge from the East is more than we could ever fathom. The gate is never strong enough for the outlay; while a few fanciers may be willing to "put up" for it, it is a drag on the enthusiasm of the majority.

The premium list contains 271 classes. The prizes are medals and diplomas in the regular and local class and entrance fees in the team contests. Local classes are provided for in most breeds, a move that will be found acceptable to Oakland exhibitors. Team classes are also arranged for nearly all breeds. The entries in the veteran classes (dogs or bitches over 5 years old) should bring a number of good sires and brood bitches of many breeds together.

Thomas Banks will attend to Spratts benching and feeding, which means the dogs shown will be properly looked after.

Premium lists can be obtained and entries made at the office of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, No. 36 Geary St., this city, where Superintendent Bradshaw will have his headquarters.

Much has been said and written against the disposition of the Bulldog, claiming that he is ugly, ferocious, quarrelsome and lacking in intelligence. It has been the experience that they are tractable, full of affection, and possess remarkable reasoning powers and a wonderful memory for either kindness or injury. They are very sensitive to praise or to ridicule, and while they are excellent watchdogs, are very quiet, seldom barking, and when they do only one or two short muffled barks and a deep growl. They do not start a fight, but if thoroughly roused are difficult to stop.

The puppies grow rapidly, and it is very interesting to watch a litter develop; they play like kittens and look so odd with their quaint, wrinkled faces. They mature slowly and seldom get their full growth much under a year and a half or two years old."

THE FARM.

The Mutton Sheep.

As with beef cattle there is a certain parallelogram for shape that one looks for in the mutton sheep. The judge will probably take this into consideration by sizing the sheep in his eye before any handling whatever.

An ideal mutton sheep is never without good legs that come to the ground squarely and give every indication of possessing power and strength to support the body. The sheep with legs short, stocky and set well apart will invariably attract the attention of the judge of good mutton sheep, says the Drovers' Journal.

The mutton sheep with fine bone seldom finds favor with the judge. He is inclined to interpret such indications as lack of vigor and hardiness and indifferent response to good feeding.

The long, narrow face is never considered anything but a weakness among the mutton types. Instead, one desires to see the short nose and broad face, indicating heavy conformation.

A mutton sheep with a "ewe neck" is about as much out of place as a dairy cow without the pronounced wedge shape formation. The drop in the neck in front of the shoulders called "ewe neck" is invariably avoided almost instinctively by both judge and expert feeder.

A mutton sheep is never without good depth from the top of the shoulder and a point midway between the forelegs. An equally essential feature and which follows chest depth in close co-relation is girth of heart. It is hard to find a mutton sheep too strong in either of these two points.

A prominent backbone or spine is avoided, as it is a sure indication of a deficiency of flesh along the back and loin. It is of some considerable importance that a good mutton sheep be close coupled—that is, the distance between the last rib and the hip joints be comparatively short.

Among mutton sheep the wool is of minor consequence, though it must be considered in connection with the other points of the carcass.

The judge of a mutton sheep never fails to pay a little attention at least to the thigh. There is a certain law of co-relation of parts existing throughout the whole conformation. One never sees a poor thigh on a first class mutton body.

There are numerous other points that the judges will invariably run over in judging a good mutton carcass, and these are but a few of the most distinct, but will give a glimpse of some of the more prominent features.

The Art of Making Butter.

The work I am familiar with is making butter from cream separated with a centrifugal separator, writes an old butter maker. In the first place I receive the milk at the weigh-can myself. I believe it is half the battle to be a good judge of milk, having as it does so many different flavors. If I find any that does not come up to the standard I reject it. When milk is received I heat it to the temperature desired, usually 85 degrees. Then my separa is started. When I get through separating I add my starter, and again see to the temperature of the cream. I believe in high ripening and long cooling, and the most of this butter is made by this process. Cream ripened as high as 70 and 75 degrees Fahrenheit has given me good results. I do not believe in low ripening for several reasons, which I will not now take time to explain. As to starters I do not use any all in the spring and summer when the cows can get the good sweet grass that makes butter with that high aroma about which we hear our commission men speak so much. Starters are, in my judgment, meant to overcome the stable conditions when the cows cannot get the fresh air and sunshine that God intended them to have.

I believe in exercising good judgment in every detail of the work, especially in ripening the cream. Always stir my cream considerable during the ripening process and watch the development of the acid very slowly. I like my cream to have a velvety appearance in the morning when I go to churn; then the temperature is looked after, and if found too warm crushed ice is used; on the other hand if too cold, some lukewarm water is used. When the desired temperature is reached the cream is strained into the churn, color is added in desired quantity and the churn is started. If everything is right, in about twenty-five minutes the butter has come in fine granules about the size of wheat grains. Then the buttermilk is drawn off and water is added to the butter to wash the milk out. When thoroughly washed take butter out of churn to be worked. Salting comes next and I have my own way of doing this work as every other butter maker no doubt has. Salting comes next, and I use three-quarters to one ounce of salt to the pound of butter, according to the size of granules and amount of moisture.—Rural Californian.

Butter and Milk.

For the dairyman the breeds of cows that he needs seem to be, if butter is wanted, the Jersey or Guernsey, and when the object is quantity of milk the Ayrshire or the Holstein. The Jersey and Ayrshire will thrive on poor pastures and less barn feed than the Guernsey and Holstein. But with all of them it is "half in the breed and half in the feed," as the old story goes. They cannot do their best unless they are properly and liberally fed. Make a balanced ration for the product wanted, and give as much as they will digest, feeding lightly when they first are fresh, and gradually increasing till the limit is reached. Let the beef men have the Shorthorn and the Hereford, and the breeder of working oxen the Hereford or the Devon. If one cannot afford to purchase the pure bred cows, at least get a pure bred bull and grade up the herd to the required quality, saving the heifer calves from the best cows and continue with the pure bred sire until there is but one part out of sixteen or thirty-two that is not pure bred. For practical dairying it will then be as good as the pure bred. The foregoing hints are worthy the consideration of the dairymen.

The dairy cow is largely an artificial creation. She has been made so by man. Her wedge shape, her capacious udder, her long period of milking, her large stomach, and great laboratory for the turning of food into milk, represent a long period of breeding and feeding to these ends. Decide upon what the cow is to do. Always select for a purpose. Never expect to get the highest type of milk and beef covered with the same skin. This fact it would be well to remember by those who are in the cattle business.

At a recent meeting of the Prairie Cattle Company in Edinburgh, Scotland, resolutions were adopted approving of the purchase of the Reynolds' ranch in Texas of 220,000 acres, creating an issuing debenture stock of the value of £70,000 and increasing the capital of the company to £235,000 by the creation of 40,000 ordinary shares of £1 15s each. The purchase price was £58,000 and it was estimated that about £22,000 would be required for the purchase of additional cattle and for other purposes.

W. B. Gibson, the well known cattle breeder of Woodland, Yolo county, has just returned from the big cattle show held at Kansas City. He brought a carload of young Shorthorn bulls and heifers back with him, all of which are pedigreed stock and excellent individuals.

In the midst of the record-smashing receipts at the Chicago Stock Yards, the big export buyers cannot find enough fat muttons to supply the demand. A prominent exporter, Mr. Levi B. Doud, said last week, "we wanted 2,000 head and barely got 900. The week before I wanted 1,000 and secured but 300 fit to cross the water, and they were nothing to brag about." A few years ago it was an easy matter to get fat native muttons and a good sprinkling of western sheep were fit for the export trade, but this year the situation has radically changed, because the quality of sheep fit for export trade is not on the market. R. Fletcher, one of the large London merchants in the frozen mutton trade, has just returned from an Australian trip, where he found that the drouth disaster had not been overestimated and declares that Great Britain will need large quantities of U. S. mutton during the coming winter.

The American Angora Goat Breeders' Association is only a little over two years old and has over 40,000 head of goats recorded. The goat men are a lively crowd.

Scrub cattle turned on the range far from the haunts of men, thrive and multiply. Hogs do the same, as was well known in Texas many years ago, when the woods were full of them. But our higher bred cattle and almost snoutless hogs, left without care would die out or degenerate to scrubs, from which they sprang. Trees are subject to similar laws. Our native forest trees flourish, without pruning or cultivation, and wild plants that have never been subject to man's control are the hardest the earth produces. Orchard trees, developed by art and man's device from the wild stock, will speedily revert if left to care for themselves. Fruit trees, to maintain the high character to which they have attained, must have constant care; of the same kind that has made them what they are.

and consists of dams of such stake horses, as Crescendo, Kid Hampton, Phyz, Potente, The Major, Ella Smith. These mares have all been sired to the grandest bred son of the immortal St. Simon on the Pacific Coast imp. Avonius. This horse is only a five-year-old and will be sold at the conclusion of the sale of broodmares.

This sale will afford horse breeders an opportunity to get some of the handsomest mares as well as the best bred at their own price and owners of stock farms large or small as well as farmers should attend it as it is the chance of a lifetime. Catalogues will be ready for distribution next Thursday.

There will also be sold by order of Messrs. Burns & Waterhouse, W. J. Tayler of Vancouver, Prul Lane and other owners a consignment of youngsters and horses in training that are well known to all race fans. This sale will take place December 11th. Catalogues will be issued for this combination sale immediately.

Alfalfa as a Pork Maker.

F. D. Coburn, Secretary of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, in his book entitled "Alfalfa," says:

"The hog is much more of a grass animal by nature than it has, in many cases, any chance to be under domestication. The successful feeder, however, recognizes the fact that the most profitable gain can be made on good pasture with a small allowance of grain to finish for the market. Clover is a great favorite for hog pasture, but those who have tried both clover and alfalfa find the alfalfa greatly superior. It stands pasturing better than clover and is a better feed. Alfalfa affords an ideal hog pasture, and if judiciously treated and good hogs are raised, there is no part of the farm that will give the satisfaction that the alfalfa pasture does. Pigs weighing thirty to sixty pounds, twenty to thirty head per acre, put on alfalfa pasture in the spring, should ordinarily make a gain of 100 pounds each. Hogs may be left to subsist exclusively on the green alfalfa, but better results are obtained by feeding with it a small quantity of grain. Exceedingly large returns are obtained from the small quantities fed; the alfalfa being green and bulky, needs the grain to balance its effect. The pasturage not only affords a cheap growth, but the bulky character expands the digestive tract of the hog, thus enabling it to utilize a large quantity of feed when the finishing period comes, which is a very important consideration."

Clover as an Egg Producer.

Experience has demonstrated the value of clover for egg producing time and again. Clover has just the material in it to form eggshell, and hence it becomes an essential part of every ration fed to the chickens. It may not be generally understood that there are nearly thirty pounds of lime contained in each 1000 pounds of clover. The chickens fed daily with clover will consequently prove better egg layers than those denied it. The clover hay should be given to chickens in winter in quantities sufficient to satisfy them, and to make them eat more it is desirable sometimes to prepare it in various ways. Cook and chop it up and mix it with meal and other articles. This will sometimes induce the hens to consume a great amount of clover every day. Cut up into short lengths and mix up with warm mash and then feed only as fast as the chickens will clean it up each day is probably the economical way to feed the clover. Some cut the second crop of clover and place it in the poultry yard for the chickens to eat and scratch over at pleasure. This of itself is all right, but it is rather wasteful. More than half of the clover will be lost, and the chickens do not actually eat much more than the leaves. The stalks contain most of the lime, and these should be prepared so the chickens will consume them. Of all foods that can be raised on a farm for poultry clover is not only the best, but probably the cheapest, and a field of it is an essential to success as a pasture field is necessary to the success of dairying.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

Ducks.

The man who goes in the duck business should do so with his eyes open. He must expect to have to learn, and to learn one thing at a time. He should start with a few thoroughbred ducks and learn to properly care for them; then increase his stock as his knowledge of the proper care of ducks increases; then, with good care and attention to the little things, his success will be assured.

The fall is a good time to start in the duck business. At this time of the year you had better start in with the ducks. In the spring you can start in with the eggs, but in the fall ducks are what you want. You can get the ducks quite cheap in the fall, while if you wait until the spring they would cost about twice as much. If you start out in the duck business, remember that good ducks cost high. Buy the best you can afford. Good ducks usually bring good results, while poor ones seldom pay well. The show room is a logical place to find out how good your ducks are. The raising of ducks will become more and more popular. Therefore, I do not hesitate to predict a wonderful increase in the demand for ducks of all kinds in the near future. While this demand is going on for the practical, it will have its influence to boom all aquatics in the exhibition room.—Pacific Tree and Vine.

It seems curious that so few people are able to tell the difference between butter and oleomargarine, because there is a very simple and easy method of distinguishing them. The test will serve when a good chemist would fail after he has made a chemical analysis, for good oleomargarine has very nearly the same components butter has, even under chemical analysis. There is good and bad oleomargarine as well as different qualities of butter. After eating a piece of very fat meat or gravy made from fat meat there remains a greasy taste. When an expert dealer considers the purchase of a lot of butter, he has one of the packages opened. From this he takes a sample about as big as a patty served at restaurants. Placing this in his mouth he mashes it around and lets it grow soft until it is what might be called mushy. He then rejects it. If the substance is oleomargarine a lardy taste will remain. There will be a little grease sticking to the membranes of the mouth, no matter how finely the imitation may be made. If it is pure butter there will be no taste or grease.

SPAVIN CURE.

Here are the actual experiences of those who have tried "Save-the-Horse" Spavin Cure, results that carry "Save-the-Horse" over skepticism, prejudice and uncertainty. No man need see his horse suffer and become incapacitated when such facts prove convincingly the possibilities of this remedy.

Normandy, Mo.
I will gladly testify to the curative power of "Save-the-Horse." My horse had ringbone; was very lame, but after applying the remedy as directed the lameness disappeared. I worked him most of the time. I think "Save-the-Horse" is a wonderful remedy and will recommend it to my friends.
C. L. FILLING

Fall River, Mass.
"Save-the-Horse" was not for my own horse, but for a customer, Mr. A. Kelly, Little Compton, R. I. I had not seen him from the time I ordered and shipped the remedy until about a week ago, when he called to let me know how it did the work. I had requested him to do this, as it was the first time I had heard of the preparation, and was curious to hear of the result. He was perfectly satisfied with it and considered the money well spent. He said the horse had two spavins, and very sore ones, but of how long duration I did not ask; horse growing thin and was in great distress, but after ten days' treatment with "Save-the-Horse" the soreness entirely left and the horse began to fat up. The night he called at the store he had the horse hitched with another and it looked well and showed no lameness.

ISAAC U. WOOD Druggist, 1414 So. Main st.

Grass Valley, Cal.
Our horse was lame in the ankle, caused from continually knocking with the other foot, and he was lame on it for about one year, and when I started to train him it came on again. He was so lame he could not even jog, so I blistered him and did most everything to get him well, but I never freed it. and it looked as though he would not be able to race again; but I concluded to try one bottle of "Save-the-Horse," and it did save my horse, for I used it three days and then worked him two slow heats and he did not show lame, and so I used the whole bottle, and he is as sound today as he was the day he was foaled. I trained him and got him ready for his races, and the lameness has not come back on him yet. The ankle is getting stronger all the time and the first race out this year he won easy in three straight heats, at Colusa, trotting one heat in 2:30 1/4 and the first half in 1:07, and is ready today to trot the best race of his life. Whenever I have a horse affected in any shape with weak tendons or weak ankles I shall

The fire iron is uncertain, blistering is less effective than the fire iron, and both necessitate laying up the horse from four weeks to two months. Arsenic, mercurial and poisonous compounds produce irreparable injury.
"Save-the-Horse" eliminates all these factors. Horse can be worked continuously.

It can be applied at any time, anywhere, any place, and in all conditions and extremes of weather—hot or cold. And no matter what the age, condition or development of the case or previous failures in treating, the concentrated, penetrating absorbing power of this remedy is unfailing, and no case can withstand the force of its action, whether a Bone or Bog Spavin, Ringbone, Curb, Thoroughpin, Splint, Capped Hock, Shoe Boil, Wind Puff, Weak or Sprained Tendons or Lameness.

$5.00 per bottle Written guarantee with every bottle given under our seal and signature, constructed solely to satisfy and protect you fully. Need of second bottle is almost impossible, except in rarest of cases. Guarantee covers effectiveness of one bottle.

We will advise you frankly as to the possibility of the remedy effecting a cure. Give explicit particulars, give the veterinarian's diagnosis, if he is competent—inform us fully as to the age, development, location of swellings, lameness, action and previous treatment.

QUINN'S OINTMENT FOR HORSES

stands at the head of all veterinary remedies. Such troubles as Spavins, Curls, Windpuffs, Splints, Bunches have no terrors for a horse if the master keeps and applies Quinn's Ointment. All well known horsemen speak of it in the highest terms:

Miller & Sibley of Franklin, Pa., owners of St. Bel, brother of late Ben Boy, write, "We have used Quinn's Ointment with great success and believe it fulfills all claimed for it. We cheerfully recommend it to our friends." For Curls, Splints, Spavins or Bunches it has no equal.

GIBBS' CELEBRATED PROCESS OF RAPID TAXIDERMY

In Practical Use Over Twenty-Five Years.

Used Everywhere in America. Hundreds of Testimonials. Try and Be Convinced.
Start a Class. Money in It. Be Your Own Taxidermist.

Naturalists, Collectors, Gunners, Anglers, Outers, Boys, Girls, and all others interested in nature and anxious to preserve the specimens taken in wood and field, have all felt the need of a simple method of preservation, which is free from intricacies and expensive.

There is a method of rapid taxidermy now in extensive use, which meets the requirements of all amateurs who wish a practical and inexpensive method of preserving the trophies of the outing and collecting trip. This is not the old system of so-called stuffing, so expensive, laborious and disappointing, but is a rapid system, which anyone can learn at once and which is guaranteed to give satisfaction.

By this process you may preserve the beautiful plumage of the grouse and woodcock, or the pluck of a buck's head, or the showy feathers of the tanager. Boys, girls and all others can do good work and may make money, as mounted heads and birds find a ready sale, and besides you may teach your friends and decorate the school-room, office and dining-room with native birds and other attractions. If you are in doubt, then get your friends to go in with you and start a class, for when several work together there is an advantage and the expense is next to nothing.

On the receipt of $1, cash or stamps, I will send full printed instructions for mounting birds, heads, mammals, etc., and all materials for mounting and preserving specimens—including prepared compound, together with full directions for dressing skins with the hair on for rugs and robes, so that you will not be to the expense of one cent.

Remember, I Guarantee Satisfaction or Money Refunded.

THREE DOLLARS A YEAR

GOV. TREACY (Grandson of Berlin 3514), Champion Light Harness Stallion of Australia.

DIGITALIS 2:25½ (by Daly 2:15), Second Prize, Light Harness Stallion.
BRED AT ROSE DALE FARM, SANTA ROSA, CAL.

California Blood in Australia.

Among the callers at the office of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN last week was Mr. William Bouie Veirs, a son of old Dixie, being a native of the State of Maryland, but for nearly a score of years a resident of Melbourne, Australia, where he is engaged in business. Mr. Veirs, true to the instincts of his Southern blood, is an enthusiast when horses are up for consideration. His especial favorite is the American trotter, and during the past few years he has purchased in California several highly bred animals for his farm of 560 acres known as "The Rancho" and situated on the east side of the beautiful valley of Pascoevale, a short distance from the Australian metropolis which is now Mr. Veir's home.

Two years ago Mr. Veirs visited the Rose Dale Stock Farm at Santa Rosa and purchased the stallion Digitalis 2:25½ by Daly 2:15, dam Cygnet by Steinway; also several mares and colts by Daly and St. Whips, a son of Whips, sire of Azote 2:04½, etc.

Last spring Mr. Veirs purchased from the Palo Alto Stock Farm a two-year-old colt by Mendocino 2:19½ out of Aerolite by Palo Alto 2:08½, second dam Manette (dam of the great Arion 2:07½) by Nutwood. This colt was shown in the prize ring within a few weeks after he had landed in Melbourne and won the blue ribbon over a big field of youngsters shown at one of the leading shows of Australia. Mr. Veirs had the colt registered as Dixie Alto before shipping him from the United States, a combination cognomen in which the owner remembered his old home as well as the celebrated farm where the colt was bred.

It is Mr. Veirs' intention to breed in Australia the very highest type of the light harness horse, and he has certainly selected wisely for his foundation stock. There is no better bred colt in America than Dixie Alto, and he is one of the most promising young trotters ever foaled at that cradle of speed, Palo Alto Stock Farm.

On the first page of this issue of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN will be found two half-tone engravings which are excellent portraits of the stallions they represent. Both stallions are owned by Mr. Veirs. Gov. Treacy is an Australian-bred horse and is a grandson of Berlin 3514, a son of Blackbird 402 that was sent to the antipodes from California years ago, and that has proved a successful sire in that country. Gov. Treacy's picture is published to show the type of horse that suits the eye of the Australian breeder, as he is a champion in the show ring there, having won innumerable blue ribbons and beaten all comers. At the last Geelong show Gov. Treacy was awarded first prize and Digitalis second prize. It will be noticed that both horses have great substance and good bone, as well as style and quality. Although Gov. Treacy won the blue ribbon from Digitalis in the ring, Mr. Veirs tells us he would not give one horse like the Californian for a dozen like the first-prize winner, and that there is no comparison whatever as to their speed.

The two mares by Daly that Mr. Veirs took to Melbourne with Digitalis are doing well. Diana Rose has started seven times, won five times and been second twice. Mary Daly, the other, has also won and taken a record of 2:25. The trotting there is on a turf track and many of the horses go under saddle. There is a growing interest in trotting affairs and the breeders are looking to the United States for stallions and brood mares to improve their stock. Mr. Veirs left this week for New York, and will spend a couple of months in the East and at his old home in Maryland before returning to Australia.

Ed. Geers' Two-Minute Trotter.

Ed. Geers says that the fastest horse he ever drove was Lord of the Manor, full brother to Lady of the Manor 2:04½, the world's champion pacing mare. Geers says this is the only trotter he ever drove that could outfoot Robert J. 2:01½. Lord of the Manor was among the horses Geers took to California in 1895, and which, in returning, was in a wreck. The horse was so badly frightened that he never recovered from the shock, and all efforts to train him afterwards proved fruitless. He was a handsome horse, and the Hamlins sold him for $5000 for breeding purposes. He much resembled the $30,000 Dare Devil in general conformation. "I had the two-minute trotter in that horse," sighed Geers. "If I never had taken that California trip Lord of the Manor would have surprised the world. He is the only horse I ever trained for the Hamlins for which I would have advised them to refuse $100,000, if offered."

The once famous stallion Jerome Eddy 2:16½ is now owned in Vermont, and at twenty-seven years he is well preserved. At one time he was considered to be a candidate for the stallion record and was purchased by H. C. Jewett for the sum of $25,000.

Antrim Farm Sale.

The Occidental Horse Exchange held its first yearling sale of the season on Tuesday evening of this week, when the colts and fillies from Chas. Kerr's Antrim Farm was disposed of. The sale was very successful and fair prices were obtained. The highest price received was $925, paid by Chas. Patterson for the Artillery-Virginia Dare colt. The total received for the 25 head sold was $5855, an average of $234.20 per head. The sales were as follows:

Chestnut filly by Yo El Rey, dam Amanda, to Thos. Neubauer for $55.

Bay colt by imp. Reggie, dam Belle Platte, to Barney Schreiber for $100.

Bay colt by Lew Weir, dam Blondinette, to R. E. Mulcahy for $100.

Brown colt by Herald, dam Resella, to Vic Gilbert for $160.

Bay colt by imp. Artillery, dam Rill, to Tom Kiley for $300.

Bay colt by Yo El Rey, dam Snowflake II., to Geo. Webb for $250.

Bay filly by imp. Artillery, dam Victoria, to Pete Smith for $75.

Black filly by imp. Artillery, dam Virginia Dare, to C. T. Patterson for $925.

Black filly imp. Artillery, dam Virjean, to W. L. Stanfield for $125.

Chestnut filly by Rubicon, dam Geneva, to W. Donathan for $225.

Gray colt by Indio, dam Victrix, to George Webb for $225.

The last two yearlings were the property of James McDonnell.

Two-Minute Performances.

More than a score of years ago writers discussed the possibilities of the two-minute trotter. Take the blood lines of the fastest performers, with the steady evolution of speed, it was confidently predicted that the day was not far distant when two-minute speed would be an accomplished event in harness records. It was in 1884 that Jay Eye See trotted at Providence, R. I., in 2:10, and this mark was quickly lowered to 2:08½ by the dowager queen Maud S. This performance was consummated to the high-wheel sulky, and has not since been defeated, except by Sumol, that reduced the record to 2:08½. Alix 2:03½, and other speedy trotters essayed the task, but failed to equal the record.

It was anticipated that the champion would be bred in the Hambletonian lines, as this family, in its several branches, showed the greatest flight of speed. Improved tracks and the pneumatic sulky have assisted harness performers in their invasion of the domain of time records. A singular coincidence of the world's champions is that they all carry the blood of Rysdyk's Hambletonian. Nancy Hanks that startled the world in 1892 by trotting a mile in 2:04, was sired by a son of Hambletonian. Alix, the dead queen of the turf, was toned by lines that traced to the Orange county celebrity, and her mile in 2:03½ was a natural sequence of her royal breeding. The Abbot is a great-grandson of Hambletonian, and his mile in 2:03½ was no surprise to the students of the breeding problem. The reigning champion, Cresceus 2:02½, traces in the paternal lines to the old progenitor of extreme speed, Hambletonian. Dan Patch 1:59½, traces to Hambletonian through one of his greatest sons, George Wilkes.

The fact that the champion trotter was not able to reduce his record of 2:02½ this season demonstrates that the 2:00 mark for trotters is so near and yet so far from actual accomplishment. The history of championship animals shows that it is no easy task to breed and develop a record-breaker. The Village farm is the only great establishment that has succeeded in this particular, as attested by the performance of The Abbot 2:03½. It is probable that 2:00 speed will yet be attained by the trotter, but the performance will be so rare that trotters of this caliber will never be common.—Spirit of the West.

Death of J. H. Outhwaite.

It is with deep regret that we inform our readers of the death of J. H. Outhwaite, whose death occurred at a New York hospital, Saturday, November 15th, resulting from an operation for gall stones.

Mr. Outhwaite was one of Cleveland's wealthiest and most successful business men, having been prominently identified with the iron ore industry for many years. Owing to poor health he went to California in the early eighties, taking up his residence at Pasadena, Cal., and having always taken a deep interest in the light harness horse, he engaged in the breeding industry in a small way, securing the trotting stallion Daghestan 2:23½ by Stamboul 2:07½. About this time he owned the trotting mare Nellie G. 2:20, that was a prominent factor on the Grand Circuit. Among the animals bred by Mr. Outhwaite that have been heard from are La Honda 2:12½ and George Wilton 2:12½. His health having improved he returned to Cleveland in 1893 and was one of the charter members of the Gentlemen's Driving Club of Cleveland, always taking a great interest in the local matinees, and although the condition of his health prevented him from driving, he generally owned a good trotter and had Mr. H. K. Devereux drive them at the matinees.

Mr. Outhwaite was a splendid judge of horses, as was proven when he purchased Faustina 2:20½ and Sunland Belle 2:08½. Both of these animals were supposed to be outclassed and yet Faustina trotted to a wagon record of 2:12½, Mr. Outhwaite being offered $7500 for her. Sunland Belle defeated all of the club's pacers in 1899 and went into winter quarters with a wagon record of 2:07½ and the club's pacing championship.

Mr. Outhwaite was a man of sterling worth, a warm-hearted friend, and one whose congenial characteristics earned for him the respect and friendship of all he came in contact with. He was ever a true and ardent admirer of the light harness horse, an enthusiastic road driver, and derived much pleasure from this pastime. Mr. Outhwaite leaves a widow and two children, and a host of personal friends, to mourn his loss.—American Sportsman.

News From the North.

[Portland Rural Spirit.]

Sam Casto is located at the State Fair grounds with a stable of nine horses, mostly green trotters, from which he expects to select a racing stable for next year. The track has been in good condition all fall for speed-making, and Sam says he has bottled up a lot of it to be used in the opening events next year.

Every association that is a member of the North Pacific Fair Association should hold a meeting and elect a representative to attend the annual meeting here January 7th, with power to act. This should be made a very important meeting, and matters of interest should be brought up and acted upon without further reference.

Superintendent Matt Williams, of the Washington State Fair grounds, says there is very little blooded horseflesh wintering at the track. He has pacers and trotters belonging to Buckholtz, Peatross, Larson and Wright, and runners of Crooks of California, together with stallions of W. H. Vessey and E. W. Dooley, all told about twenty head.

Quite a number of horsemen have taken up winter headquarters at Irvington track, with from three to a dozen head in each stable, as follows: W. H. Bradford, Doc Ward, Harry Osman, Charles Hawk, Jim Misner, John Weaver & Co., Crie Simpson and Henry Helman. Walter Allison is wintering quite a number of drivers and youngsters there also.

E. T. Bedford, of Brooklyn, N. Y., whose team York Boy 2:08½ and Bemay 2:13½, trotted an authenticated mile over the Parkway half-mile track in 2:12½, sent them another trial mile over the mile track on the Shults Farm at Parkville on Nov. 4, which they covered in 2:11½. The course was very slow and he had to drive in the center of it all the way. The horses got away in the second attempt and went to the first quarter in 33½ seconds, turned the half in 1:05½, the three-quarters in 1:39½ and the full distance in 2:11½.

The Five Great Tribes.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 23, 1902.

BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN—Wherever the English speaking people rule there also is the horse accorded the place to which he is entitled. In every country where the horse is bred keen rivalry exists among the breeders and each has his friends who are prompt to support him and argue in favor of this or that stallion. This rivalry though it consists in bitter warfare or amicable emulation is the very life and soul of the various breeds. In California all good breeds should command attention, and the intelligence of the breeders has been so aptly directed that in all breeds save one, no stallion can claim absolute pre-eminence. Let the ardent admire Direct, Nutwood Wilkes, Sidney or any other family of trotters and pacers, declaim in glowing terms Bonnie Direct, John A. McKerron, Nearest, Sidney Dillon, Monterey, immediately some lover of Baron Wilkes, Electioneer, Charles Derby or Excel rises to a point of order, and begs to differ with the honorable gentleman who has just spoken. Let this one praise Zombro, L. W. Russell, Dictatus, Nushagak, Diablo, as the best that ever stood on American soil; let any man hold up a graven image of this kind and the public will refuse to bow down to it.

At no period in the history of the trotters and pacers has the proper selection for breeding purposes been so important as at present, and each succeeding year will but add to its importance. But just for an argument to the criticism that I have heard toward pedigrees of high breeding, I am constrained as a matter of justice to high breeding of the best branches of all the trotting families, to correct the erratic effusions of their imagination.

The best branches of the five great families, are Hambletonian, Mambrino Chief, Pilot, Clay and Mambreno Patchen backed up by that stout blood, Morgan, imp. Diomed, Glencoe, American Eclipse, Norman and Boston. My first lessons were learned about thirty years ago through such far-seeing breeders as the late R. A. Alexander, Alden Goldsmith, Col. R. G. Stoner, L. Fish, Otto Holdstein. They were not like the old woman, when she said, "every woman to her fancy," by saying, "a horse is a horse, regardless of how he is bred." It seems strange to think how few really good business men are familiar with the anatomy of the above blood. They start with the inferior branches of blood and naturally imagine they have struck the key note of success, and are only waiting to herald their ideas to the world in victorious battles of the turf and show rings of a bright future by saying, "a horse is a horse, regardless of how he is bred." Down at the Philippine Islands such argument might do, for a few years, but not for this branch of American tide. A person will wear better cloths if he reaches for the highest and strongest breeding that produces the highest type of American trotting and pacing horses; while I write pacer my thoughts run to the handsome trotter. It is human nature with me to love, and prefer a great trotter to a pacer. But honestly I can foresee no practical reason why those who do admire the pacer should be cast aside, you might with equal propriety prohibit a certain class from voting at the polls. I cannot agree in the words of Robert Burns, "A man is a man for all that." A hoss is a hoss for all that. You will find in both "Royal Breeding."

It is strange how few realize the great danger of too much sluggish blood in "man or horse." The more I ponder over the greatness of brainy and far-seeing breeders such as Roy Miller, Dr. Herr, Alexander Hamlin, Alden Goldsmith, Wm. B. Fasig, Col. R. G. Stoner, C. W. Kellogg, Forbes, Henry Pierce, Bowerman Bros., John E. Madden, "and such star performers as Cresceus 2:02½, Alix 2:03½, The Abbot 2:03½, Nancy Hanks 2:04, Directum 2:05½, McKerron 2:05½, Adbell 2:23, Arion 2:10½ (at two years old), Axtell 2:12, Anzella 2:06½, Ozanam 2:08, Chain Shot 2:06½, Star Pointer 1:59½, Dan Patch 1:59½, John Gentry 2:00½, Alert 2:00, and such sires as Baron Wilkes, Jay Bird, Chimes, The Moor, Charles Derby, Mambrino King, Diablo, Aberdeen, Stamboul, Dictator, Onward, Delmar, Director, Dexter Prince, Norval, Nushagak, Sidney, Oakland Baron, the greater is the pleasure to chronicle that the blood in all the above men and horses, is of the highest type, and those learned breeders didn't have to wait until after their votes were secured and counted before the above stallions' merits of greatness were accepted. It will be interesting and instructive to look into their pedigrees and take a brief survey of the history of these breeders and horses.

Great excellence is always limited to a special kind or developed in a certain direction only in a transcendent degree. This is true of the capabilities or capacities of man, animal or plant. Thus a great general is never so great as a statesman, nor a great composer so great as a performer, nor a great poet as a great orator. So horses excel in certain directions only as race horses, characteristic show horses and work horse strength. Among all the great trotting horses that have appeared either in earlier or later times, it is probable no one has ever been the superior of Cresceus 2:02½, except it be Directum, four year old 2:05½ third heat in a winning race. Age considered, it is the opinion of many that their speed qualities are about equal.

As producers of merit, perhaps before their greatness was known, there never were worse-abused, misrepresented lot of stallions at one period than Electioneer, Alexander's Abdallah, Strathmore, Harold, Geo. Wilkes, Clay, Gov. Sprague, Pilot Jr., Steinway, Happy Medium, Baron Wilkes, The Moor, Red Wilkes, Dexter Prince, Axtell, Nutwood, Dictator, Guy Wilkes, Sultan, Robert McGregor, Sidney and Mambrino King. By the evidence of this hour, they enjoy a favorable showing of their elements by transmitting down to this day. Their history to-day is very romantic. It is strange what amount of prejudice many men can entertain toward certain branches of royal blood that is so valuable toward producing speed and transmitting on and down.

A gentleman came to Pleasanton last spring to look over Stam B. with a view of breeding to him. After looking him over he was so impressed that he bred all of his mares to him. At the same time that gentleman said to me that he had a neighbor that wished to breed his mare and he would try and induce him to breed to Stam B. A few days later, by chance I again met that gentleman. He remarked to me that he tried his utmost to induce his friend to breed, but he refused, yet admitted that Stam B. was a grand individual and race horse, and would like to breed to him, only that he possessed "The Moor blood." Think of it, his only fault with Stam B. was the few drops "of The Moor blood." After learning how his "flashy bred mare was bred," I remarked to my friend: "There is a tide in the affairs of men which if taken at its flood leads on to victory. That I am of the opinion that the union from his mare and Stam B., under his skillful management, with any kind of luck, would become a fair prospect for a vegetable wagon. That in turn such mares would be more damage to any stallion than good, and that my only regret was that Stam B. did not carry more of The Moor blood than the small portions he carries."

It is true that there is always a glamour about the royal blood in a great man or horse. Let me say to the person that never bred a trotter or pacer that has a record "of a workout mile of 2:40," that before a person condemns any great blood that he ought to post himself by the records and performances. The greatest lesson taught is by a man's and horse's record and performances. The Moor blood, through its best channels, can be found in the veins of Aristo (3) 2:17½, the Napoleon of the Stanford and Occident Stakes (without detecting his full speed), and the two year old Katherine A. 2:14 and $20,000 refused, Hilgar (2) 2:15 and sold for $8000, Oxnard Boy (2) 2:20, a winner of the two year old Kentucky Futurity of 1901, and sold for a large figure, Bugle (3) 2:14, Wiggins 2:19 (the sire of the above colt except Oxnard Boy 2:20), Rythmic 2:08, the blind wonder and the largest money winner of 1902, The Abbot 2:03½, The Monk 2:05½, Lord Derby 2:05½, Stamboul 2:08, Chain Shot 2:06½.

It can be read in the Bible "that time and chance happeneth in all things." The Moor blood, through its best channels, changed from the middle to the top of the breeder's ladder. As The Moor blood is coated, as of the Pilot and Clay bloods, it can in turn be found by a close observance a happy nick with either blood of the best branches of Hambletonian, Mambrino Chief, Mambrino Patchen, American Star, Pilot, Clay.

Any way that you wish to mingle The Moor blood with any branches of the above, "it is found a happy nick," and the blood of the above can be found crossed in various ways in all the kings and queens of the trotting turf that have taken records (from 2:02½ to 2:08), and the blood of Stam B., also the abused "Moor blood," can be found in the producers and the winners (of high class futurity winners), and so-called Clay and Pilot blood in the best race horses of this age. The maxim of Confucius is with some men, that they should pay no attention whatever to things that were beyond them, that they should consider nothing but the things before them; that is, they do not consider or deem it wise to breed in a way, and for the blood that in a far off day the next generation will have the best branches of the above blood so mingled that it will be useful for the next generation. They neglect the breeding in a way that the next generation will reap no benefit of our work. I detest such remarks as, "Life is too short; let the next generation take care of itself." I am a believer in preserving that same blood and keep it as pure for the generations to come. There will be no danger of this State not retaining its past reputation for breeding speedy and handsome horses if you breed to the best branch of the above blood and study carefully their happy nicks by the past nicks and records.

Tabulate each stallion pedigree that has the most representatives by the records from 2:00 to 2:03; that is the safest guide to breed a sure percentage of natural speed. It is the ambition of all who love the trotting horse to breed the two-minute trotter. For such to be accomplished he will need, of course, the necessary speed. Not only this, but he must have the strength, courage and stamina to carry this speed the full mile. When the horse will be bred that will sire this is beyond me; there are so many essential points for a trotter outside of the breeding necessary speed, well trained and managed, good day and track, years of patience, well driven, and a good owner. All the above will be essential to accomplish the two-minute trotter, and a person must stick to the blood that represents the greatest number between the two-minute record and 2:06.

It has been aptly said that some people are subject to spasms, a drop in the wheat pit creates a panic, and doubles up the whole speculative community. "A new fast performer caused a universal scramble to lead up and breed for the same blood." While I shall not presume to teach the art of breeding—how to in-breed, out-breed, mate individuals or instruct in form, gait and all the multitudes of minor matters that really constitute the science of breeding, yet I have my own ideas, and I may be excused for calling the attention of those who have given the subject even less attention than myself to the matter in which even thoughtful and well informed persons are liable under the excitement of a boom to make mistakes.

Men who have shown wonderful business sagacity, and brought a keen, bright intellect to bear with remarkable success in the various branches of the world of trade would be puzzled to tell the difference between the best and poorest branches of the above blood. The post tells us that "Truth crushed to earth shall rise again." I believe him. As the years roll along the real merits of the blood of Sidney, Stamboul, Dexter Prince, etc., etc., will receive the admiration and respect of the breeding loving community, as did Electioneer, George Wilkes, Strathmore, William L., Guy Wilkes, Baron Wilkes and other great producing seallions that were once shunned.

When any trotter shows a marked superiority in speed and other qualities students of breeding become anxious to learn all possible of the blood lines of his ancestors as far back as possible. As time and space are limited, I will omit the thoroughbred and refer only to the doubling and thribbling of the different crosses that makes the great trotter. First, I will endeavor to cite the qualifications of the different branches of different tribes: The Hambletonian, for their good brain, powerful muscle development that is so essential for strength to keep up a fast pace, their line gait and speed transmitting powers; the Mambrino Chief, for speed, size and gameness; the Moor, or Pilot (as called by many), for their soundness, speed, nerve force and dash; the American Star, for their length of stride and straight line action, vim to do or die; the Clay, for their unapproachable action, perfection of gait, always found on a trot, perfect conformation, color; the Mambrino Patchen, for their finish, long perfect-trotting stride, with the determination to discover the North Pole. The various crosses and how different they mingle and produce speed and racehorse qualities are shown by the following well-known champions:

Cresceus 2:02½, three Hambletonian, three Mambrino Chief, two Pilot, One American Star.

Directum 2:05½, one Hambletonian, one Mambrino Chief, one American Star.

Anzella 2:06½, three Hambletonian, two Pilot, two Mambrino Chief, one American Star.

Maud S. 2:08½, one Hambletonian, one Pilot.

Alix 2:03½, three Hambletonian, two Mambrino Chief.

John A. McKerron 2:05½, four Hambletonian, two Clay, two Mambrino Chief, one Pilot, three American Star.

Nancy Hanks 2:04, two Hambletonian, one Pilot, one Clay, one American Star.

Kremlin 2:07½, two Hambletonian, one Pilot, one Mambrino Chief, one American Star.

Stam B. 2:11½, four Hambletonian, two Pilot, five Mambrino Chief, two Clay.

Dolly Dillon 2:07½, four Hambletonian, two Clay, one Mambrino Chief.

Katherine A. (2) 2:14, three Hambletonian, three Clay, three Pilot, three Mambrino Chief, two American Star.

Gail Hamilton (3) 2:11½, four Hambletonian, four Mambrino Chief, four Pilot, two Clay.

Adbell (1) 2:23, two Hambletonian, three Clay, one Mambrino Chief, one Pilot.

Zombro 2:11, three Hambletonian, three Mambrino Chief, two Pilot, one Clay.

Bugle (2) 2:14, four Hambletonian, three Mambrino Chief, three Pilot, three Clay.

Aristo (3) 2:17½, four Hambletonian, two American Star, two Clay, three Mambrino Chief, two Pilot.

Lou Dillon, four Hambletonian, one Mambrino Chief, one Clay.

Yours, ELBMAG LECXE BMATS.

Notes and News.

Pacific Breeders Futurity No. 3

With a guaranteed value of $6000

Will close on Monday next, December 1st.

The driving clubs of San Francisco and Los Angeles held matinees on Thanksgiving Day.

A show for the heavy breeds of horses will be held at Toronto in the early part of February.

Alcyo 2:10, that was taken East by his owner, B. S. Krehe, last spring, is advertised for sale at Lexington, Kentucky.

Rhythmic 2:08 will make a short season in the stud next spring and will then be raced again in Scott Hudson's stable.

Eureka 2:15½, the chestnut gelding by Ira, went under the hammer at Philadelphia last week and brought $500.

Arab Girl, the dam of Bessie Bonehill 2:05½, is also the dam of Col. Coit 2:24½; Saieda Gray 2:25½, and Seekharto 2:29½.

There is some talk of a new track being built at Los Angeles that will be devoted exclusively to the trotters and pacers.

Allerton 2:09½ has 100 performers with records of 2:06½ to 2:30. He is the youngest horse by four years to reach the century mark.

Probably the most difficult record to break, next to the 2:02½ of Cresceus, is the 2:05½ held by Direct Hal and Prince Direct as a team.

Jasper Ayers 2:09, now ten years old and considerably the worse for wear, passed through a Boston auction the other day and changed hands at $255.

Everybody will be talking about the colt that wins any division of the Pacific Breeders Futurity. It will not be your colt unless he is entered in the stake.

Elastic Pointer, the erratic and blind brother to Star Pointer, will be tried again next year by John Hussey, who declares he is the fastest pacer he ever drove.

Ed. Geers is working at Memphis a two year old colt by Direct Hal 2:04½, out of Lady of the Manor 2:04½. This one ought to learn to pace without a teacher.

Dan Patch will likely stay in Dick Benson's stable at Kansas City until the first of the year, when McHenry will take him to Memphis for next season's preparation.

Expedition 2:15½, has nine new 2:30 trotters for 1902. He is a grandly bred horse, being by Electioneer, dam the great producing mare Lady Russell, own sister to Maud S. 2:08½.

The most important duty that devolves upon the trotting horse breeders of California at the present time is to aid in forming a circuit of harness race meetings for next year.

McKinney 2:11½, now takes his place with Onward and Pilot Medium—the three stallions with as many as four trotters in the 2:10 list. He is the youngest sire to gain this distinction.

About the best barometer of the horse market will be the Old Glory sale which began at New York last Monday. Over a thousand trotting-bred horses are to be sold during the two weeks of the sale.

E. E. Smathers, at the close of the Lexington trots, sent Shadow Chimes 2:05 and Antezella 2:10½ to the Patchen Wilkes Farm. They were both castrated and will be left to run to grass until about the first of the year.

A yearling by Barondale 2:11½ out of a mare by Wilkes Boy is one of the handsomest things at the San Jose track, and one of the most promising trotters. This is the verdict of every horseman who has looked him over.

A mare by McKinney 2:11½, dam by Anteo 2:16½, that was bred this year to Petigru 2:11½, will be nominated in the Pacific Breeders Futurity No. 3. The produce should be pretty close to first money when the race is trotted.

E. I. Willets, who bred and raced the pacer Silkwood to his record, has returned to Orange county, Cal., after a two years' residence in Kansas. He did not bring any horses with him and is out of the horse business. Silkwood is doing very well in the stud in Kansas.

Mr. Ben Davis, of San Bernardino, has booked to Nushagak, the premier stallion of Walnut Grove Farm, and sire of Aristo, winner of this year's Occident and Stanford Stakes, a mare by McKinney 2:11½, dam Gypsy (the dam of Gazelle 2:11½ and Ed Winship 2:15) by Gen. Booth. Mr. Davis has booked Gypsy for the seasons of 1903 and 1904. The produce should be very high class trotters.

Is there anything to prevent the organization of a harness racing circuit in California next year? Every breeder and owner of a trotter or pacer should be interested enough in such a circuit to lend his aid to its organization.

McCutcheon Gregory of Lafayette, Ind., who is the most liberal buyer in the West for a strictly first class carriage horse, reports that he is unable to find enough handsome horses with high action and quality to supply his demand.

Henry Sanders, brother of Millard Sanders, is paying a visit to the Coast, his first, by the way. His home is at Glenville, Ohio, where the famous Cleveland track is situated, and he is one of the most successful trainers in that section.

It is reported that W. A. Freeman recently drove the chestnut filly Angle, a green three year old daughter of Axtell 2:12 out of a Gambrino mare, a half mile in 1:03½ on the Lexington track. The last quarter was trotted in 30½ seconds.

John Splan has purchased of A. S. Ashbrook, Cynthia, Ky., the noted broodmare Mary Wagner by Strathmore out of Mary S. 2:28 by Alcantara. Mary Wagner is the dam of Baronmore 2:14½, sire of Peter Stirling (3) 2:11½, and other good ones.

The Baron Wilkes family is again the leading money winning family of 1902, and a very large per cent of money earned by this family was won by trotters. While some fast pacers belong to this family, the trotters are of high class and great money winners.

At the Tranter-Kenney sale, at Lexington, November 3d-8th, fourteen weanlings sold for an average of $203.57; the Elmhurst Farm yearlings averaged $321 per head and ten broodmares from different establishments sold for an average of $454—all pretty good averages.

Clay S. 2:13½ is now in Barney Simpson's care at the Alameda track and is looking good. His owner Mr. William Hendrickson goes over and jogs the stallion two or three times a week and enjoys the rides immensely. Clay S. will be in the stud during the season of 1903.

California trainers all report that the prospects are for a very large number of trotters and pacers to be put in training next spring provided a circuit is announced early. Horses with speed are in great demand especially if they are good gaited and fit for gentlemen's roadsters.

William Hogoboom, who now resides at Walla Walla, Washington, suffered a heavy loss the other day by the burning of his barn. He lost all his sulkies and harness and the stallion, Montague, that he took there with him when he removed to Walla Walla from Marysville, this state.

Among the trainers that will locate at Pleasanton during the winter months are Farmer Bunch with the Meek Estate string, Dr. Boucher with Miss Logan 2:06½ and four or five others, Al McDonald with a half dozen head, William Cecil with several from the home of Nutwood Wilkes, and several others.

Diablo 2:09½ will make another season at Woodland. He has now stood at that place for two years, during both of which he was very largely patronized. His percentage of foals this year was very large and the crop of weanlings by him are uniformly a high class lot and held in high regard by their owners.

Effie Logan, the dam of Sir Albert S. 2:03½, has been named in the Pacific Breeders Futurity No. 3, the $6000 stake for mares bred in 1902. She is in foal again to Diablo 2:09½ and the produce will be a full brother or sister to Sir Albert S. Effie Logan is now owned by Mr. C. E. McEnerney, of Honolulu.

Geo. A. Kelley, of Pleasanton, is very busy these days with the string of young trotters that Mr. Thos. Ronan lately brought down from Dayton, Washington, and although he has had but two or three weeks with them, has seen enough speed to make him believe he has some fine prospects for the races next year.

C. A. Durfee will go to San Jose next week and begin work on about a dozen young McKinneys he has at the track there. There are some grandly bred young stallions among them, headed by the handsome big trotter, Ben Liebes, that is out of a mare by Robert McGregor. This horse has worked miles below 2:15 and is yet a green trotter.

A man with a good string of horses can earn a lot of money winning small purses on half-mile tracks over East. The New England reinsman, Walter Cox of Manchester, N. H., drove in 113 races this season over Eastern half-mile rings. He won 40 races, was second in 19, third in 18, fourth in 11, and his total winnings in purse money amounted to $12,480.

Mr. Byron Erkenbrecher, the popular real estate broker of Los Angeles, who is one of the enthusiastic road drivers of the southern metropolis and an active member of the Los Angeles Driving Club of which organization he is treasurer, has purchased from S. H. Hoy of Winters, the handsome mare Reta H. by McKinney, dam the producing mare Smut by Prompter. Reta H. has no record, but is one of the sweetest gaited pacers in California. She is a large mare, coming six years old, and has speed. Besides being young and absolutely sound Reta H. has the recommendation of being one of the kind that needs no hobbles, boots or weight of any kind to keep her on her gait. A very light pair of quarter boots is all that she wears and anyone can drive her.

T. C. Jefferson, of Lexington, Kentucky, will send several of his broodmares that are in foal to Colorado so that the colts may be born in that high altitude. The youngsters will then be handled and developed for two years preparatory to shipment East for the sale ring. Mr. Jefferson believes that by this method he can produce some marvelous trotters because of the lung expansion and heart action that will come from training at a high elevation.

Another fourteen year old trotter that has made a wonderful showing this year is the mare Lilly Young by Young Fullerton that took a record of 2:10½ six years ago. She started at Memphis this year and forced Ferenio to trot in 2:07½ to beat her, and she was only a short length behind at that. Lilly Young then won a mile and a quarter dash in 2:44, which is at the rate of 2:11 1-5 to the mile. The old gal probably believes in going it while she is young.

Mr. J. W. Rice of College City, who purchased the stallion Dagon of Sam Hoy of Winters not long ago, will make a season with this handsome Wilkes stallion at College City during the spring of 1903. Dagon is a very handsome horse and very fast. He is by Sable Wilkes 2:18 out of Ida Belle, a full sister to Anna Belle, dam of Robert I. 2:10, and La Belle 2:16. Dagon's colts are showing great promise and are being entered in the colt stakes and futurities by their owners.

Among the mares named in the Pacific Breeders Futurity No. 3 that closes December 1st, is one that was sired by the fast pacer Clipper 2:06. She is called Columbia and is owned by Mr. Geo. Peterman of Mount Eden, who also bred and raised Clipper and sold him as a three year old to Mr. Meek of Haywards, who had him converted to a gelding. The mare Columbia is a very handsome animal and was bred this year to Mr. H. W. Meek's stallion William Harold 2:13½.

The colony of trainers located at the Lexington track for the winter includes Ben Kenney, Scott Hudson, W. J. Young, Fred McKey, W. F. Freeman, Rolla Drake, W. W. Evans, Clem Beachey, O. J. Phelps, W. F. Dickerson, John Davis, W. G. Simpson, Lee Darnaby, Mike and George Bowerman, T. W. Price, Cochran Bros. and others. The track will soon be closed for the winter, and trainers will be under the necessity of exercising their horses on the roads, of which there are many excellent ones in that vicinity.

One of the greatest broodmares in the country, considering her opportunities, is the Kansas matron Lucy Woodruff by Hiram Woodruff, dam of the Santa Ana whirlwind Silkwood. She foaled her first colt at twelve years of age and out of seven living foals one broke his leg, another can go into the standard list at any time, and her other five foals are as follows: Silkwood 2:07, Vic W. 2:12½, Grace W. 2:21½, Victoria Regina 2:26½ and Baywood 2:29½. Only two of these five have ever been raced over a mile track.

The United States government has taken measures to protect the horses used on the star-mail routes and other governmental work and has adopted a new section in the provisions for contracts requiring contractors and drivers to keep the horses they use in good condition. The order will effect 100,000 horses used on government contracts in the west and thousands of drivers. Cruel treatment while in the service will be considered cause for imposing a fine on the contractor or requiring the dismissal of the driver.

Charles S. Farr of Stapleton, Long Island, who now owns the pacer Perhaps 2:08 that created a sensation two years ago in California under the name of Walter K., writes to an exchange as follows in regard to the horse: "If ever a horse enjoyed horse heaven on this earth Perhaps has this season, with me. I am driving him on our speedway here and he is the fastest one on the drive. The only horse that can try to take his measure is, like himself, a famous ringer, Tar Tartar 2:13½. I have driven Perhaps a quarter in 30 seconds, and I shall make an effort to have him reinstated this winter. It is a trifling singular that the two noted ringers, Tar Tartar and Perhaps, should be owned in the same town."

Harry Stover, a successful owner of thoroughbreds who is now racing in California, has purchased the well known Petaluma track from the Wickersham Estate. This track was formerly one of the most popular in the State for training purposes, and a very successful fair was annually held there by the Sonoma and Marin Agricultural Society. Of late years, however, but few horses have been trained there, and no fairs have been held since 1896. There is a pavilion, grand stand and about 300 stalls all in fair condition on the property and the mile track is laid out on the regulation oval plan. The land is adobe and not an ideal soil for a winter track, but is one of the best summer tracks in California. Mr. Stover will use the property for training his runners, of which he has a number.

P. W. Hodges, who is now located at Santa Ana, Orange county, has been in San Francisco this week. Mr. Hodges is confident that if there is a good circuit arranged for California next summer, the largest entry list ever received for harness racer will be made. Mr. Hodges has a string of very promising trotters in training, among them the stallion Geo. W. McKinney 2:14½ and Portrero 2:21, by Redondo, that is now ten years old, but able to reduce his record any time he is turned round for a fast mile. Mr. Hodges bred nine mares this year, five of them to Zombro 2:11 and will make several entries in the Pacific Breeders Futurity. He says the Santa Ana track is in fine shape at the present time and about fifty horses are being trained there. There is no reason why Santa Ana should not give a first class three days' meeting next year.

Alarm in the Northwest.

The following from the last issue of the Rural Spirit, published at Portland, Oregon, shows that alarm is being felt in that community as well as in California over the bookmaking evil:

"There is one thing of vital importance to race track managers in the Pacific Northwest that should be taken up and discussed during the winter months, and that is whether or not bookmaking will be allowed on the circuit for 1903. We have the promise of building up the best racing circuit on the Pacific Coast. Many associations here have built at great expense fine racing plants, fully equipped with all modern conveniences. Now, whether these plants will be used for the purposes they were intended or be used as a cat's paw for the gambling element is a question worthy of careful consideration. Since the close of the circuit this matter has been brought forcibly to our notice, and we now propose to give the horsemen and race-goers an opportunity to express themselves through the columns of this paper on this subject. No one should have any feeling in this matter that will prevent an honest expression for the best interests of racing. We believe that bookmaking on this circuit will do for us just what it has done for racing in California and Montana, and until we are convinced differently shall openly oppose any further booking on racing on the North Pacific circuit. This paper is read by all managers of fairs and race meetings throughout the circuit, and we invite an expression of opinion from anyone interested in seeing our circuit made a success in 1903."

In regard to the proposed lease of Irvington track at Portland for the purposes of a running meeting, the same journal says: "It is currently reported that a syndicate composed principally of bookmakers have an option on a lease of Irvington race track, where they will give one or more race meetings in 1903. For the best interest of the sport of racing we hope the lease will not be made. It does not require a prophet or son of a prophet to know the motive of such a combination, and if they knew the real inwardness of the conditions they would not undertake giving a race meeting here. We have said a great many times, and repeat it now for the benefit of these men, that a successful race meeting cannot be given here where pool selling or bookmaking is made the main object of the meeting. Should these men secure the track they will do so with a view of giving a race meeting at a profit. A profit on a race meeting here can only be made by putting on the syndicate books; this means the striking out of harness races, for bookmakers do not have any use for harness horses. A race meeting run by bookmakers for bookmakers cannot succeed in Portland any length of time, and should not be tolerated. When the business men of this city want a race meeting here they will organize an association for that purpose, and a meeting conducted by them will be a success, for it will be given to entertain the people who love horse racing for the sport itself, and not with a speculative end in view."

Over Checks for Road Horses.

It is an evidence of the superficial way in which we observe things that our roadsters are so severely over-checked and for such extended periods. We see horses on the track for a race and we notice that the head is borne up to a certain altitude. Later, possibly, we acquire the animal by purchase, and from that day on the unfortunate creature is compelled to carry his nose at the same angle whether he is out one hour or six; goes one mile or forty. We ignore entirely the fact—and to our eternal shame be it that we are thus careless and indifferent—that when we saw the horse in his race his head had not been thus confined for more than a few minutes before we noticed him (or at the time he first came out), and that the instant the heat was over his attendant immediately let him free, to be again confined only when about to contest the succeeding heat, at an interval of twenty minutes. We are also ignorant of the fact that in all his slow, or jogging, work his head is left entirely loose—and this exercise corresponds to the drives we give him on the road. No wonder the poor sufferer, in his discomfort and agony, pulls, drives on one rein, and does any or all of the curious and annoying things common to horses thus hampered. No road horse needs the over-draw check, and it is an infernal machine of the most scientific make; well enough in its place, and for the special purpose for which it was made, but utterly out of reason, or need, in the private stable.—Coach and Saddle.

Bugle's Three Year Old Career.

A correspondent of the New York Evening Telegram who watched the black filly Bugle in the three year old Kentucky Trotting Stake at Lexington last month says:

"In the betting Gail Hamilton was a great favorite while Bugle was not thought of, but in the opening heat the latter had the track in a jiffy and, going steady and true, won in 2:14. In the next mile she was even better, making Gail Hamilton trot in 2:12½, the fastest mile in a race, up to that time this year, by a three year old, and Bugle's official time was 2:13, she being just beaten. Then she tried once more, never offering to break until the last stride, and it took a mile in 2:13½ by Gail Hamilton to land the stake. Aside from the winner, Bugle trotted the best race by a three year old in 1902, her three heats being 2:14, 2:13, 2:14, every mile a faster one than was done by the Futurity winner. Bugle is a well bred filly. Her sire is Athel, a stallion not much heard of thus far, but he is a brother to Arion 2:07½ and is owned at the Round Top Farm of Mr. F. P. Olcott of the Central Trust Company, New York. The dam of Bugle is by Stamboul, who for some years previous to his death was owned by Mr. E. H. Harriman, another financial magnate whose farm is at Goshen, N. Y. Mr. Olcott has a sale of colts every fall and thither repair Mr. Billings and other friends of the New Yorker to buy a young trotter. It was in this way that ex-Mayor Hugh J. Grant of New York secured Bugle for $350, and the selection was a fortunate one."

Bugle has been a member of the Billings Stable since last fall after winning a two year old race under the tutelage and driving of Mr. Grant's superintendent, Mr. McGee. Thus started on her road to fame, J. Scott McCoy took her in hand, and with this colt handler of established repute Bugle came along nicely and by August of the present year was good for a mile in 2:15. She, like all the youngsters that graduate from the McCoy school, has perfect manners, having been taught to go on a trot all the time and pay strict attention to what the driver wants of her.

McCoy seems to be much impressed with the colts by Athel. He says he never in his wide experience with youngsters had a three year old to compare with Bugle and after sampling a pair of two year olds which Mr. Billings secured at the Round Top Sale in September and shipped with his trotting stable to Memphis, McCoy wrote: "They will do; send me a carload all of this kind."

A Feather in Hopper's Cap.

When the memorable five mile race was trotted on the last day of the Los Angeles meeting this year, and won by Zambra, an unsexed son of McKinney, with Hopper another gelding by the same sire second, the last named horse performed a feat that had escaped notice until attention was called to it by the Horse Review. It will be remembered that Hopper led at the end of the fourth mile, and as the official time of the race for the first four miles was 9:48, Hopper beat the four mile record of Senator L., made in 1894, just 24 seconds. This does not rank as a technical four mile record of course, but Hopper is entitled to all the credit that such a demonstration of speed and gameness deserves.

Hopper is one of the most promising trotters in California to-day. He was worked a little last spring and when the San Jose meeting was held the first week in July he was given a time record of 2:24½, to give his dam Cricket 2:10 by Steinway another standard performer, Hopper being her fourth. Hopper improved so fast that he was entered through the circuit and trotted to a record of 2:17½ and won quite a sum for his owners. Cricket his dam, was the first mare to pace at 2:10, and every one of her produce that is old enough to train has a standard record. The fastest is William Harold 2:13½, sire of the ill-fated mare Janice 2:08½. Hopper was bred by H. W. Meek of Haywards and is still owned by that gentleman, who also owns Cricket. She has a very handsome yearling by Nutwood Wilkes that is very promising.

Wanted -Fifty-Dollar Brood Mare.

William French, assistant superintendent of the Village Farm, says that The Sovereign, by The Beau Ideal, son of Dare Devil, is regarded as the greatest yearling ever bred there. He has gone an eighth in 16½, a 2:14 gait, with very little training, and he believes before the year is out, if he is asked, he will without an effort reduce the world's record for colts or fillies of his age two or three seconds. Before showing his trotting ability his dam, Rhea by Chimes, dam Gerster, by Hero of Thorndale, was sold for $50. Now the Hamblins would like to have her back for $5,000, but all efforts to trace her have proved unavailing.

Remount Farms in South Africa.

The British War Office has experimentally established, under the superintendence of British officers, two farms in the Orange River Colony for the breeding of suitable remounts. This is a portion of a scheme that has been under consideration for some time. The war proved the difficulty and costliness, and, to a large extent, the inefficiency, of the policy of buying horses all over the world, when there is an unusual demand for the use of mounted troops, and the question of establishing Imperial remount farms, not only in South Africa, but also in Australia, was mooted long before the close of the campaign. It was believed, however, some few weeks ago that the Transvaal would be selected for the first farms of this nature, as an official statement was made to the effect that the first paddocks to be set up would be at Rustenburg, a townland and farming district midway between Mafeking and Pretoria, a beautiful country where everything grows luxuriantly with the least possible attention. The war taught the military authorities that Australians know a few things more than the average army man about horses, and it is not surprising that the small board of officials who have been arranging the details of the matter have been assisted by several Australian officers, of whom the Pall Mall Gazette says Captain H. M. Downes, of West Australia, was concerned in the biggest live stock establishment in Australia; and Lieutenant P. Daley, of New South Wales, is well known as a great judge at the Royal Agricultural Society's shows at Sydney. Upon Lieutenant Daley devolved the duty of arranging details at Rustenburg. Two thousand mares were to be sent to the remount farms, mostly taken from the military remount depots at various South African camps. These mares were to be the best obtainable, and for the greater part included English, Irish, Australian, and the pick of the hardy Boer animals. They were to be divided in farms of 200 each, but these ten stud farms were to be only the beginning. In all its chief features the plan adopted for the carrying out of these establishments was that which has been proved to be satisfactory in Australia. Under good management the experiment should prove of great benefit to the War Office, who will be, to a greater extent than has hitherto been the case, independent of hasty and ill-judged purchases of horses in the event of sudden emergencies in the future.

Death of a Great Mare.

Lady Ophir, or "Bob" as the old dam of Klamath 2:07½ was best known, died at Los Angeles during the latter part of October, probably from the effects of being kicked by another horse while running in a paddock. This grand old mare was owned at the time of her death by Mr. Alfred Solano, of Los Angeles, and was heavy in foal to McKinney 2:11½. She was sired by Ophir, a son of Skenandoah, and was the dam of three performers whose records ranged from 2:07½ to 2:13½. These were the famous Klamath, that was sired by Moorokus, and the pacers King Altamont 2:13½ and Le Roi 2:10½, both by the dead Altamont. Mr. C. A. Durfee owns a mare by McKinney out of this mare, and these, we believe, are all her foals that are alive.

Three years ago at Stockton, a colt by McKinney out of the old mare that promised to be a phenomenal trotter was accidentally killed, and two or three more of her foals have died before they were old enough to train. "Bob" was out of the Gridley mare by Mike 3403, a son of Vermont 322.

Few mares have lived to produce three with records below 2:15 and "Bob," plain old mare that she was, bred and raised almost in security, and her produce trained "in the woods," is one of the few. The blood that ran in her veins, unfashionable though it may have been, traced to the same fountain heads from which the veins of the champions have been filled.

Money Refunded if not Satisfactory.

Mr. F. W. Couch, a prominent lumber merchant of Pittsfield, Mass., writes November 17th: "Enclosed find $2 for which send me two bottles of Quinn's Ointment; the next time I shall probably order six. It is being talked about a great deal in Pittsfield. I have cured two thoroughpins and one spavin with one bottle and am going to try it on another blemish." For curbs, splints, spavins, windpuffs and all bunches use Quinn's Ointment. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Price one dollar per bottle delivered. Address W. B. Eddy & Co., Whitehall, N. Y., if you cannot obtain from druggist.

Washington is to have a speedway. Work has begun under the direction of United States Army engineers on the new $10,000 speedway along the Potomac Flats. Congress appropriated $50,000 during the last session for the construction of the railroad, $10,000 for the completion of the seawall around the flushing lakes of the Potomac Flats, which the speedway will skirt, and $10,000 for grading, terracing and policing the new drive. It is expected that the road will be ready for use by December 1. The speedway is one mile in length and 50 feet wide. On each side will be shade trees, 10 feet of grass parking and sidewalks.

CLEAN, HONEST CONTESTS are what every true admirer of the light harness horse wishes to see, and what every breeder (who aims for something more than the production of a bet winner) hopes for. The blood lines of the honest race winners are the ones that are looked to to produce the record breakers and winners of the future, and anything that will tend to make racing clean and honest is consequently endorsed by the breeders and others who are interested in the production of the best and fastest horses. The principal fault to be found with many rules and systems that have been devised for the purpose of making racing more honest, is that they seem designed to protect the gambler (who has no interest in the sport except his wager) instead of the breeder and owner. A very large percentage of professional gamblers are of the noisy kind that protest most vehemently whenever one of their "sure things" loses, and whenever the judges or directors listen to their loud complaints, they should take their statements cum grano salis. Dash racing will not make all drivers and owners honest—it is an absurd statement to say that it will. The two-in-three system, the Memphis plan and all the other new ideas that have been introduced, will never make the Golden Rule the guide of every man that drives a race horse. Judges that are competent and that possess good common sense, will do more to make racing honest than all the systems that may be devised, and they will see that the drivers are doing their best to win the race—not a heat or a bet.

A STRONG PROTEST against the syndicate book system is being made by the horse owners who raced up through Oregon, Washington, Montana and Idaho this summer and many say they will never make entries again with an association that has this style of betting. It is strange how racing associations will permit the sport to be killed by the sure thing bookmaker who refuses to lay odds unless he has a monopoly of the betting privilege, but the time is not far distant when reputable owners will absolutely refuse to make entries of trotters or pacers at any track where a syndicate book is operated. There were just two good harness race meetings in California this year, at Woodland and Fresno, and at neither was bookmaking permitted. The directors of other district associations in this State are about ready to abolish bookmaking entirely from harness racing and the associations up north will do a wise thing if they do the same thing. Syndicate booking has nearly ruined harness racing in California and will do the same thing for our northern neighbors unless it is prohibited. There is much interest in the breeding and racing of trotters and pacers in Oregon and Washington and the gamblers should not be permitted to kill it.

MORE MONEY WAS EARNED by the horses that raced on the Grand Circuit this year than ever before in the history of harness racing. There were more large stakes and purses offered, and the circuit began earlier and lasted later than in former years. The largest money winner of the year, Hal Direct, won over $25,000, and he started the season without a record. Every association that gave a meeting this year, has already published its intention of giving one next season, and the probabilities are that one or two more circuits will be arranged where the purses and stakes will be almost as liberal as on the main circuit. The earning capacity of the harness horse is increasing year after year, and this will keep the prices of good horses up for a long time to come, as the supply is far behind the demand at the present time.

THE SALE OF YEARLINGS from the Napa Stock

Farm of Mr. A. B. Spreckels will be held at the Occidental Horse Exchange, next Tuesday evening, December 2d. Horsemen attending this sale will at once be struck by the excellence of the individuals, all of which are bred on the most fashionable lines. Mr. Spreckels has had decided success as a breeder, considering the number of years he has been in the ranks. During that time he has given the turf Canace (a rare good one), Sevens (a stake winner which worked five furlongs in 0:59 over the Harlem, Chicago, course), Pompino, Devereaux, Fridolin, Dwight Way, Roundhead, Cambaceres, Sacharoid, Anna Elliott, Little T. G., Bamboulia, Courage, Geraldyn, Bellgardo, Headwater (six furlongs in 1:22½ and mile in 1:39½), Limb of the Law, George Dewey, Follow Me, Raveling, Ziska, Yaruba, Aluminum, Pidalia, Watossa, Floranthe and the extra good winners of this season, Pure Dale, Gaviota, Guida, Marie Tryon, Ulloa, Alice Cary, Dolly Hayman, Irma's Choice and Kickumbob.

The sires represented in this sale are imp. Crighton (a stake winner in Australia and a good winner here, who is getting a lot of wear-and-tear money earners), Puryear D (sire of Pompino, Devereux, Tizona and other consistent winners), imp. The Judge (sire of Ziska, Fridolin, Limb of the Law, Marie Tryon and other clever performers of the day), Ravelston (a young stake winner that has already sired a good one in Raveling), Eolo (brother to the successful St. Saviour, Eole and Eon), and last, but not least, Libertine, winner of 45 races and nearly $31,000 and the sire of the two year old Oakington, which won over the Coney Island track this season at five and one-half furlongs in 1:06 3-5, carrying 115 pounds, and defeating a large field.

The dams of the youngsters are all "bred in the purple," as auctioneers are wont to say, and several of them have produced performers of great note, viz.: Folly (dam of Sevens and Follow Me), Frisa (dam of Alexis and Fridolin), Griselda (dam of Grotto and Devereux), Glitter (dam of Aluminum), imp. Atossa (dam of Watossa), Piquante (dam of Pidalia), Georgia (dam of George Dewey), Nellie Bell (dam of Canace, Little T. G. and Gaviota), imp. Candid (dam of Cambaceres and winner of the Thornton Stakes, four miles) and Abbie F. (dam of Alice Cary, etc.). Besides, there are several young mares in the lot that made more than ordinary reputations on the turf. Therefore, it can with truth be said that persons desiring to buy a good race horse prospect should attend this sale, for the youngsters are either by good sires or those that promise much and out of mares from our very best race horse families, many of them showing their merit through their produce.

THIS IS THE LAST CALL for entries to the Pacific Breeders Futurity No. 3, which will close for the nomination of mares bred in 1902, on Monday next, December 1st. It only costs $3 to nominate a mare and as the value of the stake is $6000, it is worth having an entry in. Look in our advertising columns for full particulars of this stake.

AN AUCTION SALE of forty fine vehicles from the stock of Studebaker Bros.' big San Jose repository will be held by E. Stewart, at 721 Howard street, San Francisco, next Monday.

Sport on the Speed Track.

Members of the Golden Gate Park Driving Club whetted their appetites for Thanksgiving dinner on Thursday by holding half mile races on the speedway. There were hundreds of vehicles lined up along the south side of the course to see the sport, which was excellent.

The first contest was between the pacers Uncle John, Clara L. and Eden Vale. The first named, driven by his owner, Capt. Goodall, won the first and third heats, Clara L. taking the second.

Capt. N. P. Batchelder won the second race, which was for trotters, with his good gelding Athavis 2:18. He took the first and second heats with comparative ease and handled the handsome horse admirably. Mr. G. W. Swetts' Steve S. was second.

The third race went to Baby S., Mr. G. W. Swetts' entry, after a game fight.

Ira B. Dalziel was presiding officer of the day. F. W. Thompson was track secretary. The judges were M. M. Donnelly, J. W. Van Kuren and James O'Kane, and Daniel Leigenger was starter. The first prizes were silver cups and the second silver mounted whips.

Lew Weir has joined the gelding band at the age of about eleven. The son of Longfellow and Latonia, by imp. Billet, was a good racer in his day, and sired the winners Satyr, Flo Culver, Dora Weir and Tibs. His second dam, Semper Felix, was the mother of the famous Leonatus. It is the renowned Levity family from which he descended.

Keep Horses in Clean, Dry Quarters.

These are the days of muddy yards. It takes a surprisingly short time for even a few horses or cattle to tramp a moderate sized lot up into genuine quagmire and it is a positive shame to ask horses (or cattle either for that matter) to lie down and rest in such disgraceful quarters. At that, however, it does not much matter how much asking is done, the horses will not lie down. Instead they will hang around the driest spots in the yard—where the mud is least deep—and chew and gnaw all night long at the fence or manger or whatever they can get their teeth on. Being compelled to stand up all night they keep awake and must have something to do, so they get into one of the worst and most annoying habits that ever cursed a horse young or old. Not only that but the in foal mares if bothered are more likely than no. to lash out freely and fiercely at intervals with their heels and scars and bruises and bumps are the result with perhaps worse evils in their train. Cribbing, which is admitted to be one of the worst unsoundnesses on the whole list, is often started up by just such enforced idleness, whereas if the horses had a clean, dry, comfortable place in and on which to rest nothing of the sort would have happened. Besides all this even on these by no means cold nights horses ought not to be out of doors. There is no telling when old Boreas may take it into his ill-balanced head to sweep down from his haunts and when he does come the poor horses suffer terribly when fully exposed to the fury of his blast.

There is nothing but bad management in keeping horses in muddy open yards at this time of year. In addition to the evil results already detailed thrush and scratches and a dozen other hard-to-cure ailments are caused by the mud and filth of such yards. The animals cannot help losing flesh when in such discomfort, their hair gets all wrong and in general a handicap is imposed from which they will not recover all winter.

Therefore, yard the horses in clean dry quarters where they may run indoors if they wish to do so. Bed them well and leave them a liberal ration of coarse forage to eat during the night if they want it. Once the habit of gnawing and chewing the fences or mangers gets thoroughly established in a band of young horses it is practically impossible to put a stop to it. The writer has known tarred hardwood rails and even sheepskins, woolly side out, to be devoured with seemingly as much relish as the naked pine boards. Young horses can get into enough mischief anyway without their owner deliberately forcing them to get into more. Give them enough to eat during the day so that they will not go to bed hungry and leave them a supply for the night. This, together, with well bedded dry quarters and good shelter will insure freedom from much unsoundness, from many distressing maladies and promote growth-making, flesh-taking and better feeling all around.—Breeders Gazette.

Draft Horses Wanted.

The following letter has been received at this office:
EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN—Will you kindly publish the names and addresses of breeders of the Percheron and Shire draft horses in California, if there are any such breeders in the State, also if there is anyone running an importing barn in California. By complying you will confer a favor on one of your readers.

Yours truly,

H. G. GREER.

Pullman, Wash., Nov. 23, 1902.

We cannot print the names of California breeders of draft horses as we have no complete list, and a partial one would be unfair to those whose names were omitted. We would suggest to those of our subscribers who breed draft horses, that they write to Mr. Greer giving him a list of what they have for sale. There is no one running a regular draft horse importing business in this State at the present time.

Three Hundred Head of Horses and Mules, to be Sold at Auction.

On Saturdays December 6th and 13th the E. B. and A. L. Stone Co. will sell under the hammer at their ranch at Elmhurst, three hundred head of well broken draft and work horses and mules, weighing from 1100 to 1800 pounds, besides a number of driving and saddle horses, wagons, harness, saddles and contractors equipment. The reputation of this Company as owners of high grade draft and work horses is well established. This is an exceptional opportunity for anyone in need of horse flesh.

Burns & Waterhouse have a weeding-out sale on December 10th, at the Occidental Horse Exchange, but it is a peculiar thing that the cast offs of this firm often turn out to be very frequent winners, as in the case of Montgomery, Duckoy, Dollie Wlethoff, Cathello, Pat Morrissey and many another that might be mentioned.

THOROUGHBRED DEPARTMENT.

The Kerr sale last Tuesday night at the Occidental Horse Exchange was well attended, but the buyers were not as generous with their bids as the quality of the yearlings offered justified, for the Antrim Farm youngsters offered—twenty-three in number—were magnificent lookers, taken all in all, and many of them were by excellent sires and from producers of note. The St. Andrew—Jennie K. filly that brought $500 was a very trim built miss, and the Maxios in the sale were very "taking." They were a bay filly out Jennie Deane by imp. Sir Modred, and a bay colt from My Badge (sister to Badge) by imp. The Ill-Used. The brown colt by Riley out of Jennie Nevine by Apache sold for $280, was of good size and a good looker, and it would not be at all surprising if he turned out to be the bargain of the sale. The bay Montana—Play Toy filly was a promising looking one, and elicited some lively bidding, going for $700 finally, but the best looker in the sale was undoubtedly the black filly (half-sister to San Nicholas) by imp. Artillery—Virginia Dare by Apache. She brought $925, the highest price of the sale. W. S. Stanfield secured a not at all bad one for $125 in a black filly by imp. Artillery—Virjean by Milner, and in the sale nine different sires were represented. There was no demand for the Heralds or Yo El Reys, William O'B's or Lew Weirs, and the bidding demonstrated that youngsters by good tried sires like imp. St. Andrew, Montana and Riley will bring good prices at all times. It was also noted that the youngsters from the Magnolia, Alice Carneal, Lady Blessington and Minerva Anderson families were appreciated and whenever they were at all good looking, realized a fair price. However, as said before, the sale was a disappointing one, for the yearlings did not bring what their breeding and individuality should warrant. Since the death of Apache, Mr. Kerr has had no tried stallion, and although he paid $6000 for imp. Reggie, the horse proved pretty much of a failure as a foal-getter, and San Nicholas, a stake colt, is his only one to race. The stallion died about a month ago, and now he has no sire of any note on his Antrim farm. A stock farm without a tried sire thereon is like a ship without a rudder, and the breeder who uses the untried ones will find it a very costly experiment. Sires of stake winners are as scarce and as hard to get as flawless black pearls, and the many friends of Mr. Kerr in this State would like to see him secure a worthy successor to Apache, for he has a large number of excellent producing mares from the first class racing families, works hard, brings good looking stock to the horse market and deserves all sorts of success.

The big winners on the turf (those that have put over $100,000 to the credit of their owners) have a number of relatives in this State, and the strides taken in the breeding line by California's stock farm owners are of the giant with his three-league boots order. Following is a nearly complete list of the winners of the turf that have gone beyond the $100,000 mark in America:

Domino by Himyar.....	$203,300
Kingston by Spendthrift.....	142,562
Sir Walter by imp. Midlothian.....	128,450
Raceland by imp. Billet.....	121,920
Hanover by Hindoo.....	121,732
Salvator by imp. Prince Charlie.....	120,365
Miss Woodford by imp. Billet.....	118,970
Banquet by imp. Rayon d'Or.....	117,340
Tammany by Iroquois.....	117,055
Potomac by imp. St. Blaise.....	116,085
His Highness by imp. The Ill-Used.....	115,622
Dobbin by imp. Mr. Pickwick.....	114,331
Strathmeath by Strathmore.....	112,650
Firenz by imp. Glenelg.....	110,671
Tournament by imp. Sir Modred.....	107,007
Iroquois by imp. Leamington.....	101,613

Of these, Domino sired Doublet, owned by D. S. Fountain, and one of the crack sprinters now in California—the winner of many good races here.

Kingston, the best race horse ever known in America, is represented here by Urchin, while The Lady was a stake winner.

Sir Walter was bred at Rancho del Paso, and was one of the best race horses of half a dozen years ago.

Hanover (now dead) is represented on this Coast by Handpress, and Commercial Traveler; Hindoo by Nadaris.

Salvator has many sons and daughters in this State. It was only last Wednesday that Sir Hugh, a son, won at Ingleside—the first start of his career.

Miss Woodford, the ex-turf queen, is still at Rancho del Paso, and there are several more Billet mares at the same establishment, including Mottle.

Tammany has a number of sons and daughters in the Golden State, among the number Grand Sachem and Wardman, winners.

His Highness' sire, imp. The Ill-Used, has a good son at the stud here in Sam Lucas.

W. M. Murry at last accounts owned Miss Pickwick, by imp. Mr. Pickwick, while another mare by this horse is Picnic, owned by Burns & Waterhouse, and one of the best stud matrons in the State.

Firenz, who recently died at Rancho del Paso, left two good daughters in Firenzeta and Pearl V.

Tournament was bred in California, and Physalis, owned by the late Charles L. Fair, is by the great horse. She is the mother of Phyz, a winner this season.

Iroquois has had a number of performers out this way, while the broodmare Gondale, dam of Domingo, winner of 39 races, is at Rancho del Paso, also Iris, dam of San Mateo, Bliss Rucker, Peril and Cornflag.

Of the $100,000 winners mentioned above Iroquois is the only horse to produce a winner of this magnitude, though imp. Rayon-d'Or won over $121,000 and sired Banquet, winner of $117,340. Prince Charlie may have won $100,000 on the turf, and, if so, he will be placed alongside Iroquois. Imp. Billet is the only horse on the above list of honor to sire two winners of more than $100,000 in America. Spendthrift is a son of imp. Australian and Strathmore a grandson, while Iroquois is by imp. Leamington and Tammany a grandson of the great sire. Both St. Blaise and Mr. Pickwick are sons of the Derby-winner Hermit. Outside of this, the others are all from different families on the sire's side.

The winners on the English and French turf that put over $100,000 to the credit of their owners were:

Isinglass, by Isonomy.....	$280,675
Donovan, by Galopin.....	275,675
Flying Fox, by Orme.....	200,000
Ayrshire, by Hampton.....	179,500
La Fleche, by St. Simon.....	174,300
Orme, by Ormonde.....	170,000
Gladiator, by Monarque.....	150,135
Sunfoot, by Wisdom.....	133,380
Lord Lyon, by Stockwell.....	127,825
Seabreeze, by Isonomy.....	121,330
Rayon-d'Or, by Flageolet.....	121,040
Achievement, by Stockwell.....	112,125
Formosa, by Buccaneer.....	105,400
Signorina.....	104,380
Cremorne by Parmesan.....	103,139
Bendigo, by Ben Battle.....	100,525
Common, by Isonomy.....	100,000
Persimmon, by St. Simon.....	100,000
Memoir, by St. Simon.....	100,000
Fisherman, by Heron.....	100,000

* Estimated to have won at least that sum.

Isinglass' brother, Islington, was for several years in this State, and begot the great Kinley Mack, winner of the Brooklyn and Suburban Handicaps, etc. Michel III., another good horse, and the speedy Mary Black were also by Islington.

Ayrshire has a son on A. B. Spreckels' Napa Stock Farm.

La Fleche's dam was the third dam of imp. Sain, who was here for some time and has a number of his sons and daughters running here. Mr. J. B. Haggin now owns the dam of Sain.

A few of the Greenbacks in this State had the blood of the mighty "triple crown" winner, Gladiator, in their veins.

Rayon d'Or has a magnificent son at Antioch in Rubicon, winner of 46 races, while Ray of Gold, by the famous horse, was owned by the late Charles L. Fair. There is considerable of the Rayon d'Or blood in California, and Tenny, a son, has some descendants hereabouts.

Imp. Ormonde has the Stockwell blood closer up than perhaps any horse in the State.

Imp. Fairy Rose and her progeny have the Buccaneer cross, as had imp. Trentola.

Cremorne blood, received through imp. St. George, is plentiful in this section.

St. Avonicus' second dam was by Ben Battle (sire of Bendigo).

There are two St. Simon horses in our midst, imp. Bassettlaw and St. Avonicus, while imp. St. Andrew recently died at Rancho del Paso. Mr. A. B. Spreckels owns a grandson (by St. Serf).

There are several horses with the Fisherman cross in this part of the world, those from Australia generally having lots of this blood, while Burns & Waterhouse's Sweet Favordale had for a second dam Bittern by Fisherman. Thus we are very much "in the swim."

On the 10th of December, twenty-two thoroughbred horses are to be sold at the Occidental Horse Exchange, on the list being ten yearlings from the Mallowmot Stock Farm, of W. J. Taylor, Victoria, B. C.; three two year olds belong to Thos. H. Williams, Jr., and eleven baby racers from the Burns & Waterhouse stable, including some excellent turf performers, one being Adirondack. Nine of Mr. Taylor's yearlings are by the great son of Prince Charlie, Prince Rudolph, while the dams produced excellent winners, notably Malaspena and Puss in Boots. Mr. Taylor owns some very high priced, high bred mares and should have the greatest of success in breeding with such a successful stallion as Prince Rudolph as premier at the farm. At last accounts, the distinguished lawyer was the proud owner of a half-sister to the unbeaten Ormonde by Vedette instead of Bend Or. Other mares represented at this sale are imp. Larksome by Skylark (son of King Tom) out of the famous Lucy Glitters by Speculum, Tabby (dam of Puss in Boots) by Westbourne—Tibby by Sterling (sire of Isonomy), Elsie by Fellowcharm—Elsie S. by imp. Glenelg, imp. Accident by Blair Athol—Ambulance, Fleaspot by imp. Brutus—Cheviot mare, Wandillah by Waterloo (son of Epigram, he by Blair Athol)—Grace Darling, Maggie Burns by Highland Chief—Counterpart by Thurio, Louise Michel by Wiseman (son of Wisdom)—Petro-leuse by Scamp, and Miowira (dam of Malaspena) by Grandmaster (son of the great Gladiator)—Banrie by Blair Athol. There can hardly fail to be some rare good ones in this lot. But one of the youngsters is by Little Mid, a son of the dead Midlothian.

Imp. Reggie, which cost 1350 guineas as a yearling, though he did not race, and brought to this country by John Mackey, finally passing into the hands of Charles Kerr, died at the latter's Antrim Stock Farm, Bakersfield, a short time ago. Reggie got but few foals (for years not any), but at length St. Nicholas (dam Virginia Dare) made his appearance and proved a stake winner. Mr. Kerr gave $6000 for this horse, one of the most fashionably bred thoroughbreds that ever left old England's shores. Hermit (the Derby winner of 1876) was his sire, Nyl Gau by Musjed (Derby winner), his dam; the second dam Bas Bleu (dam of the Derby winner, Blue Gown) by Stockwell (winner of the 2000 Guineas and St. Leger); third dam Vexation (a famous producer) by Touchstone (winner of the St. Leger), fourth dam, Vat by Langar; fifth dam, Wire (sister to the Derby winners Whalebone and Whisker) by Waxy (winner of the Derby); sixth dam, Penelope by Trumpator; seventh dam, Prunella by Highflyer—the No. 1 family of the Bruce Lowe Figure System. Hermit was by Newminster (winner of the St. Leger), he by Touchstone (winner of the St. Leger) out of the renowned Beeswing (four times winner of the Doncaster Cup) by Dr. Syntax. Touchstone was by Camel, son of Whalebone (Derby), he by Waxy (Derby), he by Pot-8-os and he by the unbeaten Eclipse. This is gilt edged breeding and it is much to be regretted that Reggie could not have lived and had a larger number of foals to represent him on the turf, for they could scarcely have been anything but good performers.

Magnet, the magnificent St. Blaise horse brought here by Dan Honig and sold to Prince Poniatowski for stud purposes, is now at Newcastle, New South Wales, the property of a Mr. Hogue. Mr. R. E. de B. Lopez sent the horse over, and now that The Fog, Phyz, Blissful and Clarinette have been returned good winners his loss will be severely felt. Magnet won forty races during his turf career and over $20,000, and had to his credit a series of wonderful performances, including five furlongs on 1:01, five and one-half furlongs in 1:07½, six furlongs in 1:13, seven and one-half furlongs in 1:33½, mile in 1:39½ and one and one-eighth miles in 1:52½. This record has been equalled by few horses in the world's history, and Mr. Hogue is a lucky man in securing such a stallion as Magnet, who combines race horse ability, good breeding and ability to transmit his excellence to his progeny. The Fog took up 118 pounds and won the Mackey Stakes at Sacramento this fall in 1:13½, winning in a gallop.

Jackson's Napa Soda is sold in every city, town and hamlet in the State.

Horse Owners Should Use
GOMBAULT'S
Caustic Balsam
The Great French Veterinary Remedy.
A SAFE, SPEEDY AND POSITIVE CURE.

Prepared exclusively by J. E. Gombault, ex-Veterinary Surgeon to the French Government Stud.
SUPERSEDES ALL CAUTERY OR FIRING
Impossible to produce any scar or blemish. The safest best Blister ever used. Takes the place of all liniments for mild or severe action. Removes all Bunches or Blemishes from Horses or Cattle.
As a HUMAN REMEDY for Rheumatism, Sprains, Sore Throat, Etc., it is invaluable. that one tablespoonful of
WE GUARANTEE CAUSTIC BALSAM will produce more actual results than a whole bottle of any liniment or spavin cure mixture ever made.
Every bottle of Caustic Balsam sold is warranted to give satisfaction. Price $1.50 per bottle. Sold by druggists, or sent by express, charges paid, with full directions for its use. Send for descriptive circulars, testimonials, etc.—Address

GUN CLUBS OF CURRITUCK SOUND.

Sumptuous Establishments Maintained on the Eastern Ideal Shooting Grounds.

Much has been said and written concerning the duck shooting clubs of the Pacific Coast. Many gun clubs are in existence, each having a club house, kennels, boats, keepers, cooks, etc., etc., and in fact every accessory for making our sportsman comfortable in every respect. Some of our shooting preserves are spoken of in the highest praise, in fact there are numbers of our sportsmen who believe conscientiously that his own particular club has the best duck shooting grounds on the Coast. Many of our clubs, have without doubt just about ideal duck hunting ponds, limit bags being the almost invariable rule. One thing certain, and that is, our sportsmen can congratulate themselves in the lucky and favorable weather conditions they enjoy. Excepting to the far north the rigors of snow and ice are not winter hardships which our hunters must confront when in quest of ducks or geese.

The words of praise often heard concerning some choice shooting section of the Suisun, Los Banos district, Yolo basin, Big Meadows, Klamath Lake region, Pelican lake, Coose bay, etc., etc., are echoed in kind by an Eastern sportsman, particularly a shooter from the central Atlantic coast zone, when he refers to the possibilities of Currituck sound in the way of wild-fowl shooting. Among these gentlemen there is a very general conviction that the best all-round water-fowl shooting in the United States is found among the islets and along the innumerable small bays, inlets and channels of Currituck sound, and thence extending down into Pamlico bay as far as Ocracoke inlet. This opinion, particularly of Washington gunners, must carry great weight, because they hail from all quarters of the country, and have hunted on the water-fowl sloughs, rivers and lakes of every state in the Union. Almost to a man they believe Currituck to be the greatest haunt of bird game in this country.

The one drawback, so far as sportsmen at large are concerned, is that nearly the entire shooting area of Currituck from Sand Bridge down to Kitty Hawk is leased and reserved for private shooting. If a man happens to be President, an Admiral in the navy, a General in the army or a United States Senator, with knowledge of a gun and a desire to kill something, he can shoot on Currituck sound, but plain, every-day sportsmen, no matter how well bred or expert with the breech-loader, seldom obtain the privilege.

In a straight line north and south the sound is about fifty miles long. In its widest part it is not ten miles across, the average being perhaps five miles. Not less than twenty-five shooting clubs are located along these water or marsh fronts. They are the lessees, in some cases the owners, of the shores and islands and related rights to the adjacent waters. These clubmen are New Yorkers, Philadelphians, and some of them hail from Boston. Sportsmen from Rhode Island, Connecticut and New Jersey have long had footholds on Currituck sound.

Their clubhouses and boathouses dot the shores of the sound and its islands. Some of them are very pretentious affairs. Their "shooting grounds" are guarded with jealous care by superintendents who live permanently at the club headquarters, having in some cases several assistants. The sound is constantly patrolled throughout the day, and oftentimes far into the night, by the watch-boats of these guardians of the water-fowl. They are ever on the alert for poachers. And there are many poachers to be warned off.

Currituck has long been the sportsman's paradise. The leader of the first English expedition to those coasts, nearly 300 years ago, noted the extraordinary flight of water-fowl up what afterwards became known as Currituck sound. Before the introduction of the improved modern firearms their numbers must have been astounding.

A hundred years ago there was probably not a leased shooting place on the Atlantic Coast, from Maine to Florida. In those days there was "free shooting" for everybody. About fifty years ago a gradual change set in in this regard. Gunners found it advantageous to own or control eligible shooting districts. This movement began near the densely populated centres, but gradually extended to the more remote shores of the Chesapeake bay and Currituck sound, where the shooting was best. Thus began the gun club system as we now see it developed.

There were a few formal local organizations with vague "rights" on Currituck sound some years prior to the Civil War, but they lacked the cohesive elements which characterize the later organizations. After the war a new spirit was speedily manifest, backed by greater means and a more definite purpose. About 1870 the business of securing shooting rights and erecting club houses, shooting stations and of stocking the sound with sailing craft for sporting purposes began in earnest. By 1890, the best shooting was all "taken," either by purchase or lease. In the thirty-five miles of upper Currituck sound there remains not a foot of free shooting water. In its lower reaches there are a few points where an outsider can do some shooting without being "run in" for trespass or summarily driven off by club watchmen. After passing out of Currituck by Collington island to the southward, there are still to be found very good shooting stands, though around Roanoke island several clubs are already established. Water-fowl are apparently as plentiful in this vicinity as in Currituck sound, but the general topography is not so favorable for gunning. Southward the shooting again improves, and very little of it has been purchased or leased.

From Duck island, at the southern point of Roanoke, down to Hatteras, the sand bars and "reefs" swarm with water fowl. They vibrate between the ocean and the shallow bays and inlets of Dare and Hyde counties, on the main North Carolina shore. Off Chickamico-mico and below around Gull island, in the sound, the shooting is equal to anything in Currituck. Most of it is still "free shooting, too."

No ordinary map shows the aquatic conditions prevailing in Currituck and the lower sounds, especially along their ocean fronts. They are all very shallow, a condition, in fact, which makes them "sounds." They are separated from the Atlantic by a mere thread of generally low and bare sand, averaging perhaps a mile wide, but in many places no more than a few rods separates the big Atlantic breakers from the dead shallows of the sounds.

On the inner side of Currituck sound, particularly, this sand dike is lined with innumerable low, flat islands, covered with grass and high reeds. There are archipelagoes containing scores of these islands. They can be seen only on the charts of the coast and geodetic survey. In these island channels are found the best natural feeding grounds for water-fowl known to the birds or their chief enemy, man. A single glance at one of these maps will disclose to the experienced sportsman why Currituck sound is the best shooting area in the whole country.

It is these unexampled conditions which have eventuated in making Currituck sound practically a private shooting preserve, says a writer in the Boston Herald. The best known of all the clubs, perhaps, is the Ragged Island Gunning Association of Norfolk, New York and Connecticut sportsmen. Ragged island is popularly supposed to hold first place in the essential point of certainty of flight and big bags, but many experts of much experience on Currituck assert that one or two others are superior to it.

Palmer's Island Club is mainly composed of New Yorkers. The Swan Island Club is a Boston concern. So, too, is the Lighthouse Club, or was so until quite recently. The Monkey Island Club had a Rhode Island origin, but is more mixed now. Brock Haven Club organization was mainly the work of Mr. Barbour, the wealthy thread man of Orange, N. J. Then there is the Princess Anne Club of gunners from the upper cities of New York and Connecticut, the Sand Bridge Club of New York and Philadelphia lawyers and doctors, Head of the Bay Club, the Narrows Island Club, the Currituck Shooting Club, which includes Seward Webb, Havemeyer, Post, Schermerhorn and other noted New Yorkers among its members.

Besides the regular clubs, there are individual holdings of importance, fitted up as expensively as the others.

Constant changes are going on. Old clubs sell out or go out of existence and are succeeded by new ones with fresh blood. Some data concerning the Sand Bridge Club, organized about 1898, furnish interesting evidence of the scale on which these Currituck Shooting plants are projected. As a preliminary step the club purchased outright the farm and marshes shuting in the head of North bay, the northernmost reach of the sound. The ground was poor and cheap, but they paid $20,000 for 3000 or 4000 acres of it. Then they expended $2500 for improvements. James E. Dyer was engaged as custodian at $500 per annum, and in addition given the use of the large house and farm, on the understanding that he was to charge the clubmen no more than $2 per day for board whenever they came down from New York for a little recreation and sport on the marshes.

It is very seldom there are over half a dozen people at a time at any one of these shooting lodges. Sometimes for a year or more not a single member will put in an appearance at some of them. The keeper, however, goes right on drawing his salary and "keeping things up," just the same as if they were expected the next day.

Some of the most distinguished men in the country have at various times been the guests of the various clubs. It was at the Ragged Island Club that President Cleveland and Admiral Evans did such killing work a few years ago.

There is just a suspicion that the Currituck shooting has somewhat deteriorated from its zenith, but if so, only the old-timers can detect the difference. Any stranger, observing the myriads of swan, geese, brant and ducks daily banked up like terraced reefs along the shores of the sound and on the sand and mud bars running out from the islets, or in flight, according as the tide may be working, in their vast deployment swaying now gradually upward like some distant cloud, which these moving flocks greatly resemble, then sinking down again to the water horizon, would exclaim against the supposition. Nevertheless, they must have been thinned: thousands have fallen in the last few years before the popular hammerless modern shotgun in the hands of an annually increasing number of gunners.

Salmon continue to run up the Paper Mill for the purpose of spawning. Last Sunday a fine fish weighing thirty-five pounds was taken with a spear near the county road bridge at Tocaloma. At a rifle in the Lagunitas recently a woodchopper is reported to have shot nineteen large salmon with a rifle as the fish were going over the riffle.

Guns of the Eighteenth Century

An ancient work recently picked up at an old-book dealer's shop by an English sportsman contains the following description of the guns used 100 years ago and is replete with information that will prove of much interest to many devotees of the gun to-day. The work is entitled "An Essay on Shooting," published at London, 1791.

The author does not give his name, but he was evidently well acquainted with the subject, both practically and theoretically, and states that he had spared no expense in acquiring information from the best gun makers. He quotes considerably from a book called "La Chasse de Fusil," by Magne de Marolles. In the introduction he expatiates upon the physical and moral advantages of shooting, and the need of man for solitude, so that he may "enjoy the converse of his own bosom and retire from the rapid amusements of the age." Just as the double barrelled hammerless ejector seems to us, at the present day, hardly capable of improvement, so this writer says of the guns made 111 years ago: "In these days when invention seems to be exhausted," and "the genius and industry of the English workman have brought flintlocks to such a degree of elegance and perfection that we have scarcely anything further to hope for or require." The crossbow is stated to have been not wholly disused for shooting both small and large game until nearly the end of the sixteenth century, "at which time the arquebuse was brought to such perfection as to enable the sportsman to shoot flying." During the transition period, many complained that the beasts of the chase "had become very scarce where the arquebuse was used," owing to its noise.

In this respect the correspondent of the English Shooting Times adds the curious note to his review of the work above mentioned: "This agrees with what was told me by two Indians with whom I was encamped in New Brunswick in 1862. They said their forefathers had no difficulty in killing deer with arrows, because they were very tame before the introduction of guns."

It appears that, for some time after the invention of the flintlock, many sportsmen argued that the matchlock was preferable because "the fire of the match was more quick and certain when once the match touched the powder used for priming; but the time occupied in preparing to fire must have occasionally caused the loss of a shot. In 1869, the writer was at a hunt in the jungles of Central India in company with several Hindoo landholders who used matchlock guns. These had a pan at the side of the breech, shaped like that of a flintlock, but fitted with a flat lid attached by a pivot so as to slide on and off horizontally and protect the priming. The slow match, made of thin cotton rope soaked in a solution of nitre, was coiled under the stock, its extremity being held by a spring nipper which formed the end of a curved piece of iron corresponding to the hammer of an ordinary single barrelled gun. Before aiming, it was necessary to first blow the burning end of the match until it was in a red glow, and then to slide the lid off the pan; but, when the trigger was pressed, the explosion seemed to me to be as quick as that of a percussion gun. The barrels were smooth bored, and so long that the muzzle reached to a man's forehead when the stock rested on the ground. They were thus able to burn a large charge of the coarse native-made powder and drive a bullet with great velocity. Native hunters have been known to stalk and kill tigers with these weapons, which is certainly a proof of great coolness and courage.

The author of the "Essay" devotes a considerable portion of the book to instructions about the training of dogs, the art of shooting flying game, the pursuit of the various kinds of small game, and the construction and use of rifle barrels; but extracts from these would occupy too much space. The following is a summary of the details he gives about shotguns: Both plain and twist barrels were made much as they are now, but Damascus appears to have been unknown. Some French makers heated the plain barrels, a few inches at a time, and twisted them until the fibre of the iron had assumed a spiral form. One French inventor strengthened his barrels by twisting iron wire round them, soldering it together and filing the outside smooth. Spanish barrels had a great reputation, but the author had not found them to be better than those made in England.

They were usually 35 to 42 inches long, three to three and a-half pounds in weight, and 22 to 24 calibre. The best barrels, both in Spain and England, were made from old horse-shoe nails, as much as 28 pounds of these being used in forming a barrel of 3½ pounds weight. The repeated heating and forging added greatly to their toughness. English barrels were proved in London with a ball which fitted the bore, and a charge of powder equal to the ball in weight. (This would be about 10½ drams for a 24-bore.) As to length of barrels, it is stated: "Formerly every sportsman was provided with different lengths, 30 to 34 inches for shooting in covert, and 42 to 45 inches for the open country." The belief was general that the longer a barrel the further it would range; and it is not more than fifty years ago since this began to be doubted. "I have, at different times, compared barrels of 28, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38, and 40 inches in length, and of calibres from 22 to 26, and with equal weights of the same powder and shot. From these trials, frequently repeated, I found that the shot pierced an equal number of sheets from the short as the long barrels. I have repeatedly compared two barrels of the same calibre, but one 33 and the other 66 inches long, at different distances from 45 to 100 paces, and the results have always been that the barrel of 33 inches drove its shot through as many sheets of paper as that of 66 did." "The barrels which I employ and have found best for every purpose are from 32 to 38 inches; and, whether we consult the appearance of the piece, its lightness, or the ease with which it is managed, I believe that a barrel not exceeding the one, nor below the other of these numbers, is the most eligible." Paper pads are not quite reliable as tests of penetration; experiments made in England some years ago seemed to prove that there was a decided, though not very great, decrease in velocity with every inch cut off a barrel from 30 to 26 inches. The celebrated Joe Monton considered that, in a 22-bore gun, barrels of 32 inches gave the best results. The author disagrees with the common opinion that small bores shoot more closely than large. He says: "We have subjected this matter to the test of experiment, and the result has been that barrels of 22 to 24, which is the largest calibre usually employed in fowling-pieces, threw their shot as closely as the smallest calibres—viz., 30 to 32." (I have tried many small bores from 16 to 42, and never found them shoot more closely than those of 14 to 11 bore, with one exception, notes the writer. A double muzzle-loading Westley Richards gun of 32-calibre, although the barrels were only 26 inches long, when loaded with 2 drams of fine powder and 1 ounce of No. 7 shot, made such remarkably close and regular patterns at 40 yards that a snipe could rarely have escaped. It did not shoot closely with any larger size.)

The following methods are described in the "Essay" as adopted for improving closeness of pattern: (1) Making horizontal scratches round the inside of the barrel, close to the muzzle. (2) Making both breech and muzzle ends wider than the central part. (3) Gradually contracting the bore from breech to muzzle. (4) Cutting straight grooves from breech to muzzle. (5) Making the whole of the bore very smooth, and perfectly cylindrical. The author had not tested the barrels with straight grooves, but of the others he had found none superior to the perfect cylinders. (The system of enlarging both breech and muzzle for several inches in length prevailed until the adoption of choke boring. One of my sporting friends, a very scientific gunner of muzzle-loading days, often assured me that, by a modification of this method, he had made all his own guns shoot well, and kill at unusual distances. He enlarged the breech end only so far as the powder charge reached, so that the wad was in the cylindrical part above it. This prevented the escape of the powder gas into the shot, and the consequent scattering. The shot charge, having to travel through a perfect cylinder, did not have its pellets crushed out of shape as they were in guns which were of narrower calibre towards the center of the barrel. The muzzles of my friend's guns were enlarged for two or three inches, and he believed that, on the shot reaching this part, its pellets were pressed together by the sudden rush of gas past them. Whether his theory was correct or not, the patterns made by one of his guns, an 11-bore, which I tried at a target, were remarkably close and good. I feel sure that nine out of ten among the best game shots would do better all-around work with guns making similar patterns than with those which are highly choked). Both the rough and the fine boring of barrels was done in the eighteenth century by methods very similar to those still used, except that less machinery was employed. Double barrels were made with one over the other instead of side by side. "Patent shot," which was considered the best, contained the following number of pellets in an ounce: No. 1, 220; No. 2, 180; No. 3, 157; No. 4, 105; No. 5, 283; No. 6, 300; No. 7, 480; No. 8, 620.

The charges recommended were, "For a fowling-piece of common calibre, which is from 24 to 30 balls in the pound, 1½, or at most 1¾ drams of powder, and 1 to 1½ ounces of shot, but, if larger than No. 5, increase it by a quarter of an ounce." Wadding was made with soft brown paper, tow, or the lichen growing on apple trees. It was also punched from old hats, cork, and thick woolen cloth. No. 1 shot is stated to have been the best for the first month of partridge shooting, and particularly good for snipe and quail. No. 3 was best when partridges became strong on the wing, and was excellent for all purposes, many sportsmen using no other during the whole season. It was necessary to keep the gun moving, and aim "a little in front of the head of game, at thirty-five paces, and fully six inches in front and a little above it at fifty paces." "The distance at which the sportsmen ought infallibly to kill any kind of game with patent shot, No. 3, with good aim, is from 25 to 35 paces for hares or rabbits, and 40 to 45 for winged game."

As to killing infallibly, the reviewer comments, "I do not believe that any gun is certain to do so. Out of the great numbers which I have tried at marks, during the last forty years, I have not found one which did not occasionally, leave spaces at forty yards through which a partridge could escape untouched, and that, too, with shot containing 260 to over 300 pellets in the charge. Doubtless the guns of the author's time, by the best makers, shot, as a rule, so closely that when he failed to kill he thought himself to blame. The charge of 1½ ounces of No. 3 shot, which he recommends, contained only 196 pellets, and, even allowing for the close pattern caused by the small quantity of powder, a weapon which carried them well enough to be usually sure of a partridge at more than forty paces must be fully equal to the best unchoked guns of the present day. The distances at which he advises aiming in front of a bird show that, practically, no more allowance for the speed of game was necessary than with our modern guns; consequently, the flintlocks by good makers must have caused a very quick ignition of the powder. There could have been little of the 'fizz-bang' described in books by theoretical writers."

The remarks of the author, in the latter part of the book, about shooting game like rabbits and woodcock in covert, or snipe and grouse in open country, prove that guns, even with barrels 38 inches long, were so nicely balanced that our forefathers were able to use them with great rapidity and accuracy. I have tried the charge recommended, viz., 1½ drams of powder and 196 pellets of shot, from an old Maynard 18-bore barrel, slightly recess choked, but only 26 inches long. The pattern at 42 paces is close enough to insure killing a partridge, the weight of the large pellets giving the necessary penetration with the small powder charge; but the killing circle is not more than 24 inches; consequently, a very accurate aim had to be taken. That this was the practice, may be inferred from a remark of the author: "A true sportsman is not content with only breaking the wing of a partridge or the thigh of a hare when he shoots at a fair distance; for, in such case, the hare or the partridge ought to be shot in such a manner that it should remain in the place where it falls, and not require the assistance of the dogs to take it."

Massachusetts Sportsmen Find the Belgian Hare a Game Animal.

Belgian hares, it appears, have been liberated in Massachusetts for the purpose of enhancing the game supply for sportsmen. In that State rabbits are considered a prominent factor in providing sport for the hunter. The "bunnies" are hunted with gun and dog, Beagles being used to drive them, the shooters being stationed on runways.

The liberation of the Belgians has given an impetus to the rabbit shooters and infused a new element into the sport of the Beagle hunters within the last twelve months. This latest development, it is claimed, is one which will soon raise the pleasures of rabbit hunting down East to a position in the field of sport to which it has never before attained.

The story descriptive of the introduction of the Belgians to the Eastern gunners is one that will appear to a certain extent ludicrous to Coast sportsmen. Both rabbits and hares are so plentiful with us as to be positive nuisances in many districts, notably so in some places where, in the case of the long-eared "jacks," annual drives for the extermination of the rodents are organized upon a large scale.

In the thickly settled East, where the country districts are devoted to agriculture and pasture and where woodland and covert is few and far between, rabbits and other small game are scarce and furnish during short open seasons a limited amount of sport. Climatic and other conditions also tend to keep down the supply of available game of various kinds, hence it can readily be seen that anything which will enhance the possibilities of indulgence in sports afield will be seized with avidity by our Eastern cousins, lovers of dog and gun.

The rabbit species, more than any other wild game creature, will thrive in a country where hunting ground is at a premium and the sportsman finds at every turn many evidences of man's usurpation of the field, marsh and woodland. The experiment, for such it is at present, can be watched with some little curiosity as to its outcome. The Belgian is a great breeder, give it a chance and it will multiply enormously if set at large in a congenial habitat. It looks fairly probable, however, that in the old state of Massachusetts the Belgian will have the opportunity of becoming a nuisance. It would be an amusing story to recount—for instance a rabbit drive in the Berkshire hills. Much has been written in Eastern papers anent the cruelty of rabbit drives. It would not be surprising at all, if rabbit drives may be a coming institution in the old Bay State. If they become thick, what a howl the truck farmers and orchardists have coming. It might pay some interested citizen of Massachusetts to gather a few statistics concerning hunting the hare in Belgium.

Concerning this innovation in rabbit hunting a Boston exchange states: The admirers of the little hound have always found one serious drawback to their chosen sport; the fact that the coney rabbit, upon which they are almost wholly dependant in this vicinity, will not make a long run ahead of a fast driving pack of Beagles. This drawback seems in a fair way to be done away with through the advent into Massachusetts covers of the Belgian hare.

What sort of sport they would afford the hunter was not shown until last fall, but the first report which came to the Fish and Game Commissioners about the Belgian as a game animal settled that matter in a most conclusive manner. This report came from Worcester, the home of many famous hunters and scent followers, both Foxhounds and Beagles. This is the story:

A party of Worcester gunners were hunting in a large swamp in the town of Holden, about eight miles north of the city, when their dog picked up a running track and made several circuits of the swamp before one of the hunters caught a fleeting glimpse of a swiftly moving animal through the brush. He fired, but without apparent effect, as the chase continued.

Tony, the Beagle in this case, is a fast and hard driver, and no rabbit had ever been known to stay above ground ahead of him for such a length of time. The hunters finally concluded that he must be driving a fox, yet the animal did not lead as a fox naturally would, but continued to play about the swamp, with an occasional swing around the adjoining pine hills.

The hunters took positions on different runways, and for over two hours enjoyed the finest drive they had ever listened to, when one of them brought down the quarry, which proved to be a plump Belgian.

It was then discovered that the first shot had raked him across the back in several places, but had no appreciable effect on his speed or staying qualities—a flat contradiction of the claim that the Belgian was a coward.

This was the first report of any of the liberated Belgians being killed, and the story of his magnificent run soon spread through the county, and at once established the Belgians' reputation as a most desirable addition to the native game animals of the State.

The Commissioners later received another account of a Belgian hare run quite as encouraging as the first. This came from one of their own men, Deputy Shea of Ware. Mr. Shea was also out after rabbits with a pair of Beagles. The dogs soon had one going, and drove him steadily for over three hours. The chase led through all sorts of cover and the Belgian, which was seen several times, had no difficulty in keeping well ahead of the dogs, which he finally succeeded in throwing off entirely.

The Belgians have been reported from many different parts of the State during the past summer; in fact, they have made a remarkable showing, considering the limited number the Commissioners have been obliged to spread over a large territory. The few which have been killed were plump and in fine condition, and when served on the table were pronounced of exceptionally fine flavor, showing that they take kindly to the Massachusetts covers.

When full grown and fat they will dress from eight to ten pounds each, and if they ever become plentiful, as now seems quite probable, they will prove a valuable food animal, besides furnishing a class of sport midway between fox and rabbit hunting, with all of the excitement and long runs of the former, but not leading straight away for several miles, as that animal frequently does.

Cupro-nickel, so generally employed as a covering for modern bullets to give them stability of form and a consequently increased penetrative power, is a mixture of copper and nickel, usually in the proportion of 80 to 20 parts respectively. This alloy is formed in plumbago crucibles, and, when drawn from the furnace, is skimmed and poured into molds. The ingots are then rolled and annealed, and the resultant strips of the required thickness are cleaned by dipping in vats of boiling acid. They are then dried, scrubbed clean with hot sawdust, and afterwards subjected to a treatment, which is a trade secret, and which gives an increased ductility. The strips, which are about one-thirtieth of an inch in thickness, are next cut into circular blanks of various size, which are cupped by dies and drawn into tubes of the length desired. To show the ductile strength of cupro-nickel: From a blank 1½ inches in diameter, and a thickness of 0.35 inches, a tube has been drawn in 8 processes to a length of 7 inches, and without showing a trace of fracture or even weakness in the metal. The walls of this tube were from 10 to 15-thousands of an inch thick. Special machinery is employed to shape the cupro-nickel envelope, and it is then ready for the leaden core. No other known metal or alloy could so well perform the duties required, or, as one technical writer has expressed it, "stand the enormous strain imposed upon it by its passage through a steel tube several thousandths of an inch less in diameter than itself, scored by the sharp edges of the rifling, and with something like a ton of pressure produced by scorching-hot gases on its slender posterior."

With sportsmen the question of repairs is one of no little importance. That waste and wear which always in the end necessitate the abandonment of everything in its day useful, is compensated and also retarded by repairs. But in the attempt to do this, much time and money are uselessly applied. One of the principal causes of loss is delay in making timely renovations and substitutions; another is injudicious ways of repairing; and, lastly, there is that kind of patchwork which it were wiser to abandon altogether. Instead of at once correcting what is amiss, many will allow the break down or worn article to go as long as it will hold together, when it is often found impossible to make it really serviceable again. Or, even if not so badly injured as this, the original deficiency has been multiplied many times by neglect, and the fault which would have cost little to remedy in time has caused many worse than itself.

In making repairs, too, it is often thought that a poor mechanic will do just as well as better and more costly skill. No greater mistake can be committed than to believe this. Patchwork is worse than useless unless it remedies the defect, and in a manner calculated to hold good for a considerable length of time.

Again, in constantly stopping to patch up and renovate old things—counterfeits of their former selves and make-shifts at best—more money is often sunk than would supply their places with new ones. Many people estimate the cost of repairs only from the cost of the material and labor. But in many cases the wasted time is the largest single element of expense, especially when the stoppage of one operation interferes with the processes of others. In making repairs, then, the following rules might well be observed: (1) repair, if at all, as soon as the thing gets out of order; (2) trust none but good mechanics with the work; (3) be careful not to continue patchwork when the articles in hand fail to be worth it.

Gunners down East seem to make the best of the existing order of things, conditions which would be looked upon here as a hardship indeed are made to furnish a modicum of sport. A dispatch to a Boston paper from Chatham, Mass., dated November 15th, states:

The conditions this week have been good for those who enjoy the fall gunning at the beaches and in the bays along the coast, but, strange as it may seem, there are only a few gunners who are here to enjoy the sport.

The large body of coots which were tending off the beach near the Chatham shore are now feeding farther down the shore. Off the Monomoy shore, these birds are tame and give good sport to those who will take the trouble to go out for them.

Charles G. Hamilton, a local gunner, bagged forty white wingers in a morning's shooting this week, and he says this record can be duplicated by anyone who can shoot.

There is also fair shooting in Chatham bay, and as these grounds are easier to reach, most of the shooting is being done at that place.

Black ducks are now coming in on the meadows in good numbers, and on these moonlight evenings some good bags are made. Russell A. Bearse and Mark A. Harding bagged eight fine birds at the Island Meadows this week, and in their opinion there will be a good flight this season.

Duck shooting is also reported good at the East Harwich blinds, in the fresh water ponds. Quail shooting remains good in nearly all of the Cape towns.

Deer Hunters Nearly Perish.

The narrow escape from death of a well known local sportsman prominent in our insurance circles, Mr. Tudor J. A. Tiedemann and two hunting companions, Mr. C. Young and Mr. Frank Davey of Victoria, last week, whilst deer shooting in the mountains not a score of miles distant from Victoria, B. C., was a very lucky termination of a hazardous adventure.

Mr. Tiedemann, who was in Victoria on a visit, set forth for Goldstream, seventeen miles from Victoria, on the 21st inst. The following morning, Saturday last, they started away for a deer stalking trip on Braden mountain nearby. Tiedemann got a deer soon after they began to hunt, the trio then started to bring the buck's carcass out over the trail. A fog came up and enveloped the mountain, and soon they could not see the blazes which marked the half-hidden trail. It was not long before they realized that they were lost, many shots were fired in the hope of getting a signal from some prospector's camp or the hotel at Goldstream, but without any result. They were compelled to abandon the deer, which Tiedemann was carrying, and found themselves walking in circles near the summit of the mountain.

Rain began to fall, and everything being wet and rainsoaked they were unable to make a fire. Toward nightfall the weather became very cold and the lost hunters were obliged, having failed in their efforts to build a fire, to keep walking to prevent freezing.

Their hands were swollen and they suffered otherwise, in fact almost perished, as a result of the exposure in the rain or heavy gale which raged during most of the time, before they were found late next morning by some other hunters and shown the way to Goldstream, whence they drove to Victoria on Monday. They were without food for thirty-five hours.

If the lost men had succeeded in building a fire much of their sufferings would have been avoided. The knack of starting a fire under similar conditions, as above enumerated, is not a very difficult one to some expert woodsmen, if the following suggestions which, we believe have been evolved from experience, are as reliable as they seem feasible.

Dry matches, of course, are the main desideratum. You are out on the mountain side or in the big woods, lost if you will, and have struggled along in the fog or rain, or until darkness has fallen. The earth is soaked and the trees dripping with moisture and the rain is dashing in your face and down your limbs underneath your clothing. On such an occasion one dry match is worth a thousand wet ones, but how few hunters are they that will provide any way for keeping matches dry during a period out in the driving rain. Here is where a waterproof match box is worth its weight in gold. Further progress may be impossible, or the hunter may have to keep moving continually to avoid freezing to death. Perhaps you may have to halt just where you are, and, if possible make yourself comfortable for the night, and your first needs are light and warmth.

Let us premise that the matches are all right, you are wet, and tired and miserable and cognizant of the one fact that you want a fire and want it bad. There is plenty of fuel all around you, but you can hardly find it in the darkness or fog, even if you already had it in hand, firing it with a match would be out of the question. Your greatest need is kindlings, and it is well to remember that any fallen twigs you may pick up will be water-soaked and worse than useless. Wood draws dampness from the earth, and a stick which is wet through to the heart will not burn. Furthermore, it is a waste of time to cut shavings from a stick, however thin, unless from a pine knot or a bit of hard wood that is thoroughly dry and thoroughly seasoned. While the rain is falling and the knife-blade is wet, it is impossible to prevent the shavings from becoming thoroughly soaked, and the flame of a match will blacken them and nothing more.

But now to tell you how to get your kindlings. As trees and bushes grow their lower branches die, and eventually drop off, but at any time you can find them, seasoned as hard as nails, still clinging to the parent trunk. So long as they remain on the tree no amount of rain can soak them through. A moment's trouble will secure you a double handful of little twigs from the size of a knitting needle to that of an eight-penny nail—the smaller they are the better—and you will be surprised to see how readily they will catch and how brightly they will burn. Add other small sticks as rapidly as you may without smothering the blaze, crossing them slightly, but only enough to permit a free draft. Don't make a "bird's nest" of your fire. Sticks, to burn well, must lie close enough together to keep hot.

A good deal depends upon the selection of a proper spot for fire building. Supposing you have been working in the darkness, as soon as a light has been secured it will be advisable to discover whether you had best move the fire to a more suitable place. A log or stump, whether sound or decayed, will, if the fire is started against it, help wonderfully in the way of making and throwing out heat. Be sure that you never fire a dead tree or stub which may possibly burn through and fall upon you. A green tree is usually safe, unless hollow.

For a quick, hot fire start your little blaze at the root of a tree, adding first short sticks, then longer and larger ones, leaning them over the fire with their upper ends resting against the bark. Pack them as closely as you like; the fire will find its way through. Keep stacking on the wood until you have made use of all within easy reach, and you will have a blaze that will dry your clothing from top to toe before finally dropping to a bed of embers.

The secret of successful fire building lies in taking plenty of time and placing each individual stick where it will burn to the best advantage. There is a story of one clever woodsman who once, in midwinter, camped comfortably on a floating log, miles from dry land, collecting his fuel from the driftwood which had caught against neighboring bushes and was lodged high and dry; another tale of ingenious resource is related where a sportsman once ran across a couple of town lads who had pitched their tent in some cedar brakes and had wasted their last match in trying to light a heap of green limbs as large as your arm. To teach them a practical lesson in woodcraft, he removed the bullet from a 38-35 shell, replaced it with a pinch of rotten wood crumbled into bits the size of wheat grains, and in five minutes had "shot fire" into an old stump—thus solving the problem that had been troubling the boys for hours.

Pine needles, even if wet, can be easily wiped dry enough to burn. They are resinous and ignite quickly. Various tree leaves, among them the laurel, contain oily matter that is highly inflammable; pepperwood and bay leaves and the leaves of the "Toyon" bush, commonly known as the redberry bush, are also good material for fire making, being very combustible and easily made dry enough to burn.

It is possible our lost sportsmen, who passed through the above ordeal, may have been experienced enough in woodcraft to have started their fire all right, but circumstances may have been of such character as to effectually prevent any efforts for building a fire or otherwise making themselves more comfortable than by the desperate expedient of keeping on the go all the time to save their lives. The above hints on building a fire, however, are practical and of merit and we give them for the benefit of sportsmen at large, for who knows when he may be called upon to avail himself of some device of woodcraft, simple or intricate in its nature, that may be the means of averting disaster?

FEATHER AND FIN.

See at the earliest dawn of day,
The jolly angler wend his way
To streams where far from care and strife,
From smoky house and scolding wife,
He snares the funny race in quiet,
Where Dolliver's nor Precht's tales run not to riot.

A difficulty attendant upon the manufacture of canvas decoy ducks has been the procuring of a preparation that should make the cloth perfectly water and air proof, and without robbing it of the necessary quality of flexibility. Leaving rubber out of the question, the only agent found which would accomplish this was linseed oil, and, as is well known, the best grade of linseed oil will not thoroughly dry into any fabric into which it may be applied, but will soften and become sticky under climatic influences. Recently there has been discovered and adopted a proofing heretofore unknown to science, and it is found especially adapted for proofing cloth so that it will be impervious to water and air, retain its pliability and remain perfectly dry under all conditions. Canvas decoys have been on the market for a number of years, and each season has witnessed improvement in their construction. They are now made thinner than formerly and sit lower on the water; a loop is attached under the tail of the decoy through which the anchor cord passes, so that the decoy will turn head from the wind and ride the waves erect; a new inflating valve has been added, and the appearance of the decoys improved by the application of a coat of finish over the paint. While these decoys are very durable, they are, of course, liable to develop air leaks through long or bad use, in which case they may be re-sealed by the preparation, furnished by the manufacturers, which is applied on the inside. One quart of this preparation will treat one dozen decoys two or three times, making them as good as new at a very slight cost. The decoys weigh about four ounces each, and are made to imitate nearly every species of waterfowl pursued by American sportsmen.

The first account of the use of artificial flies in angling was written by Aelian, A. D. 230. He also gives approximate figures as to the original world's record for distance casting: "I have heard this account of a mode of fishing in Macedonia. In a river called Astraeus, which flows between Beraea and Thessalonica, are found fishes marked with various colors. * * * These feed upon flies that play upon the water. * * * The fish see these as they sport upon the surface, and, moving slyly through the water till they get under the insect, leap upon it as a wolf upon a sheep in a flock, or an eagle upon one out of a flock of geese, and seizing their prey sink again into the deep water. The fisherman could not use these flies for bait, as when caught in the hand they lost their color and wings. * * * But in the course of time as their angling science advanced they learned to outwit the fish by their ingenuity. They first wrapped around the hook some Phoenician wool, and tied on two feathers or the wattles of a cock's neck of a wax color. This they threw with a pole or reed four cubits (seven or eight feet) long, and a line the same length. These cunning artifices they threw on the water, and the fish, attracted by the appearance of the pretty insect they feed upon, seized the bait and were caught."

DOINGS IN DOGDOM.

We expect to see shortly a new local kennel of Irish Terriers. The new kennel will be composed of some of Mrs. Bradley-Dyne's dogs. The kennels at Sidney, B. C., contain about the best Irishmen on the Coast. This addition to the local doggy interests will be a move on appreciated lines. This breed is one that we are very much lacking here. These dogs are good looking and game; there is no reason why we should not have a number of good ones here.

The outlook for the Oakland show grows brighter daily, entries are coming in nicely, there being an unexpected demand for the premium lists outside of the regular channels of distribution.

A perusal of our classified columns this week will show opportunities for the purchase of some good Bull Terriers, English Setters, Cocker, St. Bernards, and Great Danes. The dogs offered for sale are the progeny of some of the best strains in their respective breeds.

Of the new "ada" we will call particular attention to the offer of Bull Terriers and the announcement of Gablian Kennels.

Mr. L. G. Rowley thought so much of the Irish Terrier Irish which he sold to Charles F. Charles that he bought the dog back again this week.

The scale of points adopted by the A. K. C. to regulate the values of winners classes are as follows: 1250 dogs or over, 5 points; 750 dogs and under 1250, 4 points; 500 dogs and under 750, 3 points; 250 dogs and under 500, 2 points; under 250 dogs, 1 point. All shows to be rated upon the actual number of dogs entered, not including local classes.

On the Pacific Coast, 400 dogs or over, 5 points; 250 dogs and under 400, 2 points; under 250 dogs, 1 point.

Specialty clubs holding shows confined to their own breed, 4 points. Specialty clubs holding shows not confined to their own breed will be rated as regular shows.

New clubs holding inaugural shows, having no previous record, shall be rated 1 point as a minimum.

No active member of the A. K. C. can delegate its right to any other club or person to hold or manage a show in its name.

Secretary Plume in a communication to Superintendent Bradshaw states that "medals are offered for competition among members of the California Cocker Club only, at the forthcoming Oakland Show, viz: Club medal for best black dog. Club medal for best black bitch. Club medal for best other than black dog. Club medal for best other than black bitch. Club medal for best puppy any color. Open to all—Club medal for best Cocker in the Show. Plumeria Cocker Kennels offer a silver and cut glass trophy for best Cocker Spaniel sired by one of the Plumeria stud dogs. Donor not to compete. J. J. Grimsey, Esq., offers a silver cup for the best Cocker Spaniel stud dog to be judged by two of his get, the merits of all to be considered. There will be more specials to add to this list later."

It is well to remember that to have healthy, handsome and profitable dogs, they, and their kennels and yards, must be kept clean. As the good housewife begins her spring cleaning, the owner of a breeding kennel will see to it that house and yard cleaning has begun, and persisted in until thoroughly done. If individual kennels are used, that is small kennels for each yard, they should be thoroughly swept out, cleansed, and disinfected, moved on to fresh ground, and each yard raked and cleaned, and all parts of the runs that are not to grass should be spaded, or if large enough to permit of it, ploughed. If at least a part of the runs are not sod, don't forget to sow or plant a row of oats or wheat close to the bottom board of the dividing fences, for the benefit of the dogs, and if you have never tried it you will be surprised to see how much of the leaves or blades will be eaten by the dogs, and how much better they will feel, act and thrive by having access to it when needed. The animals use it as a medicine; it is also of use as shade later on in the season, and helps to keep the ground moist, which prevents fleas from breeding in the soil. Those owners who do not attend to the comfort of their dogs, or who have no kennel manager that does, will never succeed in the business. Dogs must have a reasonable amount of thought and care bestowed upon them and their surroundings, or a good lot of animals will soon present a woeful appearance, and be but little more attractive to visitors and buyers than a lot of very ordinary specimens. In fact, a lot of ordinary specimens that are being properly cared for will be the most attractive, and demand better prices. Like all other live stock, extra care is productive of extra returns, and specimens thus cared for bring extra prices; hence a good profit and a yearly increase in the demand for stock from such an owner.

Feeding of Baby Beef.

A correspondent from West Branch, Iowa, writes as follows:

"I am just beginning to feed a carload of calves for 'baby beef.' All are high grade Herefords and Shorthorns. I want to feed until about May 1st. My rough feed will consist mostly of shredded fodder of good quality and oat straw not so good. Will grind my corn and cobs.

"What I wish to know is, if I can feed ground barley (somewhat damaged) profitably as part of the grain ration. We have practically no clover hay here and but little good timothy, so that we must depend on corn stover for our roughness. If you have any other suggestions in regard to balancing the ration I would be glad to receive them."

In the production of "baby beef" it is all important that the calves both grow and fatten. In order to produce this end the feeder must of necessity furnish a ration conducive to the production of growth and at the same time of a fattening nature.

For young and growing animals nothing serves a better purpose for roughage than alfalfa, clover hay or oat hay. These feeds are all comparatively rich in protein, thus conducive to rapid growth. In this instance, however, the feeder has at any of the above mentioned feeds, thus must make the best use of what he has on hand. Shredded corn fodder will answer a very good purpose when fed with the proper kind of grain food. By this I mean a grain ration rich in protein, thus adapted to producing growth. Barley, like corn, is a fattening food, being somewhat deficient in protein. Thus it would not be best to make a grain ration of just barley and corn, especially since corn fodder is to be used as roughage. They are both deficient in protein; thus some feed rich in protein—such as cotton seed meal, oil meal, dried blood or some of the glucose feeds—could be very profitably fed in this connection. A ration consisting of two parts corn, two parts barley and one part of cotton seed meal, oil meal or some of the glucose feeds, should give good results. If dried blood is to be used it must be fed in small quantities, as it is a very concentrated feed. In the production of "baby beef" more care must be given the animals than when grown steers are being fed. It is very important that they have a dry bed. Plenty of straw used as bedding will do much toward making good gains in the young animals. They should be fed grain twice a day—W. J. Kennedy, Iowa Experiment Station.

Fattening Pigs Profitably.

In order to get the best and quickest returns from hogs begin fattening the pigs as soon as they are born. I raised pure blooded Poland-Chinas of medium size and never attempted to keep more than I could handle well. My brood sows were kept in a thrifty condition. They were not fat, but were far from being poor. I fed a little whole corn and a slop made of rye and milk.

When the pigs begin to try to eat (and they will do this when only a few days old), I fix a place where they can go and eat by themselves. I first give them skim milk and then gradually add rye meal increasing the amount as the pigs grow. As soon as they are large enough to eat it I add a little corn, but I find that I can make the most rapid growth with rye meal if I have plenty of milk to go with it. If the meal is fed alone it is, in my opinion, too concentrated. I raise two litters of pigs each year. They generally average from 275 to 300 pounds at seven months old.—G. W. Hurd in American Agriculturist.

What Two Boys Did.

Twelve thousand Pekin ducks were hatched and bred this season on a poultry farm at Ransomville, New York. The enterprise was started by two energetic boys who began with one incubator and enough eggs to hatch 400 ducklings. The boys were without practical knowledge, could find no market for their stuff and soon became indebted to the extent of $500, but they were persistent. One of them hired out to a duck raiser to learn the business and was soon in position to put into practical use what he had learned. They worked hard and the second year marketed 4000 ducklings. Thirty-two incubators are now kept busy. When hatched the ducklings are put into a warm brooder-house for three weeks, then transferred to one without artificial heat until sent to the market. The earlier brood is marketed when ten weeks old, the later put into pens in which green stuff is growing. They are fed first on a mixture of equal parts of corn meal and bran; later beef meal is added. The breeding ducks are kept in a field with running water and are fed on a mixture of equal parts of corn meal, bran, ground oats and low grade flour. Every duck will bring them one dollar, the price being twenty-five cents a pound—the young ducks weighing four pounds. The cost of producing a bird from the time it leaves the incubator until it goes to the market is twenty cents, thus these boys realized a net profit of seventy-five cents on each duck or $9,000 on the year's output. Their profits have enabled them to buy 120 acres of land which they occupy in their industry. Feed being cheaper in the west than in east and with the additional advantage of alfalfa, an enterprise of this kind would pay in our country.

Calves and Their Skins.

The calfskin man begins to take a serious view of the heavy slaughter of calves as permanently affecting the future production of calves, and, naturally, calfskins, just as it will the future supply of beeves, the female bovine being decimated.

The vast expansion of the dairy industry is the chief instigator of this unusual calf slaughter, the purpose being to keep the cow in milk and to avoid the expense of feeding and rearing the youngling. The high market for veal, due largely to the presence of so much inferior or tough grass-fed beef, has aided this excessive killing of calves. The calfskin man says the high price of American calfskin is another inducement to send the baby beeves to the killing floor, and intimates that the free introduction of foreign calfskins into the country would, by lowering the price of both products, tend to discourage the killing of American calves in such disproportionate numbers and better secure the future beef supply. The decimating of our calf herds is a serious matter when taken in connection with the later effect upon the cattle herd. The dairy States furnish the bulk of the bovine infants for this slaughter.—National Provisioner.

Oats a Good Feed.

Oats is a very valuable feed for producing growth in pigs. It is also one of the best for feeding brood sows. It is a bone and muscle former. It is not a fat-forming food, like corn, but when composed of one-half or one-third of a mixture of cornmeal and ground oats it will make a very valuable feed for pigs, brood sows and growing shoats.

Corn itself produces too much fat without a corresponding production of bone and muscle. A very successful feeder believes that oats ground is better than shorts alone; that shorts or middlings produce too much flabbiness and without the strength of bone that oats will give.

A ration balanced with oats, corn and skim milk will make a most excellent growth and is a very valuable combination. The farmer with plenty of oats has a hog feed that he can use to best advantage.—American Swinebreeder.

The Agricultural College and the Farmer.

[F. S. Johnston, Purdue University, Lafayette, Ind.]

The schools of agriculture and the experiment stations at our various land-grant colleges are departments of those institutions that have as a reason for their existence the betterment of the condition of a class of people representing approximately one-third of the population of this country.

The time as come when one-third the population of the United States finds itself providing food and other products for itself and supplying the other two-thirds with agricultural products and also contributing products to the rest of the world which have a money value of nearly one billion dollars, or approximately three-fourths the entire value of the exports of the United States. This would seem to indicate concentration and specialization of interests in agricultural affairs, as well as in the other lines of work. One century ago 97 per cent of our population found it a difficult problem to provide for themselves and the remaining 3 per cent the necessary agricultural products, without sending anything abroad. We now have not only a much greater variety of products, but an immensely increased amount of products.

With these conditions before the farmer and the men in our agricultural colleges and experiment stations, it is evident that the combined efforts of both will be required to meet not only the present need, but the ever-increasing demand of the world along these lines of work. If there has in the past been any drawing apart from lack of interest, lack of understanding or lack of confidence, this must be overcome, for the need is great and all will be required to meet. The men connected with our experiment stations are almost universally country born and raised, and are closely in touch with the experiment stations or schools of agriculture as his best good would warrant him in being. There are many experiments carried on at experiment stations and many points brought out in the instruction given in the schools of agriculture that would save the farmer much labor and time and no end of trouble if he were to avail himself of what is rightfully his. No good business man would hire a man to do certain work for him and then pay no attention to the work done if he expected to gain any profit from the employment of the labor. Both the practical men, then, and the scientific men have something to give, and it is well in proportion to the amount and kind given. Co-operation is absolutely necessary. The experiment station men and men in the schools of agriculture spend a great deal of time studying problems connected with the live stock industry, the soil, the crops of the farm, effects of fertilizers, dairying in all its phases, fruit growing, market gardening, insects injurious to agricultural products, and many other lines of work of practical and scientific interest to the farmer, but which he has neither the time nor the money to deal with himself.

On the other hand the farmer can be particularly helpful by taking an active interest in making his neighbors acquainted with this kind of work and by reporting his success in following out suggestions made by the stations and schools. He will find that great good comes to him from making careful observations along the lines suggested. Varying conditions of soil and climate make it necessary that thought and care be used in applying results taken from different localities.

Is it not true, then, whether the commonly accepted fact or not, that when a question of importance comes up relating to agriculture that much good comes from a conference between the two arms of the industry? One side has for its business the production of goods for the world's consumption; the other class has for its business the inquiry into the most rational methods of production. Let us join hands, then, and all pull together for a common end.

The Capon.

It is easier to castrate a young cockerel than a pig or a lamb. It is profitable in more ways than one. Once operated on, capons become the most tractable and peaceable animals imaginable. They do not run nor chase nor fight. I will not say that capons while young grow faster or lay on more flesh from a given amount of food than unaltered males of the same age do. As long as the cockerel is young enough so that no energy goes into the reproductive organs, I think their development is about at an even rate. But there is a change after a time. The development of the organs of reproduction in the male and his growing activity and restlessness consume energy, which in the capon is saved for flesh production. Water comes to a certain degree of heat only. All the excess above this is utilized for the production of steam. It is the same thing with the rooster. He grows to a certain size or weight, and all the surplus energy above this is used for the purpose of reproduction. In other words, the capon will continue to grow and lay on flesh much longer than the unaltered male. It takes a year or more for the capon to come to his full size and weight, but at that age he is much larger than the rooster of the same age, and several times as valuable.—Farmers' Review.

Careful experiments made show that pigs weighing about fifty pounds each, about twenty-five to the acre, placed in an alfalfa pasture, will make a gain of 100 pounds each during the growing season. This on alfalfa alone. If given a supplemental feed of grain, the gain will, of course, be still better. This figures up a fine return for the use of an acre of alfalfa—2500 pounds of pork, worth at the low figure of $4 per hundredweight, $100. Another good thing is that hogs so fed are almost always free from disease.

The Farmer and the Sheep.

This is the time of year when changes are made in the flocks. Some men sell off and go out of sheep and wool growing; others buy a few or change rams with a neighbor, or buy a new one, says Farmers' Guide. Some men get discouraged, complain a little and change to something else. We would like to see a good flock of sheep on every farm that is adapted to raising them. We have many good sheep farms in our State. There are lands of a rolling nature, particularly those that have considerable land that cannot be plowed to advantage. Farms of this description suit sheep and sheep suit them. This is particularly the case where the farmer wants to improve his farm to a high degree and make it about as productive as if every acre could be plowed. Of course we will not here enter minutely into the detail partnership work that the sheep and farmer will jointly carry on in making these improvements, and in enriching the light, thin or high rolling ground. This joint and general continuous work which annually enriches the soil and improves permanent pastures should be obvious without any particular explanation, or illustration.

The claim for a flock of sheep on the farm has been written and spoken of times without number, and the only arguments advanced against them are that either some farmers do not like sheep or that they cannot give them due attention. Wherever either or both of these are the stock in trade of a farmer's argument against sheep, we would advise such to have nothing to do with sheep. No man will make a success of handling or raising anything for which he has not a genuine love, and he does not care to give due attention. If sheep grew up and cared for themselves such men would fall over one another to get into the business. Sheep, however, are a class of stock that have called forth in all ages admiration and the attention of men of the highest intelligence. It is said by many that sheep don't pay. That depends. Sheep will pay year in and year out about as well as any other class of live stock, provided they get a fair show, even without taking into consideration the great improvement they make on land and those portions of pasture which in the nature of things need to be enriched for permanent pasture. Our plea for flocks of sheep on farms adapted for sheep raising is intended to occupy a higher basis than keeping a few as scavengers. That part of farm work sheep can do, and do it well, with both neatness and dispatch. We want, however, to see sheep have a firm and sure footing intermingled with the higher pursuits of this country. Their place is there and we want to see them occupying it.

A Bovine Evangelist.

He lived in a scrub community, nice people enough—honest, industrious and all that—but way back on modern methods of farming, prone to follow grandfather's way and stick to old precedents and customs. One man in the community by some chance attended a state fair, where for the first time in his life he saw herds of fine blooded stock, and this set him to thinking, and the result of his thinking was that he slipped off one day and bought a Shorthorn bull, for which he paid $150. The bringing of this animal into the community created a great sensation. His wife called him a fool, his boys said he needed a guardian, and all the neighbors, who considered $30 a big lot of money for an animal of the sort, said he was headed for the insane asylum. The results were that that bull worked a reformation in that community, reconstructed all the prevailing notions about stock and placed hundreds of dollars in the pockets of the scoffers and unbelievers. There is no more scrub stock raised in that community.

Mold in Butter Packages.

Avoiding moldy tubs is a very easy task, but destroying mold already on them is not as easy. I am doubtful if it is at all possible, as we are dealing with a butter tub where strong antiseptics cannot be employed. It is claimed by good authorities that a strong solution of corrosive sublimate will not efface certain kinds of this fungus growth. We can then only follow one or two courses—either avoid mold entirely or retard its growth when in its first stage. It is not at all to be wondered at if commission men report moldy butter tubs. I find a good many creameries storing their supply stock of tubs in a little room adjoining the work room of a creamery, with no ventilation except a door leading into this room. The storage rooms are damp, musty and veritable hot-beds for mold and its growth.

This mold in its first stage is commonly known as mildew, which is familiar to the commission trade. It will soon appear on the inside of a butter tub unless checked by a dry atmosphere, hot or cold temperature.

The practice of soaking the tubs for a long time in a strong solution of salt brine has been recommended. Salt being in itself a slight antiseptic and a fair preservative, no doubt has some effect on mold, but it is not powerful enough to retard the growth to any appreciable extent. Besides, long soaking of tubs is not commendable, inasmuch as it raises havoc with the cooperage. This is not at all necessary when paper lining is used.

I have of late experimented with boracic acid instead of salt with very good success. I only soak the tubs enough to set the hoops. I prepare a solution of boracic acid, with which tubs are thoroughly rinsed, then thoroughly soak the parchment lining in the same solution.

We also use it on top of cloth circle instead of salt. This will probably not look right to those who fill about one-half inch of salt on top of the butter with the idea to gain weight instead of using it as a protector for the butter.

Although boracic acid is not a strict mold destroyer, it is more effective than salt, being a much better preservative and a fair deodorizer. Were I to put away any butter for cold storage purposes, I should prepare every package, including lining and cloth circles, by soaking in a boracic acid solution, not only for preventing mold, but to add to the keeping quality by preserving that part of the butter most exposed.—F. C. Oltrogge before the meeting of the American Creamery Butter Makers' Association at Milwaukee, Wis.

SPAVIN CURE.

Here are the actual experiences of those who have tried "Save-the-Horse" Spavin Cure, results that carry "Save-the-Horse" over skepticism, prejudice and uncertainty. No man need see his horse suffer and become incapacitated when such facts prove convincingly the possibilities of this remedy.

Normandy, Mo. I will gladly testify to the curative power of "Save-the-Horse." My horse had ringbone; was very lame, but after applying the remedy as directed the lameness disappeared. I worked him most of the time. I think "Save-the-Horse" is a wonderful remedy and will recommend it to my friends.

Fall River, Mass.

"Save-the-Horse" was not for my own horse, but for a customer, Mr. A. Kelly, Little Compton, R. I. I had not seen him from the time I ordered and shipped the remedy until about a week ago, when he called to let me know how it did the work. I had requested him to do this, as it was the first time I had heard of the preparation, and was curious to hear of the result. He was perfectly satisfied with it and considered the money well spent. He said the horse had two spavins, and very sore ones, but of how long duration I did not ask; horse growing thin and was in great distress, but after ten days' treatment with "Save-the-Horse" the soreness entirely left and the horse began to fat up. The night he called at the store he had the horse hitched with another and it looked well and showed no lameness.

ISAAC U. WOOD, Druggist, 1414 So. Main st.

Grass Valley, Cal.

Our horse was lame in the ankle, caused from continually knocking with the other foot, and he was lame on it for about one year, and when I started to train him it came on again. He was so lame he could not even jog, so I blistered him and did most everything to get him well, but I never fired it, and it looked as though he would not be able to race again; but I concluded to try one bottle of "Save-the-Horse," and it did save my horse, for I used it three days and then worked him two slow heats and he did not show lame, and so I used the whole bottle, and he is as sound today as he was the day he was foaled. I trained him and got him ready for his races, and the lameness has not come back on him yet. The ankle is getting stronger all the time and the first race out this year he won easy in three straight heats, at Colusa, trotting one heat in 2:20 1/2 and the first half in 1:07, and is ready today to trot the best race of his life. Whenever I have a horse affected in any shape with weak tendons or weak ankles I shall use "Save-the-Horse," as I think it is a godsend to the horsemen and horses. JNO. D. BLAMEY.

We enclose check for $14, for which send us $4 worth of Veterinary Pixine and $10 worth of "Save-the-Horse." The first bottle we had is giving such good results that we are willing to spend some more money on it for a few more of our horses. We would like to have you be as liberal as possible in sending us as much as you can for this amount.

EMPIRE METALLIC BEDSTEAD CO., E. C. Baynes, Pres.

The fire iron is uncertain, blistering is less effective than the fire iron, and both necessitate laying up the horse from four weeks to two months. Arsenic, mercurial and poisonous compounds produce irreparable injury.

"Save-the-Horse" eliminates all these factors. Horse can be worked continuously.

It can be applied at any time, anywhere, any place, and in all conditions and extremes of weather—hot or cold. And no matter what the age, condition or development of the case or previous failures in treating, the concentrated, penetrating absorbing power of this remedy is unfailing, and no case can withstand the force of its action, whether a Bone or Bog Spavin, Ringbone, Curb, Thoroughpin, Splint, Caped Hock, Shoe Boil, Wind Puff, Weak or Sprained Tendons or Lameness.

$5.00 per bottle Written guarantee with every bottle given under our seal and signature, constructed solely to satisfy and protect you fully. Need of second bottle is almost impossible, except in rarest of cases. Guarantee covers effectiveness of one bottle.

We will advise you frankly as to the possibility of the remedy effecting a cure. Give explicit particulars, give the veterinarian's diagnosis, if he is competent—inform us fully as to the age, development, location of swellings, lameness, action and previous treatment. Copy of guarantee sent upon application. Druggists and dealers, or sent prepaid.

GIBBS' CELEBRATED PROCESS OF RAPID TAXIDERMY

In Practical Use Over Twenty-Five Years.

Used Everywhere in America. Hundreds of Testimonials. Try and Be Convinced.
Start a Class. Money in It. Be Your Own Taxidermist.

Naturalists, Collectors, Gunners, Anglers, Outers, Boys, Girls, and all others interested in nature and anxious to preserve the specimens taken in wood and field, have all felt the need of a simple method of preservation, which is free from intricacies and expensive.

There is a method of rapid taxidermy now in extensive use, which meets the requirements of all amateurs who wish a practical and inexpensive method of preserving the trophies of the outing and collecting trip. This is not the old system of so-called stuffing, so expensive, laborious and disappointing, but is a rapid system, which anyone can learn at once and which is guaranteed to give satisfaction.

By this process you may preserve the beautiful plumage of the grouse and woodcock, or the pike's or buck's head, or the showy feathers of the tanager. Boys, girls and all others can do good work and may make money, as mounted heads and birds find a ready sale, and besides you may teach your friends and decorate the school-room, office and dining-room with native birds and other attractions. If you are in doubt, then get your friends to go in with you and start a class, for when several work together there is an advantage and the expense is next to nothing.

On the receipt of $1, cash or stamps, I will send full printed instructions for mounting birds, heads, mammals, etc., and all materials for mounting and preserving specimens—including prepared compound, together with full directions for dressing skins with the hair on for rugs and robes, so that you will not be to the expense of one cent.

Remember, I Guarantee Satisfaction or Money Refunded.

Old Glory Sale.

Horses are horses in New York and the Fasig-Tipton sale, which began November 24th and was concluded this week, proved it. The first day 107 head sold for $30,310, an average of $283.25. The second day 115 head were sold, the total being $38,530 and the average $335. On the third day the average rose to $453, the sum of $50,755 being received for 112 head. On the fourth day there was a further rise in values, as 111 head brought $88,480, an average of $797.

Our report of the sale received by mail only gives the first five days of the big auction; as every succeeding day showed an increased demand and higher prices, it is safe to say that this is the greatest sale ever held in New York, as no phenomenal price was given for any one horse.

The Village Farm consignment opened the sale. 74 head were sold for $21,605, an average of $284.60. The highest priced one of the consignment was Dandy Chimes 2:07½, the pacing stallion by Chimes out of a Mambrino King mare. He brought $1550. A yearling trotting colt by Beau Ideal out of Rhea by Chimes sold for $1100, but none of the others brought over $600.

On the second day J. A. Shultz sent in a very large consignment, there being a very large proportion of California bred horses among them. One of the high prices of the day was $1100 paid by Harry Orr, of Reading, Pa., for Belleflower 2:12½, the thirteen year old daughter of Electioneer and Beautiful Bells, and the fastest of this great family. She should have brought more money. Gold Leaf 2:11½ by Sidney out of Fernleaf sold for $205, Lenna N. 2:05½ by Sidney brought $850, Directina 2:16½ by Direct out of the dam of Directum was sold for $480, Lady Pansy Russell 2:26½ by L. W. Russell out of Pansy by Cassius M. Clay fetched $425, Nancy Stam (daughter of Stamboul and Nancy Lee) went for $670, Dolly Phoebe by Hambletonian Wilkes out of Dolly Smith by Mambrino Chief Jr. brought $675, Lilly Prince, a daughter of Dexter Prince and Lilly S., was knocked down for $425, and the highest price of the day was but $1200, which was paid for Sunland Belle 2:08½, a ten year old mare by Bourbon Wilkes. She was a winner at the Horse Show the week previous, and a speedway star of this year. A number of well bred mares were bought for export to Europe.

The second offering of the third day was the ten-year-old mare Expectation, dam of the great Major Delmar 2:05½, who was her first foal. She only brought $1500 and Thos. Lawson of Boston was the purchaser. C. W. Williams sold several Allertons and other colts of his breeding. His average was $274. Johnny Agan 2:05½ sold for $1350. Klatawah 2:05½ brought $1400. He headed the consignment of James Butler of New York, who sent twenty-six head that brought an average of $308.

On the fourth day prices continued to grow and the average was $797 for 111 head. The best price of the day's sale and the highest figure of the offering to date was $6000, paid for the champion three-year-old trotter of 1902, Gail Hamilton 2:11½. There was keen competition for Gail Hamilton, "Doc" Tanner of Cleveland, Ohio, and J. L. Druen of Bardstown, Ky., being the bidders against Scott Hudson, noted as the trainer and driver of the sensational blind racehorse Rhythmic, who finally secured the filly. Another big price was $5000, paid by J. L. Druen for Ilive, brown filly, three years old, by Highwood-Atalanta by Alcantara.

A sensational yearling sale was that of the highly tried filly Pleasant Thought, styled the "champion yearling filly," by Prodigal-Ecstasy by Baron Wilkes, a product of the late Marcus Daly's Montana breeding farm, she going to Matt Dwyer of New York for $4600. Pleasant Thought has been tried a quarter of a mile in 0:34½ and a last furlong in 0:16½, and both breeders and racing men took keen interest in her, the filly making an appearance in the sales ring that was in keeping with her reputation.

The Kentucky Futurity winner of the present season, Nella Jay 2:14½, roan filly by Jay Hawker-Paronella by Parkville, was another star, and made sharp competition before she went to the bid of $4500 by the successful trainer and driver John Splan of Chicago. The pacer Fuzzy, four years old, by Ashland Wilkes-Varina by Lord Russell, one of the most talked of "green" horses entered in the sale, who had been timed separately in a race in 2:08, brought $4100, Scott Quinlan of Philadelphia getting him. The pacer Willard T., seven years old, was regarded as one of the prizes of the offering by the horsemen, as he went trials in 2:10 or better, and is eligible for the 2:25 class next season. "Doc" Tanner was determined to have him and finally got him for $3000.

Public interest centred in the trotting stallion Moquette 2:10, fourteen years old, by Wilton-Betsy and I, and the champion four year old of 1892, when he made his speed mark. Moquette has been pronounced the handsomest trotting stallion in the world, and, considering his excellent record as a sire of speed, disappointment was felt when he brought only $2700, W. H. Davis of Washington, Penn., being the buyer. Schley Pointer 2:08½, the rheumatic pacer, brought $1150.

Among the California bred horses sold were Lauretta 2:14½ by Norris that brought $1200, Naniwa 2:15½ by Chas. Derby that sold for $700, Fram 2:17½ by Direct that sold for $405, Charley Mac 2:07½ by McKinney for which Mr. Billings paid $1700, Leigh Crawford, by Chas. Derby that went for $310 and Adaria by Advertiser that brought $310. Anaconda 2:01½ was the high priced horse of the sale and the day on Friday, when he was knocked down to the $7200 bid of G. E. Payne, the sulky and wagon builder of Troy, New York. The total sales of the day were 105 head, for which $64,260 were obtained, the average being $612, a little below that of the preceding day.

Mr. A. B. Gwathmey, President of the Cotton Exchange and one of the regular speedway drivers, paid $1200 for Senator Mills 2:29½ by Electrite. This horse is credited with a trial in 2:10 and quarters in 30 seconds, and was a decided bargain, as he will make the best trotters of the speedway do their best to head him in brushes over the road.

Ben Walker Comes to California.

Among the horsemen with a national reputation who will spend the winter or a part of it at least enjoying the sunshine and balmy air of the Pacific, is Ben Walker who reached San Francisco on Monday of this week.

Few of the drivers who do the grand circuit every year are better known than this genial and deep voiced reinsman who got his first lesson in horsemanship while using scrapers and rub rags for the father of the late John Goldsmith. After serving his apprenticeship in this line, he aspired to train a horse himself and his first was Pea Vine 2:28½ then owned by Mr. M. M. Morse, for so many years Secretary of the National Trotting Association. Making a success with Pea Vine he soon had all the horses he could handle and among those he gave records to the old high wheels were Raven Boy 2:15½, Tommy Lynn 2:15½, Willard M. 2:14, American Girl 2:20½, and many other well known trotters of the old days.

Mr. Walker campaigned the great pacer Prince Alert and took six world's records with him over half mile tracks, and drove him to his record of 2:02 in 1900. He also successfully campaigned Ryland T., Walter E., Argot Wilkes, Dan Q., Helen R., Tuna, Miss Margaret and this year's whirlwind Gold Brick 2:08½.

Mr. Walker is about as good a judge of a horse as anybody and he thinks Monroe Salisbury's Monte Carlo one of the greatest trotters he has seen, and predicts a great year for him in 1903 barring accidents. And he is very partial to California horses, saying that a host of good ones have come from this State, and that the supply will continue.

"Talk as they may of great trainers," said Walker, "in my opinion Monroe Salisbury has it on all of them. He has not only made world's champions in the past, but his brain has not lost its cunning and he will create more kings and queens just as certain as he stays in the business. In my opinion, he is the easiest owner to drive for in the country. All a driver has to do is to follow instructions and Mr. Salisbury is satisfied, and one usually finds that the 'old man' knows just about what his horse can do. He scratched Monte Carlo out of two races he could have won after the Diamond Handicap was trotted because he knew that winning them would put the horse out of the 2:10 class. I expect to see Mr. Salisbury have quite a string of good ones next year."

Mr. Walker will go to Pleasanton to see the horses in training there and will probably conclude to stay there a few weeks this winter, and it may be that he will conclude to stay until spring.

Horses at Lodi Track.

One of the popular winter training tracks of California is at Lodi, San Joaquin county, where the sandy clay soil never gets muddy, but permits of horses being worked every day in the year, rain or shine. Quite a number of trotters and pacers are now being worked there and as more are coming the track will soon be one of the liveliest in the State.

John Rowan, of Emeryville, moved to Lodi recently and has several colts and fillies at work, besides his two McKinney stallions, Monochrome and Mechanic, the first named being out of Hattie, the dam of Monterey 2:09½ and Montana 2:16. Mechanic's dam is a mare by St. Nicholas, son of Sidney. Both these stallions have speed of high order.

L. M. Clark, who formerly trained his horses at Sacramento, is at Lodi with the Stamboul stallion Ouboul 2:22, a big fine horse that trotted a trial last year in 2:12. Ouboul's dam is the mare Ouida S. by Jim Mulvenna, son of Nutwood. Mr. Clark is working several youngsters, among them a pacer that is very promising.

Charlie Whitehead of Stockton trained at Lodi last year and is back again to take advantage of the climate and the track, which he thinks are about right. He has his stallion Delphi 2:12½ by Director that is not only a fast horse himself but a sire of speed, as Toppy 2:10 is the first of his get to be raced. Delphi's dam is by the coming great broodmare sire Dexter Prince, and his second dam by Priam—good enough breeding for any horse. Mr. Whitehead is giving slow work to his good mare The Mrs. by Derby Ash, that won quite a lot of second and third moneys on the California circuit this year and showed that she was a likely candidate for the 2:10 list in another year.

John Sangster has a string of four consisting of: Jennie S. 2:20 by Directum 2:05½, dam by Nephew; a black mare by Rajah, a son of Sultan and a full sister to Edith 2:10, dam by Dexter Prince; a black stallion by Sir Roderick Jr., son of Sir Roderick by Dictator; and a bay mare belonging to J. W. Dougherty. This last animal, which can hit a 2:20 clip when called upon, is by Jagers, son of Dexter Prince.

Tom Holmes' string of nine youngsters includes two fine colts by Zombro 2:11, a colt by Stam B. 2:11½, two by Diawood 2:11; also the bay gelding H. D. B. by Arthur Holt, dam by Jerome Eddy. Raced last summer the gelding started five times, winning two firsts and three seconds, and took a record of 2:25½. He showed trials in 2:15. The stable also includes a horse by one of the Russian Orloff stallions owned at Palo Alto.

J. A. Holbrook is caring for three good ones: Congo, a two year old by Temescal, dam by a son of Nutwood; a black mare by Prince Nutwood which is coming to the front fast; Cardlee, by Hero, son of Director, dam by Dexter Prince; a sorrel pacing filly by Dexter Prince dam by a son of Nutwood; and two fine looking colts which have not yet been speeded.

Walter Eddy's stable contains Somerset Prince, by Dexter Prince, dam by Chieftain, one of the grandest sires of road horses in California; Jehu, by California Lambert, dam by Reliance; and Flash by Prince Nutwood, dam Mischief by Reliance.

Charles Helm has a number of colts that he is getting ready for work later on, and also has the pacer Cranky Thorne by Hawthorne that was second to Enoch in 2:16 at Stockton this summer, and has a record of 2:22.

Walter Trefry is working a string of runners, among them the following: J. W. Dougherty's natty horse Happy Hooligan, by Rear Guard out of Lizzie M., by Kelpie; M. Duffy's fast Phlegon, by Imported Picklow, out of Little Rose, by Joe Hooker; and Van Guard, John Robbinette's promising runner by Rear Guard out of Dewdrop. Mr. Trefry also expects to handle a couple of fine two year olds this winter. Jockey D. Slaughter is assisting him in the training.

Race Track a Good Advertisement.

Lexington offers the best illustration of what a properly located and equipped race track and fair grounds can do for a city under the supervision of an association composed of the best business men who have the welfare of the city and the sport at heart and lend their help to a competent secretary who has the active management of affairs under his personal supervision at all times. The Kentucky Breeders Association was organized years ago, when Lexington boasted a population of some 20,000, about one-half its present size, and the increase is due more to the efforts and success of the association than to all other interests combined. Two hundred and sixty shares of stock were issued at a face value of $100 per share to as many of Lexington's best citizens as could be induced to subscribe. Officials and directors were chosen from the stockholders, and, including the changes from time to time, have represented the leading commercial, financial and manufacturing interests of Lexington.

They have always aimed to secure a secretary of recognized ability and experience, and have paid him liberally to devote his entire time to his official duties, never interfering with the details, and looking only to the results of his labor. From the first an unwritten law has prevailed that no dividend should be paid on the capital invested. As the stock was scattered in small lots, this plan has never been a hardship to any one, and it has enabled the directors to enlarge the plant as increased success demanded, inaugurating annual futurities and other rich stakes on broad and liberal plans that have in time become profitable in themselves. To-day the association stands at the head of the list from every standpoint. The grounds and buildings are worth over $100,000. Five times this sum invested in any other way would not begin to advertise Lexington and bring to the city as much outside money and trade as the Kentucky Breeders' Association under past and present methods.

Notes and News.

Hurrah!

Over 300 entries

In Pacific Breeders Futurity No. 3.

Full list of entries with owners' names next week.

It is said that Dan Patch 1:59½ has over one hundred living foals.

Dan Patch 1:59½ strides twenty feet nine inches when fully extended.

Twinkle 2:05½, won $10,000 this season, the largest winning for a pacing mare.

Mr. Fred Parks, owner of Major Delmar 2:05½, has never seen his great trotter race.

J. J. Scannell is at it again. He wants to match The Abbott 2:03½ against Cresceus or Lord Derby for $50,000 a side.

The New York Horse Show, which closed last week was a great success. The total gate receipts for the week were $158,000.

The twenty year old stallion Telephone 2:15½ was recently bought up in Kansas, castrated and shipped to the eastern market.

Naniwa 2:15½, the pacing mare by Chas. Derby out of Clyte 2d (dam of Neernut 2:12½) by Nutwood, sold for $700 at the Old Glory sale.

Ed. Benyon, the Walnut Hall Farm trainer, says he expects to mark both Fereno 2:07½, and Ozanam 2:08, in about 2:05 or 2:06 next season.

Save the Horse is receiving praises from every quarter. This spavin cure actually saved horses in California this year and its name is deserved.

Hamlin's Almont Jr. 2:26, now in his thirty-first year, is still hale and hearty. He has been kept at Franklinville, N. Y., for several seasons past.

The enterprising horsemen of Toronto, Canada, have made arrangements to have racing on the ice by electric lights one evening each week all winter.

Fram 2:17½, son of Direct and a mare by Abbotsford, was knocked down for $405 to B. D. Bugbee, of Putnam, Connecticut, at the New York sale last week.

Heatherbloom made good his claim to the world's championship for high jumping at the recent Chicago Horse Show by clearing the bars at 7 feet 8 inches.

It is announced that the trotter Guy 2:09½ by Kentucky Prince is dead. Secretary Gocher has used him for a road horse during the past two or three years.

Dan Patch 1:59½ will likely stay in Dick Benson's stable at Kansas City until the first of the year, when McHenry will take him to Memphis for next season's preparation.

Superior 2:17½ is now twenty-one years old and among his foals of 1902 are four pairs of twins. All are alive and in good health, and Superior is fat and slick as a mole.

Trotwood editor of the pacing department of The Horse Review says "Sir Albert S. will in his opinion be one of the great pacers next year if everything goes right with him."

J. O. ("Red") Gerrity will train a public stable next season at the Wisconsin State Fair track, Milwaukee. Mr. Gerrity is now at West Alts, Wis., and goes to Milwaukee early in the spring.

It is said that the report that Lafe Shafer was to act as assistant trainer to Ed Geers is unfounded, but that he will continue as trainer for J. C. McKinney's Terrace Farm at Titusville, Pa.

Advices from Lexington, Ky., state that G. & C. P. Cecil, proprietors of Cecilian Park, Danville, Ky., have engaged the services of the capable trotting horse trainer, Joe Rea, for $5000 a year.

The Horse World is authority for the statement that Patchen Wilkes Farm recently declined an offer of $21,000 for the fillies Patchen Maid by Patchen Wilkes and Roma (3) 2:18½ by Onward.

George Spear does not seem to be among the advocates of the dash system. He is quoted as saying that, on the harness turf, he "does not believe it will become popular with either horsemen or the public."

A Chicago exchange has the following to offer: "The main difference between the New York and Chicago horse shows is the amount of diamonds displayed. New York beats us about two barrels."

The Occidental Stake for foals of this year will close January 1, 1903. This is the richest trotting stake on the Coast at the present time and is getting richer every year. Read the advertisement in this issue.

If no accident befalls Gail Hamilton (3) 2:11½ she is liable to be the fastest four year old trotter out next year. She trotted the last quarter of the mile that she won in 2:12½ at Lexington in 30½ seconds, a 2:02 clip.

E. E. Dent, of Spokane, has purchased the stallion Wilkesold 34686, by Barondale 2:11½; dam Cressida, by Era 2673 son, of Onward; second dam Carlotta, by American Clay 34; third dam Patti, by Mambrino Chief II.

The report that only dash races would be given at the Memphis meeting in 1903 is incorrect. Although there will undoubtedly be a number of dash events on the program, the heat races will be given the usual preference.

The winnings of Lord Derby 2:05½ the past season foot up $32,425. The larger part of it came from his match with T. W. Lawson's beautiful trotter Boralma 2:07, that was not in condition to race on the date set for the match.

Grand Circuit members, including Lexington and Memphis, this year paid out to campaigning horsemen the sum of $589,765, and had not Cincinnati and Terre Haute been rained out the sum would have exceeded $600,000.

Bell Bird by Electioneer out of Beautiful Bells has been nominated by her owner, Fred Raschen, of Sacramento, in the Pacific Breeders Futurity No. 3, which closed on the 1st inst. Bell Bird was bred to Nutwood Wilkes this year.

O'Brien & Sons advertise the 1903 model of the Toomey road cart in this issue. It has steel rims and the safe tire, and is called "the best in the world." Call at O'Brien & Sons, corner Polk street and Golden Gate avenue and look at these carts.

A noted four-in-hand prize winning team, owned for some time past by C. K. G. Billings, passed under the hammer at the W. D. Grand sale in New York City, on the 24th inst., for $7500. The purchaser was E. E. Smathers, owner of The Monk 2:05½.

Mr. C. K. G. Billings is now the owner of Charley Mac 2:07½. He purchased the son of McKinney at the Old Glory sale last week, paying $1700 for him. He will use the big gelding for matinee and speedway purposes and should be able to beat a majority of the good ones with him.

A high class road and race horse is offered for sale by Mr. J. R. Freeman, of Red Bluff. This is Prince L. 2:17½ by Escort that won three races at the State Fair this year, where he beat the best in his classes. He is sound and only seven years old and is not held at a high figure. He is one of the best bargains in the State.

Stephen Baker, of Grimes Landing, Colusa county who has named his mare Bluey a granddaughter of Tilton Almont, in the Breeders Futurity, owns a yearling out of her that took the first prize for colts of his age in the roadster class at the Colusa county fair this year. The colt is by Boyd a son of Boydel, he by Electioneer.

Barney Demarest has closed his hotel in Goshen, N. Y., and is at present stopping in New York. He is arranging to take several horses to Ottawa in January to participate in the ice races there. Among those he has decided on taking are the pacers Frank 2:10½ by Secretary, Burnham 2:14½, Amy Wilkes 2:16½ and the green trotter Arlington Boy.

Orrin Hickok, the veteran trainer who is now an inmate of the Lakeside Hospital at Cleveland, Ohio, is being well cared for. A number of his California friends made up a purse of $1000 for him a few weeks ago and sent it to responsible parties in Cleveland, who will see that Mr. Hickok's needs are provided for. There is little hope of the life of the great trainer lasting long.

Hon. F. C. Sayles, of Pawtucket, R. I., proprietor of Mariposa Farm, and who now owns the greatest living sire of trotters, Red Wilkes, also owns the dam of Alix 2:03½, the fastest trotting mare by the records yet produced. He also owns Martha Wilkes 2:08, the fastest daughter of Alcyone, and has two fillies from Alix 2:03½, one by Sable Wilkes 2:18, the other by Handspring 2:18½.

Superintendent Daniel Mahaney, who made Maplewood Farm and racing stable such a success, is still in charge of it. The trustees have retained his services to wind up the trotting stock on the place. For the past three years Maplewood Farm has paid a profit, and Mr. Mahaney has sold $40,000 worth of horses from it, not counting the cheap cast-offs that were let go at small figures.

Mr. C. J. Hamlin, the "grand old man" of the trotting kingdom, was out to Village Farm the other day looking over the stock. Mr. Hamlin does not go to East Aurora as often as formerly, but about once a month visits the breeding place in which he has so long been interested. Until a month ago he went to the farm regularly every Wednesday. He will spend the winter in Florida.

W. L. Snow, of Hornellsville, who was in California last winter says that as yet he had not begun work on his next year's string. He says Charley Hoyt 2:06½, was entirely sound three weeks after he went lame last summer and to all appearances he will do to train again. He looks for Fanny Dillard to be a useful pacer again next season, and has high hopes of the filly Julia M., by Zombro that he bought last spring at Cleveland. She ran out all summer and has developed into a most serviceable looking mare.

If you failed to get an entry in the Pacific Breeders Futurity No. 2, for foals of this year, the get of mares covered in 1901, you may be able to secure a substitute entry if you apply right away. There are a few of the original nominators who have had the ill luck to have their entries die, and consequently have a nomination for sale. $23 will cover the payments up to and including January 1st. Read the advertisement in this issue.

James Butler, proprietor of the East View Stock Farm, New York, paid $8000 at private sale last week for King Direct, a three year old pacing colt by his stallion Direct 2:05½, dam Welcome Bunker by Mambrino King, second dam Lady Bunker, the dam of Guy Wilkes and other noted stallions. King Direct is three years old and paced a trial half this year in 1:01½ and a mile in 2:13. Ed Geers drove him a mile in 2:15 at Lexington and predicted a great future for him.

Three sons of the stallion Prince Airlie 28045, son of Guy Wilkes, are offered for sale by Mr. P. H. McEvoy, of Menlo Park. Their descriptions and breeding will be found in our advertising columns. Prince Airlie was out of Chantilly, a great broodmare by Nutwood, and was intended as the premier sire of the famous San Mateo Stock Farm before Mr. Corbitt's illness and death. He was sold at the dispersal sale of the farm to Mr. Gardner F. Williams, who shipped him to South Africa.

Honora, dam of Fantasy 2:06, sold under the hammer at Lexington last week for $200. The trouble with her was her age, 20. Fantasque, the sister of Fantasy, brought $300. She is seven years old, and never showed anything like the form of the distinguished mare, who trotted to a three year old record of 2:08½. Jay Bird is a famous sire of speed, but as he is 24 years old the highest bid on him was $1500. Old stallions and old broodmares are treated with scant courtesy in the auction ring.

Ed Lafferty has gone to Monterey for the winter and has taken charge of a stable of twenty or thirty trotting bred horses belonging to Mr. A. J. Molero. There are some royally bred ones among them, including the black stallion Excel by Axtell 2:12, and a number of colts and fillies by McKinney, Nutwood Wilkes, Mendocino and other popular stallions. The horses will be jogged on the splendid roads for which the country around Monterey is famous, and Mr. Lafferty will gait and shape them up for roadsters, Mr. Molero being a devotee of the grand sport of road driving.

Geo. Gray, Superintendent of the Meek Estate at Haywards, advertises three fine draft stallions for sale, all prize winners. One of them, Pluto, is an extremely handsome glossy black, weighing very close to 2000 pounds, that has as much action as any horse of his size in America. Any good manager can make him more than pay the price asked for him in one season. Fresno, a gray stallion that weighs over a ton, is one of the finest specimens of the Percheron ever seen in California. The Meek Estate has so many interests that it cannot devote time to standing stallions for outside mares, therefore offers them for sale.

The tabulated pedigree in the catalogue of the owner of the stallion Crown Prince, sire of Prince Alert 2:00, the champion pacing gelding, gives the dam of Crown Prince as a son of Caldwell's Proud American, thoroughbred, the second dam by Archie Lightfoot, a grandson of old Sir Archy; the third dam by Alexander, a thoroughbred son of Tiger; the fourth dam by Commerce, a son of Commerce, thoroughbred, son of Cephalus, and the fifth dam by Cedar, a son of imp. Diomed. It seems by this that the sire of Prince Alert has plenty of thoroughbred close up.

"It is one thing to secure mares for a stallion and another to send them away safe with foal. The profits depend upon the latter condition. It is also necessary to be prepared to properly care for visiting mares and a first class pasture in summer and ample barn room at other seasons must be looked after. Owners will not return a mare to a stallion if she came home skin poor, her heels diseased and swollen, her hair turning the wrong way and filled with vermin; not very much. And a stallion owner need not expect it. The mares must be looked after physically and returned in as good shape as they were received.—Western Horseman."

A six year old son of Sable Wilkes is offered for sale by an advertiser. The stallion is a bay with black points, never trained, but a beauty and good gaited. Is so gentle that he has been driven regularly by a lady. His dam is Menlo Belle 2:30 by Menlo, son of Nutwood, his second dam the great broodmare San Mateo Belle by Speculation, his third dam the producing mare Young Lady Vernon by David Hill and his fourth dam Lady Vernon 2:29½, the dam of Oakland Maid 2:22. With such producing blood in his veins this stallion should be a producer with half an opportunity and will be sold at a price that is ridiculously low.

The mare Algonetta 2:14 by Eros, bred by Mr. Frank H. Burke of this city, and owned and raced for two seasons by Mr. R. E. Mulcahy, who afterwards sold her east, is, with her mate now the champion trotting team of New York Speedway. The contest for the championship was ended on Saturday Nov. 22d. Algonetta and Mattie Lynn Holt now owned by Mr. Ed De Cernea of New York, had three victories to their credit, and Lydell Whitehead's Marion Wilkes and Saratoga Belle one. The latter pair did not appear on time and the De Cernea team had a walkover for the championship title, as that placed four victories to their credit. Jack Curry drove the De Cernea team an exhibition half mile after their walkover in 1:07½. The performance was enthusiastically applauded.

Thanksgiving Matinees.

The driving clubs of San Francisco, Los Angeles, Fresno and Sacramento all held matinees on Thanksgiving Day, a report of the one held in San Francisco having already appeared in these columns.

The Los Angeles Club, which is beyond question the leading amateur club in the State, and the best managed, had five thousand visitors present to see its contests.

Mr. Byron Erkenbrecher, Treasurer of the club, acted as presiding judge and starter of the races and acquitted himself well, as the starts were excellent and he was prompt in getting them away.

The first race was a mile dash for horses of the green class and was won by Dr. S. A. Edmonds' Bobs in 2:37½, with J. U. Tabor's Missie McKinney second.

The 2:35 class went to Midget, W. H. Workman's mare, in straight heats; best time 2:24½.

The third race was the only split heat race of the day. The first heat was won by Polo, driven by Dr. Ralph Hagan and owned by N. W. Myrick, in 2:21½. C. E. Guyer's Undine, driven by Dr. Bryson, won the second heat in 2:18½, and then Mr. C. S. Fleming drove his horse Proctor to the front in 2:21. Undine then took the fourth heat in 2:21 and ended the race, which was an interesting contest.

The fourth race was a free-for-all pace. Graham E. Babcock's El Moro was the winner in straight heats in 2:18½ and 2:21½.

The 2:25 trot was then called and Prince Howard, well driven by Mr. M. B. Mosher, captured the two heats handily in 2:26½ and 2:21½.

To a horseman, the free-for-all race was the most interesting event of the day, as Sweet Marie, the champion mare of the club, was a starter against the mare Sweetheart and Athnio, the gelding that raced on the circuit this year. Sweet Marie won as she pleased in 2:14½ and 2:15½ and just jogged in both times. She can trot in 2:10 any time she is prepared for it.

The last race of the day was a dash of a mile and Godfrey Fritz's The Rover was the winner in 2:27½.

Everything from admission to seats in the grand stand was free and 5000 people were present.

AT SACRAMENTO.

The matinee of the Sacramento Driving Club on Thanksgiving Day was greatly enjoyed by several hundred people. Considering the condition of the track the time made was very good although it was slow in some instances for the class of horses contending.

Vet Tryon acted as starter and was congratulated on his good work. H. C. Bell and Frank J. Rubstaller were judges and also acted as timers.

The first event was between Charles Silvey's Polka Dot and F. E. Wright's Margaretta, owners driving. The dash was won by Polka Dot in 2:24½ and Mr. Silvey was awarded the whip hung up for the winner.

Driving the handsome black Duke Cameo, Mr. Silvey tried for another whip in the second race, but Mr. Wright behind Baby Button turned the tables on him this time and after winning the dash in 2:27½ was awarded the whalebone by the judges.

The third event was not very exciting, as the bad acting of William Lampert's Rainbow delayed the start until the judges had to send him off several lengths behind his competitor, William Sayre's Billie Direct, or stay until dark. Billie Direct won in a jog in 2:39½.

The last match of the day was between Albert Elkus' Zuline and Frank Wright's Florodora, Mr. Wright's mare being driven by Mr. Silvey. She took the lead at the start and won handily in 2:35½.

This ended the day's program. During the afternoon Mr. John Batcher sent the famous old pacer Capt. Hackett a mile, and the horse stepped out in his old fashioned way. While the Captain was not a racing success he has speed and good looks and is a fine road horse.

The Sacramento Driving Club is now one of the institutions of the Capital City and as popular an organization as there is on the Coast. Its matinees are always well attended and the contests are conducted in a way that while the strongest rivalry exists there are no sore spots or bad feelings over the results.

THE FRESNO CLUB.

A record for attendance was established at Fresno on Thanksgiving Day, when in spite of a counter attraction in the way of a football contest, the Fresno Driving Club drew over 2000 people to witness its program of races.

T. C. White, president of the club, was presiding judge, and A. N. Blasingame and George W. Taft, acted as associate judges. T. H. Adams and L. Heilbron were timers and L. P. Timmins was marshal of the course.

The first race was mile heats, best two in three, and had eight starters. The prize was a fine track harness and there was keen rivalry among the drivers as to which should own it. Mr. Nilmeier's Tom won the first heat, but he did not get the leathern suit as a bay gelding called Mayor of Clovis won the next two heats handily.

A pacing race came next, in which there were three entries, J. H. Egan's Newport 2:19, D. L. Bachant's George 2:22½ and C. A. Smith's Edith M. 2:21½. This was a regulation three in five affair. Edith M. won the first and second heats in 2:27 and 2:26 and George won the third heat in 2:24. Darkness came on and the judges declared the race ended and awarded the heat to Edith M.

During the day there was a running race and a mule race, the latter causing lots of fun.

Pools were sold on all the events of the day and were quite liberally patronized.

Iowa Trainer Locates in California.

Five head of horses that were on the Northwest Circuit this year arrived at the San Jose track last Saturday in charge of their trainer, Mr. James W. Zibbell, an Iowa trainer, who has concluded to locate in California and race on our circuit here next year. Mr. Zibbell has the following horses:

Five year old bay trotting stallion, Commonwealth 2:18½, that won several big stakes this year while racing through Colorado and the northwest. He is by Shadeland Onward, sire of Online 2:04, champion four year old pacer, and many other high class horses. The dam of Commonwealth is Action by Onward, therefore he is inbred to this great sire.

The bay trotting mare, Kate Lumery 2:20½ by Shadeland Onward, dam C. C. L. by Combat.

Evangie, a five year old pacing mare that is very fast, but has never started in a race. She is a full sister to the great stallion Online 2:04 that still holds the four year old pacing record, being by Shadeland Onward out of the great broodmare Angeline (dam of Online 2:04, Ontonian 2:07½, Analine 2:17½ and Harry W. 2:29½) by Chester Chief.

Swift B., a two year old by Stam B. 2:11½ out of the fast mare Swift Bird by Waldstein. This is the colt that was worked over at Alameda a little last spring and showed such phenomenal speed. He is entered in both the Occident and the Stanford stakes for next year. Swift B. is owned by Mr. J. H. Richardson, of Boise, Idaho.

Monroe S. 2:16½, also owned by Mr. Richardson, is a pacer by Dictator Wilkes and was bred by Mr. W. A. Shippee, of this State. His record was made at Boise City this year.

Mr. Zibbell's horses all reached San Jose in good shape. He expects to make San Jose his home in the future and will have entries for the California Circuit. Mr. Zibbell's former home was at Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

We are pleased to note Mr. Zibbell's arrival and determination to make California his home, and hope he is a pioneer of a western movement among the horse breeders and trainers of the eastern country.

A Good Suggestion.

One of our regular readers, Mr. Jacob Brollier, of Visalia, Cal., writes us as follows:

"I think the winning of the two year old pacing division of the Pacific Breeders Futurity in 1903 will be 'well earned laurels,' as I predict it will be the fastest two year old pacing event in the United States next year. It seems to me that other associations could afford to try the experiment of opening stakes for two and three year old trotters and pacers, as the Breeders Stake No. 1 will undoubtedly put many in training, and the offering of stakes by other associations for this same class of colts should effect a good entry list, and if not colt racing is hopelessly beyond resurrection in California. When we recall the palmy days for light harness racing we find colt stakes and colt racing were in vogue, but with its abolishment the interest in all classes of harness events began its decline."

Mr. Brollier strikes pretty close to the bull's eye. Hard times and the cessation of breeding on many farms led to the colt stakes being abandoned. The State Agricultural Society kept up the Occident and Stanford Stakes, however, and the establishment of the Pacific Breeders $6000 Futurity three years ago received the prompt endorsement and support of breeders all over the Coast. Stake No. 3 has just closed with about 300 entries, showing that the interest aroused by the first one has not abated in the least.

The suggestion that the district associations get up colt stakes for next and succeeding years is an excellent one and we strongly advise every progressive association to act on the matter at once.

When it is remembered that the Occident Stake has but $400 added by the State Agricultural Society, it will be readily seen how a valuable stake may be inaugurated at small cost. The association that will open pacing and trotting stakes for two year olds and three year olds to be decided in 1903 and 1904, at say $30 entrance and $300 added, should be able to fill them and furnish interesting contests at a small cost. What progressive association will be the first to announce such stakes?

Owner of Clay S. 2.13 3-4 Makes a Defi.

Some months ago Mr. William Hendrickson of this city, known to every old time horseman in California in former years as the owner of that good trotter Geo. M. Patchen Jr., purchased from Mr. Henry Schlosser of San Rafael, the trotting stallion Clay S. 2:13½ by Grover Clay 2:23½, son of Electioneer and Maggie Norfolk by Norfolk. The dam of Clay S. was Belle by Whippleton, second dam Jennie Butterfield by Geo. M. Patchen Jr., so there is the blood of Mr. Hendrickson's old campaigner of thirty-five years ago, in his recent purchase.

Clay S. was quite a trotter and made several successful trips through the California circuit during 1897, 1898, and 1899, trotting to his present record at Santa Rosa in August of the last mentioned year. During the past two years Clay S. has been in the stud and out of training, but it is Mr. Hendrickson's intention to put him in training for the season of 1903, and he is now jogging him three days in each week at the Alameda track, where the horse has been placed in charge of Barney Simpson.

Mr. Hendrickson called at the office of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN on Saturday last and while here stated that he would enter Clay S. in two stallion stakes for $250 a corner, to trot him against any trotting stallion now in California, the races to come off in March next over the San Jose track. Mr. Hendrickson desires to have two races, the first to be mile heats, best three in five, the other to be two mile heats, best two in three, both races to go, and a week to intervene between them.

Mr. H. thinks there should be five or six entries to a race of this kind, and as the race would come off in March it would give about three months' time for preparing the stallions, which he thinks is ample time.

While March is not a good month for a stallion race, as the breeding season is then open and horses in the stud are very busy, there is no doubt but such a match would excite a great deal of interest and have a very large crowd to see the races decided. There are half a dozen or more stallions in California that look to outclass Clay S. a little for such a match, but Mr. H. says he is ready with his money and anxious to meet any one or all of them. He thinks Clay S. is good enough to start next season in the 2:14 classes on the grand circuit next year, and is thinking very seriously of taking him to Memphis in the spring to prepare him for a campaign down the big line.

The Size of Race Horses.

Touching on the fact that English race horses are larger than they used to be, "Augur" in the Sporting Life says: "It has been a very general view that the race horse has increased considerably in size during the last hundred years. There was reason to allow that the late Admiral Rous was correct in stating that it was a hand from about 1760 to 1860, the date, or very nearly so, when the admiral wrote his well known letters. There have been several changes in the last forty years, and those who have watched racing closely may have seen that there are more big horses and mares than could have been found at the date in question, but, generally speaking, there have been more bad horses produced from this multiplicity in size. Take the yearlings sent up for sale, or located in the racing stables from private studs, the large majority will be over 15.2 before they reach the age of two years. This means another two inches in growth before they are two years and a half, and so the average size was 16 hands, with many considerably over. There is certainly some advantage, on the rule that a good big one is better than a good little one, but when in former times there was one good big one there were five good little ones. In giving that estimation there seems more reason why the better levelness was maintained before the last half of the last century than now, as big horses of their day, like Lottery, who stood 16 hands, had better chances with small mares. Good little horses were quite plentiful during the twenties and thirties, as there was Little Red Rover only 14.3, Perion not quite 15, Middleton 15.1, Camel under 15.2, Mulatto the same, Gainsborough 15.2, Lamplighter 15.1, and many others. Touchstone, of whom there was a beautiful drawing by the senior Herring some three weeks after he won the St. Leger, is described by the great artist as medium size, which, I suppose, would be 15.2, and truly the great Westminster horse set the stamp on our thoroughbreds. Mated to a small, somewhat leggy mare like Crucifix, he got them bigger than himself, as is noticeable in Surplice, and still more so in Pontifex, brother to Surplice, as the latter was a very big horse indeed. At the same time Pontifex came back to regulation size when mated to probably half bred pony mares on the Welsh border, as he got beautiful hunters when so located, and the pretty little horses Flash in the Pan and Heidelberg, the latter a perfect picture. In and out for size the Touchstones were of the greatest use to the country, as even little Flash in the Pan, who was not more than 15.1, got magnificent weight-carrying hunters, worth from $400 to $700 apiece. So it was with all the descendants of Touchstone, as if they happened to be of the commanding order, like Atherstone, they invariably got level stock."

Tulare Track Improvements.

VISALIA, Cal., Dec. 1, 1902.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN—I spent Saturday with horse friends in our neighboring town of Tulare and after requesting of me to remember them to the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, they divulged themselves of their doings and future plans. When I reflect upon the recent futile effort of some of our Visalians to organize an association to purchase grounds, build track and other necessary equipments for giving race meetings, I am made to appreciate the determined spirit of some and deplore the rule or ruin policy of others. When we look with contempt on any effort short of metropolitan, that soon we become a menace to the very interests we espouse. It is to be hoped that every breeder and horse fancier in this district will at least give his moral, if not his financial aid, in this undertaking.

The track at Tulare is of the kite shape. The land upon which it is located consists of eighty acres and has been bought for training and racing purposes by four or five of Tulare's business men, among whom is W. F. Ingwerson, director of the Twenty-fourth Agricultural District. The improvements are to be of the substantial and lasting kind. Preparations are now being made to cultivate and sow the infield to alfalfa, repair and whitewash fences, stables and grandstand, giving things a neat and tidy appearance and make other improvements to enhance its rental value to a point of self-sustaining. The track is known to be very fast and safe though having its objectionable features. To eliminate them is the object of these gentlemen. The soil is of an alkaline substance, having a firm and elastic footing that does not "cup," but the mischief to contend with in the dry season is, its flying dust settling on the heels and causing them to crack. While the soil is of the same general consistency, that portion upon which is located the loop of the track, cooling paddock and stabling grounds, contain a much higher percentage of alkali and in these places the mischief is provoked. To overcome this they will resort to the use of crude oil for sprinkling. It serves a two-fold purpose of being a positive antidote for alkali and settling of dust. Its use on the loop of the track will be an experiment to be watched with interest, as it may solve the problem of track sprinkling in all semi-humid climes. Where the Supervisors of this county resorted to crude oil on the public highways it has surpassed the most sanguine expectation.

Should this method prove satisfactory on the loop, the track proper will be subjected to a like treatment, but for the time being a gasoline engine and forty thousand gallon tank will be put in position for track sprinkling. The inducements held out to trainers to locate here are liberal in the extreme, only one dollar a month being charged for stall and track privileges. Several trainers have already availed themselves of the opportunity, and as a race meeting will be given in conjunction with the district fair, the outlook never was better here and it is now up to the public to do its part. That we have as high class material at hand for the development of extreme speed as can be found anywhere, we believe, and the opportunity for accelerating is at hand through the medium of R. O. Newman's young Direct and J. W. Martin's McKinney stallions.

JACOB BROLLIAR.

A noted broodmare that died very recently at Village Farm was the mare Geraldine, the dam of Robert J. 2:01½. Geraldine was sired by Jay Gould, dam Nancy Claggett by Mann's Senator. Geraldine was bred by H. B. Holton of Powhatan, Md., in 1877. Her son, Robert J. 2:01½, holds the world's record for the fastest four heat race, with an average of 2:02½. Gerald Rex by Rex Americus 2:11½, Gerald Chimes by Chimes, Geraldine by Mambrino King, King Gerald by Mambrino King, and The Ambassador, one of the youngsters purchased by the Japanese Government last summer, are her other foals.

Completely Cures Spavins, Curbs, Sprains, Bruises, Etc.

CHEBANSE, ILL., Sept. 24, 1892.

Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., Enosbury Falls, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—Please send me your book, "A Treatise on the Horse and His Diseases." I have completely cured Spavins and Curbs with your Kendall's Spavin Cure, also Sprains and Bruises. Your Spavin Cure will do all that is claimed for it, if used according to directions. No horseman should be without it. Very truly yours,

GEORGE WRIGHT.

At the Chicago sale held week before last several California horses passed under the hammer. J. M. Nelson sold three—Solo 2:14½ by McKinney for $475, Princess Airlie by Prince Airlie for $400 and Dan W. 2:17½ by Live Oak Hero for $450. Ollis McKinney 2:17½ by McKinney out of Princess 2:27½ by Electioneer was also sold at this sale and brought $1000, while Humboldt Maid 2:13½ fetched the same price.

Some Novel Facts Concerning Treatment of Horse Teeth.

The humane method of handling horses' mouths and operating on diseased teeth has been confined to the last few years. While it is still in its infancy, yet nearly all the operations that are practiced on human teeth are now practiced upon those of the horse. The cavities of the teeth of the horse is of frequent occurrence and no part of the tooth is exempt from this disease. It may attack the external surface of the crown, neck or root, or it may begin in the center of the tooth around the pulp cavity and gradually extend outward. The molars are the teeth usually affected, the incisors rarely, and the canines practically never suffer from this affliction. When the diseased process goes on to suppuration, as it usually does, if the teeth be the first or second upper molar, a fistulous opening is formed into the nasal cavity; if the third, fourth, fifth or sixth upper molar, the pus collects in the maxillary sinus, causing a bulging of the face; if the tooth is a lower molar, the fistula usually opens on the lower margin of the inferior maxilla. When the diseased process has extended too far to save the tooth, the tooth is extracted, and if there be a collection of pus in the sinuses they are trephined and all healed together. If the cavity is small it is filled the same as a human tooth, with an amalgam composed of the fillings of a mixture of tin and silver combined with mercury in suitable proportions.

An exostosis or bone enlargement sometimes grows on the root of a horse's tooth. Such teeth have to be extracted or the enlargement attains a great size. Foreign substances, such as sticks of wood and pieces of corncobs frequently become lodged between the teeth or in the gums. This condition is marked by a continual champing of the jaws, excessive flow of saliva, difficulty of eating, rapid emaciation, etc. Fractures of the teeth are of great annoyance to the horse. The fracture may be longitudinally or transversely.

A collection of tartar on the teeth causes a constant irritation in some horses. This is shown by the swelling of the gums, the destruction of the alveolar process, the loosening of the teeth and the condition known as lampas, when occurring in old horses.

When the molar tooth is absent from any cause, its opposing tooth grows down and injures the gum of the opposing jaw. These have to be cut off or extracted. Horses of all ages suffer more or less from long, sharp and projecting points which are often found on the molar teeth. They are situated on the inside of the lower jaw, being narrower than the upper one, and the two rows of teeth do not come in direct opposition, leaving parts that do not come in wear. These sharp joints give the horse great pain by lacerating the tongue and cheeks. The animal is relieved by cutting off these sharp projections and then smoothing with a file. The operation can be performed on the horse without injuring the tooth, from the fact that the table is not covered with enamel. The gums and alveolar processes of horses very frequently are the seat of tumors and excrescences of various kinds, varying in character from the most simple growth of the gum to morbid production of fungoid or cancerous nature. But the most pitiable sight is to see a horse suffering with the excruciating and almost insupportable pain of an alveolar abscess.—Spirit of the Times.

The Perfect Horse.

It was at a round table where Scotch highballs were sipped that a gentleman who had studied horse breeding and racing on both sides of the Atlantic remarked: "We have few good thoroughbreds in proportion to the number reared. Brothers and sisters are not alike. One may possess real merit and the other perform in a way to cause him to be classed as a weed. Do you know why? In order to get a great horse from a great mare the parents must be in perfect health when mated, and the mare must retain this health while carrying and rearing her foal. Every spell of sickness, every relapse from robust condition will rob the foal of vital force and disturb its even development. Go to the wool grower and he will tell you that uniform strength of fleece depends upon uniform health. If you find a tender spot in the fiber the indication is certain that the animal on which the wool was grown was at that particular time in a state of low vitality. Every period of sickness leaves its mark upon the fiber from root to top. When the animal is in perfect health the fiber grown is strong. When sick or half starved the growth is of a weak or tender nature. The effects of climate are also marked upon the fleece. If these things are true of wool growing, why should they not be true of foal bearing? The thoroughbred is the highest triumph of the breeding art, and the aim is to concentrate in him the greatest amount of force in proportion to carcass—to give him bone of the finest texture, the best of heart and lung action and the will to conquer what looks like the impossible. The speed at which the thoroughbred horse runs is proof of harmonious action—is the result of a concentration of vital forces. You cannot grow the strong and evenly balanced machine unless you take steps to preserve an even condition of health and temperament. Every sickness of the dam, every short period of half starvation, every temporary impairment of digestion, will be reflected to some degree in the foal. These things may sound trivial to the ordinary observer, but the quick-seeing man of long experience knows that they exercise an influence and make breeding something of a lottery. As a matter of course, I am a strenuous advocate of pedigree; it is the very foundation of improvement, but in order to achieve the highest success you must combine with it the most painstaking care in rearing, feeding and training." Having delivered himself thus, the philosopher looked at his watch and declared, before opposition to his views became earnest, that it was time for all but night owls to be in bed.—Turf, Field and Farm.

Star Pointer May Race Again.

Star Pointer, the champion pacer, has been lost to sight so long that there were frequent inquiries last summer as to whether or not the first horse to pace in two minutes was dead. The horse show last week evidently had an exhilarating effect, for the following story was sent out from New York:

"The son of W. J. White, of Cleveland, owner of Star Pointer 1:59½, the first light harness horse in the world to beat two minutes, is taking in the horse show this week. Mr. White says that Star Pointer has been improving right along ever since his breakdown at the Empire City track two or three years ago.

"Directly after his breakdown he was taken to the Two-Minute Farm and actually put in a glass case. A good-sized paddock, with plenty of rich grass, was enclosed in glass, where the champion side-wheeler could run all winter. This was connected with his roomy stable, and he has been living on the fat of the land ever since. Mr. White said yesterday that Star Pointer had improved so much that he would be placed in the hands of a capable trainer some time this winter, with a view to racing the old hero again.

"I think he will be able to show a lot of speed again," said Mr. White. "At least, he gives every indication of being as sound as he ever was. His legs are as smooth, now, and as hard as a pebble. For a time, when first turned out, the puffs would go down and then fill again, but that trouble is all over now, and he seems as sound as he ever was. My father has turned him over to me, and I am going to see if he cannot be put in shape to race again. I have not yet decided on what trainer I will give him to, although I have been thinking of several."

If Star Pointer gets good again it will be the result of the "rest cure," which seems to discount the firing iron or anything else in the way of rejuvenating bad legs. Star Pointer is now thirteen years old, having been foaled in 1889.

Influence of Matinees and Speedways.

At the dinner given by the New York Road Drivers' Association to E. E. Smathers and David Lamar, a few days ago, Ed A. Tipton talked interestingly about the influence of the Speedway and matinees on the market for fine horses in New York. Speaking of the great auction sales of trotters held at Madison Square Garden, he stated the books of the Fasig-Tipton Company would show that before the now famous Harlem River Driveway was opened the New York business of the concern never reached $500,000 in a year.

"Since the Speedway was completed," said Mr. Tipton, "our New York sales have never fallen as low as $800,000 in a year, and last year they reached $1,200,000. These figures are for trotters alone," he added. "We have sold about $1,800,000 worth of thoroughbreds, within a year, but I do not include these sales."

Mr. Tipton said the men who drive trotters on the Speedway had not only purchased hundreds of fast horses for this purpose, but their bidding had forced racing men and others to pay higher prices than before for nearly every high-class trotter and pacer having the qualities of a road horse that had been sold under the hammer in New York. He also drew attention to the fact that the opening of the New York Speedway had led to the building of others in nearly all the principal cities of the United States, with a resulting increase in the demand for high-class road horses, which must mean millions of dollars in the aggregate annually to the breeders of trotting horses throughout the country.—Trotter and Pacer.

Salisbury Building, Melbourne, Australia

San Francisco, Saturday, December 6, 1902.

THE NEW YEAR AND STALLION EDITION of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN will be issued January 10th. It will be replete with valuable information, statistical tables of the occurrences in the trotting and pacing world during the past year, a list of the new 2:30 performers by California sires, and a very large amount of reading matter that will be indispensable to the horse owner and breeder. The issue will be especially valuable to stallion owners, who desire to advertise their stallions for the season of 1903, as it will be issued at a time when every breeder is studying performances and blood lines with a view of making the best matings for his mares. Advertisers will find the columns of this special annual edition most profitable as a very large edition will be printed and will have a very wide circulation. The edition will be profusely illustrated and have a very attractive cover in colors. Those desiring space in the advertising columns should apply for the same without delay as the same will be limited.

THE LARGEST ENTRY LIST since the Pacific Breeders Futurity was established has been received by Secretary Kelley of the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association for No. 3 of that stake. While at this writing all the entries from distant points have not been received, there are no less than 320 mares nominated, which breaks all previous records for the stake. The Pacific Breeders Futurity was established three years ago by the Breeders Association for the purpose of increasing the interest in breeding trotters and pacers and it has been a success from its inception. In spite of a lot of criticism from a few superannuated growlers and fault finders who never see any good in anything not of their own invention, this stake has had the support and endorsement of the breeders of the Pacific Coast and California in particular, who, by the very large number of entries made each year, have testified to their confidence in an association that has kept alive the harness horse interests of this section when they were in great danger of being destroyed. The splendid list of entries received will be published next week and will be evidence of the very general support that has been given the stake from one end of this State to the other, and from such distant points as Idaho, Washington and Arizona. As the races which will decide the winners of these stakes will be trotted in California, a very large list of nominators cannot be expected from sections outside the boundaries of the State, and while there are some outside nominators, California breeders are looked to for the success of the venture. They have repented nobly each successive year and Stake No. 3 has more nominators than either of its predecessors. The results show that the breeding and training of harness horses in California is on the increase, that in spite of the passing of many of the big stock farms, there is a healthy growth in the business, and that the number of persons who patronize standard bred stallions is increasing every year. A full list of the nominators to the Pacific Breeders Futurity No. 3 will be printed in this journal next week and will be proof that the assertions here made are true.

CALIFORNIANS may be expected to boom the stock bred in their State, and when words of high praise of our production are printed in our home papers, they may be sprinkled with a grain of salt before being swallowed by eastern readers. When the sages of Kentucky pass an opinion on a California product, however, we think it should be accepted by all unbiased persons as being about as close to the unbiased truth as anything that gets into a horse paper. From an editorial in the columns of the Kentucky Stock Farm of Nov. 27th in which the breeding of the prominent trotters of the year is considered we clip the following and submit it without further comment:

"John A. McKerron, while not to be found among the list of great race winners, must be taken into consideration on account of the brilliancy of his performances, and while he has never but once since coming into his present ownership been put to a crucial test among other great trotters, he has so invariably accomplished that which has been put before him, and has not only acquired a very fast record but has met and defeated in a race to wagon two very high-class trotters. This stallion in many respects is one of the richest bred trotters in view; in fact, he is the best bred among all fast trotters that ever lived. By Nutwood Wilkes, a sire that represents the most patrician lineage to be found in the Trotting Register, and from a mare by Director that was herself a double producer as well as being from a mare (also a producer) by Echo. Here is found a combination of the three most fashionable trotting strains in the world. Wilkes, Nutwood and Dictator, and as the horse divides with Directum second place among stallions and is likely to in the future become one of the very fastest horses that ever lived, his breeding is of especial interest."

THE TWO YEAR OLD DIVISIONS of Stake No. 1 of the Pacific Breeders Futurity are to be trotted and paced next summer at the annual meeting of the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association. The two year old trotters will compete for stakes amounting to $1250, and the pacers will have $750 to contest for. These will be the first important two-year-old events for harness colts given in California for several years. It is probable that the list of starters in both will be large. Great interest is already manifested in them, and the suggestion is made that as many two year olds will be put in training early in the coming year to make them ready for these stakes, that it will be an excellent idea for several of the district associations to arrange stakes for trotting and pacing two year olds. There would be almost a certainty of their filling and much interest would be created that would materially help in making the circuit of 1903 a successful one.

NO WONDER the Kansas City Horse Show is a success. The liberality of some of the leading patrons of the show is sufficient to make it so. Mr. A. E. Stilwell of that city recently announced to the directors of the Horse Show, that he will offer four prizes, aggregating $3200, for the next year's show. The first will be the Stilwell Stake of $1000 for high school saddlers; the second, to be called the Orient Stake, to be $1000 for the best rig owned and used on the streets of Kansas City during and for 60 days prior to the show. A third prize of $1000 has not been named or classified. The fourth is a prize of $200 for the best saddle horse owned and ridden by a resident of Kansas or Missouri, from fifteen to twenty-one years old. It was announced that several other prizes had been offered, and that the local prize list would be fully $10,000 for next year's show. A strong effort will be made to get the leading stables of the East to exhibit.

THE NEW YORK HORSE SHOW was greater than ever this year, that is the attendance and the list of entries were both larger and more interest was manifested than ever before. The American trotter was not very conspicuous in the classes provided for him, but he was in evidence in all the others and carried off more blue ribbons among the bobs than all the other breeds combined.

THE OCCIDENT STAKE for foals of 1902 is advertised to close with Secretary Geo. Jackson of the State Agricultural Society on January 1st. This stake is growing in value and importance every year and is the leading three year old event of the Pacific Coast. Every breeder should have an entry in the Occident.

SIX YEARLINGS and nine two year olds from Theo. Winters' Nevada farm will be sold by Fred H. Chase & Co., in this city, next month at auction.

The Napa Stock Farm Sale.

Probably the largest crowd ever seen at the Occidental Horse Exchange was there Tuesday evening of this week, when the yearlings from Mr. A. B. Spreckels' Napa Stock Farm were sold. There was "standing room only" by the time the first colt was led into the ring, and but little of that, as every available space was filled and even seats on the rafters were in demand.

The highest price of the sale was $2100, paid by Tom Ryan for a slashing-looking chestnut colt by imp. Crighton out of Nellie Bell, therefore a full brother to Gaviota, one of the best two-year-olds that has been seen in California this year. A brown filly by Libertine, dam imp. Candid, was knocked down to Joe Tighe for $1050, and W. B. Sink paid $825 for a filly by Crighton out of the good mare Sevens.

The total amount realized was $10,675, an average of $381. The complete list follows:

Chestnut filly by Libertine-Piquante, M. F. Tarpey, $400.
Chestnut filly by Ravelston-Vielleicht, M. F. Tarpey, $200.
Brown colt by Libertine-Lucille II, J. A. Mulcahey, $800.
Bay colt by Puryear D.-Hazel Mc, W. L. Oliver, $130.
Chestnut colt by Crighton-Maya II, Fred Edwards, $300.
Bay colt by Libertine-Gracie S., W. B. Sink, $525.
Bay colt by Puryear D.-Georgia VI, Tom Cook, $200.
Bay colt by Crighton-Irene E., M. G. Eppinger, $130.
Bay colt by Libertine-Imp. Atossa, C. Owen, $350.
Black colt by Trappean-Abbie F., M. F. Tarpey, $300.
Bay colt by The Judge-Bellguard, Barney Schreiber, $100.
Brown colt by Libertine-Straight Tip, R. E. Mulcahey, $550.
Chestnut filly by Crighton-Glitter, W. B. Sink, $525.
Bay filly by Libertine-Marcel, M. F. Tarpey, $350.
Chestnut filly by Crighton-Folly, Hugh Jones, $350.
Chestnut filly by Crighton-Therese, M. F. Tarpey, $200.
Bay filly by Crighton-Frisa, M. G. Eppinger, $100.
Bay filly by Libertine-Phoebe, F. W. Appleby, $225.
Bay colt by The Judge-Dolly McCone, P. Mitchell & Co., $145.
Bay filly by Puryear D.-Bohemian Lass, Joseph Hagarty, $75.
Bay colt by Libertine-Bridal Veil, Albert Joseph, $195.
Chestnut filly by Crighton-Makawao, M. F. Tarpey, $125.
Bay colt by The Judge-Tragic, Miller & Truwick, $50.
Bay filly by Libertine-Floriana, Miller & Truwick, $125.
Chestnut colt by Crighton-Nellie Bell, Tom Ryan, $2100.
Chestnut filly by Crighton-Break o' Day, W. Appleby, $250.
Chestnut filly by Crighton-Sevens, W. B. Sink, $825.
Brown filly by Libertine-Imp. Candid, Joe Tighe, $1050.
Bay colt by Yo El Rey-Maintop, sold on account of Charles Kerr to M. G. Eppinger, $105.

An automobile slipped a cog and balked right out in front of the Broadway, New York, theater the other evening just as the people were coming out after the performance. The cabbies were not a bit slow in taking advantage of the auto's predicament. They surrounded the enemy and offered the following suggestions: "What's the matter with him; got the colic?" "Pour a little sand in his ear; that'll start it." "I'd try burnin' a bale of shavin's under it." "Get out and lead it a little ways." "Give it a lump of sugar." "Shall I call a vet?" "Looks as if it had been foundered." "Twist its tail." "Turn it around 'till it gets dizzy." "A five-cent lump of ginger is what you want." "Somebody ought to tell the humane society." And so on until the poor fellow succeeded in backing his machine into an alley, where it stayed until an old horse came to haul it away.

The blood lines found in Nancy Hanks' pedigree are producing a great deal of speed. The former queen is herself the dam of Admiral Dewey, three year old record 2:14½, and this season Bugle, out of Meta S. by Stamboul, she out of Nancy Lee, the dam of Nancy Hanks, secured a three year old record of 2:14. A couple more foals out of Nancy Hanks are said to be showing a great deal of speed at Forbes Farm, and a yearling by Bingen 2:06½ out of Naron by Arion 2:07½, second dam Nancy Hanks, is said to be about the best youngster of his age at the farm.

Scouring. Hidebound. Colic.

Every horse owner has had some experience with the above-named ailments among his stock, and knows how difficult it is to obtain a ready and quick remedy in the hour of need. Hence I take pleasure in making the following statement: I have owned horses all my life, and nursed them. I have tried many remedies to cure scouring, colic, and hidebound, but none gave such good results as the Manhattan Red Ball Brand Stock Food. I have cured colic time and again with it inside of 30 minutes; scouring in three weeks and have fattened hidebound horses inside of two months. Their coats were slick as silk, and were a pleasure to look at.

A lot of McMurray carts just received. You need one right now to work your colts in this winter. Call at the Kenney Manufacturing Company, 531 Valencia street and take a look at these carts and other first-class vehicles they have for sale.

The horse "Dandy Hal" has been identified as "Norseman" 2:14½ by Pennant.

THOROUGHBRED DEPARTMENT.

Horses are still coming in from the East and the latest arrivals this week are John Robbins who has Col. Ballantyne, Mission, Sam Lution, Corrillo and Tulare; W. P. Fine brings Yellowstone and Barkleyite, the latter is a much improved horse and won quite a number of races at St. Louis last summer.

There is quite a collection of steeplechase riders at Ingleside waiting for the opening of the illegitimate game; the steeplechase course has been put in order, the jumps have been lowered, and the finish rearranged so that the horses will finish at the outside track. The first jumping race of the season will be given this afternoon. There are several fair jumpers here now and many better ones are expected later on; with good horses and good jockeys steeplechasing is a most enjoyable sport, the trouble in times past with this class of races on this Coast has been entirely owing to incompetent jumpers and bad riders. Word has been received from Latonia that among the owners who will ship jumpers here are A. C. Hack, T. A. Daives, Geo. Strobble, M. Jacobsen, H. J. Marshall, L. Finney and Louis Ezell. Included in the lot are Crest, Bristol, Handvice, Allegiance, and Tartar. Dagman is already here. With such horses as these and such riders as, McMahon, Worthington, McHugh, Allmark, Peters, Sutherland and others who are now at the track the sport of steeplechasing should prove very interesting this winter.

Harry Whitman, who formerly trained for the late Marcus Daly, and who left here two years ago to train a stable of horses in Hungary, has returned to California. Mr. Whitman met with success in Europe, but owing to continued ill health he was forced to return to this country.

Jockey Lee Jackson was suspended indefinitely last week on account of some bad looking races ridden by him. In view of the showing since made by Ilowaho under the riding of Jay Ransch, it looks as if the judgment of the Board of Stewards had not been at fault and that the suspension should be made permanent. In this connection it should be stated that so far Jackson has been the only culprit to whom punishment has been meted out for the races which were investigated. It is absurd to suppose that the jockey was alone to blame and it is to be hoped that the matter will be gone further into and that those who probably profited more than Jackson will receive their just deserts.

The finish in the first race on Saturday last was about the closest thing ever seen on local tracks. Heads and noses alone separated the first five horses while the sixth horse was lapped on the others.

Jockey Battiste, the colored rider who performed so well at St. Louis last summer, is now riding at Ingleside and showing very good form. He seems however to be at a disadvantage in large fields and the horses ridden by him meet with more than their proper share of interference. This may be the result of chance only but it is noticeable that the white riders do not appear to have such bad luck in getting through the bunch with their horses.

Bill Knapp had his first mount on last Monday. He had the leg up on Durazzo, carrying 84 pounds. Although Durazzo proved the winner it was hardly owing to Knapp's effort that he landed in front, as Ransch came very near stealing the race from him fifty yards from the finish.

While the class of horses racing here this winter is below the average, the difference is pretty well made up in jockeys. Some of the most celebrated knights of the pigskin are riding here at present and owing to this fact the bettors are quite sure of getting a run for their money.

Jockey McCue, now riding here, is one of the best riders at the track. He is riding as a free lance and accepts all kinds of mounts. It is a pity that his habits are so erratic as he would be a valuable acquisition to any stable if he could be depended upon to make the necessary weight.

President Williams on Friday announced that racing will be transferred to the Oakland track Monday, January 5. It will continue there up to and including February 6, and will be resumed at Ingleside Saturday, February 7, on which day the Burns Handicap will be decided. The racing will be continued there up to and including February 28, after which Oakland track will be the scene of the sport for the remainder of the season.

Joe Frey was started in a purse race on Monday and as he seemed to be well in at the weight and Jockey Burns was in the saddle he came in for quite a play. Those who backed him did not get a run for their money as the horse was plainly not ready and stopped badly after running three furlongs. Some penalty should be imposed for running horses "short" as the custom has been altogether too prevalent of late.

Mr. A. B. Spreckels has sold his good two year old filly Gaviota, daughter of imp. Crighton and Nellie Bell, to W. L. Oliver, the New York turfman who is racing here this season. The consideration was said to have been $3000, with $500 additional if the filly wins a stake. Mr. Spreckels could have sold Gaviota to Burns & Waterhouse if he had chosen to do so at the last State Fair just prior to the Stallion Stake being run off, but refused a tempting offer at that time, preferring to take his chances of winning the rich stake. That his judgment was not at fault was demonstrated by the fine race run by Gaviota, who was only beaten owing to a superior jockey having the mount on Maxnic. Gaviota is a fine looking individual and has shown a liking for a route and an ability to carry weight which should give her a great chance for the California Oaks next spring.

Billy Muir, who was taking the coin for the Boston Club last Saturday, and which failed to put in an appearance in the ring on Monday, announced that all indebtedness had been squared up, the $400 to $40 Glendenning ticket held by W. B. Sink being paid that evening at the Palace Hotel.

Morinel, the game daughter of Morello and Sunlit by Monday, has broken down and will soon be sold for a broodmare by the Scott Brothers, for Morello mares are considered prizes, and this one has won no less than twenty-six races, including a mile in 1:40½, one and one-eighth miles in 1:53 and one a quarter miles in 2:07, while her dam is the mother El Rayo, Sunrise, Sunello and St. Sever.

That Harry Stover's horse Kenilworth is in great form was shown by his race on Tuesday when he ran the fastest six furlongs of the season, stepping the distance in 1:13½ despite the heavy impost and the long delay at the start. Kenilworth has won four out of five races in which he has started thus far and undoubtedly would have won the other had Jackson got him away to advantage. One singular thing about the horse is the fact that every time he runs the books lay a comparatively long price about him as they argue that he cannot win every time he goes. Stover's confidence in his horse was shown by his instructions to Ransch, to whom he said, "Lay along behind them until you reach the head of the stretch, but when you turn him loose be careful he doesn't step on anything."

There has been some talk of a match race between Sombrero and Lodestar at a distance of a mile or a mile and a sixteenth and it has been suggested that each should carry the same weight despite the difference in ages. The only way to bring these two horses together on equal terms in such a race would be to chain Sombrero to the fence as in that case Lodestar might have a chance to beat him.

The conditions of the $50,000 stake to be known as the World's Fair Handicap, to be run on the old fair grounds track, at St. Louis, have been announced. The Fair Association will guarantee the stake to be worth $50,000, of which $6000 will go to the second horse and $2000 to the third. The nominator of the winner is to receive $1500 out of the stakes, which will be for horses three years old and upward at the time of the race. This handicap being for three year olds and upward will be the most valuable stake of its kind yet offered on the American turf, and it is expected that the cream of the youngsters developed in this country and England the coming season will be entered.

Jockey Burns is showing great ability in putting up strong finishes. The races won by him on Breton and Bucolic were literally stoien in the last jump.

The running up of horses in selling races has become a regular thing this season, F. W. Doss and W. P. Magrane taking the principal parts in this action. On Tuesday Doss boosted Azarine $300 over her entered price and on Wednesday carried Irene Lindsay up to $1000. Magrane also ran up Golden Light. All these horses were retained by their owners, whose victories thus proved to be costly ones. Doss took Meehanus away from Caesar Young in a cheap selling race several days ago.

The mile race won by Eva G. on Wednesday was about the most one-sided affair ever seen at Ingleside. Reed, who had the mount on Coffey's mare, took the lead at the start and at the first quarter was fully ten lengths in the lead; the little fellow never stopped riding and kept increasing his advantage until the finish was reached. At this time many of the contestants in the race had not yet passed the paddock gate and the second horse was fully one hundred yards behind the winner. The mile was run in 1:41½, the fastest one of the season so far. Although Eva G. has run a couple of bad races previous to this one, her work has been good enough to warrant a performance of this kind.

Mike Daly stood to win a small fortune on Hesper in the mile race on Wednesday, but was unfortunate in running up against Eva G., who won in such hollow fashion; he won pretty well to the race as it was, as his horse finished second and he backed him all three ways.

The racing on Wednesday last was of a most thrilling character, close finishes being the rule, with the exception of one race. In four of the events noses alone separated the contenders and the result could only have been decided by one who was in a direct line with the imaginary wire. Burns, Ransch and Bullman were the jockeys who rode vigorous finishes in these events and landed their mounts in front.

Billy Oliver's red and white colors were seen in front for the first time on last Wednesday when Gaviota, running her first race for her new owner, nosed out Gold Van in a desperate finish. Mr. Oliver has not had much luck with his horses since coming here and has lost considerably in backing them. It is to be hoped that his luck has changed and he will meet with more success in the future.

Golden Light is a wonderfully improved horse. Last season he showed no form worth mentioning but this year has developed into a first-class selling plater. He met with all kinds of interference in his last race and after being forced to pull up at the eighth pole and go around succeeded in winning by a narrow margin.

It is reported that Ed Corrigan and some others have secured land and intend to build a race track at Kansas City, where they will give a meeting next fall. Kansas City is one of the most prosperous places in the country, and as the inhabitants have seen no racing locally for the last eight years, it looks as if the enterprise should prove a most successful one.

Quite a sensation was sprung at Lexington Saturday Nov. 22d, when John Skain, administrator of the estate of James Murphy, formerly trainer for J. B. Haggin, opened his private box in the Trust Company and discovered that it contained securities, cash and bank stock to the amount of $50,000. In it were also found the deeds to two valuable pieces of city property held by Murphy and free from all incumbrances, which will swell his estate to fully $65,000.

Jockey Patsy Freeman, who has been riding for several seasons in France, will spend the winter in California and return to France early next spring.

A Rara Avis.

We mentioned several weeks ago a peculiar specimen of the duck family shot near Sears Point by a local gunner, a bird that for lack of better description was likened to a cross between a coot and a mallard duck. Its bill much resembled the peculiar swollen bill of the surf duck or sea coot (Oedemia perspicillata—variety troubridges), which is plentiful on our bays at this time of the year. In plumage there was a suggestion of the markings of the female mallard. This bird was not seen by us at the time, as it is not unusual for hybrids to be shot on the duck hunting grounds; the bird was briefly referred to as possibly a cross between two varieties.

The specimen was given to a local taxidermist and later attracted the attention of Prof. L. M. Loomis, who pronounced the stranger a rara avis indeed, it being none other than a female king eider duck (Somateria spectabilis). The occurrence of this boreal bird is unusual in California; there is but one other instance recorded here of its previous capture.

Several varieties of the eider duck are inhabitants of the northwest coast of America. The best known of these birds is the one commonly called the eider or sea duck. The reputation of this bird is world-wide. Not so much so from any peculiarity that it possesses, but because it ministers (unwillingly, to be sure) to the comfort of man. Four species of this genus are known in the United States; two of these are found upon the Atlantic coast, the king eider and the common eider duck. On the northern Pacific coast, the so-called Pacific eider duck is found. The king eider is the rarer bird of the two Eastern visitors and is a more northern species than either of those here mentioned, with which, however, it is sometimes associated. It is found as far south in the winter, on the Atlantic coast, as New York and occasionally as far west as the inland waters west of Lake Michigan.

The plain eider duck is the most common and is here referred to for a brief notice. The bird has been naturally associated with icebergs and Icelanders, as they have formed such prominent features in tales of Arctic adventure. True it is, vast numbers have their summer dwelling-places in the Polar regions, but even those which seek a breeding place in Greenland, Iceland or Labrador, set out for a less rigorous climate as the Arctic winter approaches. The range of the eider duck is from the Arctic regions to the coast of New England on the east and the northern Pacific Coast on the west. It is only in winter however that their presence is noted in the more, comparatively, southern latitudes, and then they generally keep well aloof from the shore. By the first of May and earlier on the Pacific side of the continent, they take flight for the northern feeding grounds. On the Eastern coast they seek a place to make their nest and rear their young along the shores of the Bay of Fundy, Newfoundland and Labrador. Their Pacific congeners find a favorable breeding place along the Alaskan shores, the islands of the Behring sea and the environs of the Siberian coast, in territory beyond and about the Arctic circle. A favorite selection of the breeding place will be found in a locality where from the water's edge, many tortuous, narrow paths tend to grassy thickets, these paths will invariably lead to a nest, sometimes two. Upon the ground the birds place a few pieces of grass stalks, with other fine material, in a slight depression of which the eggs are laid, from three to five in number. The first of these eggs are laid about the last of May. The eider's eggs are about three inches long by two in width, of a beautiful olive green in color and very smooth. Often when the nest is left by the female for a short time, they are covered with a mat of dry grass and the highly prized eider down so elastic that a whole nestful may be compressed within one's fist afterwards expanding to its original bulk. This down is a dark slate in color, and is plucked by the female from her own breast. The habit of covering duck eggs with down is not one confined to the eider variety alone. The young eider ducklings are beautiful little creatures that swim like fishes and have the endearing quality of being easily tamed.

Towards the last of October the birds make their first appearance on the Southern migration stations. The specimen here first mentioned was shot on November 8th last. In localities where they are plentiful, they can be seen in large bodies riding the waves off some rocky cape. Off the Massachusetts coast, hunters find much sport shooting them from a sail boat. The method usually followed, is for the party to set out for the desired shooting location before daylight. When the station is reached an anchor is thrown from one boat, the next proceeds on its course for about twenty rods where it anchors in turn, in this way the hunters in boats are all disposed of, until the boats are stationed in a long straight line across the airy path of the birds in flight. The flight commences at daybreak and the shooting soon begins. The birds must pass between two of the boats. When a bird is killed, the buoy to which the anchor is attached is thrown overboard and the dead duck retrieved by rowing or sailing after it. During a west wind and on a rough sea the best shooting is to be had.

The description of the eider or sea-duck is: "Bill with long club-shaped frontal processes extending in a line with the culmen, upon the sides of the forehead divided by a broad feathered interspace. Male in breeding attire, white, creamy tinted on breast and washed with green on head; under parts from breast, lower back, rump, tail, quills, and large forked patch on the crown black. Female with the bills less developed, general plumage an extremely variable shade of reddish-brown or ochry brown, speckled mottled, and barred with darker. Male in certain stages resembling the female. Length about two feet."

The Pacific eider (Somateria V-nigra) is precisely like the last excepting a V shaped black mark on the chin. Perhaps it is only a variety.

The king eider (S. spectabilis) has a "bill with broad, squarish, nearly vertical frontal processes bulging angularly out of line with the culmen. Male in breeding attire black, including forked chin patch, a frontal band and small space round eye; the neck and fore parts of the body, part of the interscapulars of wing coverts and of linings of wings, and a flush patch white, creamy on the jugulum, greenish on the sides of the head; crown and nape fine bluish ash. Female resembles the common eider in plumage but the bill is different. The bird is also of about the same size as the common eider."

One faculty accredited to the eider duck, which is a deep diving bird, is the ability to break between its strong bills mussels and other bivalves upon which it feeds in its northern habitat. The specimen we have seen is a symmetrical, large and powerful built bird, one seemingly well fitted to buffet the northern breakers and cleave on swift pinion its way through the boreal blast. This bird is at present on exhibition at the establishment of Messrs. Clabrough, Golcher & Company.

Law Violations Lead to Assault.

Poaching and night shooting have been so much indulged in on the Alameda marshes, that in some sections strong feeling has been the result between different individuals. The finale of a case of aggravated assault was reached in the Oakland police court on Wednesday when the defendant, one John F. Horn, a saloon keeper of this city, was convicted and fined by Judge Mortimer Smith $50 or given the alternative of 25 days in jail.

The affair grew out of the ill feeling shown by many individual hunters against the gun clubs and lessees of shooting ground in the vicinity of Alvarado. In this section there is much complaint concerning the systematic practice of poaching. Night shooting is indulged in constantly. Both customs are at variance with the law. Arrests have been made and convictions have been secured both for breach of property rights and violation of the State game law. In some cases the results have been salutary, in others enmities have been engendered. Several law suits have also been instituted before certain claimed rights were determined.

The facts of this particular case were stated to be that Dr. Louis T. Cranz was attacked by Horn without provocation at the railway station at Broadway and First streets, Oakland, one Saturday afternoon. He and a party of friends, including a deputy game warden, were on their way to Alvarado for an over-Sunday shoot. At the railway station in Oakland Horn approached the fish and game warden and asked permission to take a small boat through the private hunting grounds of the Swan Gun Club at Alvarado. The request was refused, with the added statement that "the club did not care to grant privileges that would allow of shooting ducks where the members and guests were entitled to and expected to shoot. Favors that had been granted in the past had been abused," and then Horn became angry and scored the members of the Cranz party. He also abused the keeper of the preserve of the gun club, and when Dr. Cranz defended the keeper, Horn, so Cranz claims, walked over several steps to him and attacked him without warning, striking him a heavy blow on the eye, the ring on one of Horn's fingers cutting the eye. Cranz was confined to his bed for ten days.

Horn's statement of the affair differs, but he was unable to acquit himself, even with the aid of a number of witnesses, among them being H. J. Chismore, a medical student, who, in company with W. Samuels, a grocer, both of this city, were recently convicted of night shooting and fined by an Alvarado Justice of the Peace. Horn claimed that at his request a member of his party asked Cranz if he would permit them to take their small boat through the slough that crosses the private shooting grounds in which Cranz is interested. The request was denied, and then the friend of Cranz, described by Horn as being a big man, began to abuse Horn and to threaten to do him injury if he should attempt to encroach upon the private shooting grounds. The big man wanted to fight Horn, and his fighting talk became so bold that Dr. Cranz caught the fever and offered to dispatch Horn single-handed. Then both men closed in on Horn, and their attitude was so threatening that Horn concluded that if he did not fight he would be whipped, so he struck Dr. Cranz on the eye with his closed fist. The big man struck several times at Horn, but did not hit him, and further damage was avoided by the interference of Horn's friends.

Horn has almost twice the physique of the Doctor. His story and those of his witnesses were refuted by the testimony of Dr. Cranz, Dr. Stafford, Hoff Cook and G. G. Gauld. The answers of defendant on the stand in response to some questions of the magistrate did not redound to his credit in several particulars.

The Collie.

The Ladies Kennel Association of Massachusetts have established a good precedent to be followed by both kennel and specialty clubs, and that is the reading of papers upon various breeds, etc., before the regular club meetings. These papers are interesting and invite discussion and research of the different topics. We have given several of these subjects in previous issues and continue the series with Mrs. J. M. Copeland's remarks concerning the Collie:

I feel that there are many of our members much more competent to give a talk on their breeds than I am, as I am young in the business, having had only three years' experience, but I have raised quite a number of dogs and am happy to say, some good ones—some prize winners.

I favor American bred dogs, and think we ought to encourage American breeders all we can, as it is getting to be a very common thing for people to go abroad and return with what they term a "cracker-jack," but I think when one breeds and raises a dog that one can walk into the ring with and win a blue ribbon, one has done something that one should feel very proud of.

I am never happier than when I am out working with my dogs. I thoroughly enjoy caring for them. There is no dog so admirably adapted as a companion for the old or young as the Collie. As a companion and playmate for children they cannot be excelled. They are gentle, and yet so full of life and vivacity. It is surprising to hear the remarks of many persons at the shows—"Don't go near those dogs; they are very treacherous!" Nothing can be more untrue, and it is very unjust, to say the least. My children have always played with the dogs, and they are never cross or snappish. My youngest child is three years old, and has, I might say, been raised with them. She has played with the dogs and puppies ever since she could walk. I remember when she was only a year old I had some bed clothing on the line airing; when it was time to take them in they were missing. I found that Hazel had pulled them off the line and made a bed for the dogs. She was lying down with all the five dogs trying to cover them up with the comforter.

I have had at one time over forty dogs, and have never had one cross or snappish. They are very tractable, and with kindness shown them can be taught anything. Although the "Scotch Collie Dog," as he is often called, has for many generations been one of the favorite varieties of the dog race, his fondest admirers of fifty years ago could scarcely have expected him to have won the popularity he has at the present time, and has held for some twenty years or more. He shares with the Fox Terrier the distinction of being the favorite dog of the people of the latter part of the nineteenth century.

The St. Bernard has his admirers, so has the Fox-hound, but neither is so suitable as a companion, the one on account of his size, the other for various reasons. The Collie and the Fox Terrier are likely to retain their good reputation for many years to come.

The Collie dog is a fine companion and watchdog; smart and intelligent, and a good worker as well. They can be taught almost anything. I have some that I talk to as if they were children. They know everything I say to them. I have raised a number of other dogs but the Collie is my favorite. They are like other good dogs, hard to raise. They need a great deal of care, careful feeding, etc.

I am very careful in feeding my dogs and always look after that part of the work myself, giving them a change of food as often as possible. I commence feeding my puppies when they are only three weeks old, and feed them every three hours for several weeks, then gradually reduce the number of feedings until they only have their regular three meals a day. My older dogs and pups get only two feeds daily, morning and night. I have very good luck with my dogs except when the distemper makes its appearance; that dreadful disease has taken from me some of my best dogs.

I find it very difficult to raise prize winners, the judges at the different shows differ so much in their opinions, that one hardly knows whether one has a prize winner or not. It is very difficult to rise to their standard!

I will give you some idea of what I deem are the points in a perfect Collie. As to color, I prefer a golden sable and white, with the characteristic markings. There are also tricolors and the merles.

The skull should be flat, fairly wide between the ears; the width of the skull depends on the length of the skull and muzzle. A heavy headed dog lacks the bright and sensible look so much admired. The muzzle should be of fair length, tapering to the nose, and no matter what the color of the dog may be, its nose must be black. The eyes are a very important feature and give the dog expression. They should be of medium size, almond shaped and brown in color, with a quick bright look when listening. The ears should be small, and placed not too close together on top of the skull, nor too much to the side of the head; when quiet they should be carried thrown back, but should be brought forward and carried semi-erect when on the alert, with tip slightly drooping, as though they were listening.

The forelegs should be straight and muscular, neither in or out at the elbows. The hindlegs should be muscular at the thighs, clean and sinewy below the hocks. The feet should be oval in shape, soles well padded and toes close together.

The brush should be moderately long, carried low when the dog is quiet and may be carried high when the dog is excited, but never over the back.

The coat should be very dense, the outer coat harsh to the touch, inner coat soft and very close.

The mane and frill should be very thick and full, the forelegs slightly feathered; hindlegs above the hocks profusely so, but below the hocks fairly smooth. Hair on the brush should be very heavy.

The general character of the Collie is a very active dog; his deep chest, sloping shoulders and well bent hocks, show his strength and speed, and his face, high intelligence. He should show a strong and active outline quite different from any other breed, and he should be a fair length on the leg, giving him a racy appearance.

To sum up in as few words as possible—the Collie should show endurance, activity and intelligence, with free and true action.

I have several pictures taken of Hazel with Lancer and other dogs which I shall be glad to show you.

Terrier Heads.

No lover of the terrier, no breeder of this variety of the dog, has a greater admiration for a good head, or tries to secure this point in its perfection, than has, or does, the writer of these lines, says John Brown in the Asian, and while there is somewhat of local coloring in his article, the general applications of it will be interesting to Fox Terrier fanciers. The point is of great importance. However defective a terrier in other respects, a long, shapely head will usually ensure him a just recognition of his merits. However meritorious he may be in other respects, a mean head, a wide skull, or a short stumpy muzzle, or a snipey, bitchy face, will surely damn him. In India, more especially, is this likely to occur. Home judges of experience, professional judges, will be able to sum up the total of a dog's plus and minus quantities, in the mind's eye, with tolerable exactitude, but the amateur in India is on a different footing. He may understand what legs and feet can be, as likely as not he altogether misses shoulders; matters of loin, jacket, hocks, top, may, or may not be, a terra incognita for him, but he won't miss a head. The point seems to stand out, palpable to the eye of the veriest amateur, a long head attracts him like his favorite vice, he can't get away from it; but fail in this particular, and the chances are that the exhibit receives a scant measure of justice. It is therefore of some importance to understand what constitutes a good head. In penning these remarks, the Fox Terrier will be borne in view; it will be impracticable, without writing at much greater length, to take each breed of terrier in detail, but the remarks will apply, ceteris paribus, to the other varieties.

Now, it is common enough in advertisements, of dogs for sale, or at stud, to dwell on the head. "Probably the longest-headed terrier living," "the longest-headed Fox Terrier in the fancy," "tremendous eight inch head," are expressions well known to those who study advertisements. And the whole point lies in expressions such as these. For what, after all, is length of head considered by itself? Length of head is only comparative. A long head in one terrier may be a comparatively short one in another, vice versa. With the best of long-heads, a terrier should be in reasonable proportions. The head of a twelve-foot crocodile would be a monstrosity on a terrier. A seven-inch head may be a beautiful head on a small, compact, short-backed terrier. An eight and a half one may be quite poor on an oversized dog, a terrier only by courtesy. The measurement of a head by itself means nothing. A terrier of the flat-catcher type may catch a flat judge, who compares head with head without any considerations of size or make and shape, but that is all that can be said. Every tolerable judge knows, every breeder, at any rate, knows, that it is easy enough to obtain a long head on a very large terrier, a long greyhound like head on a long rabbit-coursing stamp of terrier, a long head on a long-backed terrier; it naturally enough frequently accompanies these characteristics. But ask him to breed eight-inch heads, fairly measured, and as a matter of course on small compact short-backed seventeen pound terriers, and note how many he will produce. Long heads, conspicuously long heads on small short-backed terriers, are very rare. They are against Nature, and though the breeder will, by breeding by selection, accomplish extraordinary results, he has oftener perhaps to acknowledge himself beaten and the truth of the maxim naturam expelles furca, tamen, usque recurret.

As a matter of fact, the authorized description of the Fox Terrier makes no allusion to eight-inch heads, or to heads of extraordinary length.

"The skull," it is said, "should be flat and moderately narrow, broader between the ears, and gradually decreasing in width to the eyes. Not much 'stop' should be apparent; but there should be more dip in the profile, between the forehead and the top-jaw, than is seen in the case of the Greyhound * * * . The jaw should be strong and muscular, but not too full in the cheek, should be of fair punishing length, but not so as in any way to resemble the Greyhound's or modern English Terrier's. There should not be much falling away below the eyes; this part of the head should, however, be moderately chiselled out, so as not to go down in a straight slope like a wedge."

There is no foundation in the above description, which is not only sensible, but what is of more importance, is a description accepted by the Fox Terrier Club, for the ultra-heads desired by the fancier. The intention is that the head should be long, suitable to the size of the dog; it should aim at the particular shape described—it can be too long of the Greyhound type, too wedgy of the Bull Terrier type—and there are many other points of make to be taken into consideration, head and jaw including ears, only count twenty out of the total hundred and when all these other points are accounted for, the shape and length of head will, in the majority of cases, follow them. There is no credit in the possession of "the longest headed terrier living," if he is also one of the largest terriers living, or of the whippet type, or with a bark like a Dachshunde's. A terrier with a long head for his size, even though his head may measure only seven and a quarter, is a better size for getting awards than the longest headed Fox Terrier in the fancy if his eight inch head is his sole recommendation.

Oakland Show.

Entries for the Oakland show will close on the 10th inst. The entries this week were far better than anticipated, besides the good list of expected regular exhibitors, an encouraging feature was the initial entry of their dogs by a number of ladies and gentlemen who can be looked upon as new recruits to the ranks of the fancy.

Among the new exhibitors will be E. W. Parsons of Fruitvale, with Collies. Entries from Los Angeles are expected. Among those who will send dogs up here may be mentioned, C. E. McStay of San Diego; Kenneth Preuss, C. O. McDowell and J. L. Eigholz of Los Angeles.

J. McCormick, of Winters, and O. J. Albee, of Lawrence, will put in a splendid showing of Collies.

Cockers will be well represented by Plumeria, Delverton and Nairod kennels as well as individual exhibitors.

There should be a hot all round class of Fox Terriers entered, if the aggregation of talent here at present is any criterion.

Bull Terriers and Bulldogs will make an excellent showing. The opportunity of seeing Ivel Damon, Mrs. Chas. K. Harley's crack which recently did so well in the Eastern shows, is one that should not be overlooked.

Superintendent Bradshaw announces a special cash prize of $5 for the best kennel of each breed shown.

Two excellent specimens of Old English sheep dogs are at present in this city. These "bobtails" will be shown across the bay. This breed has always had a warm corner in the hearts of English fanciers and has recently come to the front rapidly. Among Eastern fanciers the breed is gaining recognition constantly and there is now many good ones owned in this country.

Noah's Ark.

Old Noah he did build an ark—
Days he wrought from morn till dark,
With a Water Spaniel's pelt he made it watertight.
Old Noah he did build an ark—
Made it out of hick'ry staves an' canine bark.
If you belong to the Dachshunde band,
Why here's my heart and here's my hand
Ye hol' o'er oceans sailing we'll go.

He drove the doggies in two by two—
Schipperke was cook and captain too,
O'er crew that bit from ropes the banded bight.
He drove the doggies in two by two—
The freckled Dalmatian and a Chinese Choo Choo
Hal the jolly Dachshunde band,
Wag my heart and lick my hand.
Kimmel Getreide, moonlit seas we'll glide.

Old Ivel Rustic was the figurehead—
With oaths Woodcote Wonder threw the lead,
A Great Dane chewed the mate and reefed the spanker.
Old Ivel Rustic was the figurehead—
At helm a brindle Pug the compass read.
Oh! be joyful, the Dachshunde band,
Here's my heart and here's my hand,
Yah wohl, up the creeks we'll pole.

And then he nailed the hatches down—
Airedale posed airily in a rouge nightgown,
With sickening wouf the Whippet hove the anchor.
And then he nailed the hatches down—
And told outsiders they might drown.
Then its to the Dachshunde band,
Why here's my heart and here's my hand.
Lieber Gott! cool rivers for days so hot.

And when he found he had no sail—
Nary chart to steer by, he did not quail,
Azure copies of True Blue conned the jolly rover,
"This bark's cruise," quoth the barkers, "is soon over."
And when he found he had no sail—
Up just hoisted he St. Bernard's tail.
Tra la, tra lee, the Dachshunde band,
Here's me heart and here's me hand
Bow wow! sylvan lakes we'll plough.

Forty days and nights in strenuous blast—
Scotty amplified with deluge on the mast,
Then for land the Irishman went gally,
Returning, the olive branch was a shilly.
Forty days and nights in strenuous blast—
The admiral doggoned the cuber he cast.
Water! only water for the Dachshunde band?
Sad's my heart and limp's my hand.
Ye hay! at duckponds we'll belay.

He landed on Mount Arrowroot—
Pajamas all soaked, aleak the bumblehoot,
Greyhound and Cocker howled the sockdology
When dogs go to sea, they should make an apology.
He landed on Mount Arrowroot—
Just three leagues abaft Shinnegahoot
"Gramercy all," said the Dachshunde band,
Why here's my he-e-art and here's my ha-a-and!!!
Eins zwei, rufen zie die poltzie,

Dog Owners!! Read This!!

We are carrying in the advertising columns of this journal an advertisement of "Sergeant's Dog Remedies," a popular line of preparations for which F. W. Braun & Co. of Los Angeles, California, have been made distributing agents on the Pacific Coast. The goods have few equals and no superiors on the market today, having received the highest endorsements of the leading dog men and kennel owners of this country and Canada.

They are manufactured by Polk Miller Drug Co. of Richmond, Va., who invite all persons having sick dogs to write (enclosing stamp) describing symptoms, and they will cheerfully furnish the best possible advice without any charge whatever. A revised copy of their book on "Dogs" sent free on receipt of 3c in stamps to cover postage.

Champion Perfection.

Champion Perfection is a dog evidently thought very much of by the fancy in the East. He is not unknown to the San Francisco bench, having been shown here in 1901. At that time he was criticised as being too large and that he would be away up in the air as he grew older. How far this was correct will be seen in the following account of the dog as he is at the present and of his career since going back East.

At the show here the impression prevailed that he would not be in it against Chief II., Winsford Bustle, Ch. Colorado, Mohican, this impression being dissipated when Perfection turned up winner. The following from Field and Fancy may be interesting:

Ch. Perfection was whelped February 28, 1900, so is still a young dog. He was bred by Mr. Jas. M. Lewis, of Toronto, but was purchased as a pup by Mr. C. T. Mead, but always shown by Mr. Geo. Bell. He is a solid dark red in color, weighs 23 pounds and is full of life and merry Cocker action. He has a grand head, perfect square muzzle, with the lip always in place; long, low-hung ears; large, perfectly placed eyes; good neck and shoulders, perfectly straight front, good bone, grand ribs and loin, nice feathering and, in fact, in the opinion of most critics, he well merits his name. He has had a most sensational show career, winning his championship before he was fifteen months old, and he did it by well deserved wins at the largest shows and by defeating the best dogs in the country.

He made his debut at Danbury, under Mr. Mason, when only seven months old, and won first in puppy class and first in open class; was defeated in limit class by two bitches. His next appearance was at New York under Mr. Jarrett, and while still less than a year old he won first puppy, first limit, first open, first winners, beating the best red and parti-colored dogs in the country. He was next shown at Toronto spring show and won first open and special as best red dog in the show. He was shown under Mr. Mortimer at Boston and succeeded in getting one more prize to his credit as first in the limit class. He was then shown at the great Toronto fall show under Mr. Oldham, winning second open and reserve winners to Romany Rye, with a special as best red in show. He followed this up by his great record at the Chicago show, under Mr. Oldham, when he took first limit, first open, first winners, $25 cup as best dog in open class, a $25 cup for best Cocker Spaniel in show, and the $100 cup as the best American bred Cocker Spaniel in show, and a Backus crate as the best red in show.

He followed this up by winning first limit, first open and first winners at San Francisco and gaining his championship while only fourteen months of age. He was then retired from the bench until this fall, when he was again shown at Toronto and won first open, first winners and special as best red in the show. It was at this show that he was purchased by his present owner, Mr. F. G. McIntosh, of Franklin, Pa.

This good little dog has not been very extensively used at the stud, but has been very successful with the bitches that have visited him, and as he is strongly inbred to the two strains that have produced all of our good red Cockers, namely, that of Ch. Hamilton Jack and of Ch. Red Jacket, through Ch. Red Roland and Red Leo, with just enough of an outcross of the blood of Ch. Black Duke, through his best red son Red Duke, and Ch. Pickpania to give him a perfect breeding, he should be as successful at the stud as he has been on the bench. He has been offered at a fee that is very reasonable, and it is his owner's intention to offer a cup for the best one of his pups exhibited at next year's shows, so he ought to be used extensively by those who are desirous of breeding high grade Cockers.

The Cocker Club and the Pacific Fox Terrier Club both offer specials for the Oakland show. This is in noticeable contrast to the apathy of the Bull Terrier Club. Bull Terriers are at present represented here by a splendid showing of good dogs, just why interest has been dulled, except in the case of enthusiastic individual fanciers, is not understood. The Bull Terrier Club, not so long ago, boasted of a membership of fifty, and even now has the reputation of being the largest specialty club on the Coast. It is reported that for some time past, it has been impossible to draw enough members together, for a business meeting, to constitute a quorum.

Several Greyhounds are offered for sale by an advertiser on page 15.

Cocker Spaniel puppies seem to be in greater demand than the available supply can fill. Several puppies are offered by an advertiser residing in Fruitvale.

The annual plains meeting of the Interstate Coursing Club is now an assured fixture. The citizens of Fresno deposited an $800 purse to the club's order on the 3rd inst., and arrangements for the meet were begun in earnest. The meeting was deferred one week in order to afford ample time for conditioning the Greyhounds. As the hares have the open country before them, the hounds must be ready for severe struggles. Under the present arrangements a special train will leave this city on the morning of the 15th inst. The coursing will be commenced on the morning of the 16th, and will be continued until the stake winner has been determined. The special train will be ready to bring the coursing men back at their pleasure. A rate of one fare has been secured for the round trip.

The first prize will probably be $500. The coursing field is three-quarter's of an hour's drive from Fresno over a fine avenue. The draw will be held in Pythian Castle on the night of the 13th inst.

L. A. Klein passed many weeks of the past summer camping out in Marin county. Outing in California is so much to his liking that he intends building an ark, so it is reported. This method of enjoying life under pleasant climatic and beautiful scenic conditions is much in vogue, as is testified by hundreds of the ark-dwelling fraternity whose houseboats hug the sheltering shores and beautify the picturesque coves of Marin county.

Small Bore Guns for Field Shooting.

Many sportsmen who have used small bore guns for quail shooting are strong in praise of the merits of the light guns, claiming that they can bag just as many birds with a small bore in a day as they could with a 12 bore and think that the lighter gun and reduced weight of shells necessary to carry for half a day's shooting made an appreciable difference in the shooter's physical condition at the end of the shoot.

Another claim made is the elation of killing a bird at a long distance with the 16 or 20 bore, which, in comparison, seems the greater feat than the shot made the same distance with a 12 bore, for with the smaller load and lighter weapon one has to shoot very accurately in order to grass the bird at the longer range.

That this claim is well made, will not be disputed, for in snipe and quail shooting, appreciably the latter, during a day's shooting but few birds are killed at a greater distance than forty yards. At this distance, in the hands of a good shot, the 16 bore should shoot as accurately and do as much execution as the 12 bore.

Where a sportsman has the means to own and use several guns, each for its own special shooting, it is a great pleasure, indeed, to shoot quail and snipe with a 16 or 20 bore gun, one that is particularly fitted to him; but, however, if a sportsman wants his gun for all-round shooting and he is not in a position to indulge in more than one gun, the 16 bore is not the gun for his choice. On the matter of weight, a man of ordinary physical condition will not find it so burdensome to carry a fairly light 12 bore, weighing seven and a half to seven and three-quarter pounds together with the proper number of shells for a half day's shooting; for, in the event of birds being numerous, his ammunition will be spent in exchange for about its weight in game. By the time the hunter has fired forty or fifty loads, providing he is a good field shot, he should have a limit bag in the pockets of his shooting coat, or at least about as many snipe or quail as one should kill during a single shoot.

The average hunter who cannot carry in the pockets of his hunting jacket, 50 loaded shells and also carry and use a seven and a half pound gun for a half day, or on occasion, for a whole day, would not show up for much of a tramp with a 16 bore. A half day on the shooting ground is about as long as one usually has to devote to birds and there is not, particularly where there is a limit bag imposed for quail or snipe, much need of taking along more than 50 shells.

Friedrich Alfred Krupp, the famous cannon gun maker of Germany, died suddenly at his villa in Huelgel, on November 22d, the cause of his death being apoplexy. He was 47 years old.

The Krupp Works are located in Essen and give employment to some 43,000 men, the steel, armor plate and great guns made there being among the best of the kind in the world. The armor for the new navy was supplied by him. He furnished barrels for sporting guns and many were imported into this country, but he is best known as the maker of the Krupp cannon, etc.

He was interested in the welfare of his workmen, and established various institutions at Essen for their benefit, besides building hundreds of houses on sanitary principles for their use, charging only a small rental.

He was interested in many enterprises besides his iron works and ship yards.

He was personally very much liked by Emperor William, who frequently visited him, and who often had him as his guest at Berlin. His Majesty conferred upon him the title of Excellency, as a special mark of distinction, this title being usually confined to the highest officials.

At the organization of the Kiel Yacht Club the Emperor and Herr Krupp were present. One of the officers present remarked that a club house was needed, and the Emperor replied that he knew of but one man who could give it to the club, indicating Herr Krupp with a glance. The latter made no remark at the time, but the present club house and adjacent hotel and restaurant, overlooking the Kiel fiord, and costing $1,000,000, were the result of the suggestion.

The club pays a rental of $250 a year for the club house, and it is thought that Herr Krupp willed the house to the club. It is reported that the works will be put in the hands of trustees for the benefit of the widow and heirs, with Arthur Krupp, cousin of Herr Krupp, as the head of the management.

Samuel Grant, a prosperous farmer of Burney valley, near Redding, had a thrilling encounter with a giant cougar or mountain lion about a fortnight gone. Grant, accompanied by his two dogs, started out for a hunt. His dogs cornered the big cat and one of them was caught by the animal. Grant succeeded in wounding the brute, and thinking it dead was in the act of taking the dog from the animal's jaws when it recovered and attacked Grant. He finally managed to fire his pistol into the cougar's mouth and the animal dropped dead. Both dogs were killed and Grant will not recover from the injuries he received for some time to come.

For almost a quarter of a century has the store at 416 Market street been known to sportsmen as a supply depot for the many articles required by hunter, angler, rifleman and in every line of outdoor or indoor sports. The business was originally started by Mr. E. T. Allen, who disposed of his interest to the H. E. Skinner Company.

This week the latter corporation moved to new, roomy and well lit quarters at the southwest corner of Market and Fourth streets.

We wish the firm the same success in their new location as they evidently had at the old stand. Henry Skinner, Hip Justins, Jules Bruns, J. B. Kenniff and Billy Jessen will be found still in charge of their several departments. Mr. Linforth and his painstaking corps of assistants will be found installed in the counting room.

Dave Thom, a genial sportsman, of national reputation as a gunsmith, has also gone along to the new store.

FEATHER AND FIN.

Quail shooters, duck hunters and anglers, have each in his chosen sport, found many favorable conditions recently for limit bags and fairly filled creels. As a rule the gun club men find the best duck hunting, for the birds will go to baited ponds in preference to other feeding grounds. The rain to-day will put a quietus on most of the quail shooting and steelhead fishing to-morrow.

On Tuesday evening the San Francisco Fly-Casting Club will hold another of the series of those pleasant reunions of jolly anglers, called formally a "regular meeting and dinner," but being in reality a most enjoyable gathering of congenial spirits for an evening's good fellowship and enjoyment of many excellent things, both substantial and intellectual, inspired of devotion to the gentle art.

The feature of the evening will be the presentation of the medals won by the different members during this year's contests.

The angler who indulges in fly-fishing as well as others who see the artistic imitations of may-flies made out of mallard and other feathers must often wonder at the cleverness shown in their making. More than half of the ingenuity here shown is thrown away. Just as all colors are alike in the dark, so it is with objects seen in front of a strong light. Fish, it is claimed, judge of things seen above them, merely by outline, for many wary trout have been taken with bright blue and scarlet may-flies, which are in color, very far indeed from the real insect. This statement does not prove that fish are color blind as to objects under water, but it narrows, very much, the field in which the discrimination between hues could be of use to them.

A certain well known local angler was seen standing in front of a fish dealer's stall in the Clay street market last Monday morning; he had his rod and basket with him. "Just throw me three or four of those striped bass," he said to the fish seller, indicating with his fore-finger, a number of apparently eight pound fish laid out on the counter. "All right," replied the Italian, "but what for you say to throw 'em, eh?" "Well, just so I can go home and tell my wife I caught them," he replied. "I may be an unlucky fisherman, but I am not a liar."

A curious incident took place recently in the "white house" pool, a stretch of fishing tide water near Point Reyes station, a noted nearby resort for steelhead and salmon fishing. Both varieties of these fish have been fairly plentiful of late and the banks of the pool has been weekly occupied by a goodly quota of local anglers.

On this particular occasion James Watt and S. A. Wells were in company, spooning the pool from the reed grown banks. Wells cast his spoon where he believed he thought a fish had swirled and got a strike and his reel commenced to sing, he was elated at the prospect of a good sized fish, as other big fish had recently been caught thereabouts. Developments soon apprised him that something out of ordinary was on the tapis. After playing his catch for a short time, the "fish" emerged from the depths, and lo! it was a large bird, a northern grebe, one known locally as a "hell diver." The luckless grebe had, in its natatorial pursuit of finny prey, seen the spoon spinning underneath the surface and had seized and gulped the lure and was hooked securely. The poor bird paid the forfeit of its life for its temerity. Wells had the diver stuffed and now has the proud opportunity, when telling the story in the future, of being classed among those known to fame as an ingenious "fishing liar."

The record striped bass, caught with rod and line, is the fish taken by Fred H. Bushnell. This bass weighed, we believe, twenty-nine and a half pounds. A fish weighing thirty-two pounds, it was reported, was taken at the Alameda mole. This latter fish, it was for a time believed, was taken with a rod and line. Recent reports are to the effect that the fish was caught in a net.

Apropos of the weights of fish caught, there is not now any authentic method of weighing and otherwise getting accurate information concerning the take of big fish, save by the Striped Bass Club. Fish caught by any club member, to go on record, must be weighed in the presence of two or more members.

The salt water anglers comprise a large number of fishermen who do not belong to the club. Most of them take an enthusiastic interest in the doings of the guild and many private records of catches, etc., are kept. This diversity of interest, however, is not of a nature to foster general accuracy. A well-known local angler, in commenting on this subject, suggests that an arrangement be made with some downtown business establishment, notably a sporting goods dealer's, where fish could be weighed and recorded by the different fishermen. This idea, barring the possible influence [anglers all, pray forgive us] of the fish market, seems to be one that, for the present at least, might be productive of some good and much satisfaction to those of the clam-casting persuasion.

In an interesting article on "Feathers" written by Mr. Basil Martin for the Field Naturalists' Quarterly, he explains that owing to feathers becoming damaged by wear and tear, they are able to be easily cast and replaced by fresh feathers. This moulting takes place just after the breeding season as a rule, and it is present among all birds from the ostrich to the hummingbird. If the feathers of the wing and tail became damaged and were not renewed, the bird would be unable to fly; but on the other hand, if they were all shed simultaneously the event would be the same, so that the flight feathers are usually shed in pairs, and in this way the bird is still able to seek its food or escape its enemies. Ducks, geese and swans are, however, an exception to this rule, for most of them shed all their quill feathers at the same time, and are thus for a short period unable to fly. But in the case of ducks their mode of living is such that they have other resources for concealment and escape. Their food can be obtained where the aquatic plants serve as an effective shelter. Swallows moult in the spring, which is uncommon. A number of birds have two moults in the year, and there are some which have three. Thus the ptarmigan moults three times in a year. The first moult takes place immediately after the breeding season, as is usual, both male and female becoming grey in color; they then moult again and become white for the winter, and in spring moult for the third time, adopting the plumage of the breeding season again. The second moult in some birds is often very partial and limited to certain parts of the plumage. Feathers do not grow all over the body of a bird, but are found in certain distinct tracts. There are a few exceptions to this; thus the ostrich, toucan and penguin have feathers growing all over their bodies. The eider duck practically builds its entire nest of down from its own breast, which is of considerable commercial value. The peacock, pheasant, turkey, argus pheasant, and a whole host of game birds, flaunt their tails and "show off" their plumage by strutting up and down before the hens. Darwin's theory is that the brightest colored and best formed male birds of any species are chosen in preference to others by the females, and so tend to perpetuate peculiarities, while the weaker and less brilliant goes to the wall. Then, again, the plumage of many birds closely resembles their natural surroundings; examples are found among a number of the game birds and others, such as woodcock, grouse, ptarmigan, snipe, curlew, sandpiper, plover and many more.

Death of Kit Carson's Son.

Samuel Carson, a character well known throughout that part of Los Angeles county, died on the 3rd inst. at his home in a shack in Santa Monica Canyon, three miles west of Santa Monica. His death was caused by blood poisoning resulting from the bite of some insect, supposed to be a black spider.

Carson claimed to be the son of the famous scout and plainsman, Kit Carson, and papers in his possession appear to prove that his claim was good. He was nearly eighty years of age and for many years had lived a secluded life. During the past year he had subsisted on food supplied by charitable women in Santa Monica. His hut has long been considered one of the attractions of the canyon and was visited by hundreds of tourists, to whom the old man would spin yarns for a fee. In this manner he for years obtained sufficient means to clothe and feed himself.

Several days ago he was bitten by an insect and was found two days later in such condition from the effects of the bite that he was almost unable to move. He was given medical attention, but blood poisoning followed, with fatal results.

Before taking up his abode in Santa Monica Canyon, Carson had a picturesque career as a pioneer gold hunter, Indian fighter and adventurer.

The Sheep Situation.

Our occasional correspondent, Joseph E. Wing, of Mechanicsburg, Ohio, was recently reported at the Chicago sheep sheds by the Live Stock World, looking for feeders to eat up several tons of alfalfa he had ready for them.

Mr. Wing considers the outlook for sheep-feeding more promising than in "World's Fair years," when he bought feeders as usual, and his brother questioned his judgment by declining to engage in conversation with him for several days after—but they made money, as before. He will not buy his feeders until he returns from Utah, where he has gone to look after his ranch. He says conditions there are deplorable, so far as the cattle and sheep interests are concerned. Sheep have been going out of the State at a lively rate to prevent starvation, and Utah, in a pastoral sense, was never in worse shape. Long continued drought has practically ruined the range.

Mr. Wing was recently in South Dakota, and thinks the land boom has been a detriment to the State. "Vast areas of fine farming land have been purchased by non-residents, former owners who were building up the country packing up and moving on. A non-resident land speculator never does a country good, and that is why the boom will prove an injury to South Dakota." Mr. Wing thinks fat mutton will be in demand for export. "Sheep and lamb feeding is a good game to stick to provided the feeder raises his own feed. We raise lots of alfalfa and feed it in conjunction with ear corn. Never shell the corn; at least, that is our experience, and it has been a profitable one. The thin lambs are the ones to buy. The feeder gets the growth with them, and will make money by not finishing them too much. Send them to market on the light side, if anything, is my policy. When buying feeding lambs, be sure to pick those with open, loose fleeces. They do better in the feed lot than close fleeced stock."—Country Gentleman.

Cattle May Be Shipped.

SACRAMENTO, Dec. 2.—Dr. Charles H. Blemmer, State Veterinarian, has at last succeeded in getting a modification in the Government regulations, which have heretofore prevented the shipment of cattle from the counties of King, Tulare, Kern, Fresno, Madera, Merced and Monterey unless for immediate slaughter.

Under the new provisions the law will be so modified during the year of 1903 as to permit of the shipping of cattle to any portion of the world, providing they are found on inspection to be free from any infectious or contagious disease.

Prior to 1899 United States restrictions prevented the movement of cattle to any point outside of the State. Dr. Blemmer has during the present Gubernatorial administration succeeded in so modifying the restrictions of the present law that all of the counties of the State, with the exception of the counties of San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, Ventura, Orange, Los Angeles, San Bernardino, Riverside and San Diego, are now exempt, and the present outlook is that within a few years the entire State will become exempt from these restrictions. This will be glad news for cattlemen.

A Northern lumber merchant sent an order into the Chicago market last week for 100 heavy draft mares to be bought for breeding purposes. His agent explained that it promised to be cheaper to breed drafters than to trust to buying them in the open market for many years to come, and as the lumber magnate has plenty of ground suitable for horse raising he thought he would try the experiment.

Mares to Raise Mules

Mr. J. D. Thompson, a successful mule breeder of Indiana, writes as follows to the Breeders' Gazette:

"I see in a recent issue an inquiry as to which breed of draft mares to raise mules from. I have kept jacks for a number of years and have had some of almost all the different breeds of grade draft mares bred to them. I always keep watch of mares bred and the kind of mules they raise. I would say select Percheron mares from which to raise mules. I would not do heavy hauling with mares in foal and expect to raise good colts. Select mares 16 hands or over with plenty of room for carrying a foal. Breed them to the right kind of jack and you will not regret the venture. The selection of a jack to breed so is just as important as having the kind of mares. It is unwise to breed a mare to an inferior jack, about as much so as to expect to raise as good a mule as grows by breeding a small scrubby mare to a fine jack.

Now as to the jack: Have him 15.2 hands, of good breeding on both sire and dam's side. Do not be afraid of getting him too heavy in bone, but have the bone clean and flinty, foot large with heavy horn; let him be wide and deep in chest with all the length of body you can get, fine short soft hair, with nerve and boldness enough to want to run over the barn if it gets in his way. Such a jack will not be so easy to find as some others to breed to, but there will be no chance game in breeding Percheron mares to such a jack. The mules will be the kind the other fellow wants."

That there is sometimes as much money in handling cattle on a small scale as in running them in big bunches, is shown by the experience this year of Henry McManes, the well known feeder and ranchman of Carneiro, Ellsworth county, Kansas. A year ago Mr. McManes bought a bunch of 150 white faced steers from the Swenson ranch near Stamford, Texas. He decided that there was some money to be made out of the bunch and took them home with him. They were at that time in poor condition, having been on barren range all the year and weighed only an average of 774 pounds a head. Mr. McManes bought them at $3.40 per cwt or $26.31 a head around. He roughed them through the winter on his farm, not giving them any more feed than they needed to keep them alive. He put them on grass as soon as it came up and kept them there until a few weeks ago, although they were fed some corn all along for the past two months. Mr. McManes marketed the bunch at $4.90 per cwt. They averaged 1097 pounds a head a gain of 323 pounds since the day he bought them. The bunch cost Mr. McManes $3946.50 and he sold it for $8062.50, or just $4116 more than he paid. This represents nearly all profit, as the item of feed amounted to practically nothing and other expenses were very light.

Alfalfa hay is so composed as to its feeding qualities that no other feed is actually needed with it. It is complete food in itself, providing every element of nutrition in the right proportion. It is the dryest of all hays, however, and has only half as much moisture as clover hay, so that watering sheep must be strictly attended to when fed. The lack of attention in this respect may be the cause of dissatisfaction with this most excellent forage.

"Thou shalt not sell corn." This saying is attributed to David Rankin, a great stock farmer. He raises all the corn and buys all the corn he can. Last year he received $150,000 from the sale of cattle and $111,500 from the sale of hogs. His success is due to a determination never to sell corn any other way except on foot.

California Cows Hold the Record.

Through the official testing of thoroughbred cows in the large dairies of California, now being carried on by the authorized representatives of the University of California agricultural experiment station, the fact has been developed that, for milk, fat and butter yield, California has cows that can challenge the world. The records on which this conclusion has been reached have just been made by Dr. A. R. Ward and E. W. Major, instructors in the branches of animal industry at the State University at Berkeley, assisted by J. E. Roadhouse, a senior student in the department of agriculture.

The greatest showing was made by the Riverside herd owned by Charles D. Pierce, formerly Mayor of Oakland, who now owns a magnificent stock farm of thoroughbred Holstein-Friesians on 600 acres of diked tule land only four miles from Stockton. Of this valuable herd, there are two cows, which, on being subjected to the careful official test, made astounding records both in the quality and in the quantity of their yield.

"Fidessa," the cow that at the recent State Fair, carried off first prize for Holsteins, and then was selected by Professor Carlyle as embodying the highest degree of perfection of type in the ideal cow, regardless of breed, has two records to her credit. In a recent thirty-day test she gave 2392.7 pounds of milk, which yielded 91.5 pounds of butter on a basis of 80 per cent fat. This is the world's four year old Holstein record for thirty days. In a seven-day test she gave 569 pounds of milk, which would have made 25,038 pounds of 80 per cent butter.

Another cow from the same herd, "Romeo Aaggie," has just produced twenty-six pounds of 80 per cent butter in a seven days' test. The last record has never been beaten on the Pacific Coast, and is second only to the world's record, held by a cow at St. Paul, that gave no less than twenty-nine pounds in the same length of time.

Much of this remarkable showing is attributed to the unexcelled conditions of the region on the San Joaquin river where these cows have been bred and raised. The fertility of their pasture, the ease with which it is irrigated from the river, the abundance and richness of the meadow plants, all closely resemble the ideal conditions in Holland, the home of first class cattle. California's climate is balmy than Holland's. Cattle can live in the field the whole year round. And this tremendous advantage is telling the tale.

Plans Merry Death for Cattle.

A method of anaesthetizing cattle before slaughtering them has been invented by Samuel Fox, a machinist at the Gates plant of the Allis-Chalmers Company, 630 Elston avenue, Chicago. The invention includes a large inclosed revolving platform, onto which the cattle are driven, and from which they are distributed, one at a time, into passageways. Each of these leads to a small room, to which the animal is attracted by a brilliant illumination, which temporarily dazes it.

Once in this room the exit is closed, the illumination turned off and the walls automatically approach and hem the animal in so closely that it cannot move. A small aperture just in front of its head is opened, and an operator slips over its head a rubber bag, which fits closely. Nitrous oxide gas is forced into the bag, and in from five to ten minutes the animal is unconscious. It is then strung up by the hind feet, decapitated and cut up.

Mr. Fox suggests that if the butchers do not adopt his plans voluntarily from humane motives, the humane society can force them to do so. He does not intend to patent either the methods or the mechanical inventions that comprise his plan, but offers it to the world.

Immature Breeders.

Choosing breeders from large litters is valuable, but they should also be chosen from a sire and dam that is not less than two years old. The mistake in saving breeders from immature stock is costing this country mints of money in furnishing the farmers with weak constitutions and light-boned hogs, which are susceptible to any disease that comes in their way. A few years ago I wrote to a number of parties who were advertising fine stock hogs, for a young brood sow taken from a litter of not less than eight from a sire and dam taken from the same sized litter that were not less than two years when bred for the litter from which mine was to be taken. Not one of them had any of that kind. I then sent for two registered Tamworth sows, already bred, and have, after the first litter, been breeding them to the best matured Poland-China boar I could find. It seems to be no work at all to have these cross-bred pigs weigh from ten to twenty per cent more than any other hogs of same age, with same care. The oldest of these sows has raised one litter of six, and four of ten each and has not killed or injured a single pig, although she weighs about 500 pounds. Judicious crossing for bone and constitution from fully matured stock, coupled with systematic mixed feeding will in a few years run every cholera germ down a steep place into the sea and leave the hogs on dry land.—J. A. Miller, Argos, Ind., in Agricultural Epitome.

Like all good things, Jackson's Napa Soda has a dozen counterfeits. Watch out.

"SAVE-THE-HORSE"

TRADE MARK.

SPAVIN CURE.

No proof so convincing as the experience of those who have tried it.

908 Fifth av., New York, N. Y.
Gentlemen—We have a very valuable thoroughbred saddle horse that was suddenly afflicted with bog spavin, which developed into a thoroughpin through a hard day's drive of over 50 miles. After three weeks' treatment of "Save-the-Horse," as directed, the horse was cured and is perfectly sound and without a blemish of any kind. The horse was worked while being treated. It certainly is the greatest thing on the market today.
JAMES A. BURDEN,
of Burden Iron Works.

Chatham, Mass., Nov. 21, 1902.

Gentlemen—Three years ago a spavin appeared on one of my horses. I spent considerable time treating it, but it began to grow and finally developed into a bog spavin as big as a hen's egg. Last May I gave the mare a long, hard drive and the following day she refused to rest any weight upon the leg. I about decided her working days were over, when I saw your advertisement and sent for a bottle of "Save-the-Horse." In a few days I saw a marked improvement and in less than three months the mare traveled square as ever and ceased to favor leg in any way, and now, after using about four-fifths of bottle swelling is all gone and the cure is complete and I most sincerely recommend it to my friends.

Holstein Beef Farms in New York.

It is undoubtedly true that the demand for heavy beef for both home and foreign markets is on the increase, and prices are and will be higher than for years past, and for this reason farmers are turning their attention in that direction. There is an increased demand for Holsteins, and prices were never so high as at present. The Holstein is the ideal dairy cow. She is capable of using large quantities of feed and producing milk at a less cost per hundred pounds than any other cow. When on account of age or for any other reason she becomes unprofitable for the dairy, she has the ability to use the same amount of feed to put flesh on her bones and will do it at less cost than other dairy breeds. I do not know of any one who raises steers for beef, but all our cows and bulls eventually go to the beef market, and I believe that a farm remote from milk shipping stations which could be purchased at a low price could be made very profitable in the production of Holstein beef.—E. H. Taylor in Rural New Yorker.

Successful Pork Raising.

After several years experience in feeding the various swine feeds and studying how to make the margin of profit larger, I have adopted the method of keeping a good cow for each brood sow, selling the butter. If I have no other desirable food, I buy middlings to mix with the milk taken sweet from the separator, then with the spring pigs having the run of a good clover pasture, with plenty of pure water and shade to protect them from the heat of the sun, and feed regularly with the middlings and milk and a small allowance of corn, you have a ration which will not only produce cheap pork, but will produce it quickly, which is one of the main points of the business. As the pigs grow older, increase the corn, so that by the last of September they are ready for market. Ten pigs on this ration averaged at six months old, 250 pounds each.—O. Cole in Orange Judd Farmer.

A Good Advertisement.

The Fresno Republican of a recent date has the following interesting item: "Those who have been making a special study of methods of advertising, have agreed that the most effective are statements as to what a given piece of land produces and the returns received. In this connection the case of T. J. Alexander, of Temperance Colony, is notable. Eleven acres of vineyard produced 31¼ tons of raisins; delivered to the California Raisin Growers' Association. As this was a particularly fine crop, a large percentage being layers, it will bring $90 a ton, or $2812.50. This same piece also produced 30 tons of green grapes, which were sold to the wineries for $11.20 a ton, or a total of $345. The grand total earned by this 11 acre tract is, therefore, $3157.50."

To Protect Stock From Flies.

To protect animals against flies use soap water, oil of tar and zenoleum in equal parts. A bar of soap is chipped into one gallon of water, which is then brought to the boiling point, and boiled until the soap is dissolved. To this soap water add equal parts of oil of tar or zenoleum and shake until thoroughly mixed. Just before using the mixture dilute with an equal amount of water. This can be easily be applied by means of a brush, sponge or small spray and is a very effectual and cheap solution.

As a rule the professional sheep feeder cares little about the wool on the lamb's back, for it is going to the mutton market anyway. He does not stop to quibble about the staple, whether it is long or short, weak or strong, but when a fellow comes to talk about lime and sulphur dip he makes a wry face and says he does not propose to shrink up a sheep from three to five pounds by boiling it in lime and sulphur.

"The question was asked in a big Western packing house," says an exchange: "What kind of hogs do you want?" "Black, whenever we can get them!" "Why?" "Cut the carcass of a white hog midway between shoulder and ham, and the two parts will weigh about the same. The meat in front of the cut brings 6 cents, that back of it 10 cents or more. Cut the carcass of a black hog in the same way and over 60 per cent of the weight will be back of the cut!"

STATE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY. OCCIDENT STAKE OF 1905.

TROTTING STAKE FOR FOALS OF 1902.

To be Trotted at the California State Fair of 1905. Entries to Close January 1, 1903, with GEO. W. JACKSON, Secretary, at the office in Sacramento.

ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS ENTRANCE, of which $10 must accompany nomination; $15 to be paid January 1, 1904, $25 to be paid January 1, 1905, and $50 thirty days before the race. The Occident Cup, of the value of $400, to be added by the Society. Mile heats, three in five, to harness. First colt to receive cup and six-tenths; second colt, three-tenths, and third colt one-tenth of the stakes. Five to enter, three to start; otherwise N. T. A. Rules govern. Nominators are not held for full amount of entrance in case colt goes wrong; only forfeit payments made, which relieves you from further responsibility, and declares entry out.

NOTE: This Stake is growing in value each year. In 1898 it was worth $2535; in 1899, $2775; in 1900, $2290; in 1901, $2595; in 1902, $3295. The Stake for 1905 should receive a larger entry and be very valuable. Every breeder should enter in it. A Special Stake will be opened for foals entered originally in this Stake and the Stanford Stake of 1905, that develop a pacing gait, to be contested for in 1905.

Remember, the date of Closing is January 1, 1903.

Pacific Breeders Futurity Stakes $6000 Guaranteed

FOR THE GET OF MARES COVERED IN 1901.

STAKE CLOSED OCTOBER 1, 1901

A FEW SUBSTITUTIONS.

A few of the original nominators of Pacific Breeders Futurity Stakes ($6000 guaranteed) for foals of 1902 have advised us that, because of barrenness of the mare or death of the foal, they wish to dispose of their entries. The opportunity therefore presents itself to secure a $6000 engagement for foals of this season. If you own one or more whose dams you neglected to name when entries closed October 1, 1901, you can now secure representation in this Stake, and thus add materially to the value of your foals. The cost is but $23-$3 for the nomination, $5 for the January payment, 1902. $5 for the July payment, 1902, and $10 for the January payment, 1903.

NOTHING MORE TO PAY BEFORE 1904.

When your foal can start in the Two-Year-Old division. Stakes divided as follows: $3250 for Trotting Foals, $1750 for Pacing Foals, $800 to Nominators of Dams of Winners and $200 for Owners of Stallions, money divided as follows:

$2000 for Three-Year-Old Trotters.
200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Three-Year-Old Trot
1250 for Two-Year-Old Trotters
200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Two-Year-Old Trot
100 to Owner of Stallion, Sire of Winner of Three-Year-Old Trot when mare was bred $1000 for Three-Year-Old Pacers.

200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Three-Year-Old Pace.
750 for Two-Year-Old Pacers.
200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Two-Year-Old Pace
100 to Owner of Stallion, Sire of Winner of Three-Year-Old Pace when mare was bred

The Only Opportunity that will be presented to you to secure so rich an engagement at so nominal a cost.

Remittance of $23, with Color, Sex and Breeding of the Foal, on or before January 2d next, is all that is required to add thousands of dollars to the earning capacity of your foal of this season. The few substitutions to be disposed of will be awarded in the order in which remittances are received. Prompt attention will secure for you this rich engagement.

BEING THE CLOSING OUT SALE OF CHARLES FAIR'S (deceased) HORSES.

Consisting of sons and daughters of Imp. Brutus, Magnet, Sam Lucas, Scottish Chieftain, Yo El Rey, etc., out of famous producing mares. The latter we will sell and consists of dams of such stake horses, as Crescendo, Kid Hampton, Phyz, Potente, The Major, Ella Smith. These mares have all been stunted to the grandest bred son of the immortal St. Simon on the Pacific Coast Imp. Avonius. This horse is only a five-year-old and will be sold at the conclusion of the sale of broodmares.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1902

This sale will afford horse breeders an opportunity to get some of the handsomest mares as well as the best bred at their own price and owners of stock farms large or small as well as farmers should attend it as it is the chance of a lifetime. Catalogues will be ready for distribution next Thursday.

There will also be sold by order of Messrs. Burns & Waterhouse, W. J. Taylor of Vancouver, Pau Lane and other owners a consignment of youngsters and horses in training that are well known to all age goers. This sale will take place December 11th. Catalogues will be issued for this combination sale immediately.

GIBBS' CELEBRATED PROCESS OF RAPID TAXIDERMY

In Practical Use Over Twenty-Five Years.

Used Everywhere in America. Hundreds of Testimonials. Try and Be Convinced.
Start a Class. Money in It. Be Your Own Taxidermist.

Naturalists, Collectors, Gunners, Anglers, Outers, Boys, Girls, and all others interested in nature and anxious to preserve the specimens taken in wood and field, have all felt the need of a simple method of preservation, which is free from intricacies and inexpensive.

There is a method of rapid taxidermy now in extensive use, which meets the requirements of all amateurs who wish a practical and inexpensive method of preserving the trophies of the outing and collecting trip. This is not the old system of so-called stuffing, so expensive, laborious and disappointing, but is a rapid system, which anyone can learn at once and which is guaranteed to give satisfaction.

By this process you may preserve the beautiful plumage of the grouse and woodcock, or the pike's or buck's head, or the showy feathers of the tanager. Boys, girls and all others can do good work and may make money, as mounted heads and birds find a ready sale, and besides you may teach your friends and decorate the school-room, office and dining-room with native birds and other attractions. If you are in doubt, then get your friends to go in with you and start a class, for when several work together there is an advantage and the expense is next to nothing.

On the receipt of $1, cash or stamps, I will send full printed instructions for mounting birds, heads, mammals, etc., and all materials for mounting and preserving specimens—including prepared compound, together with full directions for dressing skins with the hair on for rugs and robes, so that you will not be to the expense of one cent.

Remember, I Guarantee Satisfaction or Money Refunded.

Alameda Track.

Several years ago the marsh land which extended long the south line of the Alameda estuary was filled in by pumping the mud from the channel, which work was done by the contractors acting for the government. The corporation owning the marsh land by securing the deposit of the silt on the property raised it above the water line and a race track was laid out and built thereon by the Alameda Driving Club. During the rainy seasons, however, the western or lower end of the oval is under water part of the time and the track is not of much use for training purposes. We understand the Government dredgers are soon to be put at work again deepening the estuary channel and that the corporation owning the land will have the silt again deposited on the land where the race track is situated. It is thought that a deposit of a foot or so will raise the track high enough to place it entirely above the water level at all times, and greatly improve it. While the pumping is being done, however, there will be no place for horses to be worked at Alameda and the majority of those who stable there will seek other quarters.

Barney Simpson, who has a few horses there now is thinking of going to Concord. He has the stallion Arner, a full brother to Diablo 2:09½ and Don Derby 2:06. Arner is a magnificent looking stallion, a beautiful brown in color, up headed and with grand bone and muscular development. He has one of the best backs and couplings ever seen on a horse. Barney worked him a mile in 2:17 last fall after getting him from Oakwood Park, and will give him a record this year. He should be Bertha's third 2:10 performer, as he has speed enough and is game. Arner has never been raced.

Clay S. 2:13½, the Grover Clay stallion owned by William Hendrickson is also at the Alameda track and is being jogged two or three times a week by his owner. Mr. Hendrickson has not yet received any acceptance to his challenge to trot Clay S. in March next against any stallion or stallions now in the State, but says he is ready at all times to make a match.

Elias Williams has Mr. P. W. Bellingall's recent purchase, Secretary by Director at his barn and no stallion in California is looking better. Mr. Bellingall has already booked several choice mares to Secretary. The performances of Frank 2:10½ by this horse over east this year attracted a great deal of attention. It is said that he could beat 2:10 on half mile tracks and Barney Demarest expects to mark him down in the exclusive list next season.

At the stables formerly occupied by J. M. Nelson, all the stalls are full. James Berryman has about a dozen head belonging to different parties, among them a big roan gelding by Diablo that is owned by Dr. Smith, of Oakland. This fellow is a pacer and a fast one, too, although entirely green so far as racing is concerned.

Jas. Olsen has the pacer Sonoma by Gossiper here also. Sonoma took a standard record last August in a race at Colusa and is a big, fine looking gelding that has the appearance of one that will race all day and go some at night.

Pat Foley, at Oakland, has fourteen head headed by the McKinney stallion Mondesol. Mr. Foley's mare, Lady Grannard 2:23, that returned from the East looking rather thin, is now getting in good shape and should be a factor in the races next year, as she has as good a set of legs as any trotter in the country.

League of Amateur Driving Clubs.

The annual meeting of the League of Amateur Driving Clubs was held in New York on Saturday, Nov. 29th. The clubs represented were the Cleveland, Boston, Pittsburg, Memphis, Chicago and New York. H. K. Dovereux of Cleveland was elected president for the ensuing year; Harry Darlington, Pittsburg, vice-president, and T. L. Quimby, Boston, secretary-treasurer. A resolution was adopted asking all clubs in membership with the League to request their individual members to refrain from driving in amateur races at professional meetings where betting was permitted on these amateur events. Another resolution was also passed, instructing the secretary to communicate with the secretaries of the mile tracks, asking them to prohibit betting on amateur events. It was also decided to publish a Year Book.

Ketchum Ought to Know.

Geo. H. Ketchum, the owner of Cresceus, the world's champion trotter, in a letter to Benjamin & Co., manufacturers of the Benjamin Racing Wagon advertised in another column, says as follows:

Messrs. Benjamin & Co.,
Gentlemen: I received a light racing wagon manufactured by you for Mr. Walter Winans of London, in time for the opening matinee of our club last Saturday, and used same at that event. The wagon was pronounced by all who saw it as perfect in every way, and after giving it a severe trial over our half mile track, I believe it is the best wagon that I ever saw.
Yours respectfully,
GEO. H. KETCHUM.

Los Angeles Horse News.

The trotting horse trainers and owners at the Los Angeles track were pretty hot in the collar last week when they received notice to vacate the stalls January 1st, as all the room would be required for the runners which would begin arriving for the race meeting that will open about the first of February. There was much indignation expressed and some were in favor of staying and standing a suit for ejectment. The excitement was only temporary however as a few days after Mr. Brooks recalled the notice and stated that the trotters could remain and that he would build a lot of new stalls west of the grand stand and club house and back of the row of large pepper trees for their accommodation.

Walter Maben has over thirty horses in training and will have one of the best strings in California by the time the season of 1903 is open. He is putting up fourteen box stalls on his property near the track.

Will Durfee is also very busy, having about twenty-five head. His stallion Petigru 2:10½ will do a good business in the stud next spring and quite a number of mares have already been booked to him. Many of them are by McKinney 2:11½ and the cross is expected to be a most successful one.

Geo. T. Beckers has sold his five year old Zombro gelding Edmond S. to William Morgan of Pasadena, Cal. for $500. Mr. Morgan owns Grace McK 2:21½ and Una K both very fast mares by McKinney. Edmond S. is one of the finest lookers in Southern California. Had he not been sold to Mr. Morgan he would have been raced next season by P. W. Hodges.

Mr. Hodges will be on the circuit with a good string next season and will train them at Santa Ana.

A Difference in Views.

Some people laugh at Dan R. and say he is the cheapest looking thing they ever saw. In the stall Dan does look cheap, but in harness and at full speed Dan looks like the gamecock that he is. To anyone who knows a horse, a glance at Dan will tell his whole breeding—a little pacing and plenty of thoroughbred. In fact, Dan looks not unlike Little Brown Jug in many respects, except that he has a longer middle piece and not as much room for wearing breeching. But Jug had too much for his size and his heavy cat-hams was one of the oddities of the little fellow's make up. I have seen so many pacers in Tennessee built like Dan that I have long ceased to think them homely. In fact, I have got so accustomed to looking for speed and grit that I have learned to think it pretty wherever I see it. Dan is as clean cut and bony as Julius Caesar. Caesar had a fine, long, aquiline nose that ran down his face like a telescope, and a bony head and a sallow, thoughtful complexion. Byron had the same kind of a nose and head and every great genius that ever lived started with the right kind of a nose. I have learned to look out for it and think it handsome, like the lean hound for a long race; you'll always find the same true in man. Dan R. is built on these lines, and going at a 2:04 gait Dan R., to me, is a beauty. He looks like an old Virginia red Foxhound after a deer. He looks like a grand steel razor, a sunburnt young farmer with a cradle blade in the old fashioned wheat days. He looks like rock candy in the bottom of a decanter of rye! Sometimes, to help the cause along, I judge horses at horse shows. It is my duty, then, to tie ribbons on pretty things with their tails up—often temporarily and much to their disgust—and their heads star hunting. But Dan R. is as much more beautiful than that kind of cattle as a gaffed gamecock to a showy dunghill. I tell you, Dan R. is positively beautiful.—Trotwood in Horse Review.

Not Borne Out.

The common belief that the earning capacity of the race horse is far greater than that of the trotter is not borne out by the turf statistics of 1902. Hudson & Gatecomb's stable of horses won $87,115 in the Grand Circuit between July 15th and November 1st. This is more than was won by such great stables as those of August Belmont, W. C. Whitney, James R. Keene or any others on the running turf, except John A. Drake's and F. C. McLewee's. Mr. Drake heads the list of winning owners with about $90,000 to his credit, of which $67,540 was won on Eastern tracks after the opening of the August meeting at Saratoga. Hudson & Gatecomb won nearly fifty races in the course of the campaign. The largest stake won by them was $10,000, while Mr. Drake's colt Savable earned $45,000 in a lump by winning the Futurity. A follower of the runners is authority for the statement that while there are more $20,000 stakes on the running turf, the number of stakes and purses worth $5000 or more is larger on the trotting turf.

SUSANVILLE, Cal., Nov. 30, 1902.

BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN—A gentleman having had a number of good horses die on his ranch within the last five or six years with apparently the same disease, is at a loss to know what the disease really is.

He enumerated to me to-day the symptoms as near as he could, but I cannot make out the disease; therefore I appeal to you.

The horse mopes around and loses spirit—when first taken sick they urinate frequently. Urine sometimes bloody, but as a rule it is normal as regards its color. The horse loses flesh continually, although the appetite is exceedingly good up until nearly the time of death. Death never takes place earlier than one month after illness is noticed, but most of them linger for nearly a year—one horse lingered for more than a year. Sometimes the horse will sweat terribly while standing in the stable, although he has not been worked.

Horses on adjoining ranches are never affected with the disease. The horse is very short of breath; heart action somewhat increased and of great strength; temperature was not taken. Upon post mortem examination the heart was found greatly enlarged (as large as a water bucket). The peritoneum, parietal and visceral is covered with white patches about the size of a thumbnail, with inflamed areas. The abdominal cavity is full of fluid—possibly serum. The gentleman says it looks like urine with a white stringy substance in it. After death they do not bloat much. He thinks the horses die standing and fall over dead without a struggle. They sometimes drink an abnormal amount of water.

If you can tell me what, in your opinion, is the cause of this man's horses dying—all of apparently the same disease—while the adjoining ranches seem to be immune, you will greatly oblige

Yours very respectfully,

F. W. SHANKS.

I have received Dr. Shank's letter and consider that there must be some herb that acts on the kidneys growing in the pasture that those horses run on, or that the owner is in the habit of giving them some medicine that irritates the kidneys. Either of those causes resulting in a chronic irritation, and bringing on diabetes. Diabetes is a very wasting disease, and as a result of it complications of other organs, the heart especially, may take place.

From the combined diseases almost anything may result. The horse being run down by diabetes may contract influenza or any disease that is prevalent. In influenza of the horse the other complication described may take place, fluid in abdominal cavity, petechial spots, fluid in the thoracic cavity, lymph clots, etc.

I would advise that he or you consult with Dr. Blemmer of Sacramento the State Veterinary Surgeon, and he may officially visit the ranch as he travels all over the State. It is his business to investigate disease and he may be able to throw more light on the subject than I can.

Yours respectfully,

WM. F. EGAN.

A Fable.

A thoroughbred Arab horse and a mule were lodged together for a night in the same stable. The mule could do nothing but complain of everything. "How stupid these stablemen are!" he exclaimed. "What a wretched building this is, and what rotten straw to lie upon! And the fodder, too—why, it is not fit for asses." Thus he went on finding fault with one thing and then another, while his companion, the thoroughbred steed, uttered not a murmur or complaint, but seemed quite content with what had fallen to his lot.

Moral.—Mark ye, my friends, among mankind as well as animals, true gentility is ever content and noble. Be assured that we may always recognize the traits of an ill-bred person if such a one is constantly grumbling and discontented with his lot.—H. Berkeley Score in Chatterbox.

From President American Trotting Association.

Warren Park Farm, home of the sensational performer and sire, Axtell (3) 2:12.

Spohn Medical Co., TERRE HAUTE, IND., Oct. 24, 1901.
Gentlemen:—For seven years I have used your specific for contagious diseases, to cure Distemper, also as a preventive, both with my horses at the track and at the farm, with colts and mares. I never found anything that worked so well as Spohn's Distemper and Cough Cure, in fact it helped me out of the most serious trouble. No stock farm or owner can afford to be without it.
Very truly,
W. P. JAMES.

Like all good things, Jackson's Napa Soda has a dozen counterfeits.

Notes and News.

Enter in the Occident Stake.

331 entries in Breeders Futurity No. 3.

Peter Stirling (3) 2:11½ will be raced next year.

Cresceus 2:02½ will take his Christmas dinner in New Orleans, if report is correct.

Secure a space in our New Year and Stallion Edition that will be out January 10th.

There are fifty per cent more horses in training in California than there were last year at this time.

Don't keep the colts and young horses standing on the hard, dry floors if you want them to have good feet.

W. G. Durfee will hold a dispersal sale at Los Angeles, December 18th. Some royally bred ones will be sold.

Anaconda must be considered a pretty fair horse yet or he would not have brought $7200 at the Old Glory sale.

Don't fail to make an entry in the Occident Stake of 1905. Entries close January 1st. Full particulars in advertisement.

Mr. C. K. G. Billings, owner of the beautiful track at Memphis, is quoted as saying that heat racing there will not be abandoned.

Daughters of Wilson's Blue Bull have produced twenty-seven with records of 2:15 or better, and twenty-five of them are pacers.

The fastest record ever gained by a trotting horse of the Wilkes tribe is the 2:05½ which John A. McKerron, son of Nutwood Wilkes, earned this year.

Precocious youngsters seem to be plenty this season. A yearling sired by Major Greer 2:14 paced an eighth at Pueblo, Cal., not long since in 17½ seconds, a 2:22 clip.

Stemwinder, that produced the great trotter Directum 2:05½ was bred this year to Bonnie Direct 2:05½ and the produce has been entered in the Breeders Futurity. It should take a record to beat it.

The way to let the public know that your stallion will stand for public service in 1903 is to advertise him in the New Year and Stallion edition of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, which will be issued January 10th.

The total number of trotters that have made records of 2:10 or better is 166, including Stamboul 2:07½ and Guy 2:09½, that are credited with these records by the National Trotting Association, but not by the Register Association.

Ten mares were mated with Direct Hal 2:04½ in Tennessee the season he was three years old. The result is some very promising foals, perhaps the best of which is out of Ella Brown 2:11½, the dam of Leon Vaughn 2:09½.

This is the time of year young colts should be taken up and given plenty of feed and shelter. There will be some rich stakes offered in 1903 and the youngsters should be given a chance to improve through the winter months.

Now that little toleration of pool-selling can be expected in Massachusetts under the administration of Governor-elect Bates, it is probable that the New England Breeders' Association will seek a new trotting ground in New Hampshire. Granite State Park is the most available place in sight.

Joe Goss has taken his mare Carrie M. by Diablo to the Pleasanton track. She is one of the best gaited trotters in California and has trotted trials in 2:20, but got out of condition last year just as the circuit opened. Few handsomer mares have ever been seen on any of our California tracks.

Horse racing began in Virginia, Maryland, and the New York colony of Manhattan in the seventeenth century. Governor Slaughter had races on Long Island in the reign of William III. and horse racing was popular in the middle of the seventeenth century in Virginia and especially in Maryland.

Three young stallions, all sixteen hands or over, by Prince Airlie 2:04½, son of Guy Wilkes and Chantilly by Nutwood, are offered for sale. They were foaled in 1898, are pure gaited and show speed. Here is an opportunity to buy a young stallion that will pay for himself next year. See advertisement.

The recent public sales show most decidedly that the demand at present is for mature animals whose speed has been developed. Youngsters that do not show phenomenal speed and broodmares that have no records and have not produced performers with fast records sell slowly and at comparatively low prices.

Cleburne Farm, in Tennessee, has been negotiating for Direct 2:05½ to stand at the home of Brown Hal next year, and it was thought the arrangement would be made. But, unfortunately, it fell through, Mr. Butler wanting $6000 cash for the horse's services, which the other party did not feel justified in giving

If there is a single thing that has been clearly demonstrated by the past season of unprecedented turf achievements it is the fact that the further breeders advance with their breeding operations in the lines of purely trotting-bred families the more rapidly and the more certainly they multiply speed.

John Splan is a believer in the new dash system of racing and the best two in three. He says the public has outgrown the best three in five and now demands quick decisions. He thinks the trotting associations have not kept abreast with these hustling times, and that the public should be catered to and given what it wants.

Peter C. Kellogg, who is one of the best posted breeders in America, and a successful one as well, purchased two mares at the Old Glory sale and their breeding is as follows: My Trinket by Stamboul 2:07½ out of Trinket by Princess, and Nancy Stam 2:30 by Stamboul out of Nancy Lee, the dam of Nancy Hanks 2:04 by Dictator.

One of the comical features of the New York sale was a buyer who brought his funds tucked under his foot in his shoe. When he removed the foot covering to pay for his first purchase, the bills were so badly mutilated that he had to make a journey to the United States Sub-Treasury and get new currency for his two tattered 500-dollar notes.

The light harness record for the State of Georgia is 2:06, made by the pacer William Mc in a race during the late meeting at Savannah. William Mc is a nine year old black gelding by Aleymont, a son of Alecyone, and his dam was by DeJarnelle, a son of Indianapolis 2:21 by Tattler 2:26. The dam of Aleymont, sire of William Mc, was Katie Jackson 2:25½ by Almont.

Ben Kenney has formed an alliance with Major Griffin and will campaign a stable next year. He is now at Lexington, Kentucky, with Queen Selma 2:10½, the two stallions Alcyo 2:10 by Alecyone and Pistol by Lancelot that B. S. Krehe had in California last year, and the trotter Black Bart 2:17½ that the Major purchased last winter from Thos. Charlton of Ukiah, this State.

Ed. Geers hopes to race Direct Hal 2:04½ again next season, else he never would have allowed the great pacer to go into winter quarters eligible to the 2:05 class. Good judges think him capable of entering the select two-minute list in 1903, if all goes well. His services are in so great demand at Village Farm that the pacer may be used a short season for stock purposes.

The plan of the new Protective Trotting Association, organized in Indianapolis a week ago, is to combine as many interior race and fair associations as possible, under one management, with one set of officers, each company or fair association to be assessed $10 to pay expenses of central management and all complications or grievances or suspensions or expulsions to be acted on by an executive committee immediately.

A reader of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN who read Jacob Brollier's communication in regard to stakes for two and three year olds being opened by the district fair associations, writes us endorsing the same and says if a few associations will act on the suggestion, he is certain the number of colts put in training will be larger. The gentleman states that if stakes are offered for two year olds, he will have two or three entries himself and he is not an extensive breeder.

Oakwood Park Stock Farm will stop the training of their horses on the first of the new year and will not maintain a training stable at the farm thereafter. Breeding will continue as heretofore, however, and as the farm has some of the best stallions and mares in the United States there are certain to come from its paddocks many fast ones in the future as there have in the past. An auction sale of about fifty head from Oakwood Stock Farm will be held in this city in January.

James Sullivan, the well known and popular trainer, who has been out of the sulky for a year, has located at Hanford, Kings county, where he has leased the District Agricultural Society's half mile track and will train a string of horses. One of the attractive features of the place is the excellent pastures of green feed to be found there and the climate cannot be surpassed. Mr. Sullivan already has a few horses at work and will have quite a string by February. There are few better trainers anywhere than "Jimmy" Sullivan.

During the past season E. E. Smathers started his horses in twenty-one cup or amateur wagon races, of which he won sixteen. In addition he drove Lord Derby to the world's wagon record in a contest and also put to his credit the fastest two heats on record, and also the fastest three heat and four heat wagon race to the credit of an amateur. He also drove Ida Highwood to her record of 2:09½, which is the fastest record for a mare to a wagon contest. The cups that Mr. Smathers won in the various contests aggregated in value many thousands of dollars.

Ed Mills and C. W. Sawyer, of Boston, arrived in Pleasanton last week with the stallions Searchlight 2:03½ and Lecco 2:09½. The first named is well known to Californians and has some splendid colts and fillies in this State whose owners will want to breed to the great pacer again. Searchlight will probably remain in the stud in California for the next four or five years. Lecco 2:09½ is a trotting stallion, a handsome black, and was foaled in 1894. He made his record when a five year old in 1899. Lecco was bred by Henry C. Jewett, of Jewettsville, New York, and is by Bonnie Boy 6401, a son of Patchen Wilkes, sire of Joe Patchen 2:01½. Lecco's dam is Lucy Homer by Homer 1235, son of Mambrino Patchen, and his grandam is Dinnie 2:25 by Rochester 616, son of Aberdeen.

Stallions that show great natural speed when young are the ones most likely to get colt trotters and stake winners. Oakland Baron 2:09½, sire of Gail Hamilton (3) 2:11½, the fastest three year old trotter of 1902 by the records, took a record of 2:14½ as a two year old. Jay Hawker, sire of Nella Jay (3) 2:14½, winner this year of the rich Kentucky Futurity for three year olds, made a three year old record of 2:14½, and in a class race against old seasoned campaigners at that. Katherine A. (2) 2:14, the fastest two year old trotter of the Kentucky Futurity for two year olds, was got by Wiggins, two year old record 2:19½.

Supervisor Tom Snider of Yolo county has a mare by Direct out of a half sister to Creole 2:15 that he intends sending to Monroe Salisbury at Pleasanton before long. The mare is eight years old and a trotter and although never trained can show racing speed. Mr. Snider has a six year old mare by Sable Wilkes out of a great brood mare by Harold second dam a great broodmare by Belmont 64, and third dam a great broodmare by Pilot Jr. This mare was purchased by Mr. Snider when a two year old at the dispersal sale of the San Mateo Stock Farm, and while she has not been trained she can show wonderful speed on the road and is a very handsome mare.

Anzella 2:06½ started in twelve races this year and won first money in eight of them, second money in three and third money in one. She trotted more heats better than 2:10 than any other horse on the Grand Circuit. The total amount of her winnings was $21,600. In Anzella 2:06½ and Dolly Dillon 2:07, Santa Rosa Stock Farm has the fastest pair of trotting mares in the world, as their average is 2:06½. This farm also owns Lou Dillon, trial 2:08½, which Millard Sanders states is the fastest green mare in the world and thinks that she will do as much, if not more, next year, than Anzella and Dolly Dillon. Last year Dolly Dillon trotted the three fastest consecutive heats in a purse race—2:08½, 2:07 and 2:08. Anzella duplicated the performance this year by her three heats at Baltimore in 2:08, 2:07½ and 2:08.

W. G. Durfee, who was the most successful trainer on the California Circuit this year, will hold a dispersal sale of standard bred horses at Los Angeles on the 18th inst., which falls on Thursday of next week. There are colts, fillies and aged horses by some of the best sires in California and they are sold for the reason that Mr. Durfee will devote his time in the future to his stallions and training horses for the public. There are some very choice animals in the consignment, among them the phenomenally fast horse Electro Mac, that trotted a trial mile in 2:31, with the last quarter in 35 seconds, when 22 months old. He is by McKinney out of a mare by Electricity, son of Electioneer and Midnight, the dam of Jay Eye See 2:06½. The second dam of this colt is the dam of two in the standard list and the third dam produced two that held world's record.

Three or four youngsters from Martin Carter's Nutwood Stock Farm are being worked at the Pleasanton track by William Cecil. One day last week Miss Georgie 2:25 by McKinney out of Georgie B. 2:12½ by Nutwood Wilkes paced a quarter in 31½ seconds and repeated in the same time. L. E. C., a full brother to Irvington Boy 2:18½, trotted a quarter in 33½ seconds very handily. This horse is good gaited and level headed and is a great prospect. He took a record of 2:29½ last August as a precautionary measure. Another trotter that is being worked by Cecil is a full brother to Bob Ingersol 2:14½. This fellow worked a quarter recently in less than thirty-four seconds. The trotter Bob Ingersol that went wrong last year is now in fine shape and will reduce his record as certain as no accident happens him. Cecil thinks he is nearly as fast as John A. McKerron.

"Prosperity has greatly increased the demand for good horses, and the supply is not equal to it," says Harper's Weekly. "We are horse poor—not as some people are land poor, because they have too much land—but horse poor, because they haven't enough horses. For years after the panic of 1893 thousands of people who wanted horses could not afford them. But with the return of prosperity the demand for good horses began to grow again, and breeders began to breed them again. But it takes at least five years to raise a horse that is ready for the market, and the breeders got behind. The demand has outrun the supply and the price of good horses has increased very rapidly. There are about 13,500,000 horses in our land, of an estimated value of $604,000,000. The improvement of that stock is a very important matter, especially in these days, when Europe is horse poor, too, and ready to take from us any surplus supply of good horses that we may come to have."

Mr. Frank H. Burke, who bred Wanda 2:14½ and her son The Roman 2:09½, made a resolve some years ago that he would not own a pair of hoppers. He has a two year old colt called Moonlight that is by Searchlight 2:03½ out of Wanda that is a big growthy fellow and Mr. Burke wants to make a trotter of him. Moonlight worked a quarter in forty seconds last spring and then concluded that he would mix things a little. In the fall he would not trot a little bit and last month Mr. Burke had his front shoes taken off in the hopes that he would pace. Moonlight did not tackle kindly to the sidewheel gait, however, and then Mr. Burke, keeping his vow in mind, sent to a neighbor and borrowed a pair of the straps that make a horse take to the lateral gait whether he wants to or no. Moonlight is a wise colt and probably overheard some of the remarks made in regard to the way his legs were to be tied up, so when he was taken out for exercise the day the hoppers were sent for, he took to trotting and has been sticking to that gait ever since and trotting fast. A hint is as good as a kick to a well bred knowing colt.

PACIFIC BREEDERS FUTURITY No. 3.

A Total of 331 Entries Received for the $6000 Stake.

Entries for the third renewal of the Pacific Breeders Futurity, for which $6000 is guaranteed by the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association, are all in, and Secretary F. W. Kelley furnishes the following complete list of those making nominations, together with the names and pedigrees of the mares nominated and the stallions to which they were bred this year. The stake has received 331 nominations, made by 213 nominators.

Eighty-two stallions are represented in the list of those bred to. As usual, the great McKinney 2:11½ heads the list. Of the mares bred to him this year 32 have been nominated in this stake. McKinney's great son Zombro comes next with 29; Nutwood Wilkes is third with 15, Diablo fourth with 13, Sidney Dillon has 12 representatives, Stam B., Azmoor and On Stanley 11 each, Bonnie Direct 10 and Zolock 9. Ray Direct, Nushagak, Charles Derby and Nearest have 6 each; Almonada, Guy McKinney, Monterey, Washington McKinney, Petigru and Neerut have 5; Barondale, Kewanna, Bayswater Wilkes, Welcome, T. C., Richmond Chief, Owyhee, Kinney Mac, William Harold, Excel and Conifer 4 each; Badger, Athabio, Iran Alto, Falrose, Monochrome, Athadon, Del Oro and Monbells 3 each, and Sutter, Oro Guy, Kinney Lou, Diawood, Siamoor, Waldstein, Le Roi, L. W. Russell, Dictatus Medium, Strathway, Boodle and Del Norte 2 each. The following are represented by one mare each: Wayland W., Costello, Expect, Meridian, Winwood, Cresceus, Jules Verne, Tom Smith, Robin, Comet Wilkes, Director H., Nutford, San Luisito, Rex Gifford, Silver Coin, Jim Rea, Headlight, San Diego, Athaneer, Royal Derby, Gyr Falcon, Warspite, Derby Heir, Eugeneer, Klondyke, Athamag, Coronado, Lynwood W., Daedalion, Teheran, James Monroe and Bob M.

Among the noted mares nominated in the stake are Whisper, the dam of Zombro 2:11; Ingar, the dam of John A. McKerron 2:05½; Lida W., the dam of Nutwood Wilkes 2:16½; Stemwinder, the dam of Directum 2:05½; Leonore, the dam of Doc Book 2:10 and four others; Edith, the dam of Idolita 2:09½; Wanda, the dam of The Roman 2:09½; Effie Logan, dam of Sir Albert S. 2:03½; Cricket, dam of William Harold 2:13½ and three others; Bertha, dam of Diablo 2:09½; Don Derby 2:06½ and others; Lilly Stanley, dam of Rokeby 2:13½ and others; Elsie, dam of six in 2:30; Belle Medium, dam of Stam B. 2:11½; Athalia, dam of Athanio 2:10 and others.

The complete list of the mares nominated is here given and will repay careful perusal:

Death of Antrim, sire of Anzella 2:06 3-4.

Thos. Ronan, of Dayton, Washington, who recently brought to Pleasanton a carload of young trotters of his own breeding, received the bad news last week that his favorite stallion Antrim 5918, sire of the great mare Anzella 2:06 $\frac{3}{4}$, died week before last on the farm near Dayton. Few particulars of the cause of death was given except that it was colic or some other bowel trouble.

Antrim was foaled in 1886 on the farm of Gen. Withers near Lexington, Kentucky, and at the dispersal sale made by the General's widow three years after was among those offered for sale. Mr. Ronan went on from Washington to buy a stallion or two, and had picked out another horse from the catalogue, but when he saw Antrim, concluded he would have him if he had to pay his limit for him, which was $1500. When the colt was led into the auction ring a bid of $400 started him, and there were four or five bidders who made things lively for a few minutes by $50 bids until $1000 was reached. All dropped out at this point, however, except two, and Mr. Ronan was one of the two. The other bidder stopped at $1200 and Mr. Ronan's bid of $1250 got the colt. The same day Mr. Ronan bought the bay colt Alexis by William L., and when word was received the next day that Axtell, another son of William L., had trotted to a three year old record of 2:12 at Terre Haute, Mr. Ronan was complimented on all sides for the purchase of Alexis; but in spite of all this he believed he had a better horse in Antrim.

Antrim had little opportunity in the stud in far away Washington, but Mr. Ronan had some well bred mares and as the colts came on he sold them for roadsters at a fair profit and states that no matter what mares they were from they all had knee action and could trot fast. In 1895, when the eldest of Antrim's foals were four years old, one of them, Antrima, trotted to a record of 2:22, which mark she afterwards reduced to 2:15 $\frac{1}{2}$. Last year Antrim's daughter Anzella by her California campaign attracted much attention from horsemen, and this year she swept through the Grand Circuit, placed \$21,600 to her credit, and was considered the greatest trotting mare of the year. While Antrim is the sire of but a half dozen or so with standard records, his list will be considerably increased during the next few years as quite a number of his get are to be trained and many of them are very promising.

Antrim was a bay stallion with magnificent head and neck and splendid carriage. His sire was Aberdeen, and his dam Hyanna by Hilar 831, son of Alcalde 103, he by Mambrino Chief 11. The second dam of Antrim was Lucy Almont by Almont 33, and his grandam a pacing mare of untraced pedigree.

The death of Antrim is a severe loss to Mr. Ronan, as the get of his horse were just beginning to be appreciated and he would have made a very heavy season next year and had many of the very best mares in Oregon and Washington sent to him.

The Handy Pocket Diary for 1903,

That the Spohn Medical Co., manufacturers of Spohn's Liquid Distemper Cure, are sending out, is a most desirable book for horsemen to have to make records of their entries, engagements, etc., under the proper dates, thus avoiding confusion. It also contains maps, giving railroad cities and a lot of other matter and valuable information to make routes and circuits. The first edition has been exhausted, and all trainers and drivers, all owners and superintendents of stock farms, who will at once send their names and postoffice addresses and the address for the next year if possible, will receive by mail the Handy Pocket Diary FREE. Write plainly your address to Spohn Medical Co., chemists and bacteriologists, Goshen, Indiana.

On a hot day drink Jackson's Napa Soda lemonade and be refreshed.

Chimes a Great Sire.

No great horse but had a great mother is a remark frequently heard, and there is a world of truth in the aphorism.

Chimes by Electioneer, was out of Beautiful Bells 2:29 $\frac{1}{2}$, and she was the dam of ten standard performers, seven of her sons have sired 2:30 speed, and her daughters produced four more. She was in turn by The Moor and out of Minnehaha, which was the dam of eight 2:30 trotters; her daughters produced seventeen standard performers and six of her sons have sired 2:30 speed. On the other hand, Electioneer was out of Green Mountain Maid, the dam of nine 2:30 trotters; her daughters produced nine more and four of her sons sired over 200 standard performers.

This is a combination of great mothers in the first and second remove unparalleled in the breeding of any other horse, and the result proves the truth of the axiom quoted.

Chimes, the world's greatest sire of extreme speed, as he has been justly styled, is now the sire of seventy-three in 2:30, including The Abbot 2:03 $\frac{1}{2}$, The Monk 2:05 $\frac{1}{2}$, Shadow Chimes 2:05, Fantasy 2:06, Dandy Chimes 2:07 $\frac{1}{2}$, Council Chimes 2:07 $\frac{1}{2}$, Merry Chimes 2:08 $\frac{1}{2}$, Ed. Easton 2:09 $\frac{1}{2}$, The Queen 2:10 $\frac{1}{2}$, King Chimes 2:10 $\frac{1}{2}$, E. S. E. 2:11 $\frac{1}{2}$, King Chimes (p) 2:11 $\frac{1}{2}$, True Chimes 2:12 $\frac{1}{2}$, Tudor Chimes 2:13, Oxford Chimes 2:13 $\frac{1}{2}$, Milan Chimes 2:13 $\frac{1}{2}$.

This showing is even greater than appears on the face of it. It will be seen that Chimes is the sire of the three fastest trotters ever sired by any horse living or dead—The Abbot 2:03 $\frac{1}{2}$, The Monk 2:05 $\frac{1}{2}$ and Fantasy 2:06—an average of 2:05. His eight 2:10 performers average just 2:06 2-3, a showing unequaled by any other stallion of any age.

That the blood will breed on is already in evidence by his twelve sons that are sires of standard speed and by his daughters, who have produced the queen of pacing mares, Lady of the Manor 2:04 $\frac{1}{2}$, Dare Devil 2:09 (sold last year for \$50,000), and about one dozen others with standard records.

Village Farm has permitted some of its best stallions to be sold to head other studs, but it will be noticed the son of Beautiful Bells still remains a monument to the sagacity of its successful and enterprising management and an augury of still better things to come, for with possibly another ten years of usefulness in the stud crossed on mares with which he has "nicked" so successfully the final roll of honor for this great stallion should rank with the greatest of trotting progenitors.

Dan Patch Sold for $60,000.

A dispatch from Minneapolis dated December 8th states that Dan Patch, the famous unbeaten pacer with a record of 1:59 $\frac{1}{2}$, was purchased from M. E. Sturgis of New York that day by W. M. Savage, manager of the International Stock Food Company for the sum of \$60,000, which is the largest sum ever paid for a pacing horse. The same company already owns Directum 2:05 $\frac{1}{2}$, the ex-champion trotting stallion and Roy Wilkes 2:06 $\frac{1}{2}$ that held the championship for pacing stallions for four years. The dispatch states that at the time of the purchase of Dan Patch, Mr. Savage closed a contract with M. E. McHenry by which the later will handle the horse during the seasons of 1903 and 1904.

If Dan Patch lives Mr. Savage will doubtless demonstrate to the public that the money paid for him, large though it may seem to some, was a very profitable investment. Dan Patch earned $12,750 this year giving exhibitions. He paced seventeen heats of which eleven were below 2:02. His services will be in great demand in the stud after his exhibition days are over. There is little doubt but Dan Patch will earn his price back for his new owners if he lives as he is now in the hands of one of the best advertisers and business men in America.

Grand Circuit Representatives Meet.

Representatives of the Grand Circuit met at the Hoffman House, New York, on Friday afternoon, November 28th, to discuss ways and means for a better enforcement of the existing rules governing trotting meetings, and to decide what changes, if any, could be made in the rules that would assist in making the sport less subject to the reputation of jobbery, etc., of which so much talk has occurred during the past season.

The tracks represented were Detroit, by D. L. Campau; Cleveland, by H. M. Hanna and Harry Devereux; Buffalo, by J. B. Sage; Syracuse, by A. E. Perrin; Empire City, by Edgar Bronk; Brighton Beach, by C. A. McCully; Charter Oak Park, by ex-Governor Buckley; Providence, by A. H. Moore; Readville, by J. Malcolm Forbes; Oakley Park, Cincinnati, by A. J. Welch; Lexington, Ky., by Senator J. W. Bailey; Memphis, C. K. G. Billings, and Terre Haute, by W. P. Ijams.

The general systems of conducting meetings and the present system of enforcing the rules was talked over, and it was decided to appoint a committee to go over the existing rules thoroughly and to report at a meeting to be held at Boston, January 28, 1903, as to what changes in the present rules are advisable, and what additional rules or penalties for infringement of the existing ones are necessary to bring about a more rigid enforcement of the existing rules. Those appointed on this committee were: Senator J. W. Bailey, J. Malcolm Forbes, C. K. G. Billings, Harry Devereux and A. H. Moore. George Dietrich, who officiated as secretary of the meeting, was appointed secretary of the committee.

The American Mule.

A new move in the direction of helping the mule breeders of the United States is reported from the South. When the British-Boer war was on the Boers found that the American mule could do an immense amount of work, that he was strong and true to pull, could go anywhere at a fair pace and could, when occasion demanded, live on about one-half the ration it took to keep a horse in shape. No one probably but the people who saw it will ever know just what the American mules really did for the British in South Africa. They performed some extraordinary feats of strength and endurance and the Boers were not slow, so we are now told, to see that in the rejuvenation and rehabilitation of their country under the British flag the mule would prove a mighty ally. Great Britain set apart $15,000,000 with which to aid in this work and now we learn that agents of the Crown Colonies in South Africa and the Boers are in this country with the intention of buying mules to ship to South Africa and aid in the opening up of the territory laid waste by the war. Everyone knows that in the development of a new country the mule can play a most important part. He did so and is still doing so in the United States. He will do likewise in South Africa if he is given the chance. There is a vast amount of farm land in the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies that must be subjugated by the plow. Let the American mule be given the chance to do it and he will do it better than any other beast of draft or burden. This added competition means better prices for mules. Larger mules will be taken than went to make food for powder, but we have them to sell and it is pleasing, indeed, to think of the bright prospects ahead of the men engaged in the peculiarly American business of breeding these hybrid animals.—Breeders Gazette.

A lot of McMurray carts just received. You need one right now to work your colts in this winter. Call at the Kenney Manufacturing Company, 531 Valencia street and take a look at these carts and other first-class vehicles they have for sale.

San Francisco, Saturday, December 13, 1902.

THE OCCIDENT STAKE OF 1905 will close for trotting foals of 1902, on the first day of January. This is California's trotting classic and is the principal three year old event this side the Mississippi. Great interest has always been felt in this stake by the breeders of California and large crowds have invariably witnessed the contests. It has been growing in value lately, this year's stake being worth very close to two thousand dollars to the winner, Aristo. Next year first money will very likely be more than that sum. As the entrance fee, including the last payment for starting, is only $100, and the first payment but $10, the stake is one of the most liberal ever advertised. We desire to call the attention of every owner of a trotting bred foal of this year to the fact that the Occident Stake for 1905 closes January 1st. Send your entry to Secretary Geo. W. Jackson at Sacramento.

MEXICO is becoming a market for well bred live stock of all kinds and there is great interest being taken in the improvement of breeds by the citizens of our sister republic. Mr. Frank H. Burke, proprietor of the La Siesta Stock Farm, near San Jose, has just returned from a visit to Mexico and while there, although the trip was for pleasure, sold two carloads of registered Holsteins from his La Siesta herd. Mr. Burke tells us that while in Mexico he heard many inquiries for large trotting bred stallions with style and action, as the Mexicans have found them the best sires of carriage horses. Mr. Burke thinks that Mexico will in the future take a very large number of stallions of this description from the United States and that the prices will be profitable to the owners of such horses.

THE SUCCESS of the colt stakes inaugurated three years ago by the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association under the name of the Pacific Breeders Futurities, is a matter of congratulation to every breeder of light harness horses on this Coast. Stake No. 3, just closed, has 331 entries, the largest list since the inauguration of the stake, which is proof of its increasing popularity, and shows that breeders are ready and anxious to race their colts if the opportunity is offered. The two year old divisions of stake No. 1 will be trotted and paced next summer at the Breeders meeting and promise to add much to the interest taken therein as owners are already predicting that the fields will be large and the time fast. There is every reason to believe that the harness racing circuit of 1903 will be the best held in California for years.

WE DESIRE EVERY STALLION OWNER, whose horse has any new representatives in the standard list for 1902, to send their names and records to this office. Our list of new standard performers to be published in our special edition January 10th we will endeavor to make as complete as possible, and we hope to have the aid of stallion owners in the matter. None of the lists printed by the eastern turf papers are any where correct, and while our list will only contain the names of the stallions bred in California or that have made seasons here, it will be as complete as we can possibly make it, especially if we have the assistance of stallion owners.

OUR NEW YEAR AND STALLION edition will be printed January 10th. It will be the most attractive special edition ever issued by this journal, and will be out just in time to advertise the stallion season of 1903. See that your horse gets a place in its columns and apply for space in time.

THEODORE WINTERS, who has bred some of the most famous horses that ever won in America, has consigned twelve grandly bred yearlings and two year olds to Fred H. Chase & Co., the well known live stock auctioneers, who will sell them in their new corrugated iron pavilion at 1732 Market street, by electric light, on Monday evening, December 22d. They are by El Rio Rey and Rey del Sierras, and are out of mares that have produced many good winners. Catalogues will be out in a day or two and an extended notice of the colts and fillies to be sold will be printed in these columns next week.

THE OLD GLORY SALE, which closed at New York last week, was a very marked success. During the nine days 934 head of trotting bred horses were sold at an average of $391 per head. As the highest price received during the sale was $7200, paid for Anaconda 2:01½, the average is remarkable, and shows what a strong demand there is for trotters and pacers. The total amount received during the sale was $365,065, quite a sum to be put into horse flesh at one sale.

A COMBINATION SALE of trotters and pacers is to be held by Mr. E. Stewart, the successful horse auctioneer, on December 23d, at his salesyard, 721 Howard street. Those having good horses for sale will find this a splendid opportunity to get a good price for them.

COLTS AND FILLIES by Antrim the sire of the great Anzella 2:06½ should be worth buying now and taking a chance on. Mr. Geo. A. Kelley of Pleasanton has several head for sale. See his advertisement in this issue.

Bone in Drafters.

It is the big boned, strong draft horses that is much sought after for breeding profitable horses. Referring to this general subject an English Live Stock Journal writer on horses says: "In writing on this subject I held it well for granted that all bone came through the food, as Mr. Cameron asserts; but, nevertheless, the fact remains that if we want big thick legs we must and do mate horse and mare accordingly. All the food we could put through a horse, either from pail, manger or vegetation direct, no matter on what soil or sub-strata the latter is grown, would not give the thickness under the knee which tells in the market and gives power in the yoke, if he were a thoroughbred out of a Shire mare. Of course there may be a richer and denser quality of bone, but so far as breeding draught horses is concerned we must not err too far in this direction. Admitting that the heavier bones, like the antlers of deer, are exceedingly porous, this is quite in accordance with the rapid growth of same, and the body grows proportionately. In a good big cart-horse leg we find a muscular shoulder above it, with a well developed knee, powerful ligaments and a broad, ample hoof. It is the same at the aftermost end, and we have back and body as well. Of course if we can get clean, flinty bones, as thick as we can, so much the better. We know what we want in the race horse and in the thoroughbred, and we also know what we want in the superior draught horse. Of course there are many factors to be considered in the formation of bone besides phosphates, such as the deposition of lime, salts and the like.

Every farmer knows that it costs no more to keep a money-paying thoroughbred broodmare than it does an ordinary mare. Next Wednesday night the following grandly bred mares in foal to imp. St. Avonius will be sold at the Occidental Horse Exchange: Phoebe (dam of Agnes B., Phantom, Grotto and Phoebe A.) by Grinstead, I Declare (dam of Kid Hampton and Clarinette) by imp. Inverness, Physalis (dam of Phyz) by Tournament, Callatine (dam of St. Callatine and Killeen) by Enquirer, imp. Shimoga (half-sister to the phenomenal sire, Sain) by Sir Hugo (her weanling sold for $825 last Monday night at auction), St. Kristine by St. Carlo, Sally Sensible by Salvatore, Centella (four-mile champion) by Joe Hooker, Ethelinda (half-sister to De Bracey, Monterey and Modwena), Princess (famous race mare) by Cheviot out of Music by Prince Charlie, Corinthia by imp. Darebin, imp. Chiffie by Prism, Geneva by Cyrus, Lillian Russell by Longfellow, Lucretia Borgia (record breaker) by Brutus, Miss Truth by Keyser Viola (dam of Melody and San Ramon) by Himyar, Glen Ellen (dam of De Bracey, Gilead and Modwena), imp. Janet N. (dam of Crescendo, Bellicoso and Dolce), Odd or Even by St. Saviour, Pow Wow (dam of Potente), Rose of Ormonde by Ormonde, Ray of Gold by imp. Rayon d'Or, Ursula (dam of Sol. Manhattan and Masoro) by Duke of Montrose, Virginia by Joe Hooker and Morellina by Morello.

Sale of Great Colts From Palo Alto.

James Thompson formerly trainer at Palo Alto, has purchased some colts that are not alone grandly bred but come from stake winning families. The yearlings are well engaged and the purchase shows that in the selection by Mr. Thompson he has purchased some colts from the blood lines that have made Palo Alto famous, as the following description of colts will show.

Mendovena, ch filly, three years old, by Mendocino (3) 2:19½, (son of Electioneer 125). First dam Avena (2) 2:19½, by Palo Alto 2:08½. The sire of Mendovena was a fast colt trotter, and this year, had two performers Monte Carlo 2:09½, and Idolita 2:09½ on the grand circuit. Avena as a two year old in 1892 trotted in 2:19½ and was a stake winner. Mendovena is a very fine individual, with a good disposition, a very high class filly.

The brown colt, yearling, by Monbells 2:23½, (son of Mendocino (3) 2:19½ and Beautiful Bells), his dam Elden (3) 2:19½, the dam of Eleata 2:08½ by Nephew, is certainly one of the most promising colts ever bred at Palo Alto. He is engaged in all of the great stakes and shows now that he will uphold the reputation of the great Electioneer family.

The chestnut filly, yearling, by Mendocino, dam Elsie by General Benton, is a racy looking filly, well engaged, and coming as she does from that great producing mare, Elsie, who has produced Palita (2) 2:16, Rio Alto (2) 2:21½, (3) 2:16½, Novelist (2) 2:27, Mary Osborne (1) 2:37, she should make a fast colt performer.

The last, but not least, is the good sized, handsome colt, yearling, by Nazote 2:28½, (the full brother of Azote 2:04½), his dam the good George Wilkes mare Lulu Wilkes, dam of Advertiser 2:15½, Alla 2:21½ and Welbeck 2:22. The blood lines this colt carries makes him rank high as a high class stock horse.

Take them all in all, speed and breeding concerned, they are as fine a lot as ever left Palo Alto, a great credit to Mr. Thompson for his selection.

RIO ALTO.

Don't Trim the Foretop.

Mr. J. C. Bray, of Butte, Montana, who is now in San Francisco looking for good roadsters, says that he hates to buy a horse that has his foretop cut off. "In the summer time," says Mr. Bray, "when flies are numerous, horses whose foretops have been clipped often get sore eyes because they cannot keep the flies away from their heads. If the foretop is permitted to grow, the hair will brush off the flies every time the horse shakes his head, and I have often tied a rag to the brow band of the halter, when horses has been minus a foretop, as the shaking of the rag answers the purpose pretty well. It is cruelty to deprive a horse of his means of defense against flies in the summer time, and I always make a difference in the price I offer for horses that have their foretops trimmed off.

Millionaire owners of light harness horses have this year stolen much of the thunder from the professional reinsmen in the matter of record performances, both against time and in races. Amateur drivers now hold the world's record for a mile in a race to wagon—Lord Derby's 2:05½; for a mile to pole-trotting over a half-mile track, York Boy and Bemay's 2:12½, which equals the professional time over a mile track; the fastest three heats to wagon trotting, Lord Derby's 2:06½, 2:06, 2:06, and the fastest two heats, pacing to wagon, Edith W.'s 2:05½, 2:05½. The great performances of the matinee trotter, John R. McKerron 2:05½, all go to the credit of his owner, H. K. Devereux, who has driven the horse in all his races. E. E. Smathers, C. K. G. Billings, C. H. Jones and E. T. Bedford were the winning amateur reinsmen the past season, but Mr. Smathers has been the most successful of all these wealthy amateur horsemen and has made a record the past season that few professional reinsmen have beaten. He has a wonderfully good stable of horses and a careful trainer in George Spear, who conditioned the trotters and pacers, delivering them to his employer fit for the races in which they were to take part. But even with all this professional assistance, the men who drove the fast races deserve full credit for nerve and steadiness.

Alta P. McDonald, of Albany, has the past season put the culminating triumph to a long series of successful years on the turf with Major Delmar. The greatness of Del Mar and Expectation has the distinction of being the largest winner of the winners, among the trotters. Alta has taken the pains to send the amount of Major Delmar's winnings at each track, which is as follows, and which may be considered to be official: Detroit, $600; Cleveland, $750; Albany, $300; Brighton Beach, $1500; Readville, $7500; Providence, $750; Hartford, $975; Readville, $2500; Cincinnati, $2500; Lexington, $900; Lexington, $750; Memphis, $3900. Total in twelve races, $22,625.

THOROUGHBRED DEPARTMENT.

A SPLENDID NEW PAVILION, both rain and fire proof, has been constructed by Fred H. Chase & Co., the well known and popular live stock auctioneers at the favorite sales yard, where so many celebrities in the horse line have passed under the hammer at good prices, on the corner of Market street and Van Ness avenue. Under a corrugated iron roof and by electric lights sales of thoroughbreds, trotting and other horses will be conducted, beginning Monday evening, December 22d, with a sale of fourteen head of choice yearlings and two year olds from the Nevada farm of Theodore Winters. The new pavilion has seating capacity for a thousand people and is in a locality reached by all street car lines. The Winters thoroughbreds are an extra fine lot, being sisters and brothers to winners, and by such stallions as El Rio Rey and Rey del Sierras, out of producing mares, and all duly registered with The Jockey Club and numbered.

The first steeplechase of the season was decided on Saturday last and was rather a one-sided affair, the favorite, Glissando, having things all his own way and winning in a romp. Old Mike Rice, which finished second, fenced well and ran well for most of the journey, but tired badly in the last half mile. He showed improvement in this race and shows promise of making quite a fair performer over the sticks. This race seems to have been run on its merits and should the jockeys continue as they have begun, steeplechases will be given regularly every week. These jumping events are quite popular with the public from a spectacular point of view and if track patrons are sure of getting a run for their money they will not fail to back their choices.

Jockey Cochran's first mount was an expensive one for him, as Mr. Holtman fined him $25 for misbehavior at the post.

The Crocker Selling Stake, with a value of $2560 to first horse, was run off last Saturday and was won by Eva G., a two hundred dollar selling plater, which, with the light impost of 91 pounds and well ridden by little Reed, won in a common gallop. Huachuca was second and Diderot third. Diderot had the rail at the start and was cut off immediately at gate raise and did not get through until well into the stretch, otherwise the result might have been different.

The stallion that Charles Boots purchased to take the place of Brutus at the Elmwood Stock Farm at Milpitas is named St. Symphorien, and is the horse for which the late George Masterman refused 5000 guineas from the Russian government. He is a bay horse by Muncaster, a son of Doncaster, while his dam is St. Editha by Kingly Vale. St. Symphorien has given to the English turf St. Shadow, winner of the Furstenberg memorial at Baden-Baden; Oughterdard, winner of the Tantery steeplechase; St. Servan, St. Jessica, Tamarind and Wide Awake II.

Jockey Battiste has recovered from the injury received by his fall and had the mount on Elheyley in the Crocker Selling Stake. This mare, which is a high class animal, looked to be fit and ready but did not run up to expectations. The muddy track was apparently not to her liking.

Starter Holtman is meeting with much better success in his work this year than he had last season. There is less delay at the post and the horses are dispatched as a rule on even terms. The few bad starts made by him have in most instances been caused by the assistant starters holding the horses at the post, this is an evil that should be remedied at once as it is impossible to hold a horse's head when the gate raises and let him go on even terms with the balance of the field. It is all well enough to take a horse by the head and turn him and allow him to break at the gate in motion, but holding him at the start destroys all his chances. The assistants employed by Mr. Holtman do not seem to have the right idea on this subject and should be properly instructed as to their duties or replaced by more competent men.

The bookmakers are again complaining about their losses and raising the cry that the public is taking their money away from them day by day. Several pencilers complain that they are anywhere from $10,000 to $20,000 loser on the season so far. While it is hardly possible, in view of the light play this year, that any book has lost the amount stated, yet whatever losses have been made are largely the fault of the bookmakers themselves, who have in a great many instances made false favorites of certain horses and layed comparatively long odds against horses which were the legitimate favorites and on which, under the circumstances they received a strong play. Then, too, many of the race goers have been backing Ransch who has won a large percentage of his mounts many of which have been at long prices. In any event the books had no complaint last Saturday when but one favorite was successful and when unplayed long shots scored in all the other events.

Jockey Bullman was fined $50 by Starter Holtman for repeatedly breaking through the barrier in the Crocker Selling Stakes on last Saturday. After the race Bullman and Holtman met in the paddock and Bullman expressed his opinion of the matter in such strong terms that Mr. Holtman suspended him for two weeks. Bullman certainly showed poor judgment in abusing the starter especially after the lesson he received last summer at New York.

Jockey Coburn was suspended indefinitely by the Board of Stewards at the close of last Saturday's racing. Much of Coburn's work, of late, has been of a suspicious character and the Stewards have kept close watch of his various performances. On Friday he managed to get practically left at the post on Malaspina, a mare which could not have been beaten had she gotten away on even terms. On Saturday he did the same thing with Mountebank, a hot favorite, and the Stewards thought it time to call a halt.

The victory of Claude on Saturday last when he defeated Artvis was not a particularly profitable one to his owner. Mr. Daly considered Artvis a one to five chance and failed to take advantage of the liberal odds layed about his own colt, thus losing a chance to win a small fortune with a comparatively small amount.

Sad Sam is quite a horse this season and runs much more gamely than he used to. Any horse that can run the speedy Glendenning into the ground and then can stand off Golden Light in a neck finish is a pretty useful animal, and liable to get the money in most any company.

Another steeplechase was run off on Tuesday and still the original favorite won, although Olinthus was backed down to even terms with the Duke of York at post time. The Duke had no difficulty in winning with Rainier in the place through a mistake made by Olinthus at the last jump.

Stuyve is a bad horse to bet on. Mr. Morris, who is training him, says that he is the worst betting proposition he ever had anything to do with as he is a confirmed rogue and will only try about half of the time.

Jay Ransch had a bad day on Tuesday, failing to ride a winner during the afternoon. He certainly threw away the race on Deutschland through overconfidence in easing his mount at the paddock gate. When Burns came up fast with Gold Bell Ransch became confused and went after his whip, losing ground and finally being beaten out by an inferior horse. In this connection it may be stated that Mr. Schreiber himself threw away two races on this same colt, who should have won his last two previous starts had he been ridden by a competent jockey.

Jerry Chorn, who was ruled off the turf by the California Jockey Club seven years ago and who has since been re-instated, had his first mount in the fourth race on Monday last and succeeded in bringing in old Pat Morrissey as winner of the event, beating a fair field of horses. Pat Morrissey showed a wonderful reversal of form, having run a disgraceful race in his last previous essay. The marked improvement in the horse's form can hardly be attributed to Chorn's riding, as he still uses the old fashioned English seat and long stirrups and appeared all at sea at the finish; in fact, he could not hold his mount straight during the stretch run and swerved so badly towards Sugden that Frawley claimed a foul, which was not allowed, the judges considering that Sugden was beaten at the time of the interference.

Jockey Hewitt is undoubtedly the best featherweight jockey at the track. He rides a very well judged race for a boy of his size and weight. The majority of eighty-pound lads ride without judgment and are altogether too handy with their whips at the finish.

Charlie Ellison has offered Durnell & Herz $20,000 for McChesney, the crack Western colt. The offer was refused, the owners holding him for $35,000.

General attention is being attracted to the fact that Mr. J. B. Haggin has made a great showing this year in breeding two year old winners at his Rancho del Paso and Elmendorf studs. He not only bred Savable, the largest winning two year old of the year, but he also bred Irish Lad, which stands second among the money winning two year olds of 1902. He bred fifty-eight two year old winners, and, besides Savable and Irish Lad, fourteen of these were stake winners, namely, Artvis, Golden Maxim, Girdle, Fitzbrillar, Gold Van, Hurstbourne, Charley Elwood, Sir Voorhies, Africander, Shooting Star, Allen, Mary Larona, Parisienne and Roxboro. In the sire of these winners, imp. Golden Garter leads with nine winners to his credit. This horse, which has taken such a commanding position this year among Haggin's great stallions, is a half-brother to the Derby winner Sainfoin, being by the Derby winner, Bend Or, dam Sanda by Wenlock, winner of the St. Leger.

The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN has received a large invoice of Goodwin's Guide, No. 3, which contains the form charts of all the races run in the United States from July 1st to October 15th. They are for sale at this office at one dollar per copy.

The weanlings and yearlings belonging to the estate of the late Charles Fair were sold last Monday evening, at the Occidental Horse Exchange, with the following results:

WEANLINGS.

Salable, b c by Sam Lucas-Sally Sensible, to L. Blasingame for $150.

CALIFORNIA GRIZZLIES.

The Hunter Can Find Big Game in the Remote Fastnesses of the Sierras.

At the present day the grizzly bear is a rather scarce animal in the wilds of California, particularly so in the southern portion of the state. "Old Ephraim" was so plentiful here in the "early days" that a pioneer's outfit, if it consisted of a pick and pan; a rifle, bullet-pouch and powder-horn and a sack of flour was considered complete enough for the owner's success in the New Eldorado. Gold dust and grizzly bears, were in those days, regarded as the chief products of California. Many are the thrilling tales of blood-curdling adventure, detailing hair-breadth escapes or describing fierce battle ending in a tragedy; which have been narrated and written about Ursus horribilis. Adjectives in wholesale lots have been used descriptive of the animal's ferocity, strength, size, vitality, endurance, cunning, vigilance and in fact every quality that goes to make a wild beast a "holy terror." Nor was this formidable reputation by any means unearned, Eph was a sturdy wild creature then, and is to-day, for whom the experienced have the utmost respect; a free lance of the mountain who will not tolerate the meddling presence of intruders into his domain; he is eminently capable of taking care of himself unless the challenger knows thoroughly the game of hunting the grizzly, is accomplished in woodcraft, backed up with steady nerves and is armed with a high power, modern, up-to-date repeating rifle, a Winchester being now regarded by hunters of big game as the best weapon obtainable for the purpose. Models and calibre for big game vary, the 30-30 being a great favorite with some sportsmen, whilst others prefer a larger calibre and more lead to put into a vital spot.

As to a grizzly's size much speculation has been indulged in. Their size, it is claimed, varies according to the length of the summer and abundance of food in the localities where the bears "use." Some sportsmen assert that the California grizzly will match in size any of the species found elsewhere. In this State hibernation is of short duration and good bear food plentiful about every month of the year.

The Rocky mountain grizzlies in Montana and Idaho are generally 200 and 300 pounds lighter than their California cousins. The Montana and Idaho grizzlies hibernate at least fourteen weeks, and when they come out in the spring they have to rustle over hundreds of square miles for food amid the melting snows. So they soon become skin and bones. It is a heavy setback every year for the beasts, especially the cubs. California and Arizona grizzlies do not have such climatic conditions to fight. The average weight of a full-grown California grizzly is 900 pounds. Some have been killed that went even to 1200 pounds. Stories have been told of 1600 pound grizzlies, but there are no such beasts. When you consider that an ordinary milch cow weighs 700 pounds, you see that 900 pounds of bear, when that bear is maddened, roaring and clawing, and coming for you is a mighty awing creature to face. A grizzly, for all his clumsy appearance, is as quick as a cat, and is the most powerful of American wild animals. Under such hair-raising conditions it would not be surprising, at times, if one thought the bear was as large as an elephant.

The grizzly has disappeared from many of his old haunts, notably so from the San Bernardino mountain fastnesses, where many a big fellow in past days has been captured by vaqueros, who lassoed the beasts and then brought the shaggy gladiator into one or another of the Spanish coast towns, there to enliven a fiesta as one of the combatants in a bear and bull fight. Notwithstanding his absence in some sections, it is asserted, taken as a whole, there are about as many black and grizzly bears among the Sierras and Coast Range mountains as there were twenty-five years ago. The beasts have retired further back among the canyons and up on the mountain sides. It seems like an absurd statement, but the clearing of timber from the mountains has helped the increase of the bruin tribe. When the timber was thick the bears were compelled to skirmish more for food, and had to depend to a great degree on roots and bark and on the rather scanty supplies which the pigpens and sheep-folds of the scattered ranches afforded them. The clearing of the woods has been followed by the appearance of all kinds of berry bushes, the fruit of which forms the favorite food of the bears. At the same time, the cutting of the timber has not disturbed the character of the dense chaparral, in the confines of which the bears find safe places for breeding. The rocky ledges, with their ravines and caverns, still remain almost unvisited by man, and there the shaggy critters find winter lairs as secure and comfortable as when the forest grew above them.

In finding their quarry, bear hunters are guided by a knowledge of the animal's habits at different seasons of the year. There are many ways of knowing likely assembly localities for the beasts. In early summer bears live in muddy places at the head of the canyon streams and about the streams that dry up in the middle of the summer. The bears frequent the damp spots, and early in the summer, if they are about, the soft black mud along the edge of these places will be broken up as if a herd of cows had been walking through it. At intervals the mud will be hollowed out in places eight or ten feet long, two or three wide, and as many deep. These are wallow holes made by bears.

In these holes the animals wallow and lie and sleep. Some hunters watch these holes, and shoot the bears when they come there to wallow, but as at that time of year their flesh is poor and their fur valueless, such killing of bears is senseless and unprofitable. In looking for bear signs in early summer always examine the trees around the damp places to find if any bear has been "measuring" himself. Bears have a habit of getting up against a tree and with their forepaws tearing the bark off as high as they can reach. Some old hunters actually believe that in doing this the bears are measuring their height to see if they have grown during the winter.

For the hunter who desires to add the skin of the American monarch of wild beasts to his collection of trophies of the chase, the better time to seek his game is during the early summer months. On the Pacific Coast a grizzly's skin is the best in June. In Rocky Mountain regions it is best a month later. In the autumn, even up to the time they retire for winter, their fur is not prime, and, again, having become rolling fat by gorging themselves on berries, they move about very little, and that mostly at night, so that a hunter might be in a good locality for them for weeks and never see more of them than their tracks. But in the spring, the minute a bear leaves his winter quarters he begins a ceaseless tramp for food. "Then the wise hunter," so advises a veteran hunter and trapper, "will procure three or four old crippled horses and kill them in some favorite places along the foothills, where bruin is likely to travel. If one has three baits, they should be placed about five miles apart, and camp made within a mile or two of the middle one. Early in the morning, and again at evening, the nearest bait can be visited afoot, and the other baits can be watched on alternate days, a ten-mile horseback ride being just good exercise for the weakest tenderfoot. Great care should be taken in placing the horse baits. If possible, find a small hill entirely bare of timber or brush, which slopes steeply down to the west, at the foot of which is some heavy pine timber and brush, also water. Kill the horse so that he will lie about fifty yards below the brow of the hill, and, if you wish, cut three or four stunted pines and stick them side by side on the brow of the hill so that they will afford a good screen when approaching the bait, or when sitting and watching for the bear to appear. As on this east slope of the Sierras the wind is always blowing from the west, and as the bear, once having found the bait, will put in his time between gorging meals lying in the thick timber or chuparral at the foot of the hill, there will be no danger of his getting wind of the hunter and lighting out for parts unknown. Having once found the bait, a grizzly will go to it four or five times a day, and eat until he can hold no more, and when not eating he will lie in the nearest cover to it. It doesn't take a grizzly long to eat up a horse."

Dogs are the natural enemies of bears, but few experienced dogs are foolish enough, in hunting any variety of bear, to go beyond the opening of a cave where a bear has been scented or to pitch into a bear that has turned. A full grown bear with its dander up can ward off a whole pack of the most savage dogs. A fair blow from the bear's paw will kill, rip up or stun any dog. Generally at sight of a man a bear will make every effort to get away as a rule. A bear rarely fights a man unless forced to it. A she bear with cubs, when followed closely, will keep her cubs ahead of her and bring up the rear to protect them. If she is pushed closely she will try to frighten off her pursuer by making a great show of fight. She growls, shows her teeth, tears the bark from trees and scatters it about with much fuss and noise and makes herself generally as obnoxious as possible. If the enemy presses and there is no help for it, the mother bear fights as long as she has a spark of life left in her. The cubs meanwhile huddle together a short distance off and whine.

A bear hunter's outfit is simple: A Winchester repeating or magazine rifle, heavy boots, thick trousers, a light hunting axe in a belt, a pistol, and a long-bladed knife for emergencies. If a hunter is anxious to be put on his mettle while on the hunt, let him give the bear a scent of him. Then the bear will take a course which will require nerve, wind, and a tough skin to follow. When the snow is deep a bear chase is generally slow and tedious. With a light fall and a fresh track, however, there is no sport so exciting; and even an amateur hunter will find himself going miles on a good stiff trot. It is no hard matter to kill a bear if the dogs understand their business after the bear is brought to bay, for it will give all its attention to the dogs that are yelping around it, while the hunter stands off and fills him with lead. But there are times when a bear will brace himself for a fight from the word "go," and then if the hunter does not kill at the first fire, he is apt to have about as lively a time as he ever dreamed of. No story of a bear fight that was ever told can be much ahead of the incidents that occur during a fight, if it is a good one.

Some Arizona hunters tackle bears with a shot gun, generally a 10 bore breech loading gun, loaded with buck shot. Bears have a habit, when coming to close quarters with their arch enemy man, of rearing up on their hind legs and coming on with mouth open, teeth showing and forearms ready for raking the hunter fore and aft with their sharp claws before giving him the fatal hug. At the critical time the hunter raises his gun and fires a load of buckshot at very close range into the gaping jaws of the enraged animal. If the shooter's nerves are steady and his aim correct the load of heavy shot has taken effect in the back of the bear's throat and broken the beast's neck or lodged in the base of the brain. A sawed-off repeating shot gun was used by a well known Arizona hunter with great success in this hazardous undertaking.

Notwithstanding the general reputation of the grizzly for ferocity and ill temper there are those who claim different, among them Captain Harvey Deddum of San Bernardino who is authority for the statement that "an absurd thing that Eastern people believe they know about grizzly bears, is that they are the most ferocious beasts on foot in America. The fact is that a grizzly is about the most peaceable of critters. I have killed over 200 of them, and thousands of smaller wild game, in my forty years in the Sierras. Now, a grizzly never picks a quarrel and never attacks anybody except when it is wounded, and I have even known a grizzly smarting with a rifle ball to get up and run away. However, when a wounded grizzly charges straight at its foe, it is generally a most terrifying thing in hair, teeth and claws. Imagine, if you can, the sensations which a lone hunter has when he is charged upon by a half-ton beast that comes bounding straight at him, with swaying head and open mouth, uttering a deep roar at every jump. Consider how the hunter feels when he knows that a ball must be planted in a very vital spot in the bear's anatomy if he would save himself from being torn into shreds by the infuriated beast."

That the California grizzly and his smaller cousins have not lost any of their pristine energy is shown by the occurrence of encounters and casualties from time to time, the bear coming off victor not infrequently.

It was but a few weeks ago down in the San Bernardino forest reserve that a pathetic tragedy was narrowly averted by a display of courage and presence of mind. Pedro Trujillo and his wife were engaged in gathering seeds in the forest reserve for the Government and for various botanical gardens. One morning Mrs. Trujillo was on the mountain side with her three year old child. She had nearly reached the place where she was to begin work when she was confronted by a large bear, standing directly in her path.

Thinking to frighten the beast away she threw a stone at it, but this only enraged the bear and it seized the child. Before it could crush its victim the mother diverted the savage animal's attention by kicking it squarely on the face. With one blow of its paw the bear felled the woman and undoubtedly would have killed her had her husband not appeared at that moment and fired four shots into the bear's body. The woman was fearfully bruised and the side of her face was severely cut by the animal's paws. It was learned later that the bear had been wounded, which accounted for the attack.

Dr. J. M. Barrickman had a narrow escape from two grizzlies on a mountain slope east of Lake Tahoe some time ago. The Doctor killed the male with a shot from his Winchester as the animal emerged from the lair by the side of a huge fallen tree. The female, by reason of her activity and the intervening bushes, afforded no chance for a rifle shot. The Doctor, however, crept forward and fired both barrels of his shotgun at her neck, but without fatal effect.

The buckshot had been wadded upon the powder shell, and, in all probability, someone had removed the shells, allowing most of the buckshot to escape. This made it bad for the "Doc." His two dogs now engaged the bear, which attacked one dog that fought back from a vantage position lodged against a bush and was killed. The bear, throwing its weight upon the Doctor, crushed his left side and hip upon the rocks, and either biting or striking one arm, thereby partially paralyzing it. Heavy clothing and the ferocious attack of Diana, the other dog, saved his life, but, poor Diana, exhausted, struck her head against a rock, and while stunned momentarily, was caught and torn to death. Both dogs fought to the last for their master—willingly throwing their lives away.

Last August a Redding paper published the following bear story: The ambitious hunter who would add a bear skin to his collection of squirrel tails can now get a chance at a bear within a short distance of home. The forest fires along the line of the railroad from Keswick to Baird Spur have sent the wild game scurrying from cover. Several deer have been seen along the track. A family of bears has been routed out near Elmore. As George Schoonover and Vester Battams rode after cattle one evening, a brown bear reared up in the brush in front of them. They were unarmed and retreated. While riding down the trail to the railroad Sunday, Mr. Schoonover started another bear in the brush. Apparently a hunter with dogs could just now scare up about as many bears as he could handle.

Late this summer, near Truckee, two lads, Joe Lewis, aged 16, and Earl McGashan, aged 13, had an exciting experience with a family of bears one evening near Deer creek, eight miles from Truckee. The boys were hunting deer and were following a wounded buck, when they suddenly came upon a bear and three cubs. They fired one shot at the old bear at a distance of less than forty yards, and wounded her so severely that she forsook her cubs and took to the brush. Each boy then killed a cub and together they wounded the other cub so badly that it fell down several times while following the mother into the brush. Darkness coming on, the boys carried the dead cubs into town and returned in the morning when they killed the wounded bears. The cubs weighed forty pounds each.

Further north bears are apparently fairly numerous, as the adventure of three miners who were camped on some placer claims in the Porcupine mining district will show. The prospectors began operations last spring, neglecting to take along guns, as game in that vicinity was scarce. Matters went along all right until August last, when the men were amazed to find out that their camp was the rendezvous of what appeared to be an entire tribe of bears. Half a dozen big grizzlies were particularly obnoxious, raiding the miners' supplies and making the camp absolutely untenable for the men who were glad to get away with their lives. At last accounts Bruin still held possession of the valuable property.

Cockers for Field Work.

Many lovers of the Cocker Spaniel there are who contend and advocate strongly that the breed is too good a field dog and has so many useful qualities as a sportsman's companion, that to allow the Cocker to occupy a position in the fancy of doggie enthusiasts only as a bench and pet variety, is uncalled for, in fact, unwarranted, in the light of qualities and adaptability of far more value than those developed by the strenuous efforts devoted to the breeding of black and red "caterpillars" destined for no more active or glorious career than the retrieving of ribbons at a show or a lazy life of luxury—greater or less, as a ladies' pet.

The breed was originally bred, trained for and used in the field. The Cocker's sphere of work being an important one with the gun. A letter in Kennel News signed by J. L. N., is interestingly descriptive of the working adaptability of Cockers.

J. L. N. takes up the assertion that the Cocker is now relegated to the position of the old time Cockers, the King Charles and the Blenheims, and characterizes it as a somewhat sweeping conclusion. The possibilities of the Cocker as a sporting spaniel are shown when he says that in many parts of the country, notably Devonshire, Cockers are used in teams solely for the purpose of pushing out rabbits from thick gorse through which the larger breeds of spaniel would be unable to work even if they would face the prickles. "Over such a team have I shot, and have enjoyed my days in that rough, wild country, where quick shooting and a varied bag make up a day's sport only to be obtained in the western counties of England. Here, in Cambridgeshire, I use a team of Cockers for working out pheasants and rabbits, for pheasants in tall mustard, rabbits (stopped out) in thick roots and the like. Of course, for this work the other breeds of spaniel would answer the purpose. The bench Cocker and working Cocker of to-day are one and the same dog, which, alas!, is not the case with the other breeds of spaniel, with the exception of the Clumber.

With regard to the retrieving abilities of the Cocker, those which do so (all in a team should not retrieve), are quite able to carry a pheasant or rabbit far enough to ensure its being bagged. I also use my Cockers (singly) in conjunction with the goshawk, which is flown at rabbits. Rough grass or hedgerows holding 'sitting-out' rabbits are worked by the Cocker, and as soon as 'Brer Rabbit' is started, the goshawk is flown, having watched every movement as the busy little dog investigated every bramble bush and tuft. The Cocker's place in 'Falconry,' in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries was one of no small importance. Every falconer kept his pack of small hunting spaniels. They gave tongue lustily, thereby increasing the keenness of the hawk to fly the pursued quarry. They were worked in teams in the large woods, the goshawk following their movements from tree to tree, ready to fly the pheasant that was flushed in front of her. They soon learn not to press too hotly on the goshawk after she has killed. I have seen a youngster make straight in to seize the rabbit, but retire discomfited, having been well 'footed' by the goshawk. Cockers as companions are not equalled. They are devoted to their master. They are small, and can be admitted into the house, where, as housedogs, none are nicer.

For September shooting, and the driving, later on, they are of little use, the larger breeds of Spaniels being suitable. Personally, I have found that for September shooting the modern Field Spaniel is of little use; he is not able to follow a strong runner speedily enough, he is so long and low that he is able to do little more than waddle over a dry stubble. This also applies to the Sussex Spaniel, but in a less degree, the lighter boned specimens being fairly active dogs. Clumbers are excellent. They are steady, have good noses, are all that can be desired if not too slow. Clumbers for driving are undesirable, their color being too conspicuous, the least movement on the part of the dog being a danger signal to birds nearing the gun. Of course, this is only the case where the fences are thin and bare. The dog most suitable to our present-day shooting is the recently described "Springer" Spaniel. Weighing from 35 pounds to 45 pounds, fairly proportioned in every respect, not overboned and clumsy, straight, workmanlike legs, showing plenty of quality in head, ear-placement, expression and coat, a thoroughly active dog, with nothing about him that appears to be an exaggeration. If I may suggest a type that greatly took my fancy at the recent Kennel Club Show, it was the bitch Fansome, shown in the open class, bitches, among the English Springers; she is a little large, but that is a good fault, but with that exception, is, in my opinion, as typical a specimen as could be desired. It would be most interesting to read the opinions of others on the all-absorbing problem of Spaniels and their successful breeding."

San Mateo County Game Laws.

Recently the Supervisors of San Mateo county repealed the county game laws with the exception of a clause pertaining to the killing of rail and adopted the State game laws. Game may be killed or taken in this county between the following dates:

Trout—April 1 to November 1.
Quail—October 1 to February 1.
Deer—August 1 to October 1.
Doves—August 1 to February 1.
Ducks—October 1 to February 1.
Rail—October 15 to November 15. Shooting rail from boats at high tide is prohibited.

California favorite hot weather drink—Jackson's Napa Soda.

The Hammock and the Pipe.

Some folks there be who seek the sea
When summer time is here.
And some who try the mountains high,
Where board and room are dear;
Some like the look of lake or brook
When the hot wave is ripe;
But this poor bard likes his back yard,
His hammock and his pipe.

No landlord there to charge for air
Or things that one may see;
Nor folks who talk or drive or walk,
Or tell how rich they be;
No bill of fare to make one swear,
Nor yet to cause the gripe—
Not anything but just to swing
With hammock and with pipe.

Mosquitoes do not come to chew,
Nor yet to eat one up;
No thing to bite by day or night
(Except the neighbor's pup),
So, wherefore roam away from home
And perspiration wipe,
When days are clear and we have here
The hammock and the pipe?

The sky is blue—the smoke is, too:
And make a man feel good,
And all things seem to gayly gleam,
And act just as they should;
Some folks leave home away to roam
When the hot wave is ripe.
But like as not they have not got
A hammock or a pipe.

With Gum and Dog in the Mikado's Domain.

Shooting possibilities in Japan should naturally be rather good, but under the circumstances prevailing at present the outlook for the sportsman could be much better. Although there are undoubtedly deer, wild pigs, and probably bears in Japan, their numbers are rapidly decreasing, and practically the sportsman will find use for the shotgun only. In the neighborhood of the open ports, all feathered game has been so incessantly harried during the last ten or twelve years, that very little remains, and the countryside, abounding with coverts and woods that should form the very finest breeding ground for game birds, is destitute of all feathered life. Japan has game laws, but the veneer of modern civilization is not deep enough to cover true sporting instincts, and the Japanese "sporting young man" would not hesitate for a moment if he had an opportunity of potting a game bird during the nesting season. With proper game laws, strictly carried out and enforced, a few years' systematic preservation could make the country a grand game preserve, such splendid natural advantages has it got, but that is too much to hope for, and so year by year the destruction goes on, and soon there will hardly be a pheasant left. To-day, a couple of days' journey from Yokohama, away up in the interior, woodcock, quail, snipe, hare and pheasants of various kinds may be found and very fair sport obtainable shooting over dogs. The copper pheasant, the largest and by far the wildest of pheasants, affords opportunities for the exercise of one's utmost cunning and woodcraft before he can be brought to bag, and, indeed, it requires an old experienced hand at the game, not merely an unerring shot, to circumvent them.

Wild duck of various kinds are fairly plentiful in the wigner, and for a true sportsman, who does not gauge his sport by the size of the bag, they find many a winter day's enjoyment.

The ordinary dweller in any of the open ports has little chance of getting much in the way of shooting. Week ends, even if Saturday morning is included, do not give him time to go far afield. At least one day must be spent in going and, of course, a day in returning, so that unless one can afford to go to the expense of so much traveling for one day in the field, shooting excursions can only be indulged in when a longer holiday can be obtained. One has not those convenient trains on Sunday mornings, taking one right out to within a short walk of the shooting grounds. Instead, a weary journey by slow trains, with many changes at junctions, occupying the best part of a day and then a long ride over villainous roads in rickshaws, with at least one extra man to push behind, rickshaws for the dogs (or they would be too tired to work) and more for impedimenta, so that expenses mount up rapidly to beyond what an ordinary purse can stand for one day's shoot.

The Jap, as we find him here in California, has not lost any of his game destroying proclivities. About our bay shores in the marsh districts where the little brown men are employed at the salt ponds, during the summer months, they are after feathered game incessantly. Wild fowl, young and old and eggs as well as are garnered by the oriental locusts. Convictions, time and again, seem to add zest to their marauding instincts. In the upland and orchard districts, quail are trapped and secured persistently, all other wild creatures, from deer down to small song birds have no immunity from the cunning poaching of the Japs. Our game laws are familiar to them, for they have been printed in the Japanese language and have been widely distributed—the principal result has been we are sorry to say, to develop latent rascality in resources designed to break the law and circumvent the officers.

Banquet of the Fly Casters.

The members of the San Francisco Fly Casting Club and invited guests met at the California Hotel on Tuesday evening the occasion being the regular bi-monthly meeting and dinner of the club. A larger attendance of sportsmen than usual were seated about the prettily decorated oak. After a substantial repast, enlivened by musical selections, was disposed of speeches, toasts and other congenial subjects were on the card.

Chairman Walter D. Mansfield announced the medal winners as follows: H. C. Golcher, champion class, both for the Saturday and Sunday contests. Mr. Golcher has since made the wonderful world's record cast, with a heavy rod, of 140 feet, a feat which will not be equalled it is safe to say for a long time to come. Dr. W. E. Brooks was high rod in the first class, long distance, for Saturdays. H. F. Muller was high score in the first class for Sundays. On the cast-off between the two, Mr. Muller was the winner. The latter gentleman has now won two medals in this event.

In the accuracy event, Col. Carlos G. Young was high man in the champion class for Saturday work. Mr. Muller was the highest contestant in this class for the Sunday contests. Col. Young won the prize on the cast-off with Muller. The Colonel has now a credit of two medals in this event. In accuracy the first class position has not yet been determined. Col. G. C. Edwards and Mr. H. C. Golcher made the highest scores and the medal credit lays between those two casters. Mr. Kierruff and Mr. C. Kline were high in the next class in accuracy for Saturday and Sunday work respectively. Mr. Kierruff was the medal winner.

In the delicacy event Walter Mansfield was the winner of the champion class honors for both Saturday and Sunday casting. In the first class Dr. Brooks was high for both days' contests. In the next class Mr. A. M. Blade annexed the prize.

Lure casting honors lay between T. W. Brotherton and C. R. Kenniff, the latter gentleman winning first place at the final cast-off. Mr. Kenniff's work, particularly in the recent world's tournament, was of such a high class order that his scores were ahead of the best Eastern exponents of this particular style of casting.

Medals must be won by a contestant three times before final ownership is acquired.

During the evening felicitous speeches were made on angling topics and the good fellowship prevailing between the brotherhood of anglers, among those who spoke were Chas. S. Wheeler, Alex. T. Vogelsang, Judge John Hunt, P. J. Tormey, W. D. Mansfield, A. M. Blade and others.

The expressed preference of the club for the holding of a world's tournament at St. Louis in 1904 was shown by the adoption of a motion to that effect.

A silent toast was drunk standing to the memory of the late Secretary, Horace Smyth, a sportsman of sterling qualities, who made the welfare of the club and its career his special effort. A resolution of the high regard in which the departed angler was held will be engrossed and presented to Mrs. Smyth.

Among those present were: E. T. Allen, J. Fatjo, H. Battu, A. M. Blade, Dr. W. E. Brooks, W. F. Bogart, Alfred Rising, John Butler, T. W. Brotherton, A. S. Carman, W. A. Cooper, F. E. Daverkosen, H. A. Harrigan, A. B. Finch, Frank Bell, J. Homer Fritch, H. C. Golcher, I. R. D. Grubb, George L. Underhill, E. H. Horton, Judge John Hunt, R. Isenbruck, C. H. Kewell, C. R. Kenniff, J. B. Kenniff, Charles Klein, John Lawrence, C. T. Lagercrantz, Fred W. Lees, L. J. Aubert, W. D. Mansfield, E. A. Mocker, W. R. Welch, W. A. L. Miller, H. F. Muller, A. Muller, A. P. Dawson, J. H. Low, John F. Siebe, H. E. Skinner, E. Saunders, F. G. Sanborn, Mr. Wright, P. J. Tormey, J. S. Turner, Alex. T. Vogelsang, George Walker, James Watt, C. S. Wheeler, C. G. Young, J. X. DeWitt, W. J. Kierulff, F. L. McLennan, J. A. Johnson, Dr. F. J. Lane, S. A. Wells, R. A. Smyth and F. S. Johnson.

Perfecting the Bore of Rifle Barrels.

A new method of straightening the bore of rifle barrels has been invented and patented by a Birmingham firm. It is claimed that a close examination of the finest barrels hitherto made invariably revealed the fact that the bores instead of being straight were in all cases curvilinear, the line of the bore being not one long curve, which would not perhaps matter so much, but being made up of a number of short wavy lines which is more prejudicial to shooting. It is of course well known that the final straightening and setting of barrels is not a commercial process; that is to say it is done by the human eye with the help of a cumbersome method of manipulating light and shade in the barrel. Such as the process was, however, it has up till now, when all other processes in the manufacture of rifles have made such great process, remained the only one. The first process of examination when the barrels are drilled is to see whether the line of the bore coincides at three selected points with a straight rod passed through. This, of course, would only reject the very worst, leaving the rest to be subjected to the hand process of straightening and setting referred to. By the new process the bore of the barrel will be straightened after the first process of drilling and will correspond with a perfectly and absolutely straight line. The operation is said to be extremely simple, and hence will effect a very great economy in the manufacture and do away with a process which was at any time likely to prove a great stumbling block if the men engaged thereon chose to show their independence, which they have often done. It is stated that the new process can be made the means of detecting irregularities in barrels which have passed the microscopic scrutiny of government viewers at the factory.

Wild Pigeons.

Wild pigeons are making their appearance in the foothills back of Los Gatos, where they feed on the madrone berries. They have come very early this season, which is an indication that they will be in great abundance before the winter is over. Sportsmen will remember the season of two years ago when they flocked to the foothills of Santa Clara county in great numbers and every day thousands of them would feed in the grain fields of the valley. There was excellent shooting everywhere in the valley and hunters had no difficulty in getting good bags of game whenever they went out shooting. Farmers will also remember the pigeons for the reason that they became a veritable pest to them for several weeks. They came at the time they were sowing their grain and the pigeons would alight on the fields and pick the grain from the ground and pull up the young sprouts after the grain had started. These pigeons are migratory birds. They breed in the forests of the high Cascades and the Sierra Nevada mountains. During the winter the snow drives them from these altitudes and they feed along the foothills. Their early appearance is usually a prediction that there will be plenty of snow and rain.

FEATHER AND FIN.

Striped bass fishing in San Antonio slough recently has been first class. Members of the Petaluma Gun Club have caught plenty of bass during the past two weeks; many of the fish were big fellows, some going over twenty pounds in weight. Members of the Anglers Club have also had some good bass fishing in the slough. The fish have also afforded more sport than usual in the nearby waters of Black John slough.

One million salmon eggs were sent to Eureka on the steamer Corona last week, and taken in charge by State Patrolman W. P. Huestis. The eggs come from the Battle Creek hatchery and were consigned to the Price Creek hatchery. Those well informed say that salmon is each year becoming more plentiful in Eel River, owing to the well directed efforts of the Fish Commission.

Harvey McMurchy has been here for several weeks. "Prince Mac" says he has greatly enjoyed the duck shooting he has been having, twice a week, at the Spooney Gun Club preserve near Mt. Eden.

Phil B. Bekeart is dated for a return appearance here about the 20th inst.

Jack Fanning, a sportsman universally liked and widely known will also make his appearance on Sportsman's Row on or about the 20th.

Devotees of both quail and duck hunting have been getting as much shooting as could be desired. Canvasback duck and bluebills are now very plentiful about the bay shore shooting grounds.

E. E. Drake and W. S. Wattles each got a limit bag on ducks near Collinsville on Sunday. Wattles uses empty bottles for decoys. This device was the result of rustic ingenuity in improvising a makeshift one day when canvasback decoys were unobtainable. The bottles were securely corked, a white spot of paint daubed over the middle, a string and weight attached and out they went in front of the blind. Contrary to expectation and traditions of orthodox duck shooting the scheme worked so well that it is still in vogue. The birds, all but mallards, decoy to the empty bots in a most satisfactory manner.

DOINGS IN DOGDOM.

They have recently been having a big dog show at Sydney, where, if the local Referee is to be believed, some of the competitors underwent no little "preparation" before being benched. Our antipodean contemporary moralises on the matter in the following strain: "Someone has hazarded the opinion that man's friend, the dog, derives all his good qualities from his constant association with man, and if left to himself he would be as great a skunk as the dingo. That is a doubtful point, but it seems certain that constant association with dogs has a demoralising effect on some men. It is highly probable, however, that those men were born that way, and would cut up, 'cronk' no matter whether they associated with a dog or a duke, or a duchess.

The way in which dogs are occasionally 'faked' for show purposes and the like is as marvelous as it is mean. For example: One of the good points of the Black and Tan Terrier (a delightful class of dog) consists in the tan being quite distinct from the black. The color must not blend or run, as the talent terms it. Also, the inside hair on the hind legs of the Black and Tan Terrier must be perfectly black. When the hair has a whitish look the dog is said to be breeched. Both of these defects may be remedied by a judicious use of nitrate of silver. The effect of this application lasts for 48 hours, and the dog must be exposed to a strong light before the change takes place. Then the dog is ready for the show bench and if he is perfect in other points, he will probably scoop the pool. Having shown how the fraud can be worked it is necessary to show how it can be detected. This can be done by using a strong magnifying glass. Under such a glass a coat of hair treated with nitrate of silver seems to have a strong metallic lustre, and is easily discernible.

The coat of the wire hair Fox Terrier should be hard, but unfortunately, the majority of these dogs have soft coats. But the 'faker' washes such a dog in a strong solution of alum water and when the dog dries, the coat has the desired harshness. This fake can be found out by the neat but nasty method of rubbing one's tongue down the dog's back. This is one of the privileges enjoyed by a judge at a dog show, the object being, of course, to taste the alum—for which luxury no charge is made upon the judge whatever. Other fakes on other classes of dogs will be exposed later on. Sufficient for the day is the swindle thereof."

Oakland Kennel Club Show.

Entries for the Oakland show closed on Wednesday, the 10th inst., with, under the circumstances, a flattering showing of entries. Considering the very short time for publication and distribution of the premium list and the fact that the entire work of preparation and the other necessary attention to each detail fell entirely upon Superintendent Bradshaw's shoulders, the showing made is a very good one.

Over 150 entries, these subject to increase by mail entries, were in up to the time of our going to press—this list is made up as follows: Bull Terriers 8; Fox Terriers 36, Cocker Spaniels 30, Bulldogs 4, Collies 24, Bostons 4, St. Bernards 10, Great Danes 10, Setters, Pointers, Foxhounds and Greyhounds 20, Irish Water Spaniels 2, Irish Terriers 4, Old English sheep dogs 2, Mastiffs 4, Maltese Terriers 1, Retrievers 1, Miscellaneous 5.

The show will open on Wednesday morning at the Exposition Building, Oakland. Spratts will bench and feed, Dr. Steers will look after the veterinary end of the show. Among the newcomers on the bench will be Wandee Kennels' Fox Terrier bitch Mayse, two Old English sheep dogs, Mrs. Chas. K. Harley's Bulldog Ivel Damon and several others. Mayse is a bitch that was only beaten in England by Champion Fortuna at the last Ladies Kennel Club show. Fortuna has never yet had her measure taken. W. B. Fehheimer, of Portland, Or., has entered the bitch Norfolk Mistake, which is claimed will make a hot candidate in the Fox Terrier ranks. Ivel Damon was first at the New York show among 96 entries, being only beaten in turn by his sire Ivel Doctor, the two being first and reserve winners in the finals. Winters Collie Kennels has a recently imported stud dog of which much is expected. Wandee Blizzard (formerly Lothian Blizzard) and Wandee Revelry (formerly Saltscar Revelry) make up two more of a quartette that will be hard to beat anywhere in this country or at a show across the water.

Much interest is already taken in the St. Bernard competition; this will bring together Lester C. and Grand Master II. Both dogs will be put down in the condition of their career. Fox Terriers, Collies and Cockers promise to make several very interesting classes for the judges. In Cockers the show will be memorable one, being the occasion of a lady's initial appearance in the Coast judging ring. With Fox Terriers, Mr. N. H. Hickman, a well known breeder and fancier will be introduced as an expert on terrier styles and qualities.

This show will be closely watched by the fancy, for the reason that the judging will be done, with but one exception, entirely by local judges. The subject of having local judges has been worn threadbare, pro and con, by the Coast fancy.

It has been shown that the prevailing sentiment has been in favor of selecting judges of well known national and international reputation and skill. This is by far, the better method, but small shows, it has not yet been demonstrated will stand the expense of an imported judiciary. So as it goes, the Oakland show will be regarded in this respect as an experimental venture. We hope it will be successful in every respect and tend to the unification of doggie interests on the Pacific Coast.

Among the specials offered are those of the California Cocker Club, which we have already published. The Pacific Fox Terrier Club offers cash prizes of $5 for, respectively the, best dog puppy, bitch puppy, best dog over twelve months old and best bitch over twelve months old. Delverton Cocker Kennels offer a handsome trophy for the best Cocker puppy, either sex, any color, open to all. Plumeria Kennels offer a prize for the best Cocker sired by one of the Plumeria stud dogs, donor not to compete. Naird Kennels offer a handsome piece of genuine Satsuma ware for the best novice Cocker, either sex, any color, open to all, donor not to compete. J. J. Grimsey offers a silver cup for the best Cocker Spaniel stud dog, to be judged by two of his get, the merits of all to be considered. Fred H. Bushnell will offer a trophy for the Collie competition.

The benching will be up and in position Tuesday afternoon. Dogs will be received not earlier than 8 o'clock A. M. and not later than 12 M. Reliable attendants have been employed and every care and attention will be given to the dogs benched.

Taking it all in all, there will be a higher class of dogs shown than has yet been seen by our doggie enthusiasts.

Kennel Suggestions.

After oils or unguents are applied as a skin dressing, they should not be allowed to remain more than two or three days before washing off or the remedy may set up an irritation that will magnify the original trouble through the clogging up of the skin and the injury to the coat.

In those unfortunate cases where it is necessary to keep a dog in "pickle" for any length of time, the rule should be to apply the dressing and allow it to remain two days, then wash off with a non-irritating soap, give the skin one day's rest, then another dressing, the process to be repeated for as long as required.

Under ordinary circumstances, if in good health, regularly and efficiently groomed, there is not the slightest occasion to wash a dog at all from a sanitary point of view. But he is very often not in good health, oftener still his proper toilet is neglected, and in the case of white dogs going to a show, nothing but the order of a bath will do, though for the latter class there are those who claim to have invented a substitute in the form of a cleansing powder, which, while it answers well enough for a dog like a Collie, gives the all-white smooth dog a yellow appearance. At least such is my experience.

The possessor of a kennel of whatever breed is rare indeed who can long refrain from showing in these days, and some remarks on the subject may perhaps be useful to the beginner. The animal who has been bred, reared and habitually kept on the lines of the foregoing is always in show trim, or nearly so, save when casting the coat or breeding. Still, almost all dogs are the better for a wash, an operation already gone into.

As regards a white dog this is obvious, and with such as a Collie or Pomeranian the coat stands out much better and appears more voluminous. In the case of a hard coated dog washing softens the jacket a trifle, which can afterwards be rectified by rubbing in powder of magnesia and alum well mixed, the same to be carefully brushed out before leaving home, or disqualification may result.

It has always been a moot question whether dogs should be trimmed or not. I believe everything should be done to smarten a dog's appearance outside of actual faking, which is putting something there which nature has not originally provided. There are certain little touches common to particular breeds which will give the animal a better appearance, proficiency in which should be acquired by frequent practice at home. It will pay you.

Some of these I propose to deal with. Therefore on a Saturday or on a Sunday morning, as I regret to say is the custom of numerous hardened sinners, it is a good idea—whether requisite or not—to put all or a portion of your kennel into exact show trim.

I quite agree with P. Return when he says that distinctions without difference or reason do not appeal to him, and if I thought I could legitimately improve my dog's chance, and were capable of doing so without detection, I should not hesitate a moment, more especially when I know my neighbor would give a good deal only to know how. Small fear of his not using the knowledge when acquired.

For instance, I cannot for the life of me see why you may fine a Bull Terrier's tail and not a white English or a Black and Tan Terrier's. In executing this, take a sharp, strong pair of scissors, stand the animal on his grooming bench and proceed to remove the hair in long straight cuts directly against the lay of it, keeping as much as possible from the sides and more on the bottom. It does not want thinning so much as tapering, consequently it should be close at the tip with hardly any off at the root. In a tail thus treated for the first time, there will be half an inch or more over at the end, and that half-inch removed will make a difference of quite an inch and a half in appearance. So cut it squarely off, fairly close up, and make a point by carefully going round it, this time with the grain.

Perhaps the first attempt may not be a success, but practice makes perfect. When the scissors can do no more, take a lighted taper and carefully go over it in a similar manner, after which well brush and then apply fine sandpaper as a finishing touch. The subsequent washing the dog will receive, if going to a show, will do away with nearly all trace. When the tail is once in good order, it can so be kept by merely singeing, etc., frequently. The shaving of the inside of the ear and an infinitesimal portion of the cheek of a cropped dog or one exposing to view much of the interior gives a very smart and clean appearance, for which no particular instructions are necessary, except to see you don't cut the animal's ear off.

THE FARM.

Improving Hay Lands.

Probably few grain and hay growers in California are yet ready to admit the need of fertilizers for the improvement of their lands and the consequent increasing of their crops, says the Jackson Dispatch. Yet it is a fact that all soils which have been cropped continuously to grain for many years, and especially the poorer soils, now yield much less than formerly; and this fact, taken in conjunction with the undoubted downward tendency of prices for grain, must soon bring the farmer in California squarely up against the question of soil renovation. If lower prices are to prevail, as seems evident, the farmer must raise more to the acre in order to keep ahead.

Practically the question of fertilizers is one of dollars and cents. Will it pay? Will the application of fertilizers to the lands increase the yield sufficiently to pay the cost of the fertilizers and a profit besides?

Grain is not a crop of any importance in the foothill region, but hay is, and the question of increasing the hay crop by the use of fertilizers has been under investigation for some years at the Foothill Agricultural Experiment Station. The results of the earlier experiments have been published in the station reports, included in the general Experiment Station Reports of the University of California. This article is concerned more particularly with experiments of the last three years, and especially with the value of nitrate of soda (chili saltpeter) as a fertilizer for hay. Gratifying results have been obtained from use of this fertilizer, and while caution should always be observed in basing general estimates upon field experiments on small areas well handled, still these results are so striking as to warrant careful consideration by hay growers.

The experiments of the last three years have included the use not only of nitrate of soda, but also of Thomas Phosphate Powder, sulphate of potash, and, in the past season, air-slaked lime. The nitrate, phosphate and potash have been used in different quantities per acre, but in every case have largely increased the yield of hay over that obtained from similar soil without fertilizers. The increase due to the fertilizers has averaged considerable over 100 per cent; this is to say, where fertilized land has yield about 1 1/4 tons per acre, similar land fertilized has given 2 1/2 to 3 tons per acre. But notwithstanding this large increase in yield, due to the use of the three fertilizers together, forming what is known as a complete fertilizer, the actual result in cash was a small loss per acre in the years 1900 and 1901 in every case but one, which figured out a small profit on the fertilizer. In other words, in every instance but one the cost of the complete fertilizer was a little more than the value of the additional hay obtained by its use.

In 1902 the experiments were varied by the use of lime on the granite soil at the rate of one ton per acre, costing, delivered at the Station, $10 per ton. Judging by the crop, it is doubtful in the mind of the writer whether any benefit accrued from the use of the lime; but even with this additional cost per acre, oat hay showed a small cash gain, about $2.50 per acre from the use of the complete fertilizer. Barley hay and wheat hay on the other hand showed a net loss after deducting the cost of the fertilizers and the lime from the additional crop obtained. Leaving the lime out of account, that is, had it not been used, the gain on oat hay by use of the three fertilizers would have been $12.50 per acre; on the wheat hay about $6 per acre; the barley, which was frost nipped, still showing a loss.

Most interesting, however, are the results obtained by the use of nitrate of soda alone as a fertilizer for hay. This in every instance, whether on red or granite soil has yielded a good cash profit on the fertilizer.

In the year 1900 barley hay on red soil fertilized with nitrate at the rate of 260 pounds, costing about $5.10 per acre, yielded 5625 pounds per acre, as against 3000 pounds on similar soil without fertilizer—a gain of 2625 pounds of hay worth $10 per ton in the stack, the current price in the neighborhood, $13.12. Deducting the cost of the nitrate, $5.50, and 25 cents an acre for cost of applying it, this leaves a net cash profit of $7.66 resulting from the use of the nitrate, over and above the ordinary yield of the land. Wheat hay on the same soil on the same amount of nitrate, yielded 5995 pounds per acre, as against 3815 pounds where not fertilized—a gain of 2180 pounds per acre from the nitrate.

In 1901 there was no experiments with nitrate alone.

In 1902 oat hay on granite soil, fertilized with nitrate alone at the rate of 80 pounds per acre yielded 5263 pounds per acre, while the same soil unfertilized gave only 1905 pounds per acre—a gain from the nitrate of 3358 pounds of hay per acre worth, at $10 per ton in stack, $16.80. As the cost of the nitrate including its application was only $1.95 per acre, there was consequently a net profit of $14.85 per acre on it, in addition to the ordinary yield from the land. Another piece of oat hay on granite soil, fertilized with the same amount of nitrate only, yielded 5227 pounds of hay per acre, as against 1742 pounds without fertilizer—a gain of 3485 pounds of hay, or a profit of $15.50 per acre from the nitrate.

The results seem startling, but great care was taken in weighing the hay and measuring the land which was all done by the same two men. The plots of land in these experiments ranged in size from one-eighth of an acre to two acres. The fertilizers were sown broadcast by a careful and experienced man who distributed them as evenly as possible by hand. At harvest time each plot was carefully looked over and an average portion selected and accurately measured. The product of this, cut and raked by hand, was weighed after curing, and the yield per acre calculated from it. Ordinary culture was given the hay, the land being plowed, and the seed sown broadcast and harrowed in.

As said above, too much importance should not be attached to results obtained on small areas during a short period, and it must be remembered that 1902 was an exceptionally good year for hay in this region. Enough has been done, however, to show the great value of nitrate of soda as a fertilizer for hay crops, especially on poor soils such as the granite soil of the Station. Doubtless much depends on the time of applying it. If put on too early in the spring, it is apt to be washed out of the soil by heavy rains being exceedingly soluble. On the other hand, if applied after the grain has ceased to grow vigorously, it will probably not be fully utilized. Two applications, one-half each time, seem better than putting all on at once. This question and that of the relative value of different amounts per acre will be further investigated by the Station.

Salt for Cattle.

The French Government some years ago appointed a commission of scientific men to investigate the subject of the use of salt for cattle, and the conclusions they arrived at were most favorable to its use for farm animals. For milch cows the allowance for each animal daily is 2 ounces; fattening and stall fed oxen 3½ ounces; for fattening pigs, 1½ ounces; for fattening sheep, 1 ounce, and for horses, 1 ounce. For daily use these allowances need not be exceeded, but from our experience of using salt for farm stock we much prefer laying down rock salt in convenient places to adding common salt to the food. When supplied in this way the animals can help themselves, and it may be taken as a certainty that they will take no more of it than may be required. The only objection to giving salt in measured quantities as given above, is, that through forgetfulness the supply will not be given regularly, and, as pointed out already, "the composition of the blood is constant," and therefore the chemical supply should be regular. But without going into the question of the composition of the blood, the feeder of farm animals can always see the advantage of using salt if he will only observe their improved appearance and condition when they are allowed its use regularly. Its action in producing a healthy, mellow skin can be easily noticed in the handling, while the coat of hair is thick and soft. These advantages are worth obtaining, even if we say nothing about improved condition.—Exchange.

Fatness is Not Health.

It has been remarked that some swine breeders mistake fatness for health and vigor. Fat does sometimes indicate thrift, but not always. When a pig has been properly fed on balanced rations and lays on fat it is an indication of vigor, for the animal is getting the most possible out of the food. But when the ration is one of corn only and the pig gets fat the indications are not such as may be trusted to indicate health. The fat comes in that case from an attempt of nature to build up the body through elaborating a large quantity of food. As the food is in that case mostly fat forming a great deal of fatty tissue is elaborated in the work of getting a small amount of muscular tissue.

On full feed and under good conditions sheep should increase two per cent of their live weight weekly. When one lamb weighs a half more than another it will need an equivalent increased weight of food—that is, three big lambs weighing fifty pounds each will consume and require the same quantity as two weighing seventy five pounds each. Thus the rule is that the consumption of food for equal profit is in proportion to the live weight of the animals. In estimating the due quantity of food for a flock the average weight of the sheep should be known as nearly as may be and within reasonable accuracy. Then the food can be easily apportioned to the flock.

Cost of Egg Production.

Bulletin No. 204 of Cornell University Experiment station reports upon experiments made during the winter of 1901-2 to ascertain the food cost of egg production. The co-operation of a number of poultry men who make more or less of a specialty of winter egg production permitted of including 12 flocks of hens aggregating more than 2000 fowls. Several of the pens belonged to the experiment station. There was a remarkable difference in the food cost of the eggs from different flocks, the lowest being 8.7 cents per dozen, and the highest, 33.9 cents per dozen.

The Value of Pedigree.

"My first lesson in the value of a pedigree," says Chas. F. Curtiss to the Illinois Live Stock Breeders' Association, "came to me unexpectedly while I was helping the owners deliver two bunches of feeders to a firm that fed several thousand head annually. One bunch was made up of northern bred cattle in the days before improved blood had been introduced. The others were native bred, from Central Ohio, from superior sires. It was autumn and both bunches had grazed side by side in the same pasture during the whole season. When the first lot went over the scales the owner protested that he was getting short weight and had the scales carefully tested. The weighing again proceeded, with no better results. The better bred cattle was then driven over the scales and the weight recorded, to the astonishment of the first owner, who again thought the weights must be wrong and could not understand how the little ones could weigh more than his big ones. The buyer quickly remarked, 'Blood weighs.' That was all that buyer said, but it set me to thinking and ever since I have been a believer in the value and potency of blood.

I believe in pedigree for man and beast. I would not buy a dog without a pedigree and unless my judgment were at fault I most certainly would not buy a pedigree without a dog. There was a mingling of dry humor and philosophy in the words of two Scotch cattle breeders recently, when, as one led out a bull to be inspected and remarked, "He has a grand pedigree," the other remarked, "I never saw a beast that needed one more."

I believe that every animal, whether man or beast, has a pedigree. I take no stock in the spontaneity doctrine sometimes expressed in the saying that Lincoln and other great men had no ancestry, no pride of pedigree. Men like Lincoln do not originate without blood and without pedigree, obscure and humble though it may have been. It is this kind of blood and this kind of pedigree that has made the American nation great and strong in every crisis and established its supremacy throughout the world.

A pedigree is an authentic record of the ancestors of an animal. It ought to, and sometimes does, contain more than a mere record of ancestry. Pedigrees are very generally overrated or underrated. The error is usually manifest in one extreme or the other. Pedigrees wreck some breeders and make others. In one case pedigree is the key of success, in another the rock upon which the ship founders. To others who as breeders are never made or unmade by anything, and who never attain a creditable rank, pedigree is nothing.

There are several important essentials in every pedigree, and in addition to these the breeder who buys stock with the greatest skill and intelligence needs considerable information not generally found in pedigrees though the pedigree is an aid to the purchaser in gathering this information which in reality constitutes an unwritten part of the pedigree.

The first essential in a pedigree is completeness. A pedigree to be of the highest value must be full and explicit in all particulars. The second is authenticity. Without this the entire pedigree is worthless. The third is the individuality or excellence of ancestry found in the pedigree. All pedigrees are more or less incomplete in regard to this requisite except as they furnish the show ring or prize winning record of the ancestry and the foot note comments.

This affords a fair criterion for judging of individual excellence, but it must necessarily be complete on account of the fact that comparatively few of even the better breeding animals have shown ring records and foot notes are not infrequently made to order by cataloguers.

The next requisite of a good pedigree is integrity and reliability of the breeder, and in importance this deserves to take rank at the top of the list. The pedigree itself naturally affords no information as to this important feature. This must come from other sources and yet it is of such vital consequence as to be virtually an inherent part of the pedigree.

We need to study individuality of breeders as well as individuality of cattle and hogs, or other animals. The next requisite, and closely connected with the one preceding, is the skill of the breeder. The value of the pedigree is affected by the ability as well as the integrity of the breeder. It does not require a careful observer at the sale ring to note the fact that the names of the men appearing as breeders of a line of ancestors in a pedigree can easily make a difference of twenty-five or fifty or one hundred per cent in the selling value of an animal and the breeding value may be affected to even a larger extent.

The last requisite which I will enumerate is prepotency. It is a common and fairly well grounded saying that even the most successful breeders never succeed in getting more than one or two really great sires in a life time. Most of the world's greatest breeders owe their reputation primarily to one such sire. Many breeders do not secure even one in a life time. There are comparatively few strongly prepotent breeding animals.

The only absolute evidence of such prepotency is that which comes from actual test in the breeding herd, although most animals which possess this quality in marked degree have certain unmistakable indications of their strong breeding qualities, and this quality, when found, is quite generally transmitted by the offspring.

Pedigree is a means of good or evil in stock breeding. I have never known a successful breeder of any kind of stock who was not a careful student of pedigrees. Yet the field of breeding is strewn with wrecks and failures due to false standards of the value of pedigree. A pedigree craze followed blindly means certain disaster. There is always great danger of pushing the so-called fashionable and popular lines of breeding to the danger point. Pedigree followed blindly is fanaticism in breeding.

STATE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY. OCCIDENT STAKE OF 1905. TROTTING STAKE FOR FOALS OF 1902.

To be Trotted at the California State Fair of 1905. Entries to Close January 1, 1903, with GEO. W. JACKSON, Secretary, at the office in Sacramento.

ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS ENTRANCE, of which $10 must accompany nomination; $15 to be paid January 1, 1904, $25 to be paid January 1, 1905, and $50 thirty days before the race. The Occident Cup, of the value of $400, to be added by the Society. Mile heats, three in five, to harness. First colt to receive cup and six-tenths; second colt, three-tenths, and third colt one-tenth of the stakes. Five to enter, three to start; otherwise N. T. A. Rules govern. Nominators are not held for full amount of entrance in case colt goes wrong; only forfeit payments made, which relieves you from further responsibility, and declares entry out.

NOTE—This Stake is growing in value each year. In 1898 it was worth $3525; in 1899, $3775; in 1900, $2230; in 1901, $2595; in 1902, $3285. The Stake for 1905 should receive a larger entry and be very valuable. Every breeder should enter in it. A Special Stake will be opened for foals entered originally in this Stake and the Stanford Stake of 1905, that develop a pacing gait, to be contested for in 1905.

Remember, the date of Closing is January 1, 1903.

GEO. W. JACKSON, Secy.

A CHANCE AT $6000 FOR YOUR FOAL BORN THIS YEAR

—IN THE—

Pacific Breeders Futurity Stakes
$6000 Guaranteed

FOR THE GET OF MARES COVERED IN 1901.

STAKE CLOSED OCTOBER 1, 1901

A FEW SUBSTITUTIONS.

A few of the original nominators of Pacific Breeders Futurity Stakes ($6000 guaranteed) for foals of 1902 have advised us that, because of barrenness of the mare or death of the foal, they wish to dispose of their entries. The opportunity therefore presents itself to secure a $6000 engagement for foals of this season. If you own one or more whose dams you neglected to name when entries closed October 1, 1901, you can now secure representation in this Stake, and thus add materially to the value of your foals. The cost is but $23—$3 for the nomination, $5 for the January payment, 1902, $5 for the July payment, 1902, and $10 for the January payment, 1903.

NOTHING MORE TO PAY BEFORE 1904.

When your foal can start in the Two-Year-Old division. Stakes divided as follows: $3250 for Trotting Foals, $1750 for Pacing Foals, $800 to Nominators of Dams of Winners and $900 for Owners of Stallions, money divided as follows:

$2000 for Three-Year-Old Trotters.	$1000 for Three-Year-Old Pacers.
200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Three-Year-Old Trot.	200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Three-Year-Old Pace.
1250 for Two-Year-Old Trotters	750 for Two-Year-Old Pacers.
200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Two-Year-Old Trot	200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Two-Year-Old Pace.
100 to Owner of Stallion, Sire of Winner of Three-Year-Old Trot when mare was bred	100 to Owner of Stallion, Sire of Winner of Three-Year-Old Pace when mare was bred

The Only Opportunity that will be presented to you to secure so rich an engagement at so nominal a cost.

Remittance of $23, with Color, Sex and Breeding of the Foal, on or before January 2d next, is all that is required to add thousands of dollars to the earning capacity of your foal of this season. The few substitutions to be disposed of will be awarded in the order in which remittances are received. Prompt attention will secure for you this rich engagement.

"SAVE-THE-HORSE" TRADE MARK. SPAVIN CURE.

No proof so convincing as the experience of those who have tried it.

908 Fifth av., New York, N. Y.
Gentlemen—We have a very valuable thoroughbred saddle horse that was suddenly afflicted with bog spavin, which developed into a thoroughpin through a hard day's drive of over 50 miles. After three weeks' treatment of "Save-the-Horse," as directed, the horse was cured and is perfectly sound and without a blemish of any kind. The horse was worked while being treated. It certainly is the greatest thing on the market today.

JAMES A. BURDEN,
of Burden Iron Works.

Chatham, Mass., Nov. 21, 1902.

Gentlemen—Three years ago a spavin appeared on one of my horses. I spent considerable time treating it, but it began to grow and finally developed into a bog spavin as big as a hen's egg. Last May I gave the mare a long, hard drive and the following day she refused to rest any weight upon the leg. I about decided her working days were over, when I saw your advertisement and sent for a bottle of "Save-the-Horse." In a few days I saw a marked improvement and in less than three months the mare traveled squarely as ever and ceased to favor leg in any way, and now, after using about four-fifths of bottle swelling is all gone and the cure is complete and I most sincerely recommend your treatment for such cases. Very truly yours, GEO. H. ADAMS.

Normandy, Mo.
Gentlemen—Yours of the 9th inst. at hand, and will gladly testify as to the curative power of "Save-the-Horse." My horse had ringbone, was very lame, but after applying the remedy twice the lameness disappeared. I worked him most of the time. I think "Save-the-Horse" is a grand remedy, and recommend it to my friends.

GIBBS' CELEBRATED PROCESS OF RAPID TAXIDERMY

In Practical Use Over Twenty-Five Years.

Used Everywhere in America. Hundreds of Testimonials. Try and Be Convinced.
Start a Class. Money in It. Be Your Own Taxidermist.

Naturalists, Collectors, Gunners, Anglers, Outers, Boys, Girls, and all others interested in nature and anxious to preserve the specimens taken in wood and field, have all felt the need of a simple method of preservation, which is free from intricacies and inexpensive.

There is a method of rapid taxidermy now in extensive use, which meets the requirements of all amateurs who wish a practical and inexpensive method of preserving the trophies of the outing and collecting trip. This is not the old system of so-called stuffing, so expensive, laborious and disappointing, but a rapid system, which anyone can learn at once and which is guaranteed to give satisfaction.

By this process you may preserve the beautiful plumage of the grouse and woodcock, or the pike's or buck's head, or the showy feathers of the tanager. Boys, girls and all others can do good work and may make money, as mounted heads and birds find a ready sale, and besides you may teach your friends and decorate the school-room, office and dining-room with native birds and other attractions. If you are in doubt, then get your friends to go in with you and start a class, for when several work together there is an advantage and the expense is next to nothing.

On the receipt of $1, cash or stamps, I will send full printed instructions for mounting birds, heads, mammals, etc., and all materials for mounting and preserving specimens—including prepared compound, together with full directions for dressing skins with the hair on for rugs and robes, so that you will not be to the expense of one cent.

Remember, I Guarantee Satisfaction or Money Refunded.

CHIMES
ELECTIONEER'S GREATEST SON

JOTTINGS.

BEN WALKER and the kingmaker Monroe Salisbury, have been making a tour of inspection during the past two weeks and will soon be spending the greater portion of their time at Pleasanton, putting their "finds" in shape for the Grand Circuit of 1903. They already have three or four horses that they think are good enough to try out, but they want four or five more if they can find them. Mr. Walker says there are some pretty good prospects in California but that owners are just a little steep as to prices. He would like to make a little profit himself and is not averse to taking a chance on a likely horse, but to pay as much for a green horse as a 2:10 trotter is worth, makes him feel as though he is carrying the heavy end of the load.

Messrs. Salisbury and Walker spent a day at Palo Alto last Saturday. "They have a great horse in Mendocino" said Mr. Walker to me on his return, and "I look to see many more such trotters as Monte Carlo and Idolita come from out his band of sons and daughters. The dispersal of the horses at this great farm is a calamity. Mr. Salisbury almost wept as he went along the rows of stalls and thought about it. Just as the ideas of the late Senator Stanford are beginning to culminate in the greatest horses ever produced on the farm, the whole establishment is to be abolished. It is a matter for universal regret."

Now that there is a strong probability that the Alameda track will be put out of commission for a year or so by the Government dredgers pumping silt onto the property from the estuary, trainers who have been working their horses there every year are looking around to find a place close to San Francisco where they can train their trotters and pacers. The five-eighths track near Sixteenth street station, Oakland, would be an excellent training spot if there were stable accommodations to be had, but as permission cannot be obtained to erect stalls or sheds on the land, it will probably never be popular for anything but a little Sunday driving. There is some talk of a track being built at Hayward, and I don't know of a locality that offers greater inducements for someone to spend a little money in an investment that will pay. The climate there is ideal, the soil excellent and it is just the right distance from the bay to be out of reach of the strong winds in summer.

Concord, Contra Costa county, has a good new track which will be in shape by early spring for horses to be worked over and offers many inducements for those who want to be away from the crowd, while Vallejo, Napa and San Jose all have excellent training tracks. Pleasanton, the horse centre, will be headquarters for speed next spring as usual, and those who want stall room there had better apply early to avoid the rush.

There are hundreds of Californians engaged in horse breeding to a greater or lesser extent who do not know a good thing when they see it. I hear it on pretty good authority that Eastern parties are negotiating with Geo. A. Davis of Pleasanton for his stallion, Rey Direct 2:10, with the idea of taking him East for stud purposes. While Rey Direct has no colts old enough to race as yet, the size, looks, conformation and speed shown by the youngsters by him at Pleasanton make Eastern visitors open their eyes with wonder when they inspect them. There is not a stallion in California that can show a more uniform lot, and what makes it more remarkable they are out of all sorts of mares. Monroe Salisbury thinks Rey Direct will be one of the greatest producers of the famous family, and when he has been taken away Californians will be kicking themselves because they did not breed to him. Ben Walker is most enthusiastic over Rey Direct's get. He says they are simply grand!

A crusade has commenced up north against bookmaking at harness meetings, and Brother Wisdom of the Rural Spirit is making a good fight, assisted by numerous correspondents from all parts of the country. There is no disputing the fact that bookmaking of the syndicate order, which is the only kind seen at trotting meetings on this Coast, will ruin the sport, and we hope our northern neighbors will see to it that it does not gain a foothold among them. Auctions and mutuels will furnish all the opportunity to gamble that is needed or is necessary.

By the way, the report of the Oregon State Fair of 1901, which has just been published by Secretary Wisdom, shows that it was a complete success. With a large amount of back indebtedness to pay and many heavy expenses in the way of ground rent and repairs, the association paid off everything and has a balance in the treasury. Good management did it, and President Wehrung and Secretary Wisdom deserve a big part of the credit, as they worked hard and intelligently to bring about this result. The association paid out $10,972 in purses, yet the profits on the fair were $2957, and this with an appropriation of but $8000. The stock show was the best ever seen in the north. The association intends offering a $1000 stake for foals of 1901 to trot in 1903, and to inaugurate a stallion stake for the produce of stallions standing for service in 1903. The Board of Directors will meet in February to adopt a premium list and list of purses for the fair of 1903, so that the people of Oregon will know early what they will have offered them to compete for. The Oregon association is very much alive.

TWO GOOD STORIES.

"Haystack" John Davis

"Haystack" John Davis was a peculiar old fellow. If he thought you were all right, he would go out of his way to do you a favor, but, if not, he was an enemy to the core. There was nothing half way about him. He was a man of two extremes, and familiarly known throughout the greater portion of Western New York a quarter of a century ago. "Haystack" John was an old bachelor of three score and ten.

Whether he had been disappointed in love during his younger days or not, nobody knew, but one thing was certain, he seldom looked at a woman. For over half a century he lived in a large square farm house in the town of Aurora, a short distance from Henry C. Jewett's covered mile track, and was considered quite wealthy by the neighbors.

How did he happen to be called "Haystack" John? It is quite a story. During the pioneer days of Erie county the Davis family, though very poor, were thrifty, and engaged in the lumbering business. One winter hay was high and very scarce, and the Henshaw family—big guns in the new neighborhood—had plenty, but refused to sell any to the poor Davis' for their two ox teams, because they would not trust them. It was upon this occasion that John Davis made the solemn vow that some day he'd have hay enough to buy and sell all of the d—n Henshaws in the neighborhood.

Time passed on, and John Davis accumulated property and purchased farms galore. Every year he would stack all of his hay on his place across the road from the Henshaw family residence. He would not sell a pound, although one winter back in the '70's he was offered $10,000 in cash for his village of haystacks.

Strange, but the Henshaws didn't have any hay that year, and when one of them tried to purchase a stack of John Davis, the old chap replied curtly, "not for a million dollars." Alas, the chicken had come home to roost! He gave the poor farmers in the neighborhood privilege to come and get all the hay they wanted, and took long-time notes, without interest, in payment.

"Haystack" John was a familiar character at the races, long ago, and owned several good half-mile track performers at the local fairs, including the favorite trotters Frank Root and Molly Davis, both of which could step a mile to a 70-pound sulky close to 2:30. He was an old-time friend of Lute Titus, Monroe Salisbury, Rus Smith, C. J. Hamlin, C. J. Wells, Dr. Wm. Somerville and other corner stones of the trotting history of Buffalo. Over 20 years ago he was instantly killed by being thrown from a buggy by a runaway horse, and his funeral was one of the largest ever held in East Aurora.

The First Real Pacing Ghost.

The first real pacing ghost was the gray gelding Billy Hopper, owned in Buffalo thirty years ago. The Year Book does not credit him with a record, though it should be close to 2:20, made in a match race for $500 against the chestnut gelding, Sorrel Frank 2:24, over the Buffalo track, July 29, 1876. The greatest rivalry existed between Dick Corriston of the Hydraulics and Jim Jamison of the Terrace, as to the speed of their pacers, but Billy Hopper was usually at the wire first. He could pace a two-minute clip for a short distance, and had he been favored with the care and expert training of the present day, his name would appear in the select list of old-time celebrities. The first match race Sorrel Frank won, and the Jamison party were in high glee. Dick Corriston was a dead game sport, however, and made another match at once for September 11th, the same year. The late Ed Burton, a local driver of considerable reputation, held the ribbons behind Billy Hopper, and allowed Sorrel Frank to take the first heat in about 2:25. Still the gray ghost sold favorite in the auction pools, whereupon Corriston remarked sarcastically:

"By the spooks of the Hydraulics, the beaten boss is selling first choice. Did yez ever hear the like of that?"

There was some talk of lynching Burton, but he maintained that it was all right, to make the betting better. He let go of Billy Hopper's head in the next three heats, however, and won in fast time as he pleased. The Corriston followers won a barrel of money and painted the town red that night.

At about this time, Mr. E. H. Webbing, of Brantford, Ont., one of the leading horsemen of Canada, made a trip to England. He was informed that there was a pacing mare in London called a world beater, and upon his return, he visited Buffalo to find her match.

Dr. Sam Somerville's place on the Terrace was the recognized headquarters for snaps in horseflesh, and Webbing dropped in there. The doctor had purchased Billy Hopper in the meantime, and intimated to his Canadian friend that there was not a horse in old England that could keep within shouting distance of his gray ghost. That afternoon Mr. Webbing was convinced of the fact, too, by a trial mile close to 2:17, over the old Buffalo track. He purchased the gray gelding that evening, and shipped him over the ocean on the first steamer.

Salvini, the actor, gained international prominence about this time, and Billy Hopper was re-christened in his honor. The English gentlemen watching Webbing speeding Salvini occasionally, intimated that he had better call him Locomotive, for he could beat the cars!

A match was finally made with the world beater of London, and on the day of the race thousands of people turned out to see the great event.

The London mare won the first heat in a jog, and the shout went up: "Bring over another Yankee pacer. You're no good!"

So confident were the bookmakers of the sure thing, they posted odds of 100 pounds to seven pounds against Salvini. Mr. Webbing and his friends took all of the short ends, and in the next heat orders were given to "let go of Salvini's head."

At the word "go" the gray ghost went to the front and captured the pole like a cyclone. How he did pace, for he was fresh, and a whirlwind for one heat. The London mare finished more than two distances behind the flag, and to this day some of the old time sports are wondering how it happened. They were so dumfounded they could hardly speak, and intimated something like it being a d—n Yankee trick!

This is how Mr. E. H. Webbing of Brantford won money enough to live in luxury. Salvini, or old Billy Hopper, was sold to an English gentleman for a bunch of gold. Strange, too, but Sorrel Frank, his old Buffalo foe, was sold to an Englishman, and the two pacers were neighbors thereafter.—Frank G. Smith in Horse World.

Los Angeles Jockey Club Will Race.

Manager J. W. Brooks of the Los Angeles Jockey Club arrived in San Francisco from the South Thursday of this week, and made the following statement relative to the hitch over the proposed forty days' meeting at Los Angeles next month:

"I have never made application for a license for the Los Angeles Jockey Club. I simply sent a telegram asking the conditions required to secure a license. Before I ask horsemen to take part in the coming meeting at Los Angeles I will be able to assure them that they will not be outlawed upon any other tracks in America except those governed by the California Jockey Club. I will deposit in bank at Los Angeles $75,000 to insure the payment of all purses. No purse shall be less than $300; all stakes, added money. The betting ring will be absolutely open to any reputable bookmaker at a stated price per day. The judge and starter will be officials who act upon the most prominent tracks in America. There can be no harness race, State Fair nor any racing given in Los Angeles over the Agricultural Park track without my consent. The lease is in my name individually."

The Handy Pocket Diary for 1903,

That the Spohn Medical Co., manufacturers of Spohn's Liquid Distemper Cure, are sending out, is a most desirable book for horsemen to have to make records of their entries, engagements, etc., under the proper dates, thus avoiding confusion. It also contains maps, giving railroad cities and a lot of other matter and valuable information to make routes and circuits. The first edition has been exhausted, and all trainers and drivers, all owners and superintendents of stock farms, who will at once send their names and postoffice addresses and the address for the next year if possible, will receive by mail the Handy Pocket Diary FREE. Write plainly your address to Spohn Medical Co., chemists and bacteriologists, Goshen, Indiana.

Prairie Dell Farm.

Spohn Medical Co., TOPEKA, KAN., Nov. 29, 1901.
Gentlemen: Please send me two more bottles of Spohn's Cure, for which I enclose $1. I consider it the best remedy for all Distemper and throat trouble I have ever used.
Yours respectfully, R. J. LEE.

Strike!—if they don't give you Jackson's Napa Soda

Notes and News.

Remember the Occident Stake.

Occident Stake of 1905 closes January 1st, for foals of 1902.

Budd Dobie is sojourning down East, visiting friends and relatives.

Dan R. 2:04 will probably be in Ed. Geers' stable again next year.

Scott Hudson bought Gail Hamilton 2:11½, for Dan O'Dell of New York.

C. W. Welby has taken his good pacer Yukon 2:14 to the Alameda track.

And now the news comes from Memphis that Direct Hal 2:04½, will be raced next year.

Ed. Geers, assisted by Ben White and C. E. Walker, is training nearly fifty trotters and pacers at Memphis.

Belleflower 2:12½, the last daughter of Electioneer and Beautiful Bells, will be bred to Ashland Wilkes 2:17½.

Scott Hudson and Ed Benyon performed the remarkable feat the past season of each putting four in the 2:10 list.

William Penn 2:07½ was an unrepresented sire previous to 1902. Now he has seven in the list. This is starting with a flourish.

Don't ever neglect an opportunity to enter your colt in at least one good stake. It is money well invested even if you don't race him.

Henry Pierce, the owner of the Santa Rosa Stock Farm who has been seriously ill for weeks, is, we are happy to say, rapidly convalescing.

It requires about as much skill, patience and training to make a first class show ring winner as it does to develop and condition a Grand Circuit winner.

Ben Chaboya will probably go to Pleasanton after the Oakwood Park sale next month with a string of horses which he will train for the circuit of 1903.

L. V. Harkness will sell all of his coach horses, including Indre, the imported coach stallion, and in the future confine his breeding operations to trotters.

Henry Sanders, brother of Millard Sanders, will spend the winter here in California. He will probably take a few prospects back with him in the spring.

Klatawah 2:05½, the world's champion three year old pacer, goes to the Danforth Farm, Washington, Ill., to take the place of the deceased Heir-at-Law 2:05½.

Mr. R. Niles, of Witter, Lake county, has two full brothers and a full sister to Lady Waldstein that he intends to develop before long. They are all good prospects.

Mart Demarest, driver of Prince Alert 2:00, is wintering at Hot Springs, Ark. The waters are proving a great benefit to his leg, which was broken at Readville in 1901.

Seventeen head of young Electrites from the Lomo Alto Farm of Col. Henry Exall trained by John Phippin, sold for an average of $418 at the Fasig-Tipton sale.

Wm. G. Layng, the well known auctioneer, will hold a number of trotting sales after the first of January. Among those to be sold are a number of well known trotters and road horses.

Pedigree is only the prophecy, the promise of value in a certain direction. Performance is the prophecy fulfilled—the evidence of ability to pay what is promised in the pedigree.

You can't win the Occident Stake unless you enter your colt in it. The foals of 1902 must be entered January 1st if they trot in it in 1905. It will be worth about three thousand dollars to the winner.

The Board of Review of the National Trotting Association, at their meeting last week, fined the Youngstown, O., Fair Company $100 for permitting suspended horses to perform over its track after notice.

Have your stallion mentioned in the special edition of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN that is to be issued January 10th. Breeders will be looking for its publication to see what horses will be in the stud in California next year.

Lecco 2:09½, now located at Pleasanton, was a great race horse in 1899 when he went through the Grand Circuit and won nearly every race in which he started. We believe he was first five times and twice second out of eleven starts.

Ed Benyon, trainer for the Walnut Stock Farm, Lexington, Ky., contradicts the report that Ferenó 2:07½ will be allowed to rest up until spring of 1904. He says that he will begin on her again next spring, and expects to drive her, as well as Ozanam 2:08, a mile as good as 2:06 next year.

The official announcement concerning John A. McKerron 2:05½ is that he will winter at Walnut Hall Farm, Donerail, Ky., and be trained next year by Edward Benyon and marked as fast as possible. He will do no stud service.

E. T. Bedford, Brooklyn, one of the Standard Oil magnates, who drove York Boy and Bema to a matinee pole record of 2:12½, has purchased a third trotter and intends to next season try for the triple team record of 2:14, now held by Belle Hamlin, Globe and Justina.

S. H. Hoy, of Winters, has purchased from the estate of the late George Morris of the same place, the two year old colt by Altamont out of Algenie, the dam of Kelly Briggs 2:10½. This colt is a great prospect and although hardly broken as yet, is rapidly learning how to step and is very handsome.

There seems to be a difference of opinion in regard to the dash system for trotting meetings. Some are strongly in favor of them, but others who have had considerable experience in campaigning trotters do not think highly of that system. Time will tell to what extent they can be profitably introduced.

Mode Nichol of Lexington has sold to a millionaire Detroit horseman, through M. S. Johnson, of the former city, a pair of six year old geldings, both by sons of Electioneer, that can trot in 2:24. The price is $4000, the largest ever paid for a similar team at Lexington. They are seal browns and sixteen hands high.

The sales of work and draft horses belonging to E. B. & A. L. Stone, that were held at Elmhurst on the 6th and 13th instants by auctioneer Louis Schaffer of Oakland, were successful in every way. The demand was good and bidding lively. Large draft mares were eagerly sought after by the bidders and brought good prices.

C. K. G. Billings has recently added to his stable the following horses: Willard T. 2:24½, trial 2:09; Cabalist 2:19½ by Highwood; the three year old colt Pat Henry 2:14½ by John G. Carlisle; the four year old pacer Babe Allerton 2:17½, trial 2:11½, by Allerton; Charley Mac 2:07½ by McKinney, and Home Circle 2:08½ by Axtell.

Lice and worms are two of the worst enemies from which young horse stock is liable to suffer, especially in the country. Either of these pests will cause so much suffering as to seriously check the growth of the youngsters. Watch the youngsters closely for such pests, and begin a war of extermination upon their first appearance.

Students in osteology at the Kentucky State College, at Lexington, last week, dug up the bones of the famous sire, George Wilkes 2:22, at Colonel William L. Simmons' Ash Grove Farm, and the bones will be mounted and placed in the museum at the college. Colonel Simmons presented the bones to the college. They were in a splendid state of preservation.

The contest for championship honors as sire of 2:30 performers in 1902 is close between Gambetta Wilkes 2:19½, Axtell (3) 2:12 and Ashland Wilkes 2:17½, but Gambetta Wilkes won with nineteen to his credit. Axtell comes next with seventeen, and Ashland Wilkes, a good third, with fifteen. Gambetta Wilkes is a son of George Wilkes, and the other two are grandsons.

Monroe Salisbury and Ben Walker visited Palo Alto Stock Farm last Saturday on a prospecting tour among the many good youngsters at that celebrated speed nursery. Superintendent Covey showed them around and they were much pleased with what they saw. Ben Walker will probably campaign Monte Carlo 2:09½ and a few others for Mr. Salisbury next season.

The dog circus and menagerie that wintered at the San Jose track last winter are again quartered at that place, and fast quarters are easy and numerous when the horse trainers who are stabling at the track take the colts out for exercise. The young trotters and pacers may not always stick to their gait, but they make the turn into the homestretch at a rate of speed that is very encouraging.

James Berryman, who has had much experience as a trainer and driver of trotters and pacers, is now located at the Alameda track and is prepared to train horses for the track and road. Mr. Berryman is one of the most careful men with colts and will pay especial attention to youngsters intrusted to his care. Letters addressed to him at the Alameda race track will receive prompt attention.

Palo Alto Stock Farm will hold another sale during the latter part of next month. Fifty-three head of standard bred trotters are being made ready for this sale. There are over two hundred horses remaining at this celebrated farm, but they will probably be entirely closed out during the year. The coming sale, which will be held at the Occidental Horse Exchange, will give California horsemen an opportunity to get the choicest of blood at their own prices.

J. M. Johnson, one of the liberal buyers at the late New York sale, is mayor of Calais, Me. He has heretofore been very fortunate in his investments. He bought Bingen 2:06½ when he was a yearling, and after showing a mile in 2:12½ with him as a two year old, he sold him for $12,000 to J. Malcolm Forbes of Boston. He also sold Todd, son of Bingen, for $4000 as a two year old, and his yearling sister, Miss Todd, brought him $4000. Mr. Johnson brought nineteen of the Village Farm offerings, including the sensational yearling The Sovereign by The Beau Ideal, for which he paid $1100.

Fred Brooker, of North Yakima, Washington, writes us that if California has a good circuit of harness racing with liberal purses next year, he will race Chester Abbott 2:09½ and a trotter here. If not he will race over the Northwest circuit unless they give the harness men the soup and the runners the pie, in which event he states that Chester Abbott 2:09½ and Senator 2:26½ will be seen pulling a mowing machine with Brooker up.

In figuring on the trotters liable to be in the front rank next year it will not do to overlook the four year old colt, Walnut Hall 2:09½ by Conductor. In his race at Memphis this colt was separately timed a mile in 3:06½, a performance of such extraordinary merit that he may well be put down as a coming sensation. He is an unusually good looking colt and is bred very much like Major Delmar 2:05½, being by a son of Electioneer out of a mare by a son of George Wilkes.

Venus N. 2:20½, a handsome mare by Contention, a son of Director, is offered for sale at a very reasonable price. This mare is owned by a young man who desires to enter the University of California next year and for that reason desires to sell her. She never had but four weeks' work and was given a record of 2:20½ at the Napa fair last year. She is a very sweet going pacer, a perfect driver on the road and absolutely sound. She is capable of three heats in 2:15 or better with training. See advertisement.

The American trainer, T. J. Holland, formerly of Los Angeles, Cal., who has been in Belgium for several years, training with success, sustained a severe injury in a race there recently. Three ribs were broken and he was so badly bruised that he was picked up for dead. However, he came to and is now convalescent. Trainer Holland has been just as successful as usual the past season and has won most of the valuable trotting races given in Belgium with the ex-American mare Gardamine by Don Cossack 2:28.

James Hobart Moore has added the hackney stallion Fiery Dane, by Danesfort, to his string. Fiery Dane was sold by Henry Fairfax, of Aldie, Va., for about $5000. He is a three year old and a very showy actor. He was placed second in his class by the judges to Gribthorpe Playmate, who was later adjudged to be the best hackney stallion in the show. Mr. Fairfax, in 1892, sold Matchless of Londesborough, to Dr. W. Seward Webb for $15,000 in horse show week. He also sold Aldie to Mitchell Harrison for $6000.

The United States government has taken measures to protect the horses used on the star-mail routes and other governmental work and has adopted a new section in the provisions for contracts requiring contractors and drivers to keep the horses they use in good condition. The order will effect 100,000 horses used on government contracts in the west and thousands of drivers. Cruel treatment while in the service will be considered cause for imposing a fine on the contractor or requiring the dismissal of the driver.

For some time past the Spirit of the Times, a New York sporting paper that has been in existence for the past 70 years, has been conducted under a receivership. In order to close up the affairs of the paper, the same was sold to the highest bidder two weeks ago, D. J. Campau, president of the Detroit Driving Club, and proprietor of the Chicago Horseman, being the purchaser at $4100. Mr. Campau is a successful business manager and there is little doubt but he can make the historic old journal take on a new lease of prosperity.

Det Bigelow sold last week for Geo. R. Hoppin, of Yolo, a pair of yearling fillies by Falrose. The purchaser was Mr. T. F. Leonard, of Crystal Lake, Ill., and the price paid was $600. One of the fillies is a trotter and the other a pacer, the former a seal brown and the other bay in color. Both are of good size and very handsome. Walter Mastin broke the fillies to drive and they both showed speed that warrants the expectation of low records in the future for both of them. The dams of these fillies are full sisters to Gen. Logan, sire of Miss Logan 2:06½.

The Trotter and Pacer of December 11th says: Chas. Doble, brother to Budd, was at the Garden last week. He has been living in Binghampton, N. Y., for the past twenty-six years, nine of which he spent in the employ of Gen. B. F. Tracy. The remainder of the time he has been carrying on a training stable of his own, and is now handling the following horses with records made over half-mile tracks: Frank Yocum 2:11½, Jack D. 2:11½, Connie 2:15½, Annie M. 2:16½, Ozette 2:15½, Orlando 2:24½, Susie S. 2:24½, Dorfmont 2:15½. He bought a four year old by Expectation that has trotted in 2:29½ at the Old Glory sale and shipped him to Binghampton. He states he has a three year old by Invoice that has trotted a mile on a half-mile track in 2:16½ in a race to educate him. He has followed the track for thirty-two years.

The following is a clipping from an English exchange: "Much interest was evinced in a trotting match which took place from Middlewich to Chester, a distance of 21 miles, recently. The contestants, who are well known in sporting circles, were Mr. Sam Taylor, Winsford, and Mr. Peter Henshall, Knutsford, the stakes being £25 a side. It was an excellent match, neither at any time having much advantage. Mr. Henshall, however, reached the destination first, his opponent not being more than twenty or thirty yards behind. The winner's time was a little over 1 hour 20 minutes." The winner was a Welsh bred pony, 13.3 hands high. This same pony recently trotted 21 government miles on the high road in 1 hour and 17 minutes on a wager that she could not trot the distance in 83 minutes.

SACRAMENTO, Dec. 12, 1902.

BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN—We have no colts here entered in the Breeders $6000 Futurity Stake No. 1. Sacramento breeders seem to have been asleep when that valuable stake was first brought out, but for Stake No. 2 we have a number of nominations, so that while we cannot hand it back to Fresno and Woodland that our yearlings are "stepping eighths in 21 seconds" and so on, we can challenge them or any other community to show colts with us that will be yearlings when the ides of December have passed into history.

Of the colts entered in Futurity No. 2 that I have seen, Mrs. C. M. Callendine, an enthusiastic lady breeder, has Lady Caretta, a chestnut filly by Nutwood Wilkes out of Abbie Woodnut, dam of Diawood 2:11 and Abdine 2:17, that she thinks just "toosweetly, lovely." She also has a colt by the same sire out of Lady Keating by Stam B, a pattern for any one to look at.

Then Hi Hogoboom has the grandly bred filly by Iran Alto out of Bell Bird, for which I do not need to add a word other than she looks like her breeding.

L. A. Todhunter has a filly by Zombro out of The Silver Bell by Silver Bow, already a great, big, almost two year old looking miss, that if I don't miss my guess will carry the two year olds around the ring at a clip that has not been seen for some time. He also has a fine, strong, compact, well built filly by Zombro out of a mare by Sidney that it would be unwise to overlook.

S. N. Mitchell has a black or brown filly by Zombro out of Jeanny Winston by old Altamont that is of good size and "out of sight" for style. Mr. Mitchell occasionally takes her out on the track tied to the thill of the cart with an extra line to hold her in check (with the cart hitched to her mother to do the pulling), and when she goes by the grand stand the boys all stare and look pleased and say, "she is all right, old boy."

Of the older horses there are so few here now that it is scarcely worth while to mention them.

S. C. Tryon and sons are jogging a few, among them two coming two year olds that Vet purchased at the Palo Alto sale last fall, and they move like trotters. They also have Azmoor in winter quarters and the old horse looks like a youngster. They are also wintering a big young horse generally known as Jumbo. He is by Silver Bow and is looking good.

Fred Perkins has his young stallion Henry Diston by Athadon, dam Lustreen by Onward in his private barn at home for the present. He will be at the track after the first of January. Any one looking at this fellow now as he is beginning to get into his age form must say there are but few such looking horses on the Pacific Coast or anywhere else. So no more until there is more to say. Yours, etc.,

A. N. O'KASHENAL.

The Denmark Tribe.

Through all the years that I have devoted to the study of the horse, his history, and the methods of his breeding, there is no single family about which I have taken a deeper interest than the famous Denmark family. In some of their qualities they have proven themselves one of the most desirable equine families on the face of the earth, and are to this hour the most popular tribe on the continent, judging from the immense numbers sold from Kentucky to all the leading cities, at big prices. They class in their clan as does Rysdyke's Hambletonian, Mambrino Chief, Pilot, Clay, American Star, Lexington, Glencoe, Duroe, jmp. Diomed, Sir Archy, Boston, Justin Morgan, etc., etc. in theirs.

For a great many years the state of Kentucky has been famous as the birth place of the handsome saddle horse, and it has become a proverb that the perfect saddle horse comes from that State, and is a descendant of Denmark Chief. Old Denmark seems to bear toward saddle horses, the same relation which the renowned Rysdyke's Hambletonian bears toward the trotting families.

Old Denmark (as I have been told by such gentlemen as Charles and Russell Raley, the late Dr. L. Herr, and other gentlemen fully as prominent) was a four-mile race horse of the highest and purest lineage. He was by imp. Hedgeford, his dam Betsy Harrison, by Aratus, second dam by Old Potomac, third dam by imp. Saltram, fourth dam by Old Wildair, fifth dam by Driver. He was noted not merely as a great race horse, but for his grand trotting action, wonderful beauty, lofty high action, grand carriage, good feet and legs and intelligence.

A pacing horse from Canada called Cockspur was taken to Kentucky and bred to a mare by the thoroughbred Dick Singleton. The produce was a mare that was stinted to Denmark, and produced Black Denmark, later known as Gaines Denmark. This horse never met his equal in a saddle show ring, and from his loins came the great Denmark saddle horse tribe. (He afterwards was killed by falling into a well.) At that time he was stable companion of Mambrino Chief and made many seasons in Kentucky. It is a well known fact that Gaines Denmark, as well as Mambrino Chief, served the Gano mare (dam of Mambrino Patchen and Lady Thorn) in 1861. The more I saw of Mambrino Patchen and his characteristics in various points, the more the Denmark family was "mirrored to me."

From what I could learn of his male descendants Gaines Denmark's greatest sons were Sumpter Denmark, known as the Goddard horse; Star Denmark, Washington Denmark, Kentucky Chief and Denmark Chief. Denmark Chief's dam was by Veach's Highlander, a son of Blackburn's Whip. The Highlander family were famous for their beauty united with speed, endurance and good disposition. Denmark Chief, as I remember him, was a rich dark brown (or a black, as many would describe his color), with tan muzzle and flanks. About 15½ hands high, with broad chest, fine pointed ears, perfect feet and legs, head clean and delicate, and remarkably wide and flat between the eyes, showing a wonderful intelligence, which had perfect control over his fiery disposition.

In all the saddle horse gaits this noted tribe are as perfect and natural in the trot, rack, foxtrot, running walk, canter, singlefoot or jumping as a duck in the water. A motion or word from their rider is well understood by them. Denmark showed natural trotting speed in harness like all of this noted family. The Denmarks were never developed for great speed as they were considered too valuable saddle animals. Perhaps there never was a family that transmitted its excellencies with such uniformity and had such natural faculties as great show or park saddle horses.

At the St. Louis, Mo., Fair in the fall of 1874, they offered a large premium for the finest animal for all purposes without regard to sex. There were many entries for this class and over twenty handsome horses prancing in the ring. Here this great stallion met his first defeat, but as he galloped out of the ring he was followed and cheered by the large audience.

Every branch of this noted family has its characteristic merits and the old-time Kentucky breeders did not say, as is being said by many at this hour: "Let us try and get the best and discard the inferior," as this family had no inferior ones to discard.

Yours,

SAMUEL GAMBLE.

December 12, 1902.

P. S.—Looking over my old books and papers to-day I found an old-time stallion advertisement that was presented to me by a friend and old-time horseman, John Minchen, of Goshen, New York, and thinking it might interest your readers send you a copy:

The celebrated Full-Bred Turf Horse, BISHOP'S HAMBLETONIAN, will be let to mares the ensuing season at the stables of Dr. Daniel Steward, in the Town of Goshen, County of Orange, at Ten Dollars the season and Fifteen Dollars to insure a foal. The money for the season to be paid by the first of June next; and for the mares insured the money to be paid when it is ascertained the mares are with foal. The season will end on the 15th of June, 1914. Any person parting with his mare before the usual time of foaling must make it appear she was not with foal or pay insurance. Bishop's Hambletonian was sired by Old Messenger out of General Cole's full-bred mare Pheasant. Pheasant was sired by the imported horse Shark. Her dam by the imported horse Medley; two as good horses as ever were imported into America, and were as good as any of their time in England. Bishop's Hambletonian is a bright bay, full 15 hands and one inch high, rising 8 years old; for movement, carriage and just points we dare assert that he is not surpassed by any. His colts are principally bay, large, bony and of good figure.

Dam of Kelly Briggs for Sale.

A great broodmare is advertised for sale in this issue of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. This is Algenie, the dam of that wonderfully game and fast pacer Kelly Briggs 2:10½, and Baby Button 2:20, one of the fastest of the many good ones owned in the Sacramento Driving Club. Algenie was bred by the late Dr. Hicks. Her sire is Algona, the sire of the champion Flying Jib 2:04. Her dam is Gazelle, an own sister to the great mare Grace by Buccaneer. Grace is the dam of Daedalion 2:11, Creole 2:15 and Eagle 2:19½, and two or three more that will be in the list as soon as they are started in a race. The second dam of Algenie is that great mare Mary by Flaxtail that is also the dam of Lettie, dam of Welcome 2:10½, Wayland W. 2:12½ and Maud Singleton 2:28½. Algenie, herself a great broodmare, is a member of one of the greatest broodmare families of which we have any record. She is now in foal to Bayswater Wilkes and the produce will be an own brother or sister to Kelly Briggs 2:10½. Algenie was never trained or raced but has been in the broodmare ranks for several years. She is very strong and vigorous and a regular producer. Mr. S. H. Hoy of Winters recently purchased her two year old by Altamont that is a great prospect. Algenie was owned by the late Geo. T. Morris, of Winters, whose death necessitated the offering of all his horses for sale.

New Memphis Jockey Club's Stakes.

The New Memphis Jockey Club will close on January 3d ten stakes, as will be seen by an advertisement in another part of the paper, and the management wish to draw the attention of the horse men to the increase in value of the purses and four of the stakes.

No purse will be offered with less than $400 added and handicaps will have $600 added. This club was about the first club in the country to entirely do away with the guarantee stakes and adopt the added money system. And to Memphis is due much of the credit for the advance in the value of the stakes in the West. Last spring, with a good many $300 purses, Memphis distributed in twenty-one racing days, $73,215, an average daily distribution of $3486.42 and this should be increased this spring to about $3800 a day. Horsemen never had a better friend than this same Memphis club.

Of the four stakes that are increased in value, three will be decided this coming spring. The Montgomery Handicap is increased from $2000 to $2500 added and should be worth $4500, and in addition the club also adds a valuable silver cup for the winner; this cup will be worth $500. The Cotton Steeplechase Stakes is increased from $1000 to $1500 added and should be worth at least $2500. This is one of the most valuable races given for jumpers in the West. The management intend to make jumping races one of the features of the meeting and will give three jumping races a week if there are enough jumpers here to justify. The Memphis Stakes (for two year olds), five furlongs, is increased from $1000 added to $1500 added and should be worth at least $2500 to the winner.

The Tennessee Oaks for 1904 is increased from $1500 to $2000 added and is one of the most valuable races given for three year old fillies in the country; estimated value $5000. The Tennessee Derby, $3000 added, also closes at the same time, that is, the Derby for 1904, and should be worth about $7000. There is no penalty or allowance in either the Derby or the Oaks. The Derby and Oaks to be decided in 1903 closed last January, and both received quite a good list of entries from Burns & Waterhouse, and we sincerely hope they will be represented in both races and their chance of winning is as good as anyone in either race. Of the other stakes that will close January 3d, the added money remains the same.

The Gaston Hotel Stakes for two year olds (colts and geldings), four furlongs; the Ardelle Stakes for two year olds (fillies), four furlongs; each of these stakes have $1000 added and should be worth $2200. The Hotel Gayoso Stakes is for three year olds, $1000 added. This stake will be decided the latter part of the meeting and is a consolation race for those beaten in the Derby and the Oaks and for those that were not eligible to either. Would also be an excellent try-out for the Kentucky Derby. The conditions of the Kentucky Derby penalize the winner of a three year old event of the value of $1500, 5 lbs. This race is made with the idea of avoiding this penalty. The Peabody Hotel Handicap has $1000 added and should be worth $2500; nine furlongs. Tennessee Brewing Co. Stakes (selling) $1000, seven furlongs; estimated value $2500.

Early Castration.

In some sections of the country breeders are practicing the castration of colts when weanlings. The reason assigned is the minimum loss incident to the operation performed at that age. It is also contended that emasculation performed at an early age improves the appearance and stimulates early maturity. The practice is objectionable, as it gives the animal too effeminate an appearance. The gelding should possess considerable crest and display masculinity to sell well for a roadster. The former practice among breeders was to castrate colts when two years old, allowing them to run entire until their two year old form developed the necessary crest and improved the general personality of the youngster. Entire colts as two year olds display more substance, bone and substantial conformation than when gelded as weanlings or yearlings. Colts give no annoyance until two years old and the operation does not have to be performed until that age to prevent the colt from doing mischief. To emasculate a colt at too early an age makes it effeminate in general conformation. The head and neck are delicate, the bones light and the ensemble lacks impressiveness and personality of masculinity. For the market, to develop the most popular form, castration should not be performed until the animal is two years old; then the equine form of pronounced masculinity is established.

A lot of McMurray carts just received. You need one right now to work your colts in this winter. Call at the Kenney Manufacturing Company, 531 Valencia street and take a look at these carts and other first-class vehicles they have for sale.

A Sensation in Racing Affairs.

Last Monday the New California Jockey Club of this city issued a proclamation that caused a sensation in running horse circles in this State. In this edict, the club aforesaid assumed control over running racing in this State after the plan of The Jockey Club in New York, and claimed exclusive control of all running meetings in the way of granting or refusing licenses to tracks, jockeys and trainers, excepting, however, the meetings of the State Agricultural Society and the district fair associations from the jurisdiction.

As is known to all horsemen Mr. J. W. Brooks and his associates of the Los Angeles Jockey Club had already advertised a meeting to open in that city about January 24th, and this stand of the New California Jockey Club will make the Los Angeles association and all who race at its meetings outlaws as far as racing in San Francisco is concerned unless dates are granted it by the San Francisco organization. Of course the New California Jockey Club will not grant dates except during the time in which there is no racing at Ingleside or Oakland and if the Los Angeles meeting opens a race war will be on in California with one portion of the State arraigned against the other.

That Los Angeles is an ideal winter racing point there is no doubt, the sunny days there during the winter months outnumbering those of San Francisco by two to one. It is claimed, however, by many here, that the proposed meeting in the Southern California metropolis will be a bookmaker's meeting with a syndicate handling the betting, and that for this reason it is not a meeting to be encouraged by those who have the best interests of racing at heart. This accusation, however, is indignantly denied by Mr. Brooks, who says that there will be an open ring at Los Angeles, where any reputable bookmaker may cut in, and that every effort will be made to have the sport clean and honest.

This assumption of complete authority over California running racing by the New California Jockey Club may lead to the establishment of another track near San Francisco, and a repetition of the bitter fight that was formerly waged between rival factions, and which it was hoped the purchase of the Ingleside and Tanforan properties had put an end to.

It is very doubtful if the Los Angeles people can secure many horses from San Francisco to race at their meeting, as few owners will care to risk outlawry by such a course, especially as they will not antagonize anyone if they remain here.

The rules which were adopted by the New California Jockey Club and which have been the talk of the running horsemen during the past week are as follows:

First—The New California Jockey Club claims jurisdiction over any running race meeting held within California. This, however, does not include meetings held by the California State Agricultural Society or county fairs.

Second—Also exclusive power in their discretion to grant, refuse or revoke licenses to race courses, trainers and jockeys.

Third—When a race course applies for a license, the names of those who are to act as officials must be submitted to and approved by the stewards of the New California Jockey Club before a license is granted.

Fourth—It is within their power to inquire into and deal with any matter relating to racing, and to rule off any persons concerned in fraudulent practices on the turf.

Fifth—They shall have power to hear cases on appeal, as provided for in the rules, and their decision shall be final.

Sixth—It shall assign dates of all meetings and races.

Seventh—At any race meeting held within the jurisdiction of the New California Jockey Club there shall be present one of its stewards, under whose direction such meeting shall be held, and in case of his inability to attend, or in case of an emergency, the Board of Stewards is hereby vested with power and authority to appoint some other person to act in his stead.

Eighth—The New California Jockey Club, in granting licenses for race meetings, shall have the power to name the size of the purses, the number of races to be held daily, and prohibit any syndicate booking. Any race course holding a running race meeting, outside the State Agricultural and county fairs, without a license from the New California Jockey Club will be considered an outlaw; and any owner, trainer or jockey racing on such outlawed track or tracks will also be considered outlaws.

Ninth—When there is no specified penalty for a violation of the rules or of the regulations of the course, the stewards of the New California Jockey Club shall have power to disqualify, fine, suspend, expel or rule off.

Tenth—If any case occur which is not, or which is alleged not to be, provided for in the rules, it shall be determined by the stewards of the New California Jockey Club in such manner as they think just and conformable to the usages of the turf.

Eleventh—Any meeting held under a license from the New California Jockey Club must be run and conducted under the New California Jockey Club rules.

On a hot day drink Jackson's Napa Soda lemonade and be refreshed.

Lord Derby Will Try for Record.

Lord Derby 2:05½ is to be especially prepared to beat the world's trotting record next season. He has on several occasions shown so much speed that his owner, E. E. Smathers, is confident that he will some day in the near future be able to eclipse the wonderful performance of Cresceus, the mighty son of Robert McGregor.

In his wagon races last season with The Monk, Lord Derby showed that he has a burst of speed equalled only by that of the championship himself. He has trotted quarters better than 30 seconds, and is credited with going a half-mile better than one minute. This was at Memphis in the race for the Memphis Challenge Cup, in which Lord Derby won two straight heats. In the second heat Lord Derby went to a break before the quarter, and when he recovered The Monk had gained ten or twelve lengths. Once in his stride, however, Lord Derby began to close in on his fleeing rival, but it was not until near the finish that he took the lead. Lord Derby trotted the last three-quarters in 1:30. This is a two-minute gait, and if Lord Derby had trotted the first quarter in 31 seconds, or even 32, his time would still be better than that of Cresceus.

In speaking of the performance Mr. Smathers said that several of his friends caught Lord Derby's time for the middle half in 59½ seconds.

"I mention this," said Mr. Smathers, "just to show that our opinion is based on facts. Lord Derby has the speed and all that is necessary for him to go a wonderful mile is to learn to carry the clip. Heretofore, Lord Derby has been trained to go to the quarter very slow. This left him only the last part of the mile in which to make up all his time. Now we are going to change that and have him go down to the quarter at his own clip. There is no reason why he should not go the full mile in fast time when he is educated to it. Once Lord Derby settles in his stride, he sails over the ground like a whirlwind and never seems to tire. That was shown conclusively in his race at Memphis with The Monk. He trotted the last three-quarters in 1:30, was going fast at the finish and was still strong. Barring accidents, I expect Lord Derby to do some great work next season."

The Clipping of Horses.

We have been consulted several times in the past few weeks on the advisability of having horses clipped. We have several times given our opinion in this column on this important matter. We will say once more what we have frequently said before that since the experiment has been thoroughly tested with the class of horses whose work causes them to sweat profusely in cold weather, no argument has yet been produced convincing enough to satisfy those who have adopted it under these conditions that clipping is other than a judicious and humane practice. A horse taken into the stable with his coat wet will remain so for a long time, unless rubbed dry, which process would occupy two hours at least. A horse with a heavy coat of hair, wet, put into the stable at night, has been known to come out of the stable with the ends of the hair dry, while the shorter hair next the skin was wet and cold. Will any one presume to say that such a state of things is either comfortable or healthy? A clipped horse can be rubbed dry in a few minutes. Horses accustomed to exercise in winter which causes perspiration should be clipped as conducive to their health and comfort. During the period of horse railways in this city the experiment of clipping the horses was tried. It was found that the mortality among the horses in the winter was 25 per cent less than in previous years.—Exchange.

Faults of Speed Horses.

The evil of cutting is somewhat incidental to the system of shoeing, although there are horses that travel so close as to strike without shoes. The injuries inflicted by cutting are of various kinds, and are located in various places. Some horses will overreach so as to cut their quarters all to pieces. This evil is very much to be dreaded and detracts very much from the value of a trotter. It necessitates the wearing of quarter boots, which are a very unsightly appendage. Other horses will bang their knees in front, while other still will pound their ankles, both in front and behind. Some horses fold the front leg, when speeding, to such an extent that the heel of the shoe will strike the arm where it joins the body. The above named are faults which abound among speedy horses and occasion a great deal of annoyance to owners.

When the leading stock farms of the country will set the seal of their approval upon a remedy, as is done in the letter published herewith, there can be no doubt as to its merits:

Dear Sir—Enclosed find ten dollars ($10), the amount of my last order of Elixir. Excuse the delay in payment, as I have been away from home a good bit and have neglected it. I find the Elixir to be a great remedy, and would not be without it. Hoping you success, I remain, yours truly,

San Francisco, Saturday, December 20, 1902.

MORE MARES WERE BRED in California this year than for several seasons past, yet the fact remains that a very large number of standard bred mares were permitted to go unmated. While prices for trotters and pacers have had an upward tendency for two years and hundreds and thousands of horses have been thrown on the market to supply this demand, there is a shortage which can only be supplied by breeding and unless the farmers and horse breeders send more mares to be bred during the next few years, prices for ordinary stock will go higher and higher. California at the present time is very well supplied with stallions that are high class and fit to send the very best mares to. There are scattered throughout the State many highly bred mares also, and there should be a very material increase in the number of those consigned to the breeding ranks. We would not advise any owner to breed for speed alone as he will be disappointed if the foals fail to inherit this quality and probably lose interest, but if owners will mate their mares with the idea of getting a combination of good looks, size, soundness and speed, they will come nearer getting value for their money. It is much easier to breed a large, sound, handsome horse than a very fast one, and while the latter will sometimes bring a very high price the former always brings a good one. Breed for speed of course, if you own a standard bred mare, but don't neglect the other necessary qualifications to success. Breed as many of your mares as you can possibly afford to. The horse market will not slump until long after the products of next year's matings are old enough to sell.

THE GREATEST EVIL with which the future of thoroughbred horse breeding is threatened, is the practice of "doping" race horses. It is practiced east, west, north and south, and while the most stringent rules have been passed in the hope of prohibiting it, the practice flourishes and there is probably not a day passes at any meeting, anywhere in the United States that horses are not given a "shot" or a "ball." The Jockey Club in New York recognizing the fact that future generations of horses will suffer from the doping of the present, have the strictest surveillance of the paddocks and stalls possible at its race meetings, but is very seldom able to detect and prove an act that its officers are perfectly satisfied has been committed. There is no doubt that there are hundreds of mares and stallions too, that were "dope fiends" of the worst kind, now in the breeding ranks and their produce will be weak, nervous and totally unfit for racing or anything else. No wise man will buy a mare at a sale that is known to have been doped when racing. He knows she is not fit to perform the duties of a matron and that her produce will lack both strength and stamina.

THE WINTERS' SALE of thoroughbred yearlings and horses in training will be held at the old salesyard, corner of Van Ness avenue and Market street, this city, in a new pavilion, by electric light, on Monday evening next. Among the yearlings is a colt by the unbeaten El Rio Rey out of Diablita, a half-sister to Malo Diablo; a bay filly by El Rio Rey out of Dolly M., a winner and full sister to Dolly McCone, winner of twenty races; a colt by El Rio Rey out of Nellie Post, sister to Don Jose, Ed Corrigan, Pocatello, Question and Don Rio Pico; a filly by Rey del Sierras out of Miss Grant, therefore half-sister to Mandamus; a filly by Rey del Sierras out of Ogzilla, dam of Malo Diablo, and a colt by Rey del Sierras out of Blizzard, dam of Zephyr. Among the horses in training are Siligon, brother to Belle Boyd; Theodora L., sister to Silver Bullion, Yo No Rey, brother to the same horse; Miss Grant and Andrelle, sister and brother to Mandamus, John Lemmons, brother to the famous Scarborough and Jennie Reid, Talarand, brother to Caliente, and several others. Messrs. Chase & Co. have fitted up a roomy and comfortable pavilion for the sale of horses at night, and this sale will be the first in the new quarters. As the horses are all choicely bred and as good looking and promising as any that Mr. Winters ever bred, they should meet ready sale. Buyers cannot go amiss in securing horses by such sires as Rey del Sierras and El Rio Rey out of producing mares. They are bound to be winners.

STALLION OWNERS should not delay the advertised announcement of their horses for the season of 1903 until a majority of the mares to be bred have been booked. Early advertising brings the best results, and the splendid New Year and Stallion edition of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN to be issued January 10th will be just the place and the time to make these announcements. The list of entries in the Pacific Breeders Futurity No. 3, which closed December 1st, shows that there is an increased interest in breeding the American trotter and pacer, and the season soon to open will show that this increased interest is still growing. Those who have made up their minds where their stallions will stand and what the price of his service fee will be, should lose no time in securing space in this splendid edition. It will pay.

E. STEWART has sixteen head of roadsters at his place of business, 921 Howard street, that are very choice. There are some very handsome horses in this lot, some with records and some that can very easily get them. A brown team of pacers that can pole together a quarter in 34 seconds is a snap for someone. These horses with forty others will be sold at auction next Tuesday.

Pleasanton Stalls Filling Up.

Before the first of February there will be a demand for stall room at the Pleasanton track that it will be hard to supply unless more stalls are built. There are nearly a hundred horses there now and every week brings in a few more.

The Rose Hotel which under the management of A. S. Olney & Son has become one of the best country hotels in California, is often compelled to provide sleeping accommodations on the outside for its many patrons on Saturday and Sunday, and the splendid dinners given there daily and especially on Sundays, are crowding the large dining room to its capacity. Owner Sutherland is seriously contemplating building a large addition to this excellent hostelry.

At the track things are lively every morning. Among those who have strings of horses at work there are Monroe Salisbury with Monto Carlo 2:09½; Mills & Sawyer with Searchlight 2:03½ and Lecco 2:09½; James Thompson with a string of four very high class colts just purchased from Palo Alto, Parker with a bunch of Rey Direct colts and fillies that are the talk of the country and would be hard to equal anywhere for size, good looks, and speed; Geo. A. Kelly with a string of Antrims that are rare goods, and several colts, among them the young son of McKinney 2:11½ and Bonsilene 2:14½ by Stamboul, that is destined to be one of the fastest, and he already is one of the handsomest of the McKinney tribe; William Cecil, trainer for the Nutwood Stock Farm with the best lot of young trotters and pacers he ever handled for this celebrated breeding farm; Fred Chadbourne, one of the coming young trainers of California, who has a half dozen horses in his charge; Al McDonald, of Who Is It fame, who has Vi Direct, Capt. Matson's good trotter and several others; S. K. Trefry, who brought out the now famous Prince Direct 2:07; Joe Goss, owner of that handsome mare Carrie M. by Diablo, that he is paying his personal attention to; J. M. Alviso the old stand by, who owns one of the fastest Diablos ever foaled; James Sutherland, who superintends the track and works a horse once in a while for a friend or just for fun, and Fred Webster, one of the best colt handlers in the country, who has Bonnie Direct 2:05½ one of the most beautiful pieces of horse flesh in the world, and several weanlings by him that can spell the words "trot" and "pace" as soon as they look through a bridle. There are several others at the track, but we will reserve them for the next time.

Farmer Bunch will occupy about a dozen stalls on the first of the year with the Meek Estate horses, sons and daughters of Welcome 2:10½ and William Harold 2:13½.

Searchlight 2:03½, Mr. Mills tells us, will be in California for the next four or five years. He has grown and filled out until one would hardly know him. He is a grand looker and there is no doubt but he will make a good season here in 1903. We understand that Lou Crellin, who was formerly the owner of the horse, has several colts and fillies by him that are such good ones that he urged Mr. Mills to bring the stallion back to California that he might breed his mares to him again. Searchlight is jogged to a cart that he pulled a half mile in 58 seconds one day over East.

Mr. Sawyer, who came out with Mr. Mills, brought the stallion Lecco 2:09½ with him. This fellow is black as a coal and glossy as a piece of polished ebony. He has good bone, is a topky, handsome horse, and a trotter. He got his record in 1899. That year he went through the Grand Circuit and met such horses as Lord Vincent 2:08½, Surpol 2:10, Fred Kohl 2:07½, Charley Herr 2:07, Bonnatella 2:10, Royal Baron 2:10½ and beat them. In the big $10,000 purse for the 2:13 class at Readville that year he won second money, Charley Herr getting first. There were fifteen starters in the race and seven heats were trotted, Lecco winning the fourth and fifth in 2:10½ and 2:12½ and being a very close second to Charley Herr in the sixth and seventh. Lecco is by Bonnie Boy, a very handsome horse and a successful young sire, having sixteen representatives in the standard list. Bonnie Boy is by the sire of the great Joe Patchen.

Mr. M. Henry, of Haywards, is working a few colts at the Pleasanton track that are by his good horse Educator, son of Director 2:17. Educator is surely an impressive sire, as Mr. Henry can show as fine looking horses as anyone. They are all of good size and either dark bays, blacks or browns, very stylish and tractable. They have speed also and of high order.

Intelligence of Horses.

James K. Wallick, of "Bandit King" and "Cattle King" fame, says: "I can pick an intelligent horse. Every horse has a character and you can size him up as easily as you can determine the character of a person. When the horse's disposition is known, then the question of how to deal with him is simple. The horse has but one idea at a time in his head and should be treated accordingly. He should never be whipped for fright, but a new idea should be given him to attract his attention. Talking to him will often do that.

Be gentle with a horse, but let him know that you are the master. This rule is a universal one. The successful business man controls his employees by that method. If the horse has confidence in his master, he will obey his command, but he must know what his master wishes him to do. That is the great secret of success with horses. Few are able to communicate to the dumb brutes, but only such can be trainers. The thoroughbreds are usually the most intelligent and consequently the most proud spirited, but the results from them are correspondingly greater.

No horse is by nature bad or vicious, but is made so by cruel or impatient men. But vicious horses can be reformed just as can evil persons, and do you know, I think that persons, like other animals, are made and not born vicious. Some horses are lunatics, and are no more accountable for their acts than insane human beings. A man who can deal with men can deal with the brute creation, for the natures of all are the same in quality, but in lower animals the quantity of intelligence varies. No wonder a horse acts badly when a fool of a man is trying to manage him.

Mr. Wallick cited a number of incidents of horses which he had reformed, trained or taught, for he refused to make use of the term "broke" in that connection, and as a special illustration concluded: "I once attended a circus and saw a trained horse perform. 'Show how you do when you are sleepy' said the trainer, and the horse opened his mouth and gaped. The man accompanied this by sticking the whip into the horse's mouth, which would make anyone pretend to gape. I taught a horse the same trick by simply showing what I wanted. It took me fifteen minutes. I got his attention, opened my mouth, and then fed the horse sugar, when he followed my example."

A very handsome coal black stallion by Oro Wilkes 2:11 is now at the Occidental Horse Exchange and is for sale for $500. As the horse is standard bred, sound and a trotter, he should be snapped up by some one, as he can pay for himself during the coming season and earn a profit beside. See advertisement for full pedigree.

A handsome tally-ho brake, a spider phaeton, a two seater, a speeding buggy and a road buggy, a Frazier cart and several sets of harness, all as good as new, are for sale and can be seen at the Occidental Horse Exchange.

William G. Layng has a perfectly matched team of fast roadsters for sale at the Occidental Horse Exchange.

Like all good things, Jackson's Napa Soda has a dozen counterfeits.

THOROUGHBRED DEPARTMENT.

It is so unusual, of late, for Kenilworth to lose a race that it is as well to make a note of the fact that The Fretter managed to beat him a neck in a mile race last week. Kenilworth had up 120 pounds to The Fretter's 109 and the distance was not to his liking.

The Fretter is a much improved horse this season and much credit is due to his trainer, A. C. Ridley, who seems to have the old horse in great shape. All of his races of late have been good ones and he shows a disposition to go further than he used to.

Diderot's showing in the last race on Saturday last was not satisfactory to the Stewards and Mr. Carey, the trainer of the horse, was called on for an explanation. Mr. Carey said that he was unable to account for the bad race and that he had fully expected to win, had backed Diderot and had advised his friends to do the same. It is not known whether or not any explanation was asked from Jockey Troxler in the matter.

Bozeman's ride on Sugden the last time that horse ran was a very peculiar looking performance. It certainly appeared from the grand stand as if Bozeman was taking his mount back all the way through the stretch. The horse certainly did not run up to his form, showing no speed during any part of the race.

There was considerable wild criticism over Hainault's showing in his two last races, in both of which he finished third. A glance at the Form Chart will show that there is no good ground for comment as he ran a creditable race on each occasion.

The manner in which Articulate won from his field in his first essay this season gave local race goers a chance to see what marvelous improvement this horse has made under the training of Bob Smith. When Articulate was racing here in his two and three year old form almost any colt of his own age could and did beat him. It is certain now, however, that he can hold his own with any horse in training here at present.

The California Futurity, one of the stakes inaugurated by the San Francisco Jockey Club, with a gross value of about $16,000 is down for decision today. This is the most valuable event which has been run off in California for many years and it is to be regretted that a more select field than the half dozen which are to contest for it will not go to the post.

If Kenilworth keeps on winning handicaps it will not be long before the weight will be so adjusted that owner Stover can do his own riding.

There was a very noisy and riotous demonstration after the race won by Eva G. on Monday. After the bad showing made by the mare the public was very much disgusted over the striking reversal of form. Mr. B. Lazelere bid up the mare $200 over her entered price saying that was the amount lost by him on her previous race. Had every loser played for even on the same terms it would have been a very profitable affair for the Association and the second horse.

Jas. B. Dyer, who is well known on local tracks, having trained here for several years, has met with remarkable success during the last past season in Austro-Hungary. He was the only American trainer there and his chief employer, Herr Ernst von Blaskovitz, stands at the top of the winning owners in that country. His horses won 22 races and were otherwise in the money 27 times. The amount of their winnings runs to $73,182, nearly double the amount of the winnings of the next competitor on the list. Mr. Dyer also trained the horses of Herr Elmer von Blaskovitz and won for this employer $26,924 in 26 races, so that the winnings of the whole stable amounts to more than $100,000, a sum never earned before by any stable in that country. Dyer's success has changed the meaning of stable owners in Austria who thought that they had the American art of training horses and next year will very probably see a number of new American trainers located in that country.

At the next meeting held at the Fair Grounds track in St. Louis a plan will be tried that, if successful, will do away entirely with the starter. A new machine will be put into use which it is said can be operated in such a manner that starting, while purely mechanical, will be vastly improved upon. The device contains many improvements over the barriers in use at present, including a lessening of its weight and a strengthening of the gate spread before the horses.

The trainer of Eva G., Jimmy Coffey, was exonerated by the board of stewards. The going may not have suited her on the occasion on which she was so badly beaten or the boy Hewitt who rode her may not have handled her so well as Reed. In any event no penalty was inflicted. Mr. Coffey offered the time worn excuse that he bet $100 on his mare the day she was beaten.

Mr. Sink's failure to ride a jockey on Glendenning proved rather an expensive experience. Reed went about one hundred yards further than any other horse in the race and then finished third when he should have won by himself. W. Magrane claimed Glendenning for $825, but afterwards returned him to Mr. Sink upon payment of a bonus of $425.

A good thing from Vancouver nearly went through last Saturday. A filly called Karobel, about which the books layed 200 to 1, was beaten but a nose in a hard drive. She was well played across the board and her backers took quite a handsome sum out of the ring.

Heart Broken.

Is it possible to break a horse's heart? Veteran trainers of trotters say it is, and the same thing probably holds good among thoroughbreds. The man who trained Imp tells this story: "Few people know what really ailed Imp in her last year or two of racing," he said, "but I'll tell you. She never got over the abuse Pete Clay heaped upon her. Imp seemed to obey his every command and all of her best races were run when Clay had the mount. Pete seldom drew a whip on the old mare unless it was in a desperate moment, and then only to slash it through the air as a last appeal to Imp to make one final effort. The good old mare would strain every nerve and muscle in her body to do Pete's bidding, and it was no use to welt her sides with the gad. Imp would do her best simply through asking, so that punishment only hurt her heart.

"Imp knew as well when another boy than Clay had the mounts as I did myself. She was always afraid she would be punished under the whip, and I know she never ran to her best form with a strange rider on her back. One day when Pete had been celebrating a trifle too much for his own good he was asked to gallop the mare. Instead he sent her over two miles at top speed and punished her severely with the whip. Two hearts were broken on that occasion. One was Dan Harness' and the other was Imp's. I never saw a man half so mad as was Harness when he was told what Clay had done. I believe he would have committed a serious crime had he got a hold of Pete while his anger was at fever heat.

"Then and there he gave an ironclad order that never again should Pete Clay be allowed in Imp's stall. And if the colored boy was ever found on the mare's back again he would not be responsible for what might happen. That order was imperative. I tried many times to plead for Pete, but to no purpose. Dan Harness always thought a great deal of Pete until he abused Imp. She fairly loved that black boy. She was fairly heart-broken. You could read her grief in her eyes. The old mare would not eat, and try as I could, I was unable to shake off the spell which seemed to affect her. She never was really herself after that. Pete tried to square himself and would come around when the old man was away and pet Imp, and she seemed ready to forgive him. But it was no use. Mr. Harness' word was law and Pete had to stay away. I have seen Pete stand at the paddock gates many times as Imp was going to the post and pet and fondle her as a father would his child. It was an interesting sight to any one who knew what it all meant. One was as black as the other, and I have seen tears roll down Pete's shining face almost in a stream while he rubbed the dumb brute's nose and patted her glossy neck. Had Dan Harness seen the picture himself I believe his heart would have softened and probably Pete would have been forgiven. Pete's fondling may have given Imp encouragement, for I always noticed that she raced better when Pete met her at the paddock gate and whispered in her ear that he had his last dollar down on her and she must 'bring it home'." Kentucky Stock Farm.

The Fair and Mallowmat Sales.

The stallions and broodmares owned by the late Charles Fair were sold last Wednesday night at the Occidental Horse Exchange. St. Avonicus, the St. Simon stallion purchased in England by Mr. Fair, brought $3500 and was secured by Caesar Young. The twenty-three head averaged $608 each.

The yearlings from the Mallowmat Stock Farm, Victoria, B. C., brought but an average of $178 per head, so that the venture of sending them down to San Francisco has been a very unfortunate one for the proprietor of the farm, as the youngsters would have brought more at home. Besides, one of the yearlings died on the way down. They were a well bred lot and should have brought more money.

The record of the sale of the Fair horses is as follows: Callatine, ch m by Enquirer, to E. J. Arnold for $900.

Centenella, ch m by Joe Hooker, to C. Boots for $250.

Ella Smith, b m by Joe Hooker, to Caesar Young for $450.

Ethelinda, ch m by Peel, to R. Hughes for $350.

Glen Ellen, ch m by Kyrle Daly, to B. Schreiber for $100.

I Declare, b m by Iverness, to S. S. Eakle for $150.

Imp. Janet N., ch m by McGregor, to E. J. Arnold for $1000.

Lucrezia Borgia, ch m by imp. Brutus, to C. Boots for $350.

Miss Truth, b m by Keyser, to C. Boots for $125.

Odd or Even, b m by St. Saviour, to H. Stover for $275.

Pow Wow, b m by Powhattan, to E. J. Arnold for $500.

Phoebe, r m by Grinstead, to C. Boots for $100.

Physalis, b m by Tournament, to Caesar Young for $300.

Princess, b m by imp. Cheviot, to Lee Blasingham for $250.

Ray of Gold, ch m by Rayon d'Or, to A. Stemler for $1750.

Rose of Ormonde, ch m by Ormonde, to C. Boots, for $800.

St. Kristine, br m by St. Carlo, to C. Boots, for $300.

Sally Sensible, ch m by Salvator, to S. S. Eakle for $125.

Imp. Shimoga, ch m by Sir Hugo, to E. J. Arnold for $2000.

Ursula, b m by Duke of Montrose, to C. Boots, for $225.

Virginia, b m by Joe Hooker, to H. Glover for $100.

Morellina, b m by Morello, to Scott Brothers for $100.

Imp. St. Avonicus, b h by St. Simon-Avonwater, by Prism, to Caesar Young for $3500.

The Mallowmat yearlings sold were eight in number and brought the following prices:

Redcross Nurse, ch f by imp. Prince Rudolph-imp. Accident, H. Price, $100.

Mask Ball, b c by imp. Prince Rudolph-Elyssee, Lieutenant Diliott, $100.

The Skipper, ch c by imp. Prince Rudolph-Flea Spot, R. D. Hume, $160.

Bay colt by imp. Prince Rudolph-imp. Larksome J. Millin, $100.

Bread Riot, b c by Little Mid-imp. Louise Michel, J. Horton, $95.

Metlakatia, own sister to Malaspina by imp. Brutus imp. Miowera, Robert Price, $425.

Count Rudolph, b c by imp. Prince Rudolph-imp. Tabby, Caesar Young, $350.

Bay filly by imp. Prince Rudolph-imp. Wandillah, S. S. Eakle, $90.

Something In It.

Neither Direct Hal nor Prince Direct had been hitched double previous to the time at Memphis when they succeeded in establishing a world's record to pole. There seems to be a feeling in some circles that if they had been educated together the pair would have been more successful in their tilt against time. Past experiences would not seem to indorse this view. Rather the contrary seems to be the case. It was a couple of years ago that Ed Geers voiced the opinion that the first time two horses were driven to pole was apt to be the most successful. When hitched for the first time the two have an idea that they are racing against each other, and do their best in consequence. After a few trials one or the other apparently forms the opinion that it is impossible to beat its mate, and fails to attempt the impossible.—Ec.

EFFECTUAL

The most effectual remedy in use for the cure of ailments of horses and cattle is

GOMBAULT'S CAUSTIC BALSAM

Used as a Blister or Lotion.

This preferred remedy is prepared exclusively by J. E. Gombault, ex-Veterinary Surgeon to the French Government Stud.

As a HUMAN REMEDY for Rheumatism, Sprains, Sore Throat, etc., it is invaluable.

Every bottle of Caustic Balsam sold is warranted to give satisfaction. Price $1.50 per bottle. Sold by druggists, or sent by express, charges paid, with full directions for its use. Send for descriptive circulars, testimonials, etc. Address

THE MOUNTAIN QUAIL.

One of the Gamest Birds for Coast Sportsmen.

When we climb the larger hills of the Pacific Coast to where perennial brooks sing down dark defiles and the columbine and the tiger lily flame in the deeper shades of the heavier timber, from the dense green of the lilac or the bristling red arms of the manzanita, we sometimes hear a "ch-ch-ch-ch-chee ah," so plaintive yet so sweet that we are at once brought to a halt. Or along the hills of early morning you may hear a "cloi-cloi-cloi" as silvery as ever fell from feathered throat, or it may swell at evening along the hillsides where the mimulus pours its fountain of gold from the beds of fern around the little meadows where the iris blows. With gentle feet pattering over the ground you may see a new quail steal softly out of sight, or he may turn to look at you with a swelling breast mottled with black and white and broadly banded vest of cinnamon. And another may hop upon a stone beside him for a better view, and then the broad slate-colored back of another comes into sight from under a fallen log, while more go rustling over the carpet of dead leaves beneath the golden-leaved live oak. They may seem very tame, yet through all their simplicity runs a strong undertone of caution, which asserts itself so steadily that before you know it a dozen or fifteen graceful birds, nearly twice the size of the valley quail, have taken a close inspection of you and vanished as softly as a shadow with the coming of night. They act as if they would like to trust you if the cowardly little legs were not so weak. Yet all the time they allow the legs to furnish the logic of the occasion and the artless trust they repose in you for a moment seems suddenly the sublimity of art.

Such is the way the mountain quail used to act, and still does in many sections where he has not yet learned the duplicity of the man with a gun. In most cases he has long displayed a different kind of art learned in the school of experience. And there are few scholars more apt in learning about modern guns and powders, while the scrape of a fashionable hobnail on a granite rock or the scratching of tenderfoot leggings against the stiff arms of the wild cherry will start up a silent leg power that will leave one wondering where all the mountain quail have gone.

Many wonder where this quail can be found plenty enough for a good day's shooting. Though the bevies are as large as those of the valley quail, and though it breeds where there are few wildcats, coyotes and other enemies of the valley quail to trouble it, it is still a scarce bird all along the line of its habitat, scarce as compared with the valley quail. This is mostly because it never runs into the immense bands in which the valley quail is found in late summer. But even with this difference it is not as plenty as the other, and while there are many places where a few may always be found there are few spots where many can ever be found.

In the southern part of the Coast it is a bird of the high mountains, though it is sometimes found where the arcades of alders that arch over the hissing brook have run out into lowland willows. On the great San Pedro Martin of Lower California it is found where stupendous boulders piled into cathedrals almost hide the sugar pines that struggle through the mighty chinks between them, but is rarely found below the mountain top or the first few hundred feet of the great gulches that plunge abruptly from its sides.

But as we approach the northern line of California it becomes more of a lowland bird. Though it still loves the mountains where the snow is not too deep, it is found also on the same ground with the valley quail. The latter, too, is fast becoming rarer while the mountain quail is apparently becoming more plenty, until in Oregon one would say it was the common quail of the country. Although it may not be found out in the open valleys and fields as much as the valley quail it will be found in the thickets and brush adjoining, and it is not uncommon to meet it along the very edge of the brush and often in the roads along the bases of the hills where they run into the valley lands. I found it much more plenty in the Coast range than in the Cascades. During a trip of some three weeks in the Rogue river mountains in southwestern Oregon I found it on all kinds of ground and in far greater numbers than I have ever seen or heard of it elsewhere. On the map of Oregon you will notice a large tract unsurveyed in the southwest corner. When you attempt to go through it you will quickly discover why it is still unsurveyed. But if you want to find the mountain quail in abundance there is the place of all places. There is nothing dangerous about the trip. You will need horses that are not afraid of windfalls, and you will be bothered in places to find feed enough to stay long on account of the density of the timber preventing the growth of grass. High up on the ridges, where the valleys below were darkly blue with depth, as you look down upon the solid mass of trees you find this bird around the little springs and bogs that lie near the tops. And down in the valley where you can look out only upon the sky, where some stream separates the timber enough you will still find him at home.

The best places, however, are where there is some little open valley of a few acres or a winding glade running away from some brook. There where there is grass and berries you can hardly fail to have some good shooting, if you know how to manage the game. In some places I saw as many as thirty flocks on about ten acres, reminding one of the palmy days of the valley quail in California. In other places half a dozen flocks in sight at once was a common thing, while in hunting elk to start a dozen bevies in a five hours' walk was quite common. In many parts I am satisfied that with a good dog I could start fifty flocks in a day. On much of this ground there is considerable grass, and where that is wanting there are enough lupins and wild peas with the ever present salal to make cover enough to keep the birds lying quite well. The ground is not at all hard to hunt on when you are once in there. But it is so wild and remote from all settlements that considerable time is lost in getting in. But one who wants to find a wild and untraveled country containing yet a few elk with untold numbers of deer, bears in plenty and grouse and quail without limit should take this trip. And if he has a good dog and understands this quail himself the quail shooting will be in many places the most attractive part of the whole. No doubt as good shooting may be had in other parts of the Coast Range that are more accessible. Good trout fishing is also found in every stream, depending only on the size of it.

If you want to leave all sight or sound of man behind for several weeks fit out a pack train at Grant's Pass or Glendale and go up the west fork of Cow creek, a branch of the Umpqua. You will find some "man sign" for two or three days, growing gradually thinner until you make the divide of the Coquille, when you can have the world to yourself as long as you wish it. I believe that with a good dog one could bag a hundred mountain quail a day there in hundreds of places.

But here, as elsewhere, he has developed in the highest degree the old trick of running, and it is not likely that you will find any place where his little legs have forgotten their cunning. Though not quite as swift of foot as the quail of Arizona, the mountain quail knows far better where to run to and generally inhabits ground on which he can utilize his knowledge to the best advantage. There is no finer judge of uphill and if you are loaded with heavy boots, English leggings and other fashionable sudorifics to help you enjoy a hot day, he will give you the fullest opportunity to get your money's worth of bliss out of them. He seems to know that you boast a gun that will clear the brush and bag the game with the same charge—a gun very needful with this bird—and he seems to have quite as much curiosity as you have to see how it will work. No other bird so tempts Providence and no other is so well able to do so. He lingers just enough to lead you on and runs just enough to induce the tenderfoot to shoot at him on the ground and see the shot tear up the dry dirt on the spot he has just vacated. He flies just enough in the open to make the ordinary shot believe he can get him and then dodges around some dense brush just quickly enough to teach him he cannot. And he deceives the best brush shot with the idea that he is going to lie close enough for a nice snap shot in the thickest part of the brush, when in fact he is running uphill as fast as his legs can carry him.

There seems but one way to manage these quail so as to get good wing shooting—scare and scatter them as quickly as possible, the same as the valley quail. They will often lie quite well then. Some will always keep running, while others will lie so close that only a dog can find them. Between these two are many that will give fine shooting to a good shot without a dog, the same as in the case of the valley quail. Where there is any reasonable amount of ground cover, as there is all through the greater part of the coast range of Oregon, they will undoubtedly lie well to the dog. While I had no dog I found them lie well everywhere in good cover, and with a little hazing lie so well that it was very difficult to start them. In other cover it was almost impossible to raise them, yet it was certain that they had not had time to run away.

Such, however, is the exception, and not the rule. Generally, by the time you have hazed them about enough to make them lie well in this cover, you are almost in the same condition. You want to be equipped for light travel, and have nothing on that can interfere with high speed. The way they can run up hill, hopping and fluttering from rock to rock and making you believe they are not moving rapidly, while you are scrambling up below out of breath and all the time just out of shot, is very charming. And about the time you think you have driven them to the top of some point with nothing but down hill on the side, the way they are not there by the time you arrive is one of the most interesting features of life with the gun.

And yet there are times enough when a grand pot shot can be made on a covey if one is so disposed, and sometimes their confidence in you is so great that you may decapitate several with the rifle before they are all out of shot. They are a hard bird to figure on, for the flock that yesterday was so trustful may be very wild to day. But under most all circumstances the mountain quail will command your respect as well as love. The valley quail is becoming the hardest bird in the world to make a straight run of any length on. But the mountain quail always was that way. Somehow or other he was always equal to the emergency and always found the ground best adapted to bother him. If you did not take advantage of the first stage of confidence they so often repose in you in the wilder sections of the hills you were sure to have something well worthy of your highest skill and wildest efforts. For their confidence once lost is rarely regained that day.—T. S. Van Dyke.

Scotia's Towsy Tyke.

I ken the Terrier o' the North,
I ken the towsy tyke;
Ye'll search frae Tweed to Sussex shore,
But never find his like.

For pluck and pith, and paw and teeth
And hair like heather coves,
Wi' body long, and low, and strang,
At hame in cairns or "knowes."

He'll face a foumert, draw a brock,
Kill rats and whiterits by the score;
He'll bang tod-towrie frae his hole,
Or stay him at his door.

He'll range for days, and ne'er be tired,
O'er mountain, moor or fell;
Fair play, I'll back the brave wee chap
To fecht the deil himsel'.

And yet beneath his rugged coat
A heart beats warm and true;
He'll help to herd the sheep and kye,
And mind the lammies, too.

Then see him at the ingleside,
With bairns round him lauchin';
Was ever dog so pleased as he,
Sae fond o' fun and daftin'?

But gie's your hand, my Hielan' maid,
Guld faith! we manna sever.
Then "Here's to Scotia's best o' dogs,
Our towsy tyke forever.

The Fate of Adolphe, a Pet Dog.

One dreary afternoon in January, during the siege of Paris, M. Reboullet left his office in a state of great mental perturbation. He went directly home, and, bursting in upon his wife, exclaimed tragically: "Virginia, we must kill Adolphe!"

Mme. Reboullet sat beside a table, sewing. At her husband's emphatic words she rose, trembled, grew pale, then dropped back into her chair in an attitude of abject helplessness.

"Yes, we must kill Adolphe! It is hard, but there is nothing else to be done. We really ought to have expected it. What did you say?"

Mme. Reboullet had said nothing. She sat quite still in limp helplessness, and great tears went chasing each other down her pallid cheeks.

"You are crying! Well, that's quite natural, and if I weren't a man—but what good would it do? One should be reasonable!"

"But couldn't we—wait a little while—longer?" sobbed the lady.

"You know, Virginia, that there is one thing I have always been very careful about; that's my reputation. Well, that is now at stake, and all because of Adolphe. You have persisted in taking him out for daily exercise on the avenue. He is insolently fat, and people think it strange that, at such a time as this, when many poor creatures haven't even a piece of horsemeat to eat, that we should keep a useless mouth to feed. Talk of it has even reached the office. For some time past I have noticed a coolness among my companions. I could not understand it, but to-day Sergeant Bosc said to me, at the distribution of provisions: 'Adolphe is still thriving, I presume!' Then I understood that the sacrifice was necessary, and it must be made."

After a silence, Mme. Reboullet stammered: "But I shall never have the courage."

"Nor I," replied the husband. "We shall have to leave it to Rose."

Rose, who was the domestic, and who hated Adolphe as much as her masters loved him, agreed to perform the agreeable task.

It may be said right here that Adolphe was a dog, and an extremely ill-favored one at that. A curious mixture of pug and hound, with long ears, a stubby tail and slender legs, he certainly would have been no loss to the world from an aesthetic point of view.

M. and Mme. Reboullet went out to walk the next morning at 10 o'clock, leaving Adolphe to the tender mercies of Rose. They were disconsolate, but, spurred on by the cold, they were seen walking at a brisk walk up and down the avenue. Both were silent. After a time, Mme. Reboullet gasped out: "It must be over by this time."

Reboullet looked at his watch. It was only ten minutes past 11, so the couple resumed their mute promenade. In a few moments Mme. Reboullet exclaimed again with a start: "We forgot to tell Rose what to do with poor Adolphe after—where to bury him."

"True; I never thought of that. But don't worry; he shall have the sort of burial he deserves."

Distracted in spite of themselves by the movement in the street and exhilarated by the nipping air, they began to think less exclusively of their dog, and when at noon they found themselves in front of their home, Reboullet exclaimed: "How hungry I am!"

"And I, too," sighed Mme. Reboullet.

Immediately after they gave each other a look that promptly brought them back to a due sense of propriety.

The pair were soon seated at the table in the little dining room. On entering the room, so full of haunting memories of Adolphe, and on sitting down at the table around which he had always wandered during meals, watching for bones and delicate morsels, Mme. Reboullet had a fresh outburst of grief. So when her husband asked what they were to have to for luncheon, she replied between her sobs: "I don't know, my dear; I ordered nothing; my mind was on something else, you remember."

"Bring in luncheon, Rose!" called M. Reboullet. The maid entered, noisily, her cap strings flying. "Here it is, and it's a good one, too!"

As she spoke, she set down a large dish, filled to the brim with yellowish gravy, in which a number of small objects were floating about.

The same thought instantly struck both M. Reboullet and his wife. "What is that?" they asked, in concert.

"Why, the dog—stewed in white wine. I thought first I would serve him roasted, but as Madame said nothing about it—"

Reboullet half rose from his chair, exclaiming: "Have you dared—"

"What! Wasn't it to have him to eat that—If I had known, I could have sold him for 20 francs, he was so fat!"

"Leave the room!" sobbed Mme. Reboullet.

Rose shrugged her shoulders and went out, slamming the door after her, saying: "Such a fuss—for a dog!"

M. and Mme. Reboullet sat for a time without speaking a word. In a funereal silence, savory odors arose from the steaming dish between them. The miserable girl was right. It must be excellent; but oh, no! never!

But what was to be done with it? Give it to Rose, who would eat it herself, or, worse, still, sell it to some unscrupulous restaurant keeper? Throw it out into the street? What a humiliating end! Bury it? Who ever heard of burying a stew?

The appetizing odor continued to greet their nostrils, and finally Reboullet said: "Perhaps Rose is right, after all! A dog is only a dog. Besides, this is no ordinary time. Paris is not besieged every day. Dog, indeed! Why, everyone is glad now-a-days to eat cats, rats, hippopotamus meat, or any other kind, for that matter. Of course, I would never have desired to see Adolphe on our table in that state. But the mischief is done—and now, sapristi, if we don't eat him, what shall we do with him?"

The clouds had scattered and the sunshine streamed into the little dining room. A calm seemed to pervade the air. Rose had been thoughtful enough to put on the table a bottle of their very best wine, and full justice was done to it. Half an hour later, as Mme. Reboullet sat contemplating the little bones ranged on the side of her plate, she sighed, and said plaintively: "Poor Adolphe! He loved bones so well!"

DOINGS IN DOGDOM.

The variety of the flea family (Pulex irritans) which devotes its pestiferous attention to human beings is often the cause of one's cat or dog being unjustly blamed for an unwelcome invasion of the living rooms by these nimble anatomists. Most folks are at fault in abusing the dog or cat because they bring fleas into the house of the brand known as (Pulex serraticeps), the common cosmopolitan animal flea. Still the house may become infected with this latter species of the pest without there being any domestic animals residing therein, for a visitor from a house where they are kept may introduce a couple of egg-laden fleas and in a short time the domicile will be overrun with them. The only really practical and positive method of keeping the house where dogs are kept practically clear of the fleas is to provide the animal with a rug or mat to sleep upon. This article should be shaken and thoroughly brushed as often as you would any ordinary mat or rug—every day if you can—and once or twice a month dip the article in a pail of benzine or naphtha; let it soak for a few minutes, then wring it out as dry as possible and hang it on the clothesline to dry. This process should invariably be performed out of doors, and early in the morning, so that the article shall have time to become perfectly dry before sundown and to allow the fumes to pass away as well. You will find that this treatment of the animal's resting place will not only prevent the flea from taking up his abode in the house, but that the dog will soon be entirely rid of the troublesome pest. A gallon of naphtha will serve for several treatments, if the article is well wrung out and the fluid poured back into the original carrier, and kept well corked, and away from any danger from fire or flame.

The American Kennel Club will cancel the win of any dog entered in the name of an unregistered kennel. Under the new rules, the entry of the dog must be in the name of the owner only; the additional kennel name, unless it is registered with the A. K. C., must be kept out of the catalogue.

Losers at a dog show are sore losers as a rule, but our fanciers, almost without exception, generally take defeat gracefully. When this is the case the exceedingly bad taste shown by some handlers in expressing their opinions or commenting on the judges awards should be summarily sat down upon either by the imposition of fine, or by warning and expulsion from the building on second offense. The evil unless checked is liable to grow into an abuse.

California favorite hot weather drink—Jackson's Napa Soda.

Idaho Trap Shooting Tournament.

The Nez Perce County Sportsmen's Association held a well attended and enthusiastic trap shoot on the 4th, 5th and 6th insts., at Lewiston, Idaho. The weather conditions for each day were pleasant and agreeable, many visitors being on the grounds during each day's shooting.

On the first day forty-seven guns lined up before the traps, seven events out of twenty on the program were shot out—the remaining thirteen races were completed on the following days. The seven events made a total of 100 birds, and seven shooters participating in all of the events of the day secured 80 per cent or better. The best score of the day was made by Wilfred Allen, of Pullman, who killed 88 birds out of a possible 100. He was followed by Tom Ware, of Spokane, with 87; J. S. Jent, of Lewiston, 85; Wm. Butler, of Lewiston, and P. J. Holohan, of Wallace, each 84, and George Beck, of Spokane, and G. D. Baker, of Dayton, each 80. In single events the best scores of the day were made by Allen, of Pullman, and R. C. West, of Moscow. Allen killed 19 out of a possible 20, while West accepted every chance in a 15 bird contest. The scores, showing the winners of first and second money in the several events of the first day, are as follows:

First Event—10 birds. T. B. Ware, Geo. Beck, G. D. Baker, W. Allen, W. L. Lyons, C. M. Keep, J. S. Jent, W. F. Brown, R. C. West, first with 9 birds; F. Howe, Fred Waite, G. E. Geist, W. M. Butler, J. Vestal, S. McDonald, W. Hunter, second with 8 birds.

Second Event—15 birds. Pete Frazier, first, 14 birds; P. J. Holohan, G. D. Baker, W. L. Lyons, Wm. Butler, P. Shields, second, 13 birds.

Third Event—10 birds. T. B. Ware, W. Allen, J. S. Jent, S. McDonald, first, 10 birds; T. B. Barclay, W. F. Brown, W. Hunter, second, with 9 birds.

Fourth Event—20 birds. W. Allen, first, 19 birds; P. J. Holohan, T. B. Ware, Geo. Beck, second, 18 birds.

Fifth Event—10 birds. Geo. Beck, P. Shields, W.

average. There were 16 competitors for the prize and Mr. Jent led with 266 birds, Holohan of Wallace next with 250 and Tom Ware of Spokane, third, with 249. The scores of the sixteen participants is as follows:

J. S. Jent, Lewiston, 266; P. J. Holohan, Wallace, 250; T. B. Ware, Spokane, 249; George Beck, Spokane, 243; R. C. West, Moscow, 238; P. T. Lomax, Lewiston, 235; William Butler, Lewiston, 235; F. C. Stephens, Pomeroy, 227; A. E. Geist, Portland, 224; George Baker, Dayton, 223; T. D. Barclay, Dayton, 212; L. N. Nettle, Pomeroy, 211; J. J. Hamley, Kendrick, 204; L. A. Kerr, Kendrick, 202; James Vestal, Harrington, 200; M. B. Brownlee, Spokane, 171.

The general average secured shows the high class of shots in attendance at the tournament, says the Lewiston Morning Tribune. Saturday the shooting was the best of the three days' sport and was a fitting close to the affair that has proven such a source of pleasure to all the sportsmen in attendance. The first event shot Friday was the fifteenth on the program and the day's results were as follows:

Fifteenth event, 20 birds—Jent first, 20 birds; Waite and Allen, 18 birds.

Sixteenth, 10 birds—Howe, Hamley, Hodge, Brown, first, 10 birds; Holohan, Baker, W. Butler, Jent, Vestal, McDonald, Callison, second, 9 birds.

Seventeenth, 15 birds—Howe, Brownlee, first, 14 birds; Waite, Geist, second, 13 birds.

Eighteenth, 20 birds—Ware, Waite, first, 19 birds; Howe, W. Butler, second, 18 birds.

Nineteenth, 10 birds—Holohan, Beck, Lomax, McDonald, first, 10 birds; Keep, Frazier, Larsons, second, 9 birds.

Twentieth, 25 birds—Jent first, 24 birds; Ware, Lomax, second, 23 birds.

The visitors at the tournament were all enthusiastic in their praise of the treatment accorded them by the club and state that their visit to Lewiston will be long remembered. Frank Howe, representative of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, of Connecticut, was among the visitors and he made many friends here. Mr. Howe is a fine shot, a true sportsman and

TRAP SHOOTERS AT LEWISTON, IDAHO.

F. Brown, first, 10 birds; P. J. Holohan, T. B. Ware, Wm. Butler, J. S. Jent, second, 9 birds.

Sixth Event—20 birds. F. C. Stephens, W. Allen, T. D. Barclay, first, 18 birds; P. J. Holohan, T. B. Ware, Frank Waite, Wm. Butler, J. S. Jent, P. Frazier, Cash Cole, second, 17 birds.

Seventh Event—15 birds. R. C. West, first, 15 birds; A. E. Geist, Herb Cole, second, 14 birds.

A special event of the afternoon that attracted much attention was the contest for the Wilson trophy. This trophy, donated by Dr. Wilson, of Pullman, is awarded for a two-man team event of 25 birds each, the teams to comprise members of clubs in the counties of Whitman, Nez Perce and Latah counties. The trophy was won previously at Pullman by W. Allen and W. L. Lyons and they were present to defend it again, while the Kendrick and Lewiston clubs made the following entries:

Kendrick—C. M. Keep and J. J. Hamley, C. B. Green and R. C. West, D. J. Rowlands and L. A. Kerr. Lewiston—Wm. Butler and Peter Frazier, J. N. Harland and J. S. Jent, P. T. Lomax and G. D. Hodge.

Keep and Hamley were the victors with 37 birds out of the possible 50, Jent and Harland of Lewiston taking second place with 36. The detailed score of the different teams in this contest was as follows:

Keep 20, Hamley 17; total 37. Green 16, West 18; total 34. Kerr 15, Rowlands 18; total 33. Frazier 17, Butler 14; total 31. Jent 17, Harlan 19; total 36. Lomax 18, Hodge 14; total 32. Lyons 15, Allen 16; total 31.

The last event of the long program of the second day was won by J. S. Jent, of Lewiston. Mr. Jent achieved the distinction of securing the highest score of the tournament with a percentage of 88 2-3, while he also made the best score for the second day's shooting, having broke 87 birds out of a possible 100. P. J. Holohan came next with 85 birds, and he also won second prize for the second best score at the tournament. The 20 events on the program numbered 300 birds, and the first prize was awarded to the shooter participating in all events who secured the highest gentleman and there is not in the West a more devoted friend to the trap. "I return home," said Mr. Howe last evening, "delighted with my visit here. The tournament was indeed a splendid success. I could not offer a single criticism, and the local association are deserving of great praise. Such tournaments elevate the grand sport. The Lewiston club have extended many courtesies to me and my goods and I will be disappointed if I cannot secure an opportunity before leaving the city to thank each individual member. Every visitor thoroughly appreciates the splendid success of the tournament."

On Friday evening a ball and supper was given in honor of the visiting sportsmen. This was a successful and brilliant affair and was well attended. Besides trap shooting other sports are indulged in by the Idaho shooters on Thanksgiving day an old-fashioned turkey shooting match was held. Although the day was raw and cold, the weather did not prevent a good attendance, twenty-one turkeys were shot for and won as follows:

Howe, 3; Humphrey, 6; Ferguson, 1; Turner, 2; Ayers, 1; Ayers and Brockbank, 1; Clark, 1. The birds won by Frank Howe were sent, with his compliments, the Sister's Hospital.

A recent press dispatch from Grant's Pass, Or., states that steelhead trout are now running in countless numbers in the Rogue river, and are being caught literally by the wagonload both above and below that city. Spoon fishing is found to be exciting sport, but by far the larger number of the trout are caught for market with small-mesh seines. The fish, which are unexcelled for table purposes, are selling at three cents a pound in the local market, and large shipments are being made to other points. At this same season of year two years ago Columbia river fishermen received twelve cents a pound for steelheads, which were shipped East in cold storage. The fish are more plentiful than ever before known in Rogue river. Silver-side salmon also are running in large numbers up Rogue river.

Vocalism in the Field.

The instinct whereby wild creatures detect those of the human species who are likely to be hostile to them, and those who may be regarded as harmless, is of so subtle a quality that it almost appears to partake of the nature of metaphysics. Rooks will follow and feed at the very tail of the plough, and will take wing if a passer-by but lifts a stick to his shoulder as if it were a gun. These same rooks are unmolested by firearms all the year round, save for some forty-eight hours of spring rook shooting, and even that persecution does not pursue them in the open fields, but when it does occur it invades their homesteads, and assails them from under the foliage of their actual domiciles. In the nesting season plovers will actually buffet the angler who is fishing too close to their broods; but by the date of the shooting season they would not allow him to get within two fields of them. The woodpigeon seems to know exactly the range of the modern fowling-piece, and will flash boldly past at an interval of 100 yards and upwards, but is careful quickly to put a tree between himself and a sportsman if disturbed at any range within gunshot. The fox knows that he is sacred from guns, and will sometimes stand by and watch a covert beaten, and will audaciously seize a fallen pheasant and decamp with it within twenty paces of a retriever; he is quite aware that the latter is no foxhound. The wild duck on the Thames seem to have fully mastered sections of the Thames Act of sixteen years ago, and to have abandoned their former shyness, in view of the statutory protection now awarded to them against prowling gunshot from boating parties. They will turn out to take stock of the practice of a University crew on Henley or Neneham reaches, and rock serenely in mid-stream to the swell of a coaching launch that rushes past them; nor do they acknowledge any panic at the sound of a megaphone.

In the current partridge season many a covey will continue to breakfast on the stubble undismayed by the plough and team that are at work breaking up that same stubble only sixty yards away, and they will treat with contempt the voice of the teamster addressing the team at the turns; but let a party of guns enter that stubble at the far end, well out of shot, and hold an injudicious council of war, sotto voce, or let an inconsiderate keeper rate his dog loudly with "ware fence" as the party climb the first hedge, and the old cock will sound the alarm and the birds be flushed and away well out of shot. How is it that the big game, as also the large carnivora that prey upon them, retreat long before they are exterminated from African pastures that are within touch of white men's settlements, though they had tolerated the society of the colored races for centuries in the same district? Why is it that the song bird cantabit vacuus coram revolutore and flits within range of shot in careless confidence, while the game that is sought for is so shy? Not even the sound of a volley from the advancing line at a flushed covey seems to disturb the nerves of the larks on the stubble; they know that the hurly-burly is not directed at them and they are content to move on a few paces, then settle again as calm as old artillery horses on a review day. Whence is the telepathy in fish that in a season or two, or less, in some hitherto unfished continental trout stream, alters the temper of the whole stock in the river, and teaches them to be shy, even though not one-tenth of them have even seen the lure of the British lessee who has come to whip the water, and not one-thirtieth of them have been pricked? How is it that wildfowl at a decoy will tolerate the smell of a piece of burning peat held over the mouth of the man who works the nets, but will wind and avoid him if but one sniff of his breath be wafted towards them?

There seems to be something peculiarly odious to game in the sound of the human voice and in the smell of the human breath. They do not love human society much at the best of times, but, little as they like to see him, they even less appreciate the sound and the smell of man. It is curious that, with all their facilities during the breeding season of studying natural history, gamekeepers appear to remain so hopelessly obtuse, as a fraternity, on the subject of the mischief of the human voice in the field. Not one in a dozen knows how to keep his mouth shut at the critical moment. Birds may be marked down, scattered, and the guns are looking forward to a series of single shots. But this keeper wants some corner gun to march a trifle forward for turning tactics, and he forgot to mention this before the field was entered. He roars out his instructions, and up go the expected birds, rising seventy or more yards away—or the retriever overshoots the fall of the first bird, flushed and shot, and does not get the wind of it on the instant; then follows a noisy hail to the dog, and half a dozen prospective shots are at once missed. And yet this same keeper is no fool in his vocation, and has few superiors in the country in the matter of trapping and rearing. When one comes to think of it, it is so very simple at a juncture of this description to give all needful signals to the line without using the human voice. A whistle to attract attention, followed by a semaphore with the arm, will explain what is wanted nine times out of ten. To be more elaborate, there can be two whistles, one of them a siren, and a code of "right wheel," "left wheel," "halt," "return old track," "dress line," "left forward," and the like, be signalled thereby with much simplicity. We might even say that in these days of militarism and flag signalling by Morse process half an hour in gun room or shooting room in the practice of this science might be a valuable instruction for any shooting party, and would prevent many a pretty piece of sport from being marred by untimely vocalism in the field. Apropos of hereditary instincts and of telepathy in wild animals, and of their instruction to each other as to the ways and wiles of man, their arch enemy, we are further fain to believe that some similar heredity for untimely vocalism seems to cling to the genus gamekeeper, and to estop him from self-restraint and from control of his emotions at critical moments in the field. We are sorry to say that he does not improve as a race in this respect; he is even noisier than was his sire before him. From experience of even the best of the fraternity it may be said that a dumb keeper in the partridge season should command a fancy price.—The Field.

Oakland Bench Show

The initial show of the Oakland Kennel Club opened on Wednesday morning with a general high class exhibit of dogs. The attendance during the week has been good. The show closes this evening, at which time several special contests will be determined and the distribution of prizes will take place.

A report of the show and list of specials will appear next week. The awards in the regular classes were as follows:

ST. BERNARDS—Novice dogs—Charles B Schaefer's Bismarck 2. Limit dogs—Nairod Kennels' Grand Master II 1, H C Keeler's Emperor 2. Open dogs—Charles E Newman's Lester C 1, Grand Master II 2. Winners, dogs—Lester C 1, Grand Master II res. Novice bitches—J J Grimsey's Nairod Marion 1. Limit bitches—Nairod's Kennels' Gypsy Lee II 1. Open bitches—Gypsy Lee II 1. Winners, bitches—Gypsy Lee II 1, Nairod Marion res. Team class—Grand Master II and Gypsy Lee II 1.

MASTIFFS—Open dogs—H Baker's Prince 1. Open bitches—M Carlberg's Zampa 1.

Hentzau 2. Puppy bitches—W W Kaler's Duchess 1. Novice bitches—Cunningham's Carmencita 1. Open bitches—O Bergsten's Maud S 1, Cunningham's Carlotta 2. Veteran bitches—Cunningham's Juanita 1. Winners, dogs—Maud S 1, Carmencita res. Local bitches—Maud S 1.

FOXHOUNDS—Open dogs—N H Hickman's Chinny Billy 1.

ENGLISH SETTERS—puppies, dogs and bitches—Charles S King's Theodora Gladstone 1, F D Taft's Lady Thelma 2.

IRISH SETTERS—novice dogs—A E Lovett's Bruce. Limit dogs—A E Lovett's Glencoe 1. Winners, dogs—Bruce 1, Glencoe res.

GORDON SETTERS—limit dogs and bitches—George Herron's Ritz 1. Open dogs and bitches—G Herron's Don 1.

IRISH WATER SPANIELS—open dogs and bitches—W F Watson's Riley 1.

BULLDOGS—limit dogs—Mrs Charles K Harley's Ivel Damon 1. Open dogs—Ivel Damon 1. Limit bitches—L S Greenebaum's Endcliffe Pleasure 1. Open bitches—Endcliffe Pleasure 1. Winners, dogs—Ivel Damon 1. Winners, bitches—Endcliffe Pleasure 1.

BULL TERRIERS—puppy bitches—W W Kaler's Queen 1. Novice bitches—Joseph Eastland's Naughty Nan 1, E Williams' Newmarket Jean 2. Limit bitches—Dresser & Simpson's Bloomsbury Queen 1. Limit and open bitches—Naughty Nan 1. Winners, bitches—Naughty Nan 1, Bloomsbury Queen res.

BOSTON TERRIERS—puppy dogs—George N Armsby's Lord Quex 1. Winners, dogs—Lord Quex 1.

Fox Terriers (smooth)—Puppy dogs—John P Brown's Garston Prefect 1. Novice dogs—Wandee Kennels' Wandee Blizzard 1, Garston Prefect 2. Limit dogs—Wandee Kennels' Wandee Revelry 1. Open dogs—Wandee Kennels' Wandee Jester 2. Winners, dogs—Wandee Blizzard 1, Garston Prefect res.

Puppy bitches—David K Farr's Muggins 1. Novice bitches—Wandee Kennels' Wandee Mayse 1, W B Fecheimer's Norfolk Mistake 2, Irving C Ackerman's Endcliffe Pearl 3. FEATHER AND FIN.

The successful turkey-hunter is probably the most scientific sportsman in the world. He matches himself against the most acute of all feathered things.

The turkey is not only gifted with extraordinary sight, hearing, wariness and alertness, but it knows the woods better than any mere man can know them, and it has distinctly the faculty of casualty or reason. A turkey knows not only that the appearance of a certain part of the ground is not right, but also why it is not right.

It will distinguish readily between marks of passage made by a wild animal and a human being. Negroes assert that it can smell powder, just as they believe that a crow can smell powder, but there is no evidence that its sense of smell is specially developed.

Its power of flight is not great, nor is it enduring on foot. There are many animals which prey upon it and can outrun it. It has to depend for preservation upon its intellect, and this intellect has come to be remarkably developed.

The turkey is not hard to find and kill when it is gobbling from a tree top in the early spring morning, but the person who goes after one later in the day must know his business. It is sometimes taken in traps made of logs and roofed with branches, there being an entrance under the bottom log. Once inside, having been tolled there by parched corn grains, it travels around and around looking for an exit higher than its head.

It is sometimes slain, too, by being led to a shallow trench dug in the woods and sprinkled with parched corn, a V-shaped blind having been prepared 30 yards away. If shot, legitimately, however, at any time save at daybreak or when flying into its roost at night, it must be called to the hidden gun, and in this the science of the hunter is made manifest.

Coming Events.

Marketing Wool.

It is certainly ludicrous to hear some of those wool growers howl against the "robber commission men." The wool commission men were not so bad until those wool growers got to scheming organizations for mutual protection, that is, mutual protection for those interested in organizing them and getting their "finger in the pie" in the way of commissions. These associated wool growers' schemes for selling wool when boiled down are simply no more or less than wool commission houses, for they do the business for a commission just the same. All their talk about doing away with the middle man is balderdash, for there must be one middle man between the wool grower and the manufacturer, and it matters little whether this man calls himself a commission man or an associated wool growers' concern. It costs as much for one to do business as the other. The wool has got to be shipped to a wool center, graded, put on sale and offered to the manufacturer. These wise guys who try to make the flockmasters see several profits between the sheep men and the manufacturer evidently think the wool-growing public knows nothing about the method of selling wool.

The day may come, and will come, no doubt, when the bulk of American wool will be sold at public sale, just as it is now done in England and other countries, but until that day comes some middleman has got to represent the flockmaster, for the big woolen mills of this country have no time to send representatives out to buy up fleeces. They send their buyers into the wool markets and pick up here and there so many thousand pounds of a certain class of wool which is manufactured into the class of goods they sell. The wool commission men of the big wool markets are the buyers of wool when the manufacturers are busy and there is an active demand for the staple. When the season is rather slow the commission men are not so particular about buying and are ready to receive consignments. Generally the shrewd wool grower thinks it to his advantage to sell at the highest price at home, but when he has no buyer he is forced to consign and await a market for his product. This always has been and always will be until wool is sold at public sale and before that is done in this country the flockmasters will have to grow more even clips and market them in a better condition than they have yet done.

One of our subscribers recently wrote that he had shipped some wool to an associated wool growers' company in the East and they were only charging him two cents per pound commission for all expenses attached to marketing the wool. Western wool commission houses charge a cent a pound, which covers everything but interest on advances when made. There is hardly a reliable commission house in the East that asks over a cent and a half commission and many of them will handle large clips on a basis of one cent per pound, so we cannot see where this associated wool growers' scheme is saving the shipper any money. Wool sells on its merits in the open market and the so-called "associated wool growers" can't command a fraction of a farthing more for it than any other wool handler.

Baby beef is a term applied to a grade of steers, choice or prime in quality and condition with conformation that accompanies steers of good killing qualities. To grade as baby beef such steers should be between one and two years of age and weigh from 800 to 1000 pounds. Such cattle grade as choice or prime and are quoted as such in the market.

Dry Feed Better Than Wet.

To discover what advantage there was, if any, in wetting the meal for milk cows, Prof. Grisdale selected two lots of cows, of three each, and fed them for seven days on similar rations. On the eighth day the rations were changed, both lots being fed silage and hay, but lot 1 being given a meal ration of barley, oats and oil meal fed dry, and lot 2 a meal ration of bran and gluten fed wet. These rations were continued for 14 days, when the rations were interchanged, between the two lots of cows. The results from equally good rations, should, with such an interchange of rations, have been quite similar. The results, however show quite a disparity. The ration fed wet gave a daily aggregate of 114 pounds of milk testing 3.83 per cent butter-fat, equivalent to 4.36 pounds of butter-fat, while the same cow fed on the dry rations gave 116½ pounds of milk, testing 3.99 per cent butter-fat, equivalent to 4.62 pounds butter-fat, an increase for the period under test of 2½ pounds of milk; of 16 per cent butter-fat, and of 2.62 pounds of butter-fat, an increase of 6 per cent in favor of dry feed.

The Merino Foundation.

Some writers have of late got into the habit of speaking of the Merino sheep as a has been. One tells how the breed may be "restored," and another explains its "decadence." Strange that intelligent editors should print such rot. The American Merino is all right yet, and if these writers will visit the leading breeders and their flocks they will write more sense and less sympathy. There are different types of Merinos which indicate the ability of the breeders and the versatility of the sheep, but this does not mean that the breed needs "restoration." The Merino is to day, and will remain, the great foundation sheep of the country. Other breeds will be used for crossing and the results are excellent, but the basis of the great American flock must carry a large amount of Merino blood so long as Americans handle the sheep.—National Stockman.

Hide Classification.

- A No. 1 Hide is a perfect hide.
- A No. 2 Hide is one that is tainted, cut, dragged, mangy, grubby or branded.
- A Glue is one that is very badly tainted, badly dragged, very badly cut very badly grubby; also Calf and Kip having five or more cuts or grubs.
- A Deacon is a calf-skin weighing less than eight pounds after it is salt cured.
- A Bull Hide is a hide from a stag, or bull, or an old work-ox.
- A No. 2 Horse Hide is one with a cut in body of hide, or a drag or taint.
- A No. 3 Horse Hide is one very badly cut, dragged or tainted or a very small one.
- A pony hide is one from a pony or very small horse.

The Germans find that with warm water the daily quantity of milk is increased one pound a cow as compared with cows drinking cold water. While the cows drank an average of seventy-three pounds of warm water a day, they drank but sixty-three pounds of cold. They found also that cows drinking warm water consumed three-fourths pound of food more daily, though they consumed a smaller quantity of dry food for each quart of milk. The increase in quantity of water drank was accompanied by an increase of water in milk, with no increase of the total solids, which means that the milk from cows having warm water had a greater per cent of water in it than did the milk of cows drinking cold water.

The championship prize at the late international show was given to Shamrock, a two year old grade Angus fed at the Iowa college. The breeding of the champion is unknown. It was calved in September, 1899, weighs 1805 pounds and was sold at fifty-six cents a pound.

Successful Breeding.

We have great faith in the success of the method which commences with only a few foundation females, which purchases no more of these and which makes improvement in that herd and maintains the same by introducing good males from time to time. The great advantages in favor of this system are that it does not involve very much outlay and therefore is not attended with the hazard that is always more or less incurred in buying and selling again. The breeder who proceeds on the lines which we now advocate is almost certain to succeed. A striking illustration of this method is furnished by Walter Lynch, of Westbourne, Man. Some thirty years ago Mr. Lynch purchased one pure bred Shorthorn cow of miscellaneous lineage. Since that he has purchased no females, but has introduced from time to time good bulls, possessed of fine individuality, but not remarkable for their being possessed of fashionable pedigrees. Recently Mr. Lynch held a dispersion sale and received for sixty animals then sold $10 515. During the previous years he had sold many thousands of dollars' worth of stock, all the progeny of this one cow. When herds are thus managed, the danger from disease is reduced to the minimum.—Holstein-Friesian Register.

Should Calve at Two Years.

The heifer should drop her first calf when she is about two years old, as this will make a more productive cow when delayed until another year. When the first calf is not dropped until the third year, one calf and one year of milking are lost and the heifer acquires a tendency to use her surplus feed in the laying on of fat instead of in the secretion of milk—a tendency which will be retained through life and which would have been avoided by earlier breeding.

While the Shorthorns are usually regarded as a beef breed, there are many good milkers among them and the milking steers are the favorites, even where the production of beef is the main object and at the same time a good yield of milk and butter is desired. No breed has ever been more popular in the Rocky mountain region than has the Shorthorn for dairy purposes. Individual cows of this breed have been known to produce 10,000 to 12,000 pounds of milk in a season and entire herds have averaged from 6500 to 7500 pounds. The milk is of good quality and creams easily, though the butter is usually pale in color. At the Columbian exposition the Shorthorn milk averaged 3.64 per cent of butter fat, while the average of all other breeds was 3.97 per cent. This latter class included Jerseys, Guernseys, Alderneys and all the special dairy breeds.

A Model Sheep Ranch.

In the Corrupaw, in Union county, N. M., there is a large model sheep ranch the conduct of which may prove of interest to those readers who do not know how such an establishment is run. This is Wight ranch, and the watered claims, comprising 3000 acres, are so located as to give grazing privileges over the whole country. There are 15,000 sheep, which range over a strip ten miles wide and thirty miles long, according to Field and Farm. The entire flock right through requires one man to each 1,000 sheep, besides a foreman and a helper at the ranch. During the greater part of the year the ewes are run in bands of from 2500 to 3000, the wethers and yearling ewes in slightly larger bands. The lambing herd is usually less than 2000, and the rams are of course run in a buck herd. It requires about five men to the thousand sheep during lambing, and ordinarily the result are from 80 to 90 per cent. Lambing generally commences May 5, and the greater part of the lambs drop in the succeeding twenty days.

The average cost of help is $18 a month. Shearing commences July 1 and usually lasts ten or twenty days. About 3 cents a head is paid, although there is a tendency on the part of the shearers to increase the price. The probabilities are that there will be a machining shearing plant put in soon. The wether flock shears on an average about ten pounds for the second and third fleeces. Owing to the introduction of English mutton sires to increase the size of the sheep the last year's lambs will not shear this amount. The ewe flock averages eight pounds of wool to the head.

The average cost of running the sheep is 55 cents a head, leaving a nice margin of profit in the wool alone when sold at 12½ cents, the contract price for the season. This profit of 45 to 50 cents a head does not include the sale of 2000 or 3000 wethers at $2 or better in the fall. It requires twenty-five rams to the thousand ewes. After the breeding season is over they are taken by a Spanish neighbor, who herds them all the year except during the breeding season for $25 a month, which price does not include the grain furnished by the owner. The wool clip brought something over $12,000 this season.

Some breeders are so afraid they will get the brood sows too fat that they go to the other extreme and get them too thin. It is one thing to have a brood sow gaining enough and another to have her running down hill. The brood sow will suffer if permitted to get too thin and the coming litter may suffer if permitted to get too fat. If the brood sow is permitted to become too thin and after the pigs are born the feed is poured into her, she will take care of herself first in building up her own system and the pigs will not thrive. Keep the brood sow in a condition to make plenty of milk for the pigs.

Careful investigation among creamery patrons shows that dairy herds in the hands of men who give them good business care produce from $1.50 to $2.50 worth of milk for every dollar's worth of feed consumed. Many dairymen who neglect their cows get much less than this—in a few cases one dollar's worth of feed produces less than a dollar's worth of milk. One investigator has found herds that average less than $25 worth of milk a year, while in others are cows that produce $60 to $70 worth of milk. In two herds, each numbering over forty cows, the average was $49 a cow yearly.

The difference between the selling price of the best beef cattle is about 300 per cent. A prime, well fed beef will sell for about three times as much per pound as the common scrub half fed. That's why there is no profit in growing scrub cattle. A first class dairy cow is worth three times as much as a common scrub, whether to sell or to keep.

SPAVIN CURE.

No Proof so Convincing as the Experience of Those who have Tried It.

Were these two cases worth the cost of treatment?

Nyack N. Y.
In August I had a mare with an ankle cocked from a bad wrench in a race. It was so bad I had concluded to shoot her, but was persuaded to breed her and turn her out. I bred her, but instead of turning her out used your "Save-the-Horse." In three weeks I was more than surprised to see the swelling disappear, and the remedy produced a complete cure. She is as good as ever. I have raced her since and drive her any distance without any sign of lameness. I cannot say too much for your remedy.

GEO. F. BEHRINGER, JR.

Brooklyn, N. Y.
One of my horses went lame from side or shell bones on both feet, which extended entirely around the quarter and was laid up for about three months. I used two bottles of "Save-the-Horse" and the horse is perfectly sound. I have driven her over paved roads, and one day gave her a sixty-mile drive and she never showed the least particle of lameness. The growths have nearly all disappeared. I have owned horses for years, used them to build railroads and in all kinds of contract work and have used remedies, blisters, firing and electricity, but never saw anything take hold and produce such results as "Save-the-Horse" in this case. D. C. BENNETT, Builder, 416 79th St.

QUINN'S OINTMENT FOR HORSES

stands at the head of all veterinary remedies. Such troubles as Spavins, Curls, Windpuffs, Splints, Bunches have no terrors for a horse if the master keeps and applies Quinn's Ointment. All well known horsemen speak of it in the highest terms:

Miller & Sibley of Franklin, Pa., owners of St. Bel, brother of late Bel Boy, write: "We have used Quinn's Ointment with great success and believe it fulfills all claimed for it. We cheerfully recommend it to our friends." For Curls, Splints, Spavins or Bunches it has no equal.

To be Totted at the California State Fair of 1905. Entries to Close January 1, 1903, with GEO. W. JACKSON, Secretary, at the office in Sacramento.

ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS ENTRANCE, of which $10 must accompany nomination; $15 to be paid January 1, 1904, $25 to be paid January 1, 1905, and $50 thirty days before the race. The Occident Cup, of the value of $400, to be added by the Society. Mile heats, three in five, to harness. First colt to receive cup and six-tenths; second colt, three-tenths, and third colt one-tenth of the stakes. Five to enter, three to start; otherwise N. T. A. Rules govern. Nominators are not held for full amount of entrance in case colt goes wrong; only forfeit payments made, which relieves you from further responsibility, and declares entry out.

NOTE.—This Stake is growing in value each year. In 1898 it was worth $2525; in 1899, $2775; in 1900, $2230; in 1901, $2595; in 1902, $3395. The Stake for 1905 should receive a larger entry and be very valuable. Every breeder should enter in it.

A Special Stake will be opened for foals entered originally in this Stake and the Stanford Stake of 1905, that develop a pacing gait, to be contested for in 1905.

Remember, the date of Closing is January 1, 1903.

FOR THE GET OF MARES COVERED IN 1901.

STAKE CLOSED OCTOBER 1, 1901

A FEW SUBSTITUTIONS.

A few of the original nominators of Pacific Breeders Futurity Stakes ($6000 guaranteed) for foals of 1902 have advised us that, because of barrenness of the mare or death of the foal, they wish to dispose of their entries. The opportunity therefore presents itself to secure a $6000 engagement for foals of this season. If you own one or more whose dams you neglected to name when entries closed October 1, 1901, you can now secure representation in this Stake, and thus add materially to the value of your foals. The cost is but $23—$3 for the nomination, $5 for the January payment, 1902, $5 for the July payment, 1902, and $10 for the January payment, 1903.

NOTHING MORE TO PAY BEFORE 1904.

When your foal can start in the Two-Year-Old division. Stakes divided as follows: $3250 for Trotting Foals, $1750 for Pacing Foals, $800 to Nominators of Dams of Winners and $200 for Owners of Stallions, money divided as follows:

$2000 for Three-Year-Old Trotters.	$1000 for Three-Year-Old Pacers.
200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Three-Year-Old Trot.	200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Three-Year-Old Pace.
1250 for Two-Year-Old Trotters	750 for Two-Year-Old Pacers.
200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Two-Year-Old Trot	200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Two-Year-Old Pace
100 to Owner of Stallion, Sire of Winner of Three-Year-Old Trot when mare was bred	100 to Owner of Stallion, Sire of Winner of Three-Year-Old Pace when mare was bred.

The Only Opportunity that will be presented to you to secure so rich an engagement at so nominal a cost.

Remittance of $23, with Color, Sex and Breeding of the Foal, on or before January 2d next, is all that is required to add thousands of dollars to the earning capacity of your foal of this season. The few substitutions to be disposed of will be awarded in the order in which remittances are received. Prompt attention will secure for you this rich engagement.

GIBBS' CELEBRATED PROCESS OF RAPID TAXIDERMY

In Practical Use Over Twenty-Five Years.

Used Everywhere in America. Hundreds of Testimonials. Try and Be Convinced.
Start a Class. Money in It. Be Your Own Taxidermist.

Naturalists, Collectors, Gunners, Anglers, Outers, Boys, Girls, and all others interested in nature and anxious to preserve the specimens taken in wood and field, have all felt the need of a simple method of preservation, which is free from intricacies and expensive.

There is a method of rapid taxidermy now in extensive use, which meets the requirements of all amateurs who wish a practical and inexpensive method of preserving the trophies of the outing and collecting trip. This is not the old system of so-called stuffing, so expensive, laborious and disappointing, but is a rapid system, which anyone can learn at once and which is guaranteed to give satisfaction.

By this process you may preserve the beautiful plumage of the grouse and woodcock, or the pike's or buck's head, or the showy feathers of the tanager. Boys, girls and all others can do good work and may make money, as mounted heads and birds find a ready sale, and besides you may teach your friends and decorate the school-room, office and dining-room with native birds and other attractions. If you are in doubt, then get your friends to go in with you and start a class, for when several work together there is an advantage and the expense is next to nothing.

On the receipt of $1, cash or stamps, I will send full printed instructions for mounting birds, heads, mammals, etc., and all materials for mounting and preserving specimens—including prepared compound, together with full directions for dressing skins with the hair on for rugs and robes, so that you will not be to the expense of one cent.

Remember, I Guarantee Satisfaction or Money Refunded.

THERE IS TALK, and lots of it, of bills upon bills to be introduced in the California Legislature this winter to govern and limit race meetings. If these bills are introduced there will be more talk, and the self constituted champions of racing will be as numerous as "good things" at Ingleside on a holiday. There will be present the fellow with the idea in his head that the State can regulate and control all things, and there will be alongside him the other fellow who thinks that he should be a sharer in everything good that is doing, and consequently wants the racing days divided up by law. There will be an effort to drag the harness horse people and the district fair associations into the fight, and I want to state right here and now, that the only use the authors of these bills will have for them will be for the purpose of pulling chestnuts out of the fire. A bill has already been prepared which will provide that every racing association must pay the State ten per cent of its gross income, the money to go to the support of the agricultural fairs in the different districts. This bill will doubtless receive the endorsement of many of the interior members who will be caught by the bait of financial assistance to their county fairs without cost to the taxpayers, but it is a foregone conclusion that such a bill, if it passes, will have a half dozen clauses and items that were prepared especially for the race track gamblers and which will be overlooked in the bright light that will be turned on the ten per cent clause. Another bill which it is intimated will be fought for with money and influence is one that will limit racing to forty days in any year within twenty-five miles of a county seat. An effort will be made to gull the people with the idea that this bill is introduced in the interest of the county and State fairs and the harness horsemen. Don't you ever believe it. If it is introduced it will be solely backed and fought for by a few "race promoters" who want the State to aid them in making a certain success of a private enterprise.

It could be urged with equal propriety that no ship building plant should construct more than a certain number of vessels in any one year, so that the number of vessels constructed could be divided up amongst the others.

The Legislature will do well if it consigns a majority of the race-track bills to the waste basket. The district fairs are sufficiently provided for now, and can be run with great benefit to the State and profit to the districts with intelligent and energetic management. I can name a dozen district associations that conducted fairs this year which were not only successful in the way of exhibits but profitable—inasmuch as there was a balance left in the treasuries after all bills were paid. When the people of the State of California, in Legislature assembled, first inaugurated the law which divided the State into agricultural districts and appropriated money to aid them, there was no thought of bookmaking or gambling on horse races. The law was designed for the purpose of encouraging the fullest development of the State's resources in agriculture, horticulture, manufactures, live-stock breeding, etc. It was a wise law, and is generally wisely administered. All that the district boards need do at the present time to make the district and State fairs successful is to make an effort to carry out the law in the spirit in which it was conceived. For some unaccountable reason the gamblers and bookmakers have formed an idea that the district fairs were arranged principally to give races, and incidentally to give the gamblers an opportunity to fleece the public. The sooner they are shown the fallacy of this reasoning the better for all concerned; and whenever the directors of any district association realize that the money appropriated by the State is for the purpose of building up the legitimate resources of the district, and that gambling is not included in the list, the better it will be for those who pay the taxes that keep up these district fairs. There is only one way in which the gamblers should be recognized in district and State Fair legislation, and that is by a law which will prevent them playing their vocation on the grounds where any such fairs are in progress.

A gentleman who has bred and raced several horses that have acquired fast records, told me the other day that he had never bet a dollar in the pools, books or mutuels during all the time he had been attending harness races. He was not opposed to betting so far as any law prohibiting it was concerned, but he had never taken any delight in trying to make money out of the pool box. "The most absurd thing in the discussion of racing affairs," said he, "is this claim of trainers and owners that where entries are numerous they trot for their own money. Such argument is the argument of the sure-thing gambler, who looks upon the public as a wild and woolly lamb that should be fleeced. I have been following the California circuit for years," said he, "and have paid out hundreds of dollars in entrance money. Sometimes my horses have won and then again I have gone through the season without winning a race, but I don't squeal. My entries are sent in the next year just the same. In the old days when I made my first tour of the California Circuit, the entrance-fee was ten per cent of all purses. We did not hear any complaint then of trotting for our own money, but we went out and tried to win the purse without regard to whether there were large or small gate receipts. In these latter days there are a lot of horse owners who will start in any race where they can get from twenty to thirty dollars out of the purse and you will hear all these fellows talking about 'trotting for our own money.' It is a misnomer. The owner who wants to win and is ready to back his horse, does not care where the purse comes from. If it is all made up from owners who have entries, so much the better, as the chances are that the race will be for blood and the best horse will win. True horsemen are not trotting for their own money—they are trotting for first money and don't care a rap whose money it is."

Speaking of horsemen trotting for their own money, did it ever occur to you that this is the state of things in stake races, which are the very life and support of racing. The Occident Stake was worth over three thousand dollars this year, and yet the California State Agricultural Society only added $400 to the sums paid in by the owners. The Kentucky Futurity is guaranteed to be worth $20,000, yet the association guaranteeing it does not have to put up a cent. It is the horseman's own money that they trot for. Take the big stakes on the Grand Circuit and it will be found that in the majority of instances the entrance fees make up nearly the entire sum trotted or paced for. The cry of "racing for your own money" is a false one, and no true sportsman should ever be guilty of raising it.

Have you seen the Christmas Horse Review? If not you will enjoy the following story by Murray Howe, which appeared in the holiday number of that publication:

"Trotwood" says Direct Hal is a Hal in conformation, but I can't see it in that way; he is black, he is round, he is small—a typical Direct all over. As to his speed limit—well, any horse that can make a break, drop behind a big field, then win the heat in 2:04½, with a last half on the outside better than 1:00, is a likely candidate for two minute honors. Direct Hal's future is particularly promising, because he has graduated from a good school. With the trotter or pacer "class" and education go hand in hand. It is my observation that "class" on the running tracks which we hear so much about, is simply controllable speed. Ninety-nine thoroughbreds in a hundred are "speed crazy" and cannot be rated. The one-hundredth has speed more or less under his rider's control. He does not run his head off every time he starts, consequently he has "class." A horse with speed more thoroughly under control than Direct Hal would be hard to find.

This reminds me of another good race horse out this year that might have been anything but a reliable racing tool had it not been for a two-years' course in one of the best training schools in the land. I refer to Dick Benson's good trotter, The Roman 2:09½. They beat him once or twice, I believe, but he made a wide mark from Detroit to the sea. You will remember that Dick schooled The Roman all summer-before-last when most trainers would have had him off to the races exhibiting his bad manners to the multitude. Not so with Professor Benson. He knew that The Roman had speed enough, so he let that part of it alone, and put in a whole season teaching his charge track manners that would make him a credit to his trainer and a joy to his owner. Late last winter, when Benson was giving The Roman the long, slow "prep" down at Memphis, he used to tell the boys that his McKinney trotter could step a quarter in 30 seconds as easy as The Abbot could, but not once during the hundred or more heats that he worked over that track did he exhibit such speed except at the end of the heat that finished his "prep."

Not every trainer could have schooled a horse possessed of two-minute speed for three months on a track as smooth as a floor without stepping him a few quarters against the watch. Methinks I know one or two jocks who would have been stepping this particular racer right around the first bend on his tip toes three or four times a week. Benson must have figured that too much fast work before his education was complete would have made The Roman a speed-crazy article. If my memory is correct, The Roman made but two breaks during his entire campaign this year, and it was common talk down the line that he was one of the most perfect mannered horses that ever went to the races. If he had a fault it was his inability to get away as fast as some others in his class. This was hardly a handicap except in big fields, like that which scored up in the Massachusetts, for instance. In that race The Roman was a favorite in the betting for two heats, but as he could not score fast the size of the field compelled him to trot about a mile and a sixteenth every heat, and while he trotted a couple of miles, separately timed, faster than the winner, he did not get any part of the money. The terrific flight of speed that he showed in the first heat, however, was really one of the features of the race. He was one of the tail enders in the race at the half and in the next quarter he trotted around the field and had overhauled the leaders when the clip carried him off his feet. One watch I saw timed him a last half in 1:02, out in the middle of the track. As a prize beauty The Roman is not entitled to the blue. His lines are plain to homeliness and he wears a gaiting pole and all the boots in the show case, but his action is very true and rapid, and he looks like the good race horse that he is when strung out at top speed. Some one has said, in print, that The Roman looks like The Abbot, but there is certainly another guess coming in that quarter. He is a different sort from The Abbot altogether. They are alike in just one respect—they both get away slow and like to race from behind.

I have often thought that it would have been a great thing for both parties if Benson could have traded Alta McDonald a little of The Roman's tractability for some of Major Delmar's speed at the score. The Major has the speed of a cannon ball getting away, but, unlike The Roman, he could not be rated anywhere except in front, and that fault cost him several good races, notably the Transylvania. In that race McDonald was quite generally criticized for allowing the Major to try for a heat after a break had put him hopelessly out of the hunt, but while the drive exhausted his horse and lost him the race, McDonald was not to blame. Other drivers in the race told me that Alta almost choked the Major down trying to restrain him. Delmar, in front of his field and Delmar behind his field are two different horses. Once in front he can be rated with a tow string and will even race quietly with a horse on his throatlatch, but behind his field he will either break or choke himself trying to gain his coveted position. If my eye was right McDonald took a long chance and scored his horse out of his position in the Massachusetts and took the pole almost at the word and was never headed. It is quite possible that McDonald will be able to overcome this peculiarity another season, as in his last race at Memphis he tried a new bit that worked like a charm. In all three heats of that race Major Delmar allowed Monte Carlo to take the track away from him and then came on and won in the last quarter. McDonald gave most of the credit to the new bit, but it remains to be seen whether or not this bit will be effective in a large field. It often happens, too, that a headstrong trotter will give up to a new bit, but go right back to his old habits as soon as he gets acquainted with the article.

It may interest some of my readers to know that the bit the Major wore at Memphis was what is known as a Crescendo. I have heard that it got its name from its inventor, Johnny Driscoll, a one-time running horse jockey, who afterwards trained trotters and used his bit with success on the trotter Crescendo. The first one I ever saw was used by George West with great success on Tommy Britton. Britton, as almost every one knows, was a very difficult proposition to rate and handle in a race, and West used this bit on him the season he lowered the three-heat race record for trotting stallions. Major Delmar will improve with another year as certain as he stays sound, and he does not need very much to make him the best trotter in the land. In point of gait Delmar is a high-going horse at both ends, and, in fact, has so much hock action that he needs a sulky quite a little higher than the average horse of his size. He is shod with his toes slightly longer than natural, but wears light shoes and goes with a quick, snappy stride.

John A. McKerron is much such a gaited horse as Delmar, but his stride is shorter and quicker. Like Delmar, he has more hock action than most fast horses. McKerron is a trotter that looks the part. At top speed he looks like a horse going a mile a minute. There is quite a contrast between his way of going and The Monk's, for instance. When The Monk is strung to his limit and all out he looks to be jogging, and even Lord Derby is a deceptive going horse as compared to trotters of the McKerron-Delmar stripe.

A horse that is making a name for himself in spite of numerous handicaps is Secretary, the handsome son of Director 2:17. He was purchased recently by Mr. P. W. Bellingall, of Oakland, who intends that the horse shall have every opportunity in the stud and be mated to a good class of mares in the future. The pacer Frank, that reduced his record to 2:10½ on a half-mile track over East this year and is booked for a record of 2:04 or better by the "wise men of the East," is a son of Secretary. No horse in California has sired good looks with more uniformity.

Notes and News.

The Occident Stake closes next Thursday.

No bookmaking will be permitted at the Oregon State Fair next year.

The Greater Salem $2000 stake for pacers of the 2:18 class will be renewed next year.

John Donahue is training three trotters and two pacers at the Los Angeles track.

E. Stewart's sale of roadsters last Tuesday was very successful and good prices were realized.

P. J. Carmody, St. Louis, announces that he will give a big trotting meeting in that city next season.

There seemed to be a ready buyer for every good horse offered for sale during the big sale in New York.

Budd Doble has returned from the East. He left Kinney Lou at Walnut Hall Stock Farm, near Lexington.

J. Malcolm Forbes is now the owner of the dam of Fantasy 2:06 and she will be bred to Arion 2:07½, the coming season.

A New York firm has a contract to supply the Barnum & Bailey circus with 300 fancy draft horses by February 1, 1903.

It is now said that an attempt to lower the pole record next year will be made by Ed Benyon, with Ferenó 2:07½ and Ozanam 2:08.

Vet. Kent has 25 head in his string at Los Angeles, including several horses belonging to members of the Los Angeles Driving Club.

S. S. Bailey, of Seattle, is spending the winter in Los Angeles and has a couple of very promising green trotters at the track there.

Don't neglect to secure a space to advertise your stallion in the special edition of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN to be issued January 10th.

There are indications that the number of horses in training next Spring in California will crowd the stall accommodations at the leading training tracks.

All the stock remaining at the late Hon. Frank Jones' Maplewood Farm, including Idolita 2:09½ and Betonica 2:09½, has been consigned to the next New York sale.

Pool seller Kershaw, who sells first choice for big figures often on the "Oil Circuit," and who is one of the youngest auctioneers in the business, is on a visit to California.

Lord Derby 2:05½ is to be given special preparations to beat the world's trotting record next season. Mr. Smathers, his owner, is confident that the Derby horse can turn the trick.

Dolly Bidwell 2:09½, will be used on the snowpath in Presque Isle, Me., by Hon. T. H. Phair this winter, and it is thought she will be in shape to go to the races again next season.

Anyone wanting a well bred stallion should consult Mr. P. H. McEvoy's advertisement in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. He has three large young stallions for sale, all elegantly bred.

A match race between Lord Derby and Major Delmar with a big side bet is one of the possibilities of next year. E. E. Smathers is said to be willing to make the race for from $5000 to $50,000.

A filly by Zombro 2:11 out of a mare by Guide 2:16, son of Director is offered for sale by Geo. H. Tousey of Rialto, Cal. Mr. Tousey also offers for sale two mares by Guide. See advertisement.

Nathan Strauss, New York's noted road driver, returned from Europe last week and his first act after landing was to telephone his stables and ask after the welfare of his favorite trotter Cobwebs.

Spirit of the West says: "If trotting meetings must be run solely in the interest of that class of gamblers who want quick returns for their money, then substitute dash racing for heat racing, by all means."

The breaking and early training of the youngster will have a very important bearing on his future usefulness as regards road driving. Brains and patience are required to break and handle colts properly.

Minneapolis is to have an innovation in the matter of horse shows in January. It will be a winter carnival on Park avenue, in which some of the swiftest equipages of the twin cities will compete for honors.

If you own a foal of this year that you failed to get a nomination for in the Pacific Breeders Futurity, you may be able to secure one for him by applying to Secretary F. W. Kelley at 36 Geary street on or before January 2d. There are a few nominations for sale at the price of the money already paid in.

One of the handsomest mares in California is Diabla 2:15½ by Diablo. Mr. J. W. Thoms of Alameda is driving her on the road this winter and she attracts much attention whenever she appears on the streets.

Zombro 2:11, the greatest McKinney ever foaled, will have a full book early in the season of 1903. Mr. Beckers will probably keep him at Los Angeles during the season as he can book all the mares he can attend to without leaving home.

A yearling by Mr. D. F. Oglesby's stallion Almonada trotted a quarter in 41 seconds at the Santa Barbara track on Thanksgiving Day this year. It weighed 820 pounds that day and will not be two years old until the 3d day of next May.

On Thanksgiving Day the Hampton (Va.) Driving Park Association had two purse races, with Effie Powers and Pilot Medium Jr. as chief attractions. The old mare won the free-for-all in 2:15½, 2:13, 2:12, which last heat is the State record.

The Indiana pacing mare, Nellie Storm 2:14½, while enroute to Columbus, O., this fall, had one of her eyes totally destroyed by a stone, thrown by some malicious or criminally careless person. She has been retired and bred to Hal Dillard 2:04½.

Mr. A. Winship, of Los Angeles, has a very promising three year old pacer by Titus (own brother to Direct 2:05½) out of Gazelle 2:11½ (dam of Zephyr 2:11 and Zolock 2:10½) by Gossiper 2:14½. Vet Kent is training this speed endowed youngster.

Eugeneer 20450, kept as a private stallion and owned by Mr. J. B. Iverson of Salinas, appears among the stallions that have sired new comers to the 2:20 list this year. He is the sire of Princess 2:15½, a mare that will trot into the 2:10 list in another year.

The Indianapolis meeting of 1903 will precede the Grand Circuit meeting at Detroit, and stakes and purses will be offered of sufficient size to attract the best horses. Six $1000 early closing events are on the card, with purses from $500 to $700 in value.

In the list of entries made in the Breeders Futurity No. 3, which closed December 1st, the name of Mr. Juan B. Roqui was misspelled and appeared as Juan B. Anouki. Mr. Roqui bred his mare Kittle Rice to Mr. D. F. Oglesby's stallion Almonada this year.

Harry Hamlin has decided that the racing stable of the Village Farm will not be discontinued, as was his intention a year or so ago. Geers will continue to have charge of the campaigners and the colors of the Village Farm promise to be prominent on the trotting tracks.

John Wood, convicted of ringing the pacer Norseman 2:14½, alias Dandy Hal, was last week sentenced by Judge Snider, of Hamilton, Ont., to two weeks imprisonment and a fine of $100 and costs, total $175. The sentence was made light, owing to the age of the culprit.

L. J. Sanborn, of Olat, Hawaiian Islands, writes to the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN that he would like to purchase a pair of pacers about 15.3 hands high that can show speed on the road. He also wants a good single footer. Can any of our readers supply him with what he wants?

The Abbot 2:05½, who is, with the exception of Cresceus, the fastest trotter in the world, has arrived at the Patchon Wilkes Farm, Lexington, Ky., and will be wintered there. About March 1st he will be put in training, as his owners have decided to send him next fall against the world's record.

Admonto, the pacer by Advertiser that S. D. Washington started a couple of times on the circuit last summer, is showing wonderful speed in his work at Los Angeles. While he failed to win this year, he was separately timed in 2:18 in a heat in which he finished second and paced trials in 2:15 and better.

It is to be hoped that the district and State Fair associations will not be led into any scheme that may be introduced in the California Legislature this winter to regulate racing. It will be well for these associations to remember the story of the monkey that used the cat's paw to draw chestnuts from the fire.

The committee having in charge the plan to raise a fund for paying off the club's contracts by refitting the club house on the New York speedway and for the erection of suitable stabling feel confident that it will be an easy matter to raise $12,000, and the issue of bonds by the Road Drivers' Association will not be necessary.

Prince Alert, the champion hopped pacer, and one of the three horses that ever went a mile in two minutes, is a wonder. He has paced 276 beats, winning 141, and has only been behind the money eight times. Three of these times he was distanced. He has the enviable record of pacing sixty-three winning beats below 2:10.

The weanlings by Bonnie Direct 2:05½ are among the handsomest foals ever seen in California. Burt Webster is handling two or three of them at Pleasanton, teaching them uses of harness and bits and they all seem to understand just what is required of them as soon as they are hitched up. Bonnie Direct will be a sire of extreme speed as soon as his foals are old enough to race. The prediction is here made that there will be a 2:10 performer the first year his produce are represented on the turf.

The New England trainer, Tom Marsh, owns a six-month old colt who is a bit of a wonder, for last week he stepped an eighth better than a four-minute clip. The youngster is by Dreamer, out of a daughter of Woodbrino. Marsh's contract with Thomas W. Lawson expires on January 1, and he will open a public stable either at Readville or Dover.

A special stake is to be opened by the California State Agricultural Society for foals originally entered in the Occident or Stanford Stakes of 1905 that develop a pacing gait. This will make these stakes more attractive than ever and should increase the entry list considerably. The Occident Stake for 1905 will close January 1st—next Thursday.

The Pacific Coast Trotting horse Breeders Association found The California $2000 stake for 2:24 class trotters so popular this year that they will open another stake of equal value next season. While The California was almost a walk-over for Petigru this year, the same conditions would not have prevailed had the race been trotted two months earlier.

"Farmer" Bunch is handling a number of two and three year olds at the Meek Farm at Haywards and finds a big proportion of prospects among them. There is a McKinney yearling out of the dam of Janice 2:08½ that trotted a quarter in 44 seconds the first time it was hitched to a cart. Cricket 2:10, the dam of four in the list, is heavy with foal to Welcome 2:10½.

Among the new comers to the standard list this year is the pacer County Attorney 2:20½ that is an own brother to Fitz Lee 2:13½. Mr. J. C. Bray purchased this horse last year for County Attorney P. Breen of Boise, Idaho, who is a member of the driving club at that place, and he showed so much speed that he was raced at several meetings in the northwest.

Arrangements are under way to make William C. Whitney's training track at Alken, S. C., the finest in the land. With this in view both he and August Belmont have secured an option on a large tract adjoining the track, and expect in a short time to begin work. The track when ready will be used by the millionaire horse owners to train their thoroughbreds in winter.

Mr. A. H. Cohen of Fruitvale, owner of the hand some and fast pacing stallion Advertiser by Advertiser, has found a perfect mate for him in size and looks and drives them together on the road, although the mate is a trotter. As Advertiser can trot a 2:40 gait they pole nicely together unless a high rate of speed is asked of them and then the stallion takes to the lateral gait and can show a two minute clip at it.

Jacob Schafer, of Fowler, Fresno county, offers for sale three well bred colts, one a full brother to the horse Athanio that trotted to a record of 2:10 and was sold to Europe. Athanio was owned for a time by the Hamlins, and was bred to a few mares and his get are showing great speed. This full brother is a very stylish pure gaited trotter and will weigh close to 1400 pounds when he reaches maturity. See advertisement.

The total number of trotting stallions that have yet taken records of 2:08 or better is seventeen, viz.: Cresceus 2:02½, Directum 2:05½, John A. McKerron 2:05½, Bingen 2:06½, Tommy Britton 2:06½, Ralph Wilkes 2:06½, Charley Herr 2:07, Caid 2:07½, Peter the Great 2:07½, William Penn 2:07½, Jupe 2:07½, Stamboul 2:07½, Kremlin 2:07½, Arion 2:07½, Fred Kohl 2:07½, Grattan Boy 2:08 and Onward Silver 2:08. All except Ralph Wilkes 2:06½ and Stamboul 2:07½ are living.

William Murray, of Woodland, was in town this week and the advertising matter for the 1903 season of Diablo 2:09½ will be issued from this office in a few days. Diablo is in splendid shape and got a very large percentage of his mares in foal this year. There are some of the best weanlings by Diablo this year that he has ever sired and the breeders of Yolo county are realizing that it was a fortunate day for them when the son of Chas. Derby was located in that section.

Fred H. Chase & Co's new pavilion at the popular old salesyard corner Market and Van Ness avenue in this city is to be used for the sale of trotting stock at night. It is brilliantly lighted by electricity, and being painted white on the interior, it is as light as day. There is room for a team to be driven in and around the ring at a trot and the raised seats make it most comfortable and convenient for buyers. Trotting horse sales at night should become popular.

Matt L. Williams, the well known and successful reinsman of Atlantic, Iowa, enjoys the unique distinction of having placed the sixth performer in the list for three great broodmares this season: Radio (4, p) 2:19½ by Tangent 2:18½, the sixth for fairy Bashaw; Princess Yetive (2) 2:29½ by Parole 2:16, the sixth for Retta 2:28½, and Admiral Dillon 2:28½ by Baron Dillon 2:12, making the sixth for Nida, dam of Janie T. (2) 2:14, etc.

Sandy Smith came up from Aptos Farm this week on a flying trip and reports everything serene at the home of Dexter Prince and Cupid. He says that Czarina 2:13½ and Venus II 2:11½ both returned from Toledo in good shape and are heavy with foal to Cresceus 2:02½. Sandy is working seven or eight two year olds and a couple of yearlings that are all doing nicely. The yearlings are especially promising, one by Dexter Prince out of Point Lace being one of the greatest prospects ever seen on the Aptos Farm. Sandy says that those eighths in 19 seconds which were recently made so much over when a Kentucky yearling showed it, would be easy for this youngster.

Death of Charles Owens.

In the terrible railroad accident which occurred on the Southern Pacific railroad line last Saturday evening, Chas. A. Owens, the well known horseman of Fresno, met an untimely death. Mr. Owens was one of the most prominent farmers and breeders of Fresno county, and was a partner of his brother Thomas, the firm name being Owens Brothers. They bred and raced runners and harness horses and were owners of the well known thoroughbreds Grady, Canejo, Flush of Gold and others. Deceased was an admirer of the harness horse, and bred and drove to his record the fast pacer Joe Wheeler 2:07½, and several other standard bred horses.

Born about fifty-five years ago, he and his brother Thomas, with whom he was always a partner, went from Stanislaus county to Fresno county about twenty-eight years ago and settled in the so-called Mississippi country, the deceased taking up a tract of land in what is now Garfield district, near Clovis. His parents with the younger members of the family had preceded him to that part of the country by several years. Continuing the partnership with his brother, the two farmed together, running a steam thresher, and had a fair share of prosperity. About fifteen years ago they began their racing business by sending a small string of thoroughbreds out on the circuit and their colors have not been missing from the tracks a single season since.

A widow and three children survive Mr. Owens. Mrs. Owens was formerly Miss Carrie Cole, daughter of S. H. Cole, former chairman of the Board of Trustees of Fresno, and sister of Clovis Cole. The children are Mattie, Roy and Arch. Miss Mattie Cole was to have been married last Sunday to J. F. Bolton, and it was to be present at the wedding and give the bride away that Chas. Owens was on his way home when he met his death.

Humorous Incidents of the Sale Ring.

"I said this horse usefully sound, not uselessly sound," said auctioneer Bain, sorrowfully. "And I am bid only $20."

"Twenty-five?"

"He's yours."

"Look here, men," cried the official booster, "here's the horse you're looking for. You can drive him with one hand and smoke a cigar with the other, and he's no Irishman, either."

"This here hoss, gentlemen," shouted an anxious consignor, as the bidding dragged, "is absolutely sound, AB-SO-LUTE-LY. He's got a little mite of a puff on that near hock and a very small splint; one of his eyes is a little blue and he split his ear on a barbed wire fence. Otherwise he is sound—ABSOLUTELY."

"Look that horse over carefully, men; he's a good one. He's worth more money than that in this country. Don't let 'em steal him, Mr. Auctioneer."

Somebody got him for $60, and the consignor shed a few tears. But as he walked down out of the box he remarked: "I only brought him along to fill the car, and all he ever cost me was twenty and the freight."

"Gentlemen, this horse will go right up to a steam engine, or wade through a drove of bumblebees. You can't frighten him, nor make him do a mean thing."

At the end of the speech Mr. Horse jumped eleven feet straight up, kicked himself loose from the cart and dodged a hundred men for ten minutes. As he was led back to the block his owner shouted: "That's the first mean thing I ever saw him do. He's scared of the crowd."

The next offering had been bid up to $25, when it began to neigh for its mate. "That's nothing," said Bain, "he's only 'hollering' at the price."—Exchange.

Says the Rural Spirit: Portland is to have a live stock show in connection with a race meeting next year. Articles of incorporation have been filed for that purpose by prominent business men of this city. The capital stock is fixed at $25,000, and is being rapidly subscribed for by our best citizens. The organization will be known as the Multnomah Fair Association. They have a seven year lease on Irvington track, and will thoroughly repair the same by constructing new stock sheds, a saddling paddock, new club house, whitewash the old stables, and remodel and paint the grand stand. Fully $5000 will be set aside for this purpose, which will put the place in first class condition. The addition of a live stock show will, it is thought, break the hoodoo that has surrounded Irvington Park for many years. As soon as the stock is all subscribed, a board of directors will be elected and active work begun at once, and Portland for the first time in years will have the support of the business men in this undertaking.

A lot of McMurray carts just received. You need one right now to work your colts in this winter. Call at the Kenney Manufacturing Company, 531 Valencia street and take a look at these carts and other first-class vehicles they have for sale. *

Fitting Horses for Market.

"There is no fact that stands out more prominently in the horse business, as being fundamental, than that it always pays to fit horses before placing them on the market. It is a very common practice to see farmers sell good, sound horses for $100 to $125, while the same animals put in good shape would command from $150 to $200. The argument may be brought forward that middlemen who buy thin horses and ship them East do not after all make a fortune out of the business, but it should be remembered that there is a qualifying factor in the situation. These buyers often purchase unsound horses, which are frequently marketed at a loss, even after being fitted," says an exchange.

"An authority on the subject of horses makes the statement that the increase in weight up to a certain limit, if the individuality is correct, will be marketed at 25 cents per pound. In other words, a 1200-pound horse that will sell thin for $125 will bring $175 if made to weigh 1400 pounds. Of course this implies that he will carry this increased weight in good form, and that he has good legs to support his body. Even the owner can scarcely tell the value of a horse until he is put in good condition. Just recently we had an instance of this kind brought to our notice. A little, well bred standard horse was sold, while in an unthrifty condition, for $400. He turned out to be a splendid actor, and the new owner within three months sold him for $2150. A $5000 show horse of 1901 was purchased a few months previous to being shown for $125. Although these instances are extreme, and may not apply to the average horse, yet it illustrates the point that is under discussion.

"Many persons when the fall work is over feel as though they must immediately dispose of some of their work horses in order to economize the food that will be required to winter them. It is to such persons that we wish to emphasize the importance of doing a little fitting before placing animals on the market. Instead of letting up on the food supply after the work season is over, it is a much better plan to continue it. However, good care must be taken to allow the animals to have plenty of exercise, otherwise their blood becomes heated and they are sure to become swollen in their legs and out of order generally.

"Until the animals become accustomed to idleness it may be necessary to cut down the ration a little for a short time, or to change its character. There is nothing better than a feed of boiled barley once a day for a period of two weeks after the work season is all over. This may be supplemented by a little bran and linseed meal. After horses are once conditioned to idleness they may be fed fattening foods, and will make gains very rapidly. Unless they have been very thin to start with, two or three months will generally bring them into good market condition.

"There is sound philosophy in the practice of buying horses that are carrying considerable flesh. Nothing indicates more clearly the constitution of the animal than his ability to put on a certain amount of weight. Of course, it is possible to dope a poor individual and make him take on the appearance of a good animal, but most persons who are in the habit of practicing such methods are sooner or later given their board at the expense of the State. While this particular form of dishonesty can scarcely be approached by the law, yet it generally leads to some deeds that may be handled by the courts. If a farmer wishes to purchase a good animal, the fall of the year is the time to do it, as they are generally cheaper at this time than later, and the cost of wintering is not great. On the other hand, if one wishes to sell an animal, unless he is in the pink of condition, it will usually be profitable to keep him over until the beginning of the year. In the case of good individuals we venture to assert that food consumed during the winter will be marketed at a big profit."

Montana Circuit Proposed.

The discussion of a small circuit in Montana for harness racing has been active for two years past, and now promises to develop into something tangible. Such men as W. H. Raymond, C. X. Larrabee and Fleming Bros. are now giving the matter some attention and with the expectancy that the coming Legislature will provide State aid for both State and county fairs in that State, the project gives promise of fulfillment. The cities of Butte, Helena, Bozeman, Great Falls, Billings and Dillon have always been ready to aid such an undertaking to the extent of their ability, but the carrying of a general fair and a race meeting, too, has always made the burden greater than the few enterprising business men could well afford to carry. With the State and county governments taking the premiums for exhibits from the shoulders of the citizens the plans for several good harness meetings now seem feasible. The Montana establishments alone can give the public racing events in time better than 2:15, and the number of such horses is rapidly increasing.

An Honest Horse Dealer

An honest horse dealer has evidently been found, says the Toledo Bee. A well known Summit street wholesaler and an enthusiastic official of the Driving Club has been advertising for a little speed in a pacer of late. Last week he received a reply from a man in Sharpsville, Pa., that bears the stamp of extreme honesty on its face and so impressed and pleased the Toledo gentleman with it, that he at once wrote as much in reply, coupled with a request for a photograph of the pacer, that he may the better be able to judge of the soundness of the horse from the photographed size of the "four enlarged ankles." The letter says:

"Dear Sir—Seeing your advertisement for a good horse with speed I write to tell you that I think I have what you want. My horse has a record of 2:30—if that is fast enough; is 11½ years old—if that is old enough—and has four enlarged ankles—if that is sound enough; also is very slightly over on his knees—but that is hardly noticeable. He is a very dark brown—if you like that color—some would call him black—maybe you like that better. He is 15 hands high—if that is big enough, has long mane and tail—presume all Toledo people will appreciate that feature, as Toledo is the home of President James N. Brown, of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. He carries his mane on the left side, but it could be trained the other way if you like it better. His full flowing tail he carries behind him—not one-sided like a crab going to jail. He is all style and a great actor, with a high and handsome head and two good eyes. He is gentle enough for a woman to drive—if you like that, and not afraid of a thing except an automobile, an electric car and a threshing machine. And I will warrant him true. He weighs about 1050 pounds—if that is heavy enough, though he could be 'fleshed' to weigh more. He doesn't interfere with himself or other horses, is a fast walker and has no bad habits. Presume you will like that. My reason for selling is that I want money in my business. My lowest cash price is $125 right here, though my horse is worth double that amount.

Yours very truly, ———."

Guy's Expensive Work-Out.

Referring to the death of Guy, his famous old trotter, who was Cleveland's pride in years gone by, Secretary Gocher, of the National Trotting Association, said recently that Guy figured in the most expensive work-out of which he ever heard. When J. B. Perkins sold Guy to W. J. Gordon, it was for $6000, with the added understanding that Perkins was to receive $4000 more if Guy showed a mile in 2:20 or better during the year. That was the day of high-wheeled sulkies.

"Of course," said Gocher, "the buyer was anxious that Guy should show no such speed, while the seller was just as anxious that he should. Consequently, Gordon instructed his trainer not to let Guy have his head. On the other hand, Perkins passed word around at the track at Glenville that a suit of clothes would be given the man who timed Guy a mile in 2:20 or better and could prove it. That set all the trainers and swipes to watching Guy's work, and in consequence Guy's trainer used to take him out at unusual hours in order to dodge the watchers. Still he never had any intention of beating 2:21.

"One day, however, Guy showed his wilfulness and after doing the first half in 1:13, took the bit in his teeth and tore home in 1:06, thus making the mile in 2:19. There was just one watch on the performance. Its owner, 'Skinny' McCabe, reported to Perkins and verified the report to the satisfaction of Gordon—the latter's trainer acknowledging the truth of the matter—and Perkins was immediately given a check for $4000. Then 'Skinny' got a suit of clothes. If that wasn't a record-breaker in the way of an expensive work out, I have yet to learn the contrary."

Does Not Favor Dash Racing.

In a recent interview, President D. J. Campau, of the Detroit Driving Club, made the following statement relative to the dash system of harness racing:

"It will not do at all. It will be necessary to revolutionize the whole system of racing on the plan of the running turf, a change so radical that it is both impracticable and unwise. The Brighton Park and the Memphis plan, so-called, will die a natural death. In fact, the Brighton Beach Association has already declared the plan a failure. The shortening of racing contests, however, is inevitable, and the Detroit Club's entire program next season will be the best two in three heats, with the exception of the $10,000 Merchants' and Manufacturers' Stake and the $5000 Chamber of Commerce Stake, which will be three in five as heretofore, and this plan, I think, will meet both the wants of horsemen and the race-going public."

Abolish Betting on Amateur Races.[H. K. Devereux in American Horse Breeder.]

Matinee driving and amateur racing has reached a point in its development that should prove conclusively to the most doubting Thomases that this sport has passed the experimental stage and that it is of a character that insures great things for its future. It has taken some time to demonstrate to the practical horseman, and to some of the wise men who write of their doings, the value of this sport to horse interests at large.

When the amateurs proposed to race their horses at open matinees without incurring the penalty of records, there was a great cry raised that the professional element in the business was to be greatly wronged. Class legislation was the cry. When finally the Board of Review of the National Trotting Association penalized John A. McKerron with a record for the offense of winning a silver cup for his home club at an amateur matinee, the arguments began to be heated, and with the subsequent reversal and reversal of this most peculiar decision the excitement ran high, and writers went so far as to make personal attacks on those most actively interested. Right finally prevailed, however, and after such an exhibition as was presented at the final cup race at Cleveland last September, it would seem that no one could now have the hardihood to denounce amateur racing as it has been forced, developed, and as it was exhibited on those two memorable days.

It is amusing to hark back and recall some of the things that were said and written regarding these matters, and particularly the bitter innuendoes that were hurled at the heads of the men who had the temerity to join their different matinee clubs together in the League of Amateur Driving Clubs. The horse still carries the penalty of the record attached to him for winning nothing at a meeting that was not a race meeting, and in this bears the peculiar distinction of being the only horse that ever has or ever will acquire a record in such a way. As has since been demonstrated, it was the cause of a loss of some thousands of dollars to the owner, but worse than that, the shattering of a cherished plan and hope of winning three classic stakes to which the horse was properly eligible.

The vindication of a principle as made by the amateur performances and successes the past season must be gratifying to all who foresaw the outcome of the influence of this sport. The interest taken in the amateur events at the Detroit, Syracuse, New York, Lexington and Memphis meetings by both the professional element and the public was a surprise to many, and the willingness, and often eagerness, with which many of the owners and trainers offered their horses for use in such races demonstrates in a small but conclusive way the change of heart that has come to many when they once learned what the sport was and what it meant to them. The value of the League organization, too, was plainly shown at the different meetings where amateur racing was given, and more particularly in the arrangement and conducting the Inter-City Matinee at Cleveland.

There is a question in the minds of some of the amateurs if it is a good plan to mix their racing with the regular race meetings. A year ago many of the professionals objected to it—to-day those who have come in contact with it are generally in favor of it. As far as the public is concerned, and from the point of view of the association giving the meeting, "the wagon races" are well received, and will remain so as long as there is novelty in it at least; but from the point of view of the amateur himself, there are objections to the idea of mixing professional and amateur racing. This objection is given strength on account of the betting done on wagon events. The betting element like these races and like to bet on them, because they are sure of a drive for their money, and to their minds the result of their bet is fixed by the estimation of the ability of the horse and the experience of the amateur driver.

Whether one drives in public or matinee races there occur times when there must be some criticism made of his driving, but when a man has made a bet and lost, his judgment is apt to be biased and his criticism unfair. For this reason amateurs who drive in races where pools are sold and bookmaking allowed put themselves at once in a position to be openly criticised both as to their ability and integrity. The average man who bets on a race does not hesitate to pass judgment on every driver's honesty, and his judgment is fixed by his winnings or his losings. Every driver knows how true this is, and it is hardly in accord with amateur sport, and certainly unpleasant for the amateur drivers themselves to be placed in such positions.

For an example of this undesirable and hurtful criticism, caused alone by the fact that pools were sold on the race, I will cite a recent occurrence at one of these wagon races: There were four horses, one of which, an old campaigner, and what is known as a slow beginner, was accused of laying up the first heat. There had been a tip given by one supposedly well informed to play the horse for place, and some of the talent took advantage of what they were advised was a good thing.

The horse in question, when racing with other horses, could go a half in 1:04½ and a mile in about 2:10. He started with horses that had much more speed, and being sent away a length back, the others soon lost him. They went down to the half in 1:05½, and under a vigorous drive this horse got there in 1:05, his limit; he reached the three quarters in 1:38½, and the others were out of reach. Seeing the hopelessness of the chase, his driver, after getting well into the stretch, stopped driving him, but did not take him back until near the finish. The heat was won in 2:10½, and this horse went in 2:14; much of this distance was lost in the last eighty yards.

The fast first half of the first heat had taken some of the brush out of the others, and in the subsequent heats this horse was able to stay with them, and he succeeded in beating them by going the next two heats in about the same time as the first. In no heat did he go any half faster than 1:04½, being under a drive all the time, which indicates that his first heat was about his limit under the circumstances. Had there been no pool selling there would have been no comment on what certainly, to a man ill-advised, looked like a deliberate case of laying up; but the talent had made a mistake, and excuses were in order.

As it happened, that day the judges had fined four of the professional drivers for laying up; and one of the professional element, an avowed staunch friend of the amateur game, expressed his criticism very freely, and remarked, "When a poor devil of a professional lays up, the judges jerk him up and fine him, but when a gentleman driver lays up and wins, they come down from the stand to shake his hand and congratulate him."

Such things as this hurts the sport and are entirely unnecessary. If the amateurs desire to bet, let them bet with the professionals, but stop the betting on the amateur races, for it is contrary to the ethics of the sport, surely hurtful and entirely unnecessary. Certainly it would not seem that men who are in the thing merely for the sport should care to place themselves in a position to be criticised, either fairly or unfairly, by a lot of men who make more or less a business of betting; and when losing, have to look for an excuse for their poor judgment and losses.

The events of the past year seem to prove that this question of mixing amateur and professional racing, and particularly the permitting of betting on the amateur races, is the one important question left to the amateurs for discussion. There has been some question during the year as to whether there ought not to be a distance flag used in all amateur races. Where these races are trotted at regular meetings and betting allowed it would seem wise to trot to rule, as regards the distance, and yet if the amateur rule is applied, there would not be the necessity of the flag that made itself apparent during a number of these wagon events the past season. The trouble has been that few, if any, of the judges who have judged these events have any knowledge of the amateur clubs' rules. Had they known and applied them, there would have been no demand made for a distance flag.

It would never do to have a distance flag at regular matinee races, for there is a disgrace attached to being distanced that would certainly lend discouragement to even an old hand in the game. It is very easy to handle this by disqualifying any one who lays up, and once understood, no trouble of this kind would arise. Where betting is done, however, as stated, it would make the application of the rule easier and less liable to dispute to use the flag. Eliminate the betting, ignore the distance flag, apply the amateur rules as they now exist, and wagon racing can be had without a question of unfairness.

"The American trotter," says The Horseman, "is the ideal race horse, the ideal road and pleasure horse, the ideal heavy harness and horse show horse and the ideal saddle horse. In fact, the American trotter adapts himself to all uses and makes the ideal in all the different types. No horse has yet been bred which so readily achieves distinction in so many different fields of usefulness and pleasure and there is plenty of encouragement for the breeder to continue his operations and to enlarge them."

EAST AURORA, N. Y., May 21, 1897.

Gentlemen:—We desire to express our thanks to you for calling our attention to the value of Spohn's Distemper and Cough Cure. We have tried it in many cases of different degrees of severity, and it has aided us greatly, and we will hereafter always keep a supply of it in our medicine case. We have found it the best thing made in its special line. Please send us six dozen more. Very truly,

San Francisco, Saturday, December 27, 1902.

THE LAST CHANCE to secure an engagement in the Pacific Breeders Futurity Stakes, worth $6000, for your foal born this year, will expire on the first of January. A few of the original nominators to this stake, owing to the fact that the mare has died or proved barren, or the foal is dead, wish to dispose of their nominations, and those owning foals of this year that were not entered now have an opportunity to name them. The cost is $23 and nothing more will have to be paid until 1904, when the foals will be two years old and can start for the money hung up for the two year old division of the stake. By remitting $23 together with color, sex and breeding of the foal on or before January 2d to Secretary F. W. Kelley, 36 Geary street, a nomination in this $6000 stake can be secured. Don't delay, as there may be more applications than there are places for, and they will be awarded in the order in which they are received.

AN ENTIRE PAGE OF STAKES is set before the owners of thoroughbreds by the Coney Island Jockey Club in this issue of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. The amount of money in these stakes seems a fabulous sum, but when the races are decided the actual amount given will be far in excess of the figures that appear in the advertisement, as outside a few guaranteed stakes the money is all added to the stakes paid in. It would be entirely superfluous to enumerate these stakes here, as by turning to the page which contains the advertisement the name, the amount and the conditions of each are fully set forth. The Coney Island Jockey Club, the leading racing institution in America and its famous track at Sheepshead Bay has been the scene of the greatest racing in American history. Entries for these stakes, which aggregate much over a hundred thousand dollars, will close Monday, January 5th, and the date should be marked and not permitted to pass without mailing entries to the Clerk of the Course, No. 571 Fifth Avenue, New York. The Coney Island Jockey Club holds the greatest summer and fall meetings that are held in the East.

IF YOU OWN A FOAL OF 1902 you will be wise if you send its description and $10 to the Secretary of the California State Agricultural Society on January 1st. This will enter the foal in the Occident Stake, the richest stake for three year old trotters on the Pacific Coast, and the great feature of the harness racing season here every year. The payments in the Occident are $10, $15 and $25 respectively on the first of January each year until three payments are made and then nothing more is due until thirty days before the race comes off when a final payment of $50 is due. The stake was worth within a few dollars of $2000 on the winner this year and the stake is increasing in value annually. Second money is worth trotting for as the second colt was paid about $900 this year. If you own a trotting bred colt or filly name it in the Occident Stake.

BRIGHTON BEACH will give one of the greatest race meetings of the year in 1903, and the stakes to close on Monday, January 5th, will be among the most generous of the year. The Produce Stake has a value of $25,000, of which $3000 goes to the breeders of the winners. Then there is the Brighton Handicap, which has an estimated value of $17,500, the Brighton Cup, and many other rich stakes that should receive the attention of horsemen from every locality. There is in this issue of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN a half page devoted to the stakes offered by this association. The entries close January 5th. Make them in time and if you have no blanks secure them at this office

The Los Angeles Association Will Fight.

It looks as though the action of the New California Jockey Club, in assuming control of racing affairs on this Coast, will result in a squabble with the Los Angeles Racing Association, managed by J. W. Brooks, that will be brought into politics. The Oakland Tribune, in an article which was copied in the Los Angeles daily papers, says of this war which now darkens the racing horizon:

"To begin with, the California Jockey Club is not well protected at Sacramento. Burns is not going to be in control there. The enemies of Burns will be quick to attack him through his race track interests.

One bill already drawn provides that every racing association in the State must pay in 10 per cent of its gross receipts, the money to go towards the support of agricultural fairs in the different districts. This provision is a bait for the votes of the country members. The bill on which the big fight is likely to be made provides that there shall not be more than forty days' racing in any year, within twenty-five miles of any county seat. The county seat provision is aimed to fit the constitutional provision that all legislation must be general in character. Anyone can see that it will permit only forty days' racing altogether at Emeryville, Tanforan and Ingleside. Los Angeles is content with forty days' racing a year, so the bill is aimed straight at the Burns-Williams club.

Los Angeles and Southern California members are saying: "San Francisco will not give Los Angeles forty days of racing each year. We'll see how much racing San Francisco can get. Two can play at that game." Apart from the southern members are some who have had a grievance ever since the admission fee was raised and the passes were taken away.

So it looks much as if the session would be a very expensive one for those race track men. When they come to lining up their friends, where will they find Mr. Herrin? He has a quarrel with Burns. John C. Lynch is his ablest and closest lieutenant and Lynch has a large interest in the Los Angeles track. So where is Herrin likely to be in the fight? Martin Kelly is with Burns just now, but Kelly is business pure and simple. If his support is to be retained in a money fight he must be well paid. Ruef is with Herrin now, and though Schmitz signed the Ingleside ordinance as if he were glad of the opportunity to do so, there is no telling just where the union labor members would stand in the ruction."

After the closing matinee of the season at Empire City track, New York, the members of the New York Driving Club sat down to a luncheon, in the course of which the cups won during the season were presented. President C. K. G. Billings officiated and in a neat speech presented to Mr. H. C. Mapes the trophy won by Jolly Bachelor, who has to his credit the greatest number of heats won by a trotter during the season. Mr. F. G. Schmidt was given the pacers' cup, his horse, Mercury Wilkes, having been the greatest heat winner among the pacers at the club matinees. Mr. Billings was the lucky man for the third and fourth cups, which were for the owner of the fastest trotter and fastest pacer of the season at the club matinees. Louise Jefferson, with her mile in 2:09, and Hontas Crooke, with a mile in the same notch, brought the trophies to Mr. Billings. The matinees of the New York organization have been quite successful, and it is a safe guess that the coming year will see them more liberally supported by the members. Some day, it is to be hoped, the club will be the equal in all respects of the famous Cleveland club. That it will be is a reasonable expectation, for during its brief existence it has made rapid strides and is growing stronger and more influential all the time.

For the past month the papers devoted to the light harness horse have been making statements pro and con regarding what would be done in the way of dash racing at Memphis next year, asserting one week and denying the next. The question was probably set at rest by Secretary Murray Howe, the other day, when he stated that "the only thing in regard to the next meeting that has been definitely decided is that instead of giving dash races at the end of the meeting, as consolation purses for horses that have not won during the meeting, there will be one dash race given each day during the meeting in which it will be the aim to get the best horses to take part." He also stated that Mr. Billings is emphatic in declaring that in amateur races, in which gentlemen drive to wagon, that betting must be strictly prohibited. Otherwise the program will not be materially different from those that have been given for two years past. This statement should decide the matter to the satisfaction of all, and probably will, as it will provide amply for everybody.

We are sorry to report the sudden death of H. O. Aldrich, in Boston, last Tuesday, December 9th, aged 70. Mr. Aldrich was one of the most prominent supporters of trotting in "the Hub," was a director of the New England Breeders Association and a charter member of the Boston Gentlemen's Driving Club. He was an ardent lover of matinee racing and it was at his instigation that the Boston Club offered its famous $1000 challenge cup in 1900. The trotter has lost a faithful and powerful friend.

The Three Great Cup Races of 1902.

Looking back over the history of the three races for the more important trophies offered for amateur drivers during the season of 1902, one is struck by the sensational features that they developed. The first, and in some respects the most important, contest was the one at Cleveland, in which John A. McKerron won "for keeps" the Challenge Cup offered by the Gentleman's Driving Club of Boston. It had to be won three times by a representative of one club in order to become permanently the property of that club. And McKerron won the races for it in a straight row of three. His last race was, and is, the fastest ever trotted by a stallion to wagon, and it gave the public its first real line on the quality of the winner. Certainly no one would want to deny the greatness of the horse and it is to be regretted that there has been a disposition in certain quarters to discount his Boston Cup victory.

The next cup race was for the handsome trophy offered by the Empire City Driving Club. It took place at the famous Yonkers course and was one of the ultra-sensational events of the year. In fact, there are scores of the regulars who hold that it was one of the greatest races ever trotted, in spite of the fact that the starters were limited, not by the conditions, but by circumstances, to the two great rivals, Lord Derby and The Monk, the former holding the world's wagon race record of 2:05½, the latter with a sulky record in precisely the same notch. What they would do depended largely upon the luck of racing. Fortunately both were fit. The Monk won the first heat in 2:06½ and lost the second heat a short head in 2:06. He lost a shoe at a point just past the first quarter, in the third heat, and though Lord Derby won in 2:06, The Monk, despite as bad a break, when he threw his shoe, as a trotter ever made, was only three lengths away at the finish. The race was the second fastest three-heat trotting event on record.

It remained for the third race to furnish the most brilliant bit of trotting and amateur driving ever witnessed. The event was the contest for the Memphis Gold Cup, a handsome trophy, worth $5000, offered by the Memphis Trotting Association, and raced for over its magnificent track in October. As at New York, Lord Derby and The Monk were the only starters. How the former won the race, and, after a weird break, trotted the last half of the second mile in about 1:00½, is fresh in the memory of everyone who keeps himself posted on harness racing affairs.

Thus, there was something about every one of the three races to make it distinctly memorable. Writers on turf topics are almost unanimous in expressing the belief that the trio of contests must take first place in the annals of the turf of 1902. Verily, the year was a great one for the amateur reinsman, and who knows but that his triumphs have only begun.—Coach and Saddle.

The Late George W. Jackson.

George W. Jackson, Secretary of the State Board of Agriculture, passed away last Wednesday afternoon at his home in Sacramento. Mr. Jackson had been suffering for several months from an illness having its origin in his throat. This malady made its appearance shortly after the close of the State Fair. Despite care and the attention and treatment of expert specialists, the ailment grew worse and the patient succumbed to the inevitable.

George W. Jackson was esteemed by a wide circle of friends in business and fraternal circles, and was prominently connected with financial and commercial interests in Sacramento. He was born in Oshkosh, Wis., in 1853. He came to Sacramento when he was a young man. He leaves a widow, but no other relatives, so far as is known, in Sacramento.

The great filly Gail Hamilton 2:11½, winner of the Hartford Futurity, Kentucky Stakes and De Soto purse, which was knocked down to her driver, Scott Hudson, for $6000 at the Old Glory sale in New York, since her return to Kentucky has been threatened with pneumonia, but for the last week she has been constantly improving, and the veterinarians now pronounce her out of danger of an attack of the dread disease. Gail Hamilton's great rival, Nella J. 2:14½, winner of the Kentucky Futurity, stood her trip from the metropolis well and looks as if she could at a moment's notice step a mile in 2:15. She is a rugged type of filly, however, and not on the order of the daughter of Oakland Baron, which is built along more delicate lines.

If you have a stallion that will stand for public service in 1903 send in your card for the Stallion Directory in the New Year number of this paper, which will be published on January 10th.

Jackson's Napa Soda is sold in every city, town and hamlet in the State.

THOROUGHBRED DEPARTMENT.

THE WINTERS YEARLINGS and horses in training were sold by Fred H. Chase & Co., at the famous old salesring, corner of Market street and Van Ness avenue, last Monday evening, before one of the largest crowds that has ever been seen at a sale in California. The new pavilion erected this month especially for night sales, was brilliant with electric lights and white paint, and the convenient raised seats were crowded. The ring where the horses were shown is large and roomy and every person present could obtain an unobstructed view of the horses from ears to hoofs. The bidding was lively and the veteran breeder, Mr. Theodore Winters, while feeling that his colts went cheap, expressed himself as better satisfied with the sale than any he has held in this city for some time. A summary of the horses sold is as follows:

YEARLINGS.

Chestnut colt by El Rio Rey, dam Diablita, E. J. McConnell, $210.
Bay filly by El Rio Rey, dam Dolly M., A. J. Jackson, $150.
Bay filly by El Rio Rey, dam Sylvia, Sam Gilmore, $130.
Chestnut filly by Rey del Sierras, dam Miss Grant, I. L. Pierce, $250.
Chestnut filly by Rey del Sierras, dam Ogzilla, R. D. Hume, $180.
Chestnut colt by Rey del Sierras, dam Blizzard, Adolph Shane, $375.

HORSES IN TRAINING.

Yo No Rey, br g, 1898, by Rey del Sierras, dam Miss Courtney, Mrs. Gregory, $300.
Siligon, ch c, 1900, by El Rio Rey, dam Sylvia, J. G. Brown, $160.
Theodora L., ch f, 1900, by Rey del Sierras, dam Miss Courtney, J. G. Brown, $355.
Andrilla, ch c, 1900, by El Rio Rey, dam Miss Grant, G. B. Palsain, $155.
John Lemmons, b c, 1900, by El Rio Rey, dam Fonsetta, A. J. Jackson, $525.
Toto Gratiot, ch c, 1900, by Rey del Sierras, dam Ogzilla, E. Baron, $160.
Talarand, ch c, 1900, by El Rio Rey, dam Hettie Humphreys, F. Sepulveda, $120.

Bard Burns has apparently rounded to, after running disappointingly on various occasions; he won on Saturday last and again on Monday, on the latter occasion beating a good field of horses very handily.

The Association must be finding the selling race game very profitable this season; almost daily some horse is run up above his entered value and the coffers of the association are enriched accordingly.

Sandy McNaughton is no piker; when Fitzbrillar beat Alice Carey a nose on Monday, Sandy walked down to the finish and made one bid of $2500, which was not overbid, and Sandy got himself a race horse right there. As the runner up was owned by Mr. McNaughton, Fitzbrillar stands him in the neighborhood of $1400, which seems to be quite a reasonable price for an animal of his class.

Arnold & Co., seem to have finally struck a winning gait; after numerous unsuccessful essays they finally landed Fitzbrillar and Ethylene winners on Monday last.

The first California Futurity was run off at Ingle-side last Saturday and was won by Walter Jennings' black colt Krishna, a son of Watercross and Hinda Dwyer, which made his field look very cheap, winning in a canter, with Nervator in the place, four lengths away. Organdie, one of the McDonough pair, succeeded in beating The Fog a head for the third money. The stake closed with 206 original entries and at the date on which it was run had a gross value of $16,254, which made it the most valuable event run west of New York this season. Much credit is due Walter Jennings for the condition in which Krishna was sent to the post. The black colt was trained to the hour and ran like a high class animal; he was known to possess the necessary speed for a race of this character, but Mr. Jennings had some doubts as to whether he would perform to his work, as he was an unknown quantity in company, his only start at Saratoga last summer, in which he was pulled up by his jockey on account of getting away badly, giving no line on his racing abilities.

The steeplechase race on Monday was a bad looking affair in some ways; from the exhibition given by Gus Wilson, the rider of Mike Rice, it looked as if there was "something doing." Mike Rice looked to have Crest beaten at any stage of the race and the only way for him to be beaten was for his rider to fall off. The most remarkable part of the performance was that it took place on the flat instead of at a jump.

Up to and including last Saturday the New California Jockey Club had disbursed nearly $97,000 in purses and stakes which has been spread around among quite a large number of horsemen. W. B. Jennings & Co. head the list of winners with a total of $15,129. Green B. Morris is a distant second with $6005. Burns & Waterhouse came third with $4425, while Jas. Coffey is fourth with $4350. The running second of Nervator in the Futurity brings the Elmwood Stock Farm well up in the list with a total of $3583. Kenilworth is principally responsible for the $3750 to the credit of of Harry Stover. W. O'B. Macdonough is seventh with $3446 and twenty-one other owners have won amounts over $1000.

Starter Dwyer assumed the duties of his position on Monday and has been meeting with his usual success in getting his fields away in good order.

Bullman rode his first winner since his return to the saddle on Tuesday, when he succeeded in landing The Weaver first at the finish.

Sombrero was injured in his work one morning last week and will probably be laid up for some time. The colt, which is the mainstay of the Morris stable and probably the best horse here at present, will have to be struck out of many of his engagements.

Lady Jocelyn made her first appearance in California on Tuesday and ran up to her Chicago form, standing a long hard drive and beating a good field of two year olds.

Jockey Minder seems to have gotten into his stride and his work in the saddle is now first class. On Tuesday he carried off the jockey honors, riding three winners; his effort with Lady Jocelyn was a particularly meritorious performance.

Ishtar is a good mare with light weight up and has won her last two starts. In the race at a mile won by her on Tuesday she defeated quite a good field of horses, much better than she has ever met before, in quite a handy fashion.

Little Connell, who rides as an apprentice, shows promise of making a good jockey; he is marvelously strong for a seventy pound boy and rides quite a finish for a lad of his weight.

An outlaw track was to open at Newport, Kentucky, on Christmas Day. John J. Ryan is the promoter and it is said that three or four hundred horses are on the grounds. Ryan says he is not alone in the enterprise, but that a big syndicate is back of him. The betting ring is to be an open one. In the event that the local public does not support the racing in that vicinity the track will run without it for Ryan means to force the issue. As evidence of this declares positively that by next year he will be operating a track at New Orleans. The Newport game will be run with a fifty cent admission, but with practically a free gate on account of the distribution of badges. Two trains with free transportation are to be run daily and a free automobile line will be run in connection with the street car service. Referring to the possible refusal of the telegraph company to supply him with racing news, Ryan declares that if his foreign book does not have the service not a poolroom in the country will have it and intimates that he has already been assured of this.

"Skeets" Martin, who is to ride for W. C. Whitney in England next year, is confined to his bed at the Cadillac Hotel, New York, with a serious attack of the grip. He arrived from England on December 1st, after an absence of four years and soon caught a cold which settled in his throat. It was Martin's intention to come to San Francisco this week, but the trip has been postponed indefinitely.

It is said that W. C. Whitney has received a license to conduct a twenty days' race meeting at Aiken, S. C., in the early spring. The meeting will not be run for the public, but merely for the amusement of the colony of cottagers at that place who are fond of the sport and are, in some cases, directly interested in the running of big stables on the local tracks.

August Belmont's Hastings was the most successful stallion during the recent season on the turf in this country. Twenty-one of the noted stallion's progeny won a total of $106,518. Of this amount Mizzen won $30,886, Masterman $44,845, Lord of the Vale $14,340 and Gunfire $13,155. Candemas was the second most successful sire, his get winning $77,403, of which Irish Lad captured $42,230; Swiftmas $7775, Miss Mitchell $5715, Royal $4785, and Homestead $4290. Handspring ranked third with $65,515, of which Major Daingerfield alone won $56,775; Ben Strome was fourth in the list, with $52,569; Eugenia Burch winning $24,149 alone, Salvator was fifth with $53,355, Savable carrying off $45,040 when he finished first in the Futurity. The other successful stallions were Albert $51,086, Golden Garter $47,965, Esher $45,715, Sir Dixon $45,095, Mirthful $42,655.

Long-Distance Racing.

The question of racing at long or short distances would seem to depend mainly on ability to train a horse to run far, the age of the horse and the object of the owner in racing.

Mr. W. S. Vosburgh, in an article in Outing, entitled "Scientific Horse Racing," calls racing "a game of weights, distances and handicaps," and explains this view of it by giving his title, "Jockey Club Official Handicapper," and this point of view explains a good deal that Mr. Vosburgh says on the subject.

Admiral Rous, official handicapper of the Jockey Club in England, shared some of Mr. Vosburgh's views on the subject, but had a different backing, according to the following:

"The English do not allow themselves to become so intense as to sacrifice a future good for an immediate gain, and thus they are seldom compelled to retrace their steps, because they have never lost what we are wildly seeking to regain."

According to Mr. Vosburgh, "the long-distance horse is too light in body and quarters. The speedy horse, on the contrary, is one of great power and beauty, fit to carry the heaviest man to hounds, or for cavalry purposes."

As I go back in memory to the days when dashes were scarce, four-mile-heat races not uncommon, and recall the champions of that time, Asteroid, Kentucky, Lodi, Idlewild, Lightning, Longfellow, Harry Bassett, and other good heroes of long races, they seem to have been of a powerful weight-carrying type. Then there is the long-distance champion, Advance Guard, and last year's champion, Gold Heels.

Many old trainers of experience thought that it did a horse less harm to run it at fairly long distances in proper condition than to keep it high in flesh and run it constantly at short distance. Mr. Alex Shields understands the preparation of horses for steeplechasing and long-distance racing as well as most men in the business, and his horses win and remain sound, which is more than can be said of the sprinters. Of course, he lets a horse mature before asking too much of it, and he gives them the work necessary to enable them to run over a distance without injury.

We have apparently more good trainers of this sort in steeplechasing than in flat racing, and it would not be a bad idea for these men to go in for long-distance races on the flat, as well as across the country. A seasoned steeplechaser can repeat when in good condition, as was proved by Higbie's performances this autumn at Toronto. He started five times in seven days, with big weight up, and won at three miles over a big course.

One of the trainers at Morris Park answered a man who was complaining of the breaking up of two year olds by racing them four days in a week, "And what else are they good for?"

Another man boasted that he had got third money three times in the week with a weary looking filly.

To these men quick returns are everything and the betting ring their source of income; but the man who can prepare a horse for longer races at intervals must exist, and should make himself felt on the flat as well as over the jumps. Mr. Shields has set a good example and should have a successful season with Advance Guard, Andy Williams and the rest of his string of stayers.

Admiral Rous considers two miles a good distance to try any horse over, while Mr. Vosburgh puts the limit as a mile and a quarter.—Coach and Saddle.

After Supper.

(An Old Song Reversed.)

"When the bosom heaves a sigh,"
After eating pigeon pie;
"When the heart o'erflows with grief,"
Duck and snipe won't bring relief;
When the joys of life are fled,
Lobster salad weighs like lead;
Then you hate the world's cold ways,
After too much mayonnaise.

When fair Nature fails to please,
Thro' not stinting Rochefort cheese;
When you find that love is vain,
Port won't mix with champagne;
When this earth is all ajar
Thro' that beastly big cigar;
When each nerve appears to ache
Green Chartreuse is a mistake.

To alleviate your distress,
Try a stimish B. & S.;
Later, when your sorrows stop,
Eat a plain grilled mutton chop,
With a pomme au naturel—
Soon you will be feeling well.

Black Brant Shooting.

The black sea brant is credited by our sportsmen as being the wariest wild fowl of the many varieties they seek in their different haunts for a day's shooting. At present this black plumaged denizen of the ocean is to be found on the "eel grass" feeding grounds of the shallow waters in certain parts of Tomales bay in flocks of countless thousands. Al Wilson is authority for the statement that he saw the birds in such numbers one day recently that they covered solidly, wing to wing, a surface equal to ten city blocks in extent. Incredible as this might seem ordinarily, the assertion is stripped of any coloring of exaggeration if one will take the opportunity to watch daily the incessant flight of the innumerable bunches of the black colored wayfarers as they fly in and out to their favorite feeding grounds. Again, when the tide has receded from the marine grass grown portions of the bay where the birds feed, an examination of the places where they have been at work will give an idea of the numbers there must have been feeding. The vegetation looks as if a mowing machine had gone over it. It has been estimated that at the present time these birds easily eat up ten tons a day of this particular succulent grass upon which they diet.

Just at this season the birds are found at their best for the table. A month or so later they will not be so good in flavor nor so easy to shoot. The gunners go out in boats after them, anchoring near a point in lower Tomales bay, just in line of flight where they come in from the ocean over a sand spit. Most of the birds shot are not brought down at a nearer range than from 80 to 100 yards. Flock shots under these conditions are not frequent. A ten-bore gun heavily loaded with No. 3 shot seems to give best results, although some hunters use double B shot. Fred G. Sanborn, F. P. McLennan, B. F. Noyes and Al Wilson have a comfortable shack located at a favorable spot on the bay, which is their base of operations for many shooting trips.

When the sea brant are much shot at and molested they desert the feeding grounds altogether, remaining away out on the bosom of the ocean where they are immune from the hunter in his fragile skiff. At this haven of rest they stay until driven inshore again by stormy weather, or they find the feeding ground is safe to resort to again. During this time of retreat they feed upon the "eel grass" just the same. This stuff becomes detached in some manner, whether by the action of the tide or otherwise, and floats to sea in big bunches, where the birds find it and enjoy their usual rations.

At the present time the black sea brant can be found in myriads about the waters of Vancouver Sound. They bring $1 a pair in the Victoria market. The bird is also found in plentiful numbers at Eureka Bay, affording much sport to the Humboldt gunners as they fly over the long sand spit on the west shore of the bay. Further south, at Ventura and Wilmington Bay, are about the only other points in California where the black sea brant can be found in any satisfactory numbers by the sportsman.

An oversight in the drafting of the present game law, is that no provision was made for the protection of swans. These graceful birds are becoming scarcer and scarcer each year. As a table bird they are not to be thought of, the old birds are tougher than tradition, the young ones it is claimed are only fairly palatable. Hawkers have been selling them in this city for 50 cents a pair recently. That this beautiful and harmless bird was overlooked by the "apostles of game protection" is in keeping with other game protection faking that gave only the shadow for the substance. There are some good features in the present statute, but a number of other necessary provisions were deliberately pigeon-holed for the simple reason that the principle faker did not have the moral courage to be consistent. Certain catch lights in the coloring of the game protection picture were given much prominence and were blatantly heralded as wonderful personal accomplishments in the preservation of our game birds, other matters of equal importance were daubed over and expunged on the specious plea that "we could not get them to do everything at once for us."

A CITY SPORTSMAN'S VACATION.

Fishcraft of a Country Boy Who Knew the Ways of Trout.

"During my Eastern trip this year, I was unexpectedly detained for a longer period than I at first anticipated. Finding that it was not practical to leave before settling certain matters I determined to make the best of the situation," said a local angler recently in recounting some outing experiences during the year with several congenial spirits, "and not hurry matters, particularly if I could get a chance to wet a line now and then. So, to cut a long story short, I took a vacation during July and spent the time at a Maine village, a district that had been suggested to me by a couple of New York friends who were fond of fishing. On this trip I did not go into camp in the backwoods. Instead, I took up my quarters in the quiet little village and drove to this or that pond or stream in its vicinity for the day's fishing, returning to the hotel at night.

"This is a comfortable way to do one's fishing, which I commend to those who practice the gentle art for the pleasure it gives rather than gratify an ambition to break records in the taking of big strings of fish. Taken all in all, I had good luck beyond the average, with the minimum of tramping and fly bites and general discomfort. But I have to confess that I owed much of the success I had to the advice and guardianship of a barefooted, shock-headed, twelve year old boy whose acquaintance I made in the second week of my stay at Hilltown.

In my fishing excursions I had met the boy off and on from the day of my arrival and had noted that when encountered near the end of the day he usually was carrying a fine string of fish. My acquaintance with him began as I was whipping a pond one day from a boat which I had brought from the village in a wagon, and the boy at the same time was fishing from a bridge on the shore. We were using quite different rods and tackle. Mine was a six-ounce rod with silk line and flies of the most approved tying, while he was dangling from the end of a twenty-five foot peeled spruce pole a line and hook that would have served the turn of a tuna fisherman; but our luck was the same, for neither one of us was catching any fish. We had passed some remarks disparaging the state of affairs in general, when at last he hailed me with a proposition.

"Say, mister, take me into yer boat and I'll show yer where yer can ketch some fish."

"I accepted his offer for company's sake, with little confidence in his offer to pilot me to fish, and in some dread of his astonishing fishing pole, which, with the tip sawed off, would have served as a mast for the boat. To my relief, as I headed for the shore, he detached his line from the pole and wound it about a fork-ended piece of shingle which he drew from his pocket. The pole he secreted in the bushes behind the ledge.

"What kind of bait yer usin'," he asked as the boat touched the shore.

"I fish with flies," I answered with dignity.

"H'm! Yer'll never ketch trout in this pond with them things," he said, with authority. "Gimme yer net and bailin' dish till I git some minneys."

"I passed him the tin pail and landing net and he went to a little cove round the point of the ledge, threw a muck-worm into the water to entice the fish, and in ten minutes came back to me with about thirty minnows swimming in the pail. Then he took the oars and told me to steer with the paddle for an old, blackened tree stub on the opposite shore. It was as unpromising a place for trout as one would care to see that we fetched up at after scraping through shoals and lily pads, a strip of black water by a low shore with snags and deadwood covering the bottom as far as eye could see, but as the boy was doing the work I let him go where he pleased. He did not at once find the precise place he wanted, but yawned about and squinted, trying to get all his landmarks to jibe together, while I stood by to drop anchor when he should find the spot to suit him. After backing and filling enough to have docked a ship he gave the word to let go, and playing out the clothesline with a stone tied to the end of it for anchor, I found bottom in eighteen feet of water.

"Better tie on a sinker and bait with a minny, mister," the boy said as he stowed the oars and dived his hand into the pail for a minnow.

"For answer I cast my flies upon the water, while the boy dropped his hand-line over the boat's side. I heard the flopping of his first trout as I made my third cast, and he was kept busy baiting his hook and jigging it from the bottom to the boat after that, with a thumping trout to show for every turn. He had landed five when I reeled in my first fish, and after that I could not get a rise. The boy kept right on catching fish, and as he swung the tenth, a two-pounder, into the boat I gave expression to my feelings in a remark that was more scriptural than pious.

"Never mind, mister. We're snucks on the fish, yer know," the boy said, consolingly. "I'd jest as leve ketch 'em all."

"This token of condescension was too much. To borrow an expression of the late James Yellowplush, 'Flesh and blood couldn't bear it,' and I reeled in my line and snapped a bait hook on in place of the flies.

"Give me a minnow," I said to the boy, so savagely that he exclaimed, 'Golly!' as he scrambled for the bait pail and passed me over a live shiner. He lent me a sinker, and then, when all was arranged, I found myself, notwithstanding my cherished reputation as a fly-fisherman, hopefully bobbing my fly-rod, with my fine silk line, dragged down to within a foot of the bottom, by the combined weight of a hook that would have landed a bluefish, a strip of sheet lead nipped on above it with my teeth, and a live minnow. But I had my compensation when, in half a minute or more, I was tussling with a trout who gave me all the excitement I wanted in getting him into the boat. From that time on I kept even with the boy in our fishing. He had a box of angleworms in his pocket, and when the minnows were all used up we caught a dozen trout with these. We had thirty-four trout, ranging in size from half a pound to two pounds and a half, when we pulled back across the pond, to show for our day's fishing.

"After this experience I took the boy with me on most of my fishing trips. Sometimes I went it alone, but it always happened that the days I did this were not lucky ones. Abner—the boy's name was Abner Tucker—dug the worms, caught the minnows and generally attended to providing the outfit for our trips, my part being limited to the financial details. I presented a civilized rod and tackle, to him, a gift which he duly appreciated, but throughout the season he advocated to me the old-time fisherman's precept of 'More bait and less flies,' and I found my profit in following his advice. Sometimes we varied our trout fishing by trips to perch and pickerel ponds, and everywhere the boy knew exactly where the best fish lay and the bait that would tempt them most at the particular time of the day and year. He introduced me to mysterious brooks winding through swamps and bogs, which seemed to begin and end nowhere, but were full of hungry trout. One day we fished a meadow brook for two hours with flies and worms, catching but three trout for our pains.

"The trout were there, but they would not bite. The boy caught a grasshopper and threw it into the water, and several trout rose together for it.

"We're only foolin' away our time tryin' 'em with flies and worms, mister," the boy announced. "They've got their minds sot on hoppergrasses, and they'd swim away from a fat grubworm if 'twas before their noses."

"We walked to a stubble field a mile away and went to catching grasshoppers. Abner captured about fifty while I was catching seven. With these for bait we went back to our fishing and in an hour had landed forty-seven trout. For days the fish would hardly notice any other bait than grasshoppers. But the insects were agile and hard to catch, and it was difficult to provide enough of them for a day's fishing. Then, through Abner's experience, we discovered that in fishing a pool, after beginning with grasshoppers to excite their appetites, the trout for a while would snap at almost any lure we offered them. One day as we went to a fishing hole with a scant stock of grasshoppers in our bait boxes Abner stopped to rob a bumble-bees' nest of its hoard, fighting the bees with his hat and picking them up as they fell. When he caught up with me he offered me half the honeycomb and showed me twelve dead bees that he had stowed away in his bait box. Baiting our hooks with these, after the fish had been enticed with grasshoppers, we caught a trout for every one.

"But the crowning achievement in my summer's fishing, which I owed to Abner's hopeful counsel, was in taking a splendid catch of trout from the Alder pool. The stream was a famous one for the trout, but there was a stretch of about a mile in its course that it was currently said had never been fished, owing to the morasses and thick undergrowth that bordered it. Somewhere in its course through the swamp was a deep pool, which it was certain, in August, must be alive with the biggest kind of brook trout, gathered there through the partial drying up of the stream above and below. I had given up the idea of trying to get to this water, but the boy did some exploring on his own hook, and one day came to me with the announcement that he had found a path to the pool and had a plan for fishing it. So we stocked up for the trip and went into the swamp, following a deer path crossed the stream about twenty feet above the pool. After an hour's hard floundering we got to the stream and could see the pool below us, as likely a place for trout as one could wish, but with no way of getting nearer to it than we were. The bushes which overhung the stream prevented the casting of a line down to its waters, and to leave that path meant that I would be mired to the waist at the second step. I could think of no way to get a line and hook down to the pool from where I was, but unless a way were found all the trout in its depths might as well be in Manila bay for all the good they would do me. As I balanced myself at the crossing of the deer path it did not help my feelings to hear now and then the splash of a big trout down in the black water below me.

"But the boy had thought out the points of the situation and was prepared to meet it at every turn. He had brought a light ax with him and there was plenty of dead timber along the path behind us. Abner went back and I heard him chopping. Presently he returned with an armful of big chips and pieces of dry bark stripped from fallen spruces and hemlocks. Laying a piece of bark on the bank, he baited my hook with a worm, then pulling off some thirty feet of line from the reel, he coiled it upon the bark, with the hook resting at the bottom of the coil. He launched the piece of bark carefully in the stream and the current took it down to the pool, the line unwinding from the coil as it floated down. It drifted out upon the pool and then a little jerk of the rod yanked the rest of the line from the bark and the baited hook sank in the water. Before it had got half a foot below the surface a trout had it and I reeled him up the stream, fighting every foot of the way, to opposite to where I stood, when the boy waded in with the net and landed him. We had mastered the secret of taking trout from the Alder pool and for four hours Abner and I stood there by the stream launching the coiled line on a chip or piece of bark and drawing back a trout from the still, black water below. When at last I reeled up my line and unjointed my rod, it was not that the fish had ceased to bite, but because we had all we cared to carry back over the swamp trail. We brought home just 100 trout which weighed together more than forty pounds."

FEATHER AND FIN.

Point Reyes is still the favorite nearby resort for the steelhead anglers. The waters of Paper Mill creek and the tide waters adjacent to the Point are found to yield fish enough to attract sportsmen to the spot for a day's fishing. Several times within a fortnight a number of sportsmen enjoyed for a while the spectacle of many fish, large and small, going over the riffles and up the creek at night. There has been at various times this season splendid runs of fish from the ocean to the up stream spawning grounds. These steelhead, unlike the salmon, survive after depositing the eggs in the spawning bed and make their way back to the rejuvenating salt water of the ocean again. This should insure good fishing for next season in the creek and its numerous tributaries.

Recently a party of anglers were at the Point; among them were W. A. Cooper, S. A. Wells, Mr. Pincus, Louis Haaf, C. Reardon, James Lynch and James Watt. Bait fishing brought to basket a few fair-sized steelhead and grilse. Cooper landed a three and a half pounder, Walker a two pounder and Haaf several steelhead, ranging from one to two pounds in weight.

An incident took place during the day which illustrates that the ethics of stream fishing are well defined and an infraction of the same is liable to make matters disagreeable all round.

One of the anglers hooked a one and a half pound fish at the "narrows" and instead of immediately landing his fish, getting it out of the way and stopping the commotion in the stream, he played his fish and enjoyed its rushes and fighting for a considerable length of time—far more than was necessary under the circumstances, as the particular fisherman was using very strong tackle. This action was the means of stopping for the time being the fishing of four other rod wielders in the immediate vicinity. When several anglers are fishing at a favorite spot on a stream and particularly where there is only about room for two, the recognized course among the fraternity is to land a fish as soon as possible after hooking it. This will not put the other fellows to the inconvenience of getting their tackle out of the water and making a lengthy and unnecessary wait.

In this case the fisherman while he was handling his fish on 'rock number 1' and enjoying the fun, had the selfish thoughtlessness to request another angler to set out his other rod for him. This was rather piling it on to good nature. The culprit, however, somewhat redeemed himself later on, by helping a brother angler out of a predicament when he had a fish hooked but was unable to land it by reason of an intervening barbed wire fence.

The thoughtless or selfish man on a stream is a disagreeable element that can undo a day's pleasure for each and every other angler with whom the delinquent may come in contact. In other countries and places there are certain unwritten laws of angling as well as prescribed duties of anglers to each other when they meet upon the stream, lake or other fishing water, the infraction or non-observance of which brings upon the culprit an ostracism such as no self-respecting angler would care to be under. In the case of an ignoramus or boor, in self-defense, if for nothing else, the angler will usually do what he can to enlighten the duffer most in need of it—and there are few subjects so case-hardened but what they eventually become amenable to a tractable handler and in some instances evidence the zeal and improvement that soon elicits the pleasing reward—recognition as an angler.

The "regulars" who frequent the Point know the stream from end to end, and particularly the places and spots where at this season of the year the quick-sands have formed. While the danger of fatal accident is remote, still there is a chance, when one does not know the stream well, of being mired and getting a chilly bath up to one's middle, to say nothing of losing a pair of gum boots before being extricated. To the amateur fisherman an ounce of caution in wading on the Paper Mill and its tide waters is worth a hundred pounds of leverage in being hauled out of a "suck hole."

The waters of Lake Merritt are fairly teeming with striped bass it is reported by a number of anglers. Many of the fish are apparently big ones. These fish can be seen at different times by the observer on shore or out in a boat swimming and "rolling" about in almost every portion of the lake. The fact that with rare exceptions these wary fish ignore spoon, clam baited hook, live smelt and herring is only another illustration of the peculiar vagaries of this fish in puzzling those who devote themselves to the sport of trying to land them. Last year at this time the lake was also noticed to be full of bass. At that time the fish were equally hard to capture. The bass fishing was poor in results until about the middle of January. Should past experiences prove true, the anglers anticipate great sport in the lake next month.

The best striped bass angling had by local fishermen recently has been in the waters of San Antonio slough.

At this season of the year flounders and porgies are found in their best condition. The waters of Oakland estuary seem to be literally alive with these bottom feeding fish. Last Sunday drop-line fishermen caught "dead loads" of the fish. At Tiburon bridge and in the adjacent lagoon the fishing for the broad and flat panfish is also good.

Striped bass are now taking the spoon in San Antonio slough. A No. 6 Wilson bass spoon seems to be the proper lure for those waters just now. Last Sunday W. F. McFarland landed four finely conditioned fish, the heaviest weighed 17 pounds, one scaled 12 pounds and the other two averaged about 4 pounds each. McFarland and Frank Hayes made the ark of the Anglers' Club their headquarters on Monday and fished the slough. "Mac" landed 18 fish, the largest weighing 17 pounds.

A four pound bass properly cooked, either baked or broiled, and washed down with California sauterne is a feast second to no other in the piscatorial cuisine.

Phil E. Bekeart, the Coast representative of the Hunter Arms Company, arrived from the East on Sunday morning.

"Jack" Fanning came into this city on Monday. Mr. Fanning is accompanied by Mrs. Fanning. He will stay here for a short time after which he will go to El Paso to attend the big shoot there next month.

Duck shooting averages well in the vicinity of this city. Birds are plentiful and good bags are the rule, particularly on the baited ponds of the club preserves.

Richardson's bay is now tenanted by thousands of canvasbacks, which are kept company with by big bunches of blue bills and many flocks of teal. The appearance of the latter graceful little ducks in more than usual numbers is a remarkable feature of the feathered congregation of the bay.

Accidents in the hunting field are prone to happen despite the utmost caution on the part of shooters. Last Sunday whilst Mr. N. H. Hickman, E. Courtney Ford and a companion were quail shooting near Olema, Mr. Hickman had the misfortune to lose his Gordon Setter Major, a good old dog, over which it has been our pleasure to shoot. Major was an indefatigable worker and always willing an eager to do his share of work in the field which he seemed to thoroughly enjoy if ever a dog did. The accident whereby the poor dog lost his life was the end of a chain of circumstances that seemed to lead up to a fatal close. A short time prior to the last beat for birds Hickman had bagged nearly the limit and was desirous of going into the club house. His companions, warmed up with the sport, demurred and pleaded for just a few more shots, birds were numerous—the last shot is the sportsman's parting salute for a day's hunting and notes the pleasing and exhilarating windup of a day's recreation. But for this delay, the old dog would be still alive, there can be no blame attached to anyone for what happened later. A misleading statement in a morning daily in regard to the affair has prompted the following communication from Mr. Hickman:

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 24, '02.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN—In the sporting news of the San Francisco Chronicle of even date I noticed a mention of the death of my Gordon Setter Major, and the belittling of Mr. E. Courtney Ford in connection therewith. In justice to Mr. Ford I beg to request that you publish the following, which is the true story of the accident:

To begin with, any hunter who has ever shot over a Gordon will realize how difficult it is to keep track of the dog when in waist high cover on account of his black and tan markings blending in color with the brush, and more especially when there are three dogs working.

At the time of the accident, it was late in the afternoon and we had finished our shoot. We were returning southerly towards the wagon. The dogs were extremely tired and working very slow. Mr. Ford was on my left and a trifle higher up the hill. Major was in front on my left further down the hill and in a direct north and south line with Mr. Ford.

A quail flushed in front of me and flew low towards the east and fell dead to my shot directly between Mr. Ford and Major. I shot first—just quick enough to allow the old dog to raise his head above the brush to mark the bird, when Mr. Ford fired, and the dog received the charge in the head. He was just close enough to allow the shot to penetrate his brain.

Had the dog remained quiet after my shot, the accident would never have occurred, but when he raised up on his hind legs to see over the brush he put himself in line with Mr. Ford's shot and too late for that gentleman to see him.

While I feel the dog's death very keenly, and am not disposed to advertise my trouble, I do object to having my companion ridiculed simply because he was the unavoidable principal in the accident.

According to the Century Dictionary a sample of multitudinous spelling can be found under the head of maskalonge, where will be found nineteen ways of spelling the name of this kind of pike. And here is what the dictionary shows:

Maskalonge, Mascalonge, Maskalunge, Muscalonge, Muskalonge, Muskalinge, Moskalonge, Masquallonge, Maskallonge, Muskellonge, Masq'allonge, Mascalonge, Moscononge, Maskinonge, Maskanonge, Maskenonge, Masque longue, Maskenozha, Maskinoje.

Besides there is the mascalongus, a subgenus of pike. The word masquallonge simulates the French mosque allonge, which means long face.

Referring again to shotgun casualties, the following case is one that is absolutely inexcusable, we firmly believe: Ten men were shot by the accidental discharge of a shotgun in the hands of a shooter at a turkey shooting match at Phillip Creek, Ill., December 23d. One man received twenty-three shot in the head and face and is more seriously wounded than the others. Seven shot struck a boy in the neck, cutting the flesh away almost to the jugular vein. Five others received less serious wounds in the face. The injured men were standing seventy-five yards from the man who held the gun when the accident occurred. He was resting his gun on his arm and, forgetting it was cocked, pulled the trigger. Here is as careless a handling of a gun as we have ever had called to our attention.

On a hot day drink Jackson's Napa Soda lemonade and be refreshed.

Pacific Coast Field Trials.

The All-Age entries for the trials at Bakersfield next month number nine setters and six pointers, fifteen dogs altogether. With but two exceptions the dogs are all field trial seasoned. Taking them altogether the class shown is of a very high standard.

An effort had been made to secure Col. Merriman's services as judge. The Colonel will not fill the saddle for the reason that he will soon take unto himself a wife and will find the enjoyment of the honeymoon more interesting than a trip out here, however pleasant. May the Colonel have many day's of happiness and prosperity is our Christmas greeting.

Four good northern dogs will start in the All-Age, including J. W. Considine's Lola Montez and Iona S.

The ground selected for the trials is reported to be an ideal spot—in extent about five by eight miles. Birds are plentiful and the cover is sufficiently dense to provide good hiding places. The club's tract has been and is now well patrolled, so that when the trials are run everything will be found most favorable.

Nearly all of the dogs for the Derby and All-Age stakes are now south in charge of the different handlers. Manager R. M. Dodge has the Stockdale string located at the Lakeside ranch. Cuba's Zep has several promising sons and daughters among the Derby candidates. Dodge has also some good ones in the All-Age. Stockdale Kennels have a high class lot of youngsters now on hand that will be ripe for next season's Derby. Among them is a litter of five puppies by staunch old Cuba of Kenwood out of Fly, three puppies out of Jingo's Bagpipe by Cuba of Kenwood and other litters by Cuba out of a Cuba Jr.—Fly bitch, Petronella and Florida. Stockdale Kennels will probably do much towards establishing future field trial history in this State.

Chas. Babcock has W. W. Van Arsdale's dogs at Del Rey, Peach Blossom and Dr. Daniels will carry the colors of California Kennels close to the front in the All-Age.

John F. Hughes, an old time handler and devotee of the sport, is at Bakersfield with a string including Secretary Betz' P. D. Linville's and Wm. Dormer's dogs. H. S. Peach recently made Bakersfield his headquarters and has a number of dogs with him.

John E. Lucas is also south with the Mt. View Kennels' string and other dogs, including Clinton E. Worden's promising Setter Jay M. W. S. Courts is also located in the Lakeside district with a string of dogs.

Dr. C. E. Wilson, of Elko, is billeted for Bakersfield before the trials start.

The outlook for a record attendance is more promising than ever.

The list of proposed starters in the All-Age Stake is the following:

SETTERS.

J. E. Terry's (Sacramento) lemon and white bitch Lady (Ch. Count Gladstone IV.—Peach Mark), whelped March, 1899. Breeder, W. W. Van Arsdale.

T. J. A. Tiedemann's (San Francisco) white, black and tan bitch Northern Huntress (Ch. Joe Cumming-Mecca II.), whelped August 29, 1899. Breeder, W. W. Titus, West Point, Miss.

W. W. Van Arsdale's (San Francisco) black, white and tan bitch Peach Blossom (Ch. Count Gladstone IV.—Peach Mark), whelped March, 1899. Breeder, owner.

W. W. Van Arsdale's white and tan setter dog Bell Boy (Tony Boy—Lena Bell), whelped July, 1900. Bred by P. Lorillard, N. Y.

W. W. Van Arsdale's black, white and tan dog McCloud Boy (Tony Boy—Sadie Hopkins), whelped December 25, 1900. Bred by Hugh Hopkins, Hanford, Cal.

I. F. Pratt's (Coupeville, Wash.) white and lemon dog Rush (Highland Chief—Gypsy Queen).

John W. Considine's (Seattle, Wash.) black, white and tan bitch Lola Montez (Llewellyn Drake—Zola Montez), whelped April 4, 1901. Bred by Frank Watson, Victoria.

Two Pacific Coast dogs will start in the United States and Eastern Derbys, viz., Count's Clip (Lady's Count Gladstone—Jessie Rodfield), owned by John W. Considine, Seattle, Wash., and Sport's Judgment (Marie's Sport—Isabella Maid). The latter is the property of Dr. C. E. Wilson of Elko, Nevada. J. H. Johnson has Sport's Judgment in preparation at New Albany, Miss. Mr. Johnson also has in training several Derby dogs owned by Messrs. Rodgers and Rainey.

Oakland Kennel Club Show.

With only 156 entries of dogs in the show across the bay last week the exhibit can justly be said to have been one of quality if not of numbers. The short time, less than two weeks, devoted to working up the show before the entries closed accounts for a less number of dogs than usual. The club was only organized in the early part of November.

Under Superintendent Bradshaw's administration everything passed off smoothly. One drawback, however, was the disagreeable frigid weather which made the Exposition building uncomfortably cold. The attendance during the four days was good. Spratts representative, Thomas Banks, looked after the benching and feeding with his usual ability and attention to details. A resume of the classes and breeds benched is the following:

St. Bernards, under Mr. Jos. Cutten of this city, were only a half dozen in number. The main contest was between Lester C. and Grand Master II. Lester took winners and first open, with Master just behind him. Both dogs were put down in good condition. Lester, for a very large dog, is far above the average. He has a large, good head, plenty of character and expression; he could be better in muzzle. His body, hind quarters, legs and feet are very good. Grand Master is a good big dog also, and showed in the ring far from what we expected; beside Lester the disparity in size was very apparent. In color he is better than Lester, who had a shade the best of the general argument when the two good dogs came together. Grand Master won first in limit over Emperor, a rangy, lanky dog whose best points were coat, color and markings. Bismarck could only make second in novice, first being withheld; he was generously treated. In bitches, Gypsy Lee II, a compact, even and fair-sized young bitch, was given winners, first open and limit. Nairod Marion, alone in novice, was first and reserve winners. Both these bitches were benched in nice condition and are more than promising for improvement as they mature. Grand Master II and Gypsy were awarded a first for the team entry in St. Bernards.

Mastiffs, also under Mr. Cutten, had but two entries, both better than the average of the breed shown here for some years past.

Dr. Musser of Oakland made his Coast debut in the ring when the Great Danes were brought in. The Doctor knows the breed and handled his classes in a satisfactory manner. Ruy Blas, who has kept the promise of his youth, has matured well and shows quality and style to quite an extent; he was rightly given winners and first open over Bluebeard, who is not the dog he was a year ago. Rupert of Hentzau, first puppies, is a newcomer. He is a large dog for a young one, has a well-balanced head and correct muzzle, good throat, and promises to have splendid shoulders and ribs. He seemed a trifle long cast and lanky in hind quarters, due more to youth than set conformation; he bids fair to run well later on. Maud S., despite her recent whelping, showed very nicely, winning first open, winners and first local. Second in open went to Cunningham's Carlotta, a well-bodied and handsome harlequin, a bit light in head and short in muzzle. Cunningham's Carmencita, reserve in winners and first novice, is a well set up bitch of nice size, and has gone ahead well since the May show here, where she was behind both of the first mentioned bitches.

Greyhounds, with two entries, were but ordinary—a good bitch run down and a large, over-fat dog.

In Foxhounds, Chippy Billy received the blue. He is a handsome black-and-tan with a well-developed head and muzzle, proper leathers, good strong body and legs and feet well fitted for the going.

Pointers had but one entry, and that for exhibition only—a graceful grand-daughter of old Champion Glenbeigh out of a Rip Rap bitch.

Two English Setters, a rather weedy young bitch and a somewhat thick-headed puppy bitch. There was not enough general good quality to make the pick difficult, Theodora Gladstone first, Lady Thelma second were the awards.

In Irish Setters, two undeveloped young puppies, but good looking and promising withal, in excellent condition—Bruce and Glencoe, one, two in winners. Riley, a quality showing son of Dennis C., is a bit better than the average Irish Water Spaniel. He has his sire's conformation to a degree and is the possessor of a typical coat for the breed.

Two Gordons of ordinary merit closed the not very arduous duties of Mr. DeWitt in judging the list from Greyhounds down. The slight showing in Pointers, Setters, etc., was not unexpected at this time of the year, which is the working time for the sporting dogs and when they are least likely to be either in show condition or can be spared from their duties in the field.

Cockers with fourteen entries were generally a well averaging lot. Delverton Cappi, Plumeria Portia, who is claimed by the experts to be the best bitch on the Coast, Ch. Hampton Goldie, Jetta and Plumeria Beau II were the class dogs of the exhibit.

Mrs. W. C. Ralston assumed the duties of judge in a charming and graceful manner, and instead of an initial appearance in the ring her work savored of the finished methods of a veteran judge. A stylish and handsome costume of a light corduroy material in a green shade was as strikingly effective as it was tastefully simple in design.

In blacks, Delverton Cappi, winners and first open was placed by just a shade over Black Silk II, first limit and reserve winners. In puppies, Little Man first is a bit wide in front and elbows out a trifle. Black Silk Jr. second is rather large and overgrown. In bitches, Plumeria Portia winners and first open lead without a struggle. Omo Girl, in for specials only and Imp, first limit are both well known and were alone in their class. Jetta alone and first novice is a nice little bitch, when shown in better condition will go a bit in strong competition. Carmen first puppies is fair for a youngster.

In reds Ch. Hampton Goldie and Plumeria Beau II were one two in first honors for the dogs; both are too well known for other mention than that they were both in excellent condition and showed finely. In puppies and novice dogs, firsts were withheld. Humberstone Artist, second puppies, is a fair little dog and will improve with age and when shown in condition. Nairod Tyke, second novice, a parti-color, is lacking in type. In puppy bitches, a class of small dogs were brought in. Red Sue is a fair sort, Little Maid second, Coquette Bonnie third; Glenwood Little Sister, v h c, was easily entitled to first but for being in wretched condition. Plumeria Flo, winners and first novice, was the best sized and showed more substance than any red; she is a trifle long in muzzle and lacking in stop, her head might be chiselled out just a bit more. Plumeria Mignon (reserve winners) second, Red Sue third and Woodlawn Zaza v h c were properly located in novice. Glenwood Ruby, alone and first in limit, is a fair ordinary one. Golconda Belle, first open, is a nice size and fair sort in type and color. Ch. Hampton Goldie and Plumeria Chic, a small bitch, h c in puppies, were first and alone in the team class.

Collies with seventeen entries were also a good averaging lot. The well known Ch. Ormskirk Jr., put down in fine fettle, was properly given winners and first open. Ormskirk Bob, second open, is a very good tri-color, a bit off in ear. In limit Robert Bruce, first, also reserve winners and first novice, was shown in poor coat. Ormskirk Surprise, second limit, is a good young puppy somewhat bitchy in head. Verona Battle, third, begins to show age. Winters' Noble, second novice, has plenty of character and type, has a good coat and would have beaten Bruce had he not been such a poor shower. Ormskirk Prince, first puppies, was one of the most promising dogs in the show. He has quality, style and type to a degree, his coat is all that could be desired. Winters' Griffen, second puppies, is a fair sized, nice looking young one with excellent coat, he was thought so well of by Mr. Bradshaw, who judged, that he purchased him. In bitches Ormskirk Gypsy, first winners and open, is good all round, head, ears, coat, front, etc., excellent. Bell Bonington, second open, is an aging tri-color but still shows much character. Buzzer, first in limit bitches, was lucky in being alone in her class. Donaldina, first novice, seemed a bit gaunt and of hardly the best color. In puppies, first, Dixon Moll with a bit more of head length should do well. Ormskirk Princess, second, was still in puppy coat, she has one bad ear, but otherwise is a very fair young puppy.

In Bull dogs, also under Mr. Bradshaw, Ivel Damon and Endcliffe Pleasure took all there was coming. Damon's initial appearance here bore out the good reputation he had. He is a low, sturdy built, cloddy dog with a splendid head, strong mask and shows much quality and character. He is easily the best dog now on the Coast. Endcliffe Pleasure was in good condition and just about as she was at the May show here.

Bull Terriers were neither numerous nor any too good, excepting Newmarket Queen, in for exhibition only, she being far ahead of the others. Naughty Nan, winners, has a fine head, she is a bit under in front, is much too low and cloddy, Newmarket Jean second to Nan in novice is a big clumsy coarse headed bitch with a black patch just where it is exasperately apparent on her head. Bloomsbury Queen first limit, has a fair head spoiled by a lop ear, she is wide in front and was out of condition.

One Boston, Lord Quex, was awarded first in puppies; he is a handsome brindle with white blaze and throat patch.

In Irish Terriers, winners and first limit was given to Irish, the only dog entered. This dog is just a trifle long in body and loose in ears, but has a rare good coat; he is better than the average of the breed shown here. Lady Power, winners and first limit bitches, was the only one in, was fortunate in being alone; she was sadly out of coat and presents two noticeably bad ears.

Margie B., a splendid coated Maltese Terrier bitch, first open, closed Mr. Bradshaw's classes—Margie is one of the best of the breed we have seen here.

Fox Terriers, with twenty-five entries, were a better averaging class than we have yet seen at any Coast show and that is saying a good deal. Mr. N. H. Hickman handled his classes very nicely and to the satisfaction of exhibitors and fanciers, which is saying much for an initial experience in the ring. Winners turned up for first Wandee Blizzard (formerly Lithian Blizzard); first open and novice ribbons also went to Blizzard. This dog was entered at the May show here last year and would have gone against Rowton Bezom, most fortunately for the latter's championship honors Blizzard was not shipped out here in time for the show. Blizzard is a compact, evenly balanced dog, all terrier and quality; he has a splendid front and feet that are just right; in ribs, loins and hindquarters he seemed proper; his head, eyes, jaws and ears are good enough to mark him a high class dog. Garston Prefect, reserve winners, first puppy and second novice, is a typical son of Norfolk Truman, despite his departure from orthodox terrier markings (he is a bit black ticked and has several large black patches); he is a sturdy, well made, strong boned all round terrier, full of quality, style and character. He has a long head with good punishing jaws, eyes small and placed right and good ear carriage. Wandee Revelry (formerly Saltscar Revelry) played second to Blizzard in limit. These three dogs came together in winners; it was a treat to see the race between them; we must confess that we fancied Revelry for the reserve, but in this we will not criticise the judge's pick. Wandee Jester, second in open, concluded the regular awards. Of the dogs in for exhibition only, there was Raby Elvet, Woodlawn Two Spot, son of Eclipse Blanche, Dictator (Ch. Norfolk Veracity-Eclipse Blanche), Raby Elvet (Ch. Durham-Richmond Laurel Leaf) and Norman Trueman, a rare good treat.

Wandee Mayse (Ch. Rowton Knight-Ch. Rant) winners and first novice, limit and open was the quality of the female competition. She is a handsome, smart, well balanced little bitch, showing type and quality by the hatful. A neat head with good jaws, well set and carried ears and properly set small dark eyes shows off a very stylish bitch. She also won the medal for best in the show. Norfolk Mistake, reserve winners and second novice and limit, is a well set, nice headed one, a bit leggy. Vina Belle, third limit second open, was in good shape and gave Mistake a close enough rub to have gone over her without straining matters. In puppies Muggins was runty, Endcliffe Pearl is a fair sort and properly placed third novice. Mill Stream, Cambridge Lass a Legnard bitch, Warren Tattle and Imelda were on exhibition only.

In wire hairs Cairnsmuir General winners, first open and limit, was rightly placed over Humberstone Bristles, second open. General was sent into the ring in Al condition, Bristles has begun to show his age and was not put down in good shape. He was beaten by a steamy younger dog. Humberstone Actress, first novice, is a fair sort of a young bitch, Maggie the Maid, winners and first open, was in poor condition.

In the race for best in the show Lester C., Ch. Ormskirk Emerald Jr., Maud S., Ivel Damon, Plumeria Portia and Wandee Mayse came together. The judges cast two ballots before awarding Mayse first and Portia reserve.

DOINGS IN DOGDOM.

Boston Terriers are offered by several advertisers among the classified "ads" in this issue.

Mrs. Murphy, of the Gabilan Kennels, in requesting a change of announcement this week offers the following reason for the change: "I sold the rest through the 'ad'."

It is reported that local leashmen's ranks will be augmented shortly by three kennels from St. Louis. B. F. Jackson is due with F. Lacy Crawford's string. This includes the great puppy Lord Brazen, which led Black Coon two lengths to the hare at the Waterloo meeting. Warburton, the imported dog, is in the string, as is also Laughing Water by St. Clair.

William McCaffrey is coming with Sisquoc, Tiburon and others of Ralph Orthwein's kennel.

W. D. Turner is in Texas and will start for this city so soon as his Greyhounds are fit to stand the journey. He has Northern Express, the sensational young Greyhound of the Middle West. He has others of the same litter from the Lowe Kennels and also has imp. Parton.

Judge Grace told an interesting story descriptive of Mr. Orthwein's advent among coursing men. Some time ago Mr. Crawford, a wealthy sportsman of St. Louis was confined to his residence by a disabled ankle. A number of his friends, including Mr. Orthwein, were accustomed to visit nightly with Mr. Crawford, cheering him up during his illness and also holding a congenial meeting among themselves. One evening Mr. Crawford suggested to Orthwein that he could find much sport and recreation in coursing. The latter disclaimed all knowledge of the game and everything pertaining to it and said that he could not see any inducement why he should add coursing to his sporting proclivities. Crawford jollied him up, stating that he would become an ornament to the devotees of coursing and remarked incidentally that he had just arranged to purchase $1000 worth of Greyhounds from D. Healy of Petaluma and that the dogs were about to be shipped to St. Louis. Under the circumstances he declared that by reason of his disability he would be handicapped with any more dogs. One word led to another in discussing coursing, finally Crawford challenged Orthwein to throw dice, "one flop" to see who would take and pay for the dogs. Orthwein lost. The event was celebrated with the aid of an enormous punch bowl in whose capacious depths a dozen bottles of sparkling champagne had been emptied. In due time the dogs arrived at St. Louis. From then on Mr. Orthwein has developed into an enthusiastic leashman. To his efforts, and several other genial spirits, much is due to the success of the recent Waterloo Cup meeting at St. Louis. Mr. Orthwein has won the esteem and admiration of the California contingent who hail him as a thoroughbred sportsman.

Treatment for Big Jaw in Cattle.

Lumpy jaw is a fungoid disease due to the introduction and growth of a ray fungus known as the actinomyces. The seed or spores of the fungus usually gain access to the flesh or bone through an artificial opening or sore, as a diseased tooth or a punctured wound of the cheek, face or neck. The irritation due to the growth of the fungus causes the tumors or enlarged bones. In cattle, the most common seat of the disease is in the jaw bones, the soft parts about the throat or angle of the jaw, where it forms a fungoid tumor or causes an enlargement of the jaw bone itself, hence the popular name of lumpy jaw or big jaw. The disease may appear in almost any region or organ of the body, not uncommonly occurring in the tongue, throat or lungs.

The disease is recognized by the presence in a section of the tumor of small yellowish grains or granules about one-fiftieth of an inch in diameter, just barely visible to the naked eye, but usually plainly seen with the aid of a magnifier. There is no way in which a case of lumpy jaw can always be positively diagnosed from some other tumors by a physical examination alone. In general, if there is a gradual enlargement of the jaw bone or a slow growing tumor about the jaw or throat, without the history of an injury of any kind, there is a strong presumption that it may be actinomycosis. The actinomycotic tumor may remain firm and round for some time, gradually enlarging, but sooner or later suppuration takes place and an abscess is formed which opens at some point and discharges a creamy pus.

The cavity does not run out as in an ordinary abscess, but soon becomes filled with protruding fungoid growths, which in turn enlarge, suppurate and finally burst and discharge. Multiple tumors may form from one to two inches in diameter, which, if protruding through the skin, appear as dark, reddish, fungus-like bodies covered with a thin, dry, scaly slough which is easily removed, causing slight hemorrhage. The disease is curable if not allowed to run until extensive changes or lesions occur in the jaw or organ affected. The specific remedy for lumpy jaw is iodide of potas, which, when properly administered, quickly kills the fungus, after which speedy recovery usually takes place with the gradual absorption of the tumor.

The dose of the iodide is one to two drams or about one dram for each 400 pounds live weight—to be given once daily and continued for a week or ten days. Then omit for two or three days and repeat as before until a cure is effected. A convenient method is to dissolve one ounce of the iodide in a straight pint bottle of soft water, when it can be divided from the bottle with sufficient accuracy and given either as a drench diluted in more water or poured over a little dry bran or mill feed and fed to the animal. The medicine is most effective when administered in the morning before feeding. If systems of iodism occur, as will be shown by the loss of appetite, weeping eyes and a general catarrhal condition of the mucous membrane of the nose and throat, the iodide is being given to excess and should be withheld for a few days or the dose reduced. The bowels should be kept moving freely by a laxative diet of roots, bran mash, ensilage or other succulent food or by an occasional dose of glauher salts if found necessary. The sooner treatment begins after a swelling is noticed the less difficult it will be to effect a cure.

SPAVIN CURE.

No Proof so Convincing as the Experience of Those who have Tried It.

Were these two cases worth the cost of treatment?

Nyack, N. Y.
In August I had a mare with an ankle cooked from a bad wrench in a race. It was so bad I had concluded to shoot her, but was persuaded to breed her and turn her out. I bred her, but instead of turning her out used your "Save-the-Horse." In three weeks I was more than surprised to see the swelling disappear, and the remedy produced a complete cure. She is as good as ever. I have raced her since and drive her any distance without any sign of lameness. I cannot say too much for your remedy.

GEO. F. BEHRINGER, JR.

Brooklyn, N. Y.
One of my horses went lame from side or shell bones on both feet, which extended entirely around the quarter and was laid up for about three months. I used two bottles of "Save-the-Horse" and the horse is perfectly sound. I have driven her over paved roads, and one day gave her a sixty-mile drive and she never showed the least particle of lameness. The growths have nearly all disappeared. I have owned horses for years, used them to build railroads and in all kinds of contract work and have used remedies, blisters, firing and electricity, but never saw anything take hold and produce such results as "Save-the-Horse" in this case. FOR SALE. BLACK WILKES

BEAUTIFUL COAL-BLACK STALLION, 5 years old, sired by Oro Wilkes 2:11, dam Flora Bell 2:24 by Alcona 730; second dam Fontana (dam of Silas Skinner 2:17 etc.) by Almont 33; third dam Fanny Williams (dam of Bay Chieftain 2:28 1/4) by Abdallah 15; fourth dam by Denmark; fifth dam by Robert Bruce; sixth dam by Virginia Whip. This handsome horse is perfectly sound and kind, a line trotter and has shown quarters in 36 seconds; needs no boots, and if trained would get a very low mark. The price of this royally-bred youngster is only $500. He is sold, for want of use, and can be seen at my place, the Occidental Horse Exchange, 246 Third Street.

WM. G. LAYNG.

Our dairymen are usually too conservative in not cutting out for sale the unprofitable milk cows of the herd. This is in part due to the fact that they have a strong demand for milk and butter and are inclined to the opinion that every cow in the herd is a paying investment. That might be true if they did not eat good hay and grain. But add to this the labor of feeding, milking, driving and sheltering these doubtful ones in the herd and we have cause enough to black-list the non-paying members of the family. How can you know "tother from which" unless you use scales and Babcock test? You can't.

It is rarely considered that water is far more important a matter for consideration in the winter than in summer. Sheep feeding on dry food are deprived of three times the weight of it, which they get when on pasture. Ten pounds of green grass has eight pounds of water in it, while as many pounds of hay has but one pound of water in it. If, then, sheep on pasture will drink, which they do frequently in the summer how much more is it necessary that water should be supplied sufficiently in the winter.

Course: Brighton Beach, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Stakes to Close Monday, January 5, 1903

FOR THE MEETING OF 1905.

THE PRODUCE STAKES.

Guaranteed Value $25,000, of which $3000 to the Breeders.

THE PRODUCE STAKES OF $25,000, to close and name on Monday, January 5, 1903, for the produce of mares covered in 1902, the stakes to be run in 1905 for then two-year-olds, as two events, one race for colts and geldings and one race for fillies. By subscription of $250 each, half forfeit, or only $10 if declared by January 1, 1904, or $25 if declared by January 1, 1905, or $50 if declared by May 15, 1905. The Brighton Beach Racing Association to add $5000.

The guaranteed gross value of the two events to be $25,000, of which $1500 to the second horse and $750 to the third horse in each event.

The nominator of the winner of each event to receive $1000, and the nominator of the second horse in each event to receive $500 out of the stakes

Winners of a race of the value of $5000 to carry 3 lbs. extra, of two races of $5000 or one of $10,000, 5 lbs. extra.

Horses not having won $2000, allowed 3 lbs.; horses not having won $1500, allowed 5 lbs.; horses not having won $1000, allowed 7 lbs.; maidens allowed 10 lbs.

The produce of horses or mares that have not produced a winner previous to January 1, 1903, allowed 3 lbs.; of both, 5 lbs. This breeding allowance must be claimed before the time of closing of this stake and is not lost by subsequent winnings. Non-winning allowance and breeding allowance cumulative.

Transfer of the engagement filed with the Racing Secretary on or before November 1, 1904, and accepted by the owner of the Produce, neither party being in default for forfeits, releases the original nominator from any liability attaching to the engagement.

SIX FURLONGS

The above race to be run in two divisions, viz.: a race for Colts and Geldings only, and a race for Fillies only. The value of the race to be apportioned in proportion to the sex of the eligible foals dropped, i. e., if 60 per cent of the eligible produce are Colts, then 60 per cent of the money goes to the Colt and Gelding race and 40 per cent to the Filly race, or vice versa.

In making an entry for a produce race the produce is entered by specifying the dam and sire or sires.

If the produce of a mare is dropped before the first of January, or if there is no produce, or if the produce is dead when dropped, or if twins are dropped, the entry of such mare is void.

FOR THE AUTUMN MEETING, 1905.

The Futurity, $10,000 Added. BY SUBSCRIPTION OF $20, OR ONLY $10 IF THE MONEY BE SENT WITH ENTRY FOR MARES COVERED IN 1902, AND A FURTHER SUBSCRIPTION OF $50 EACH FOR THE PRODUCE OF SUCH MARES, UNLESS STRUCK OUT BY NOVEMBER 1, 1904; OR $100 UNLESS STRUCK OUT BY JULY 15, 1905. Each starter to pay $250 additional, all of which shall go to the second and third horses as further provided.

The Coney Island Jockey Club to add TEN THOUSAND DOLLARS ($10,000); the second to receive $1250 of the added money and two-thirds of the starting fees; the third $750 of the added money and one-third of the starting fees.

The nominators of the winner, of the second horse and of the third horse, namely, the nominator of the mare, to receive $2000, $1250 and $500 of the added money, respectively, whether they are the owners of the horse when the race takes place or not.

Colts 122 lbs., fillies and geldings 119 lbs. Winners of two races of $3000, or one of $5000, 4 lbs. extra; of three of $3000, two of $5000, or one of $10,000, 8 lbs. extra.

If mare or stallion has not produced a winner prior to January 1, 1903, the produce will be allowed 3 lbs. for either or 5 lbs. for both, said allowance to be claimed at time of entry. Maidens allowed 5 lbs., which allowance shall not be cumulative.

If a mare nominated for this event drops her foal before the 1st of January, 1903, or if she has a dead or more than one foal, or is barren, the entry of such a mare is void, and the subscription, if paid, will be returned.

By filing prior to NOVEMBER 1, 1904, with the Coney Island Jockey Club, an accepted transfer of the produce with its engagement in this event, accompanied with all forfeits to date, the original subscriber will be released from any liability as to the engagement of the produce. Six Furlongs
